Make channels for the streams of love,
Where they may broadly run;
And love hath overflowing streams
To fill them every one.
But if at any time we cease
Such channels to provide,
The very founts of love for us
Will soon be parched and dried

—R. C. Trench.

Poetry.

NEARER HOME.

O'er the hill the sun is setting,
And the eve is drawing out
Slowly droops the gentle twilight.
For another day is gone.
Gone for aye—its pure hours over;
Soon the darker shades will come:
Still We rejoice to know at even
We are one day nearer home.

One day nearer, sings the mariner,
As he glides the waters o'er,
While the light is softly dying
On the distant native shore.
Thus the christian on his ocean,
As the life-boat cuts the foam,
In the ev'ning cries with rapture,
I am one day nearer home.

Worn and weary, oft the pilgrim
Hails the setting of the sun,
For his goal is one day nearer,
And his journey nearly done.
Thus we feel when o'er life's ocean,
Heart and sandal-score we roam,
As the twilight gathers o'er us,
We are one day nearer home.

Nearer home! Yes, one day nearer
To our Eden home so bright—
To the green fields and the fountains
In the land of pure delight:
For the hours grow brighter o'er us,
And the happy home in the dome,
And our tents are pitched still closer,
For we're one day nearer home.

Communications.

CHICAGO, July 28, 1882.

Editor Restitution:

In reply to your two queries, one grammatical and the other a matter of interpretation I would say:

1. That the rendering of the phrase en tē kuriakē hēmera in the King James version is in accordance with grammatical and classic usage, viz: "on the Lord's day." The derivation of the word is as follows: kyrios, Lord, is changed from a noun to an adjective by the addition of the termination os, which has the primitive signification of "belonging to," and when added to a noun indicates that which belongs to the noun, and such a word used adjectively carries over in the way of a qualification to the noun with which it agrees in gender and case, that which belongs to its primitive.

The primitive here being Lord, that which is carried over is the idea of possession, which inheres in the word Lord, and is properly translated by the possessive case of this word.

In our idiom "lordly" or "imperious" would not convey this idea. Whether this "Lord's day," besides its usual and accepted signification of a commemorative day of rest and worship, carries with, and is intended to carry with it, a "dispensational" meaning, is a matter of interpretation to be determined from the Scriptures themselves by collateral reference, and upon this point I will say something further on.

As to this adjective ending os, I would call the reader's attention to several other words of like ending; for instance oikos, primitive oikē, termination adjective os. Meaning of the primitive natural life or the organism in which it resides; meaning of the adjective "natural," or as used by James in iii. 15, in a bad sense, and very well rendered in the King James version "sensual."

Again basileus, primitive basileia, a king, derivative that which belongs to a king, royal, regal. Again nomos, primitive, nomē derivative, nomos law, nomikos that which belongs to law, or one who gives his attention to law, a lawyer or jurist. Again logos primitive, "a word," as the sign of an idea, or concept of reason; logikos, that which belongs to or inheres in such a word, "rational," or "reasonable." Again astos a proper name of a country, astios belonging to that country or a native of that country. Again gēs, dust or earth; gēinos "earthy." Paul's definition of anthrōpos or man in his Adamic nature in 1 Cor. xv.

I think these examples sufficient to illustrate the first point in question. Now as to the second query.

Is the form kyrios in this passage used in its usual and commonly accepted meaning, or is it used here as it no doubt sometimes is, in a "dispensational" sense? In other words, does it modify the verb ginomai in any other sense than to convey to the reader's mind the idea of the particular time or day on which John came to be in this spiritual state? That day, of course, being one of the successive Sabbath days observed by the new church in commemoration of our Lord's resurrection.

In order to lead up to my answer I will say a word in regard to the idiomatic use of ginomai or genesai the verb in this sentence. Why does not John say, I was in the Spirit, using the imperfect of the verb eimi "to be"? For this reason, viz: John wants to indicate that the state in which he was, was not an ordinary or natural one, and that to be in that spiritual condition required a change or transition. The idiom is the same as our own. I say to my friend, "I was in New York last week;" a mere reference to the fact. The Greek would use in this case eimi. My friend replies, "How did you come to be there?" If he was a Greek he would express this "come to be" by the appropriate form of the verb ginomai, and I would respond with the appropriate form of the same verb telling him how I "came to be" or "became" there.

This use is well illustrated in the verse preceding the one in which this passage in question occurs, in which John tells how he came to be in the island of Patmos. He says:

egenomēn en tē nēsō tē kaloumenē Patmō, dia ton logon tou theou.

"I came to be in the island called Patmos because of (or for the sake of) the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ."

He was there by no fortuitous circumstance, but by the providential leading of God, who had something for him to do there.

Another passage illustrating this idiomatic use of ginomai is found in John i. 6. John didn't mean to say simply "there was a man sent from God whose name was John." He means to say that there "came to be" a man, calling the reader's attention to the fact that this "coming to be," that is the existence and office and work of this man had been prophesied hundreds of years before in Holy Writ, and that this coming to be or becoming was a fulfillment of prophecy. An understanding of this idiomatic use of ginomai throws light upon the frequently recurring expression in the Old Testament, "The word of the Lord came" to the prophet, as it is rendered in our King James version, egeneto logos kyriou is the Greek. Translate it by our word "was" and it is very evident that we have not conveyed the thought of the writer, "Came" does not convey the thought by any means either. We have no idiom that corresponds exactly to this Greek idiom. But this is what the writer evidently intends to say, that the word of God comes to pass in his (the prophet's) consciousness, literally "becomes" to the prophet; that is, the prophet somehow becomes conscious of the word of God and is in a state of "vision" as it is called frequently elsewhere.

The question remaining to be answered is does the writer here mean to say that John came to be in a spiritual state of vision "on the Lord's day," meaning what we mean by an ordinary Sabbath day, or that he was, while in this spiritual state of vision, carried forward into and miraculously passing through the events of the dispensational day of the Lord. I think the writer means simply to refer to an ordinary Lord's day, and thus to designate the time when this vision occurred to him. the phrase being an adverbial qualifier of ginomai in the way of time, and that too a point of time.

For this reason, and that too a grammatical one, I draw this conclusion: If the writer had intended to say that he "came to be" in, or was projected into a state or condition of a prolonged series of events, that is, if he had intended to say that this state or condition of which he is speaking was an extended one, and that the prophet was projected into it, he would have used en with the accusative.

In illustration of this use I would refer the reader to a passage in 1 Cor. xv. I mean the use of ginomai where the action of the verb is projected into the object, verses 4, 5, second clause, egēgertai tē hēmera tē tritē kata tas graphas kai ōphthē Kēphā etc. What the writer here means to say is "the first man Adam came to be or came to pass, or became, in a living organism." That is, the personality called Adam, by the supernatural power of God, became conscious or arrived in consciousness in a living organism, or in a state of natural life.

I might say more on this point, but I think this is sufficient for your space and the patience of your readers, and I would simply say in conclusion that your own common sense is confirmed by the grammatical law of construction in the original.

The passage you quote introduced by egeneto en pneumati is an entirely different idiom, and has no bearing upon this discussion, but is interesting as explanatory of the heading of two or three of the Psalms in the Septuagint, the 11th for instance, the heading of which is Eis to telos psalmos tō Dauid, eis tēn ogdoēn. Unto the end (the completion) concerning the eighth, a Psalm of David's.

There is here no doubt a very explicit reference to a "dispensational day," and there is a great deal that might be said in connection with this subject of the Lord's dispensational day, and how our Sabbath is a type of it, but time and space forbid, and I would only call the reader's attention to the fact that this passage which you quote shows that "the Lord's day" or the day on which our Lord rose from the dead, is designated as the "eighth" day, and that this Psalm, as indicated by this somewhat obscure heading, is about this eighth day, or Lord's day, that was to come and bring with it the burden of the Psalm.

CHAS. GARDNER.

REPORT OF A DISCUSSION.—No. 5.

July 20. Met as per adjournment, to discuss proposition second.

Resolved, That man has a conscious existence between death and the resurrection. Cobb affirms; I deny.

Cobb opens the debate by assuming that "man is a component being: (this is his expression) composed of three parts, viz., body, soul and spirit. Proof text, 1 Thess. v. 23. He asserted that man like God had an eternal existence: and that one of these component parts, was the real man and conscious in death. His first speech was made up chiefly of such God-dishonoring assertions, and in rehearsing what he had claimed for argument the day previous.

Although he admitted that the words soul and spirit were, not used interchangeably; yet he would claim the soul part of the time, and the spirit part of the time. He brought up Scripture in Rev. vi. 9–11, concerning the "souls under the altar," assuming them to be conscious on account of their crying. We noticed four points, viz: 1. What was seen? 2. Where seen? 3. Their cry. 4. Their condition. He took the usual stand here with the orthodox expositors that some component part of man, called the soul, was conscious after death.

But I showed here first point. The souls say "our blood," but they do not speak as though their bodies had been killed, and they had escaped unharmed. We have many examples where nephesh, the Hebrew word corresponding with psuchē, the Greek word, rendered person; and in Prof. Whiting's translation of the New Testament, psuchē is rendered person in this passage. Soul is here used in its primary sense to represent the whole man, and if it be rendered person it will be in harmony with the Bible.

2. Where were they seen? Where was the altar? Dr. Clarke, when speaking on this passage, says: "The altar is upon the earth, not in heaven." It could not have been either in heaven or hell (Hades), for they were slain neither in one nor the other. It appears that John saw in vision the great slaughter field, where the martyrs were to be slain upon the earth, and calls it "The Altar," on which millions were put to death for their testimony in favor of Jesus.

3. Their cry. If they were alive, they were in a very uneasy and suffering condition; in which case, it must have been their cry, as they were led by the thousand to the altar for slaughter. But I showed there is another sense in which they cried, "Their blood, like that of Abel, cried for vengeance." For says the Lord to Cain, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." And, it is said of Christ, "That his blood .... speaketh better things than that of Abel." Thus does the blood of the martyrs cry.

4. Their condition. They are not only "under the altar," which is upon the earth, but they are "killed." It is that very part that John saw; that part which cried, that was killed. John saw the same class in Rev. xx. 4, "And I saw the souls (persons, Whiting's translation) of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus .... And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Some of these souls, or persons, had been beheaded, which of course killed them. Then they could not reign with Christ till made alive. And then what folly to assume that they were alive and conscious anywhere until the resurrection.

My opponent then brought up 2 Cor. v. 1, Paul's "earthly house," to show that Paul desired to have his spirit leave the body and go to God in heaven. But I showed that no such an "unclothed," or separated condition was desired by Paul; but that Paul desired to be clothed upon, that "mortality might be swallowed up of life;" or "immortality." 1 Cor. xv. 51–57.

My opponent next offered the account of the "rich man and Lazarus," and thought that he had at last found a fort, or stronghold, in which he could stand, and show that he had found two conscious men in the death state: the one in hell (Hades), and the other in "Abraham's bosom, afar off." We showed that if this Scripture is to be taken as a narrative of literal facts, then the rich man (not his immaterial soul or spirit, but the literal man himself) was suffering in torment; while the beggar, Lazarus, was literally carried "full of sores," by literal angels, into literal Abraham's bosom; and must therefore have been deposited in the cave of Macpelah with Abraham; the only place where we have any account of his being, as yet. Gen. viii. 10.

My opponent assumed that it was here treating of them in the death state and that the spirits of the rich man and Lazarus were what was conscious. I showed that nothing was said in the account of their souls or spirits. But if we took this Scripture as it was given and was intended to be understood as a parable, then it could easily be seen in harmony with all the Scriptures of truth. Jesus spake to Jews and multitudes in parable and without a parable he spake not unto them. See Luke viii. 10; Matt. xiii. 34. And I observed here that there was a Bible, printed in the year 1780, and now in the hands of a man living at our county seat, which has in the heading of this Scripture these words, viz., "The parable of the rich man and Lazarus." I then explained the parable, as the rich man to represent the Jews in their "downtrodden state: the rich man contrasted and representing two tribes, Joel 3 and Benjamin.

And on this hypothesis of reasoning the five brethren here spoken of would represent the other, or lost ten tribes of Israel (in their dispersed state) who have Moses and the prophets. And that the death of the rich man represents their unrighteous condition in forsaking God and his covenants and in taking the life and shedding the blood of Christ. While the beggar, Lazarus, would represent the whole Gentile world; and the "dogs," the Samaritans. And the Gentiles can now, and are "carried into Abraham's bosom," by faith in the promises made to Abraham; by repentance, and by being immersed into Christ which is the death of the beggar. And they arise from the watery grave of baptism to walk in newness of life, or a new life; and are then in Abraham's bosom; consciousness between death and the resurrection: from the idea that the serpent had told the truth when he said, "Ye shall not surely die," and that all nations are made drunk with such lies, doctrines and traditions of men, handed down to us, and having the devil for their author.

We then left this question with the people, and adjourned to meet again on the following day, at 10 a. m.

JOSIAH M. FIKE.

Selections.

THE APPROACH OF THE "FALSE PROPHET."

It may be that in all the rapidly unrolling panorama of action in the East no figure is so significant as that of El Mohdi ("The Guide"), presenting himself as the son of centuries of expectation, Prophet and foretold Messiah of Islam, who now with a crusading army is steadily advancing from the Soudan along the Nile toward Egypt and the present seats of strife.

To those who follow the motions of Eastern thought, the apparition of El Mohdi is no matter of surprise, since for a while among Mohammedan peoples there has been a visible stir—a gathering unrest and unrest—and among the African and Asian tribes an arising of holy hope and awful expectation, for the time was drawing near when the famous tradition, received by all sects of Mohammedans, should be fulfilled, that, twelve centuries ago, on a certain Friday, in the mosque at Medina, the Prophet Mohammed himself said: "When there shall remain but one day of the days of the earth, God shall prolong that day, and shall send forth from my house a man bearing my name and the name of my father, and he shall purify the earth from injustice and fill it with that which is right."

More specific traditions witnessed the coming of a "Mehdi," and the final overthrow of the Turkish power and Caliphate of Constantinople, in the year of the Hegira 1300, which is 1882 of our era. More minute predictions furthermore declared his lineage, and certain personal peculiarities. One of his arms, for instance, was to be much longer than the other; he was to be hidden for a time before his appearing, and he was suddenly to be revealed. Another prophecy declared that his vicegerent is to be named Abdul-Motaleb (the name of the Prophet Mohammed's grandfather), and this is the name of the present Shereef of Mecca, now believed to be conspiring against the Sultan of Turkey.

An accepted prophecy of this kind can of course be trusted duly to fulfill itself. To estimate the effect of a fulfillment upon the eager minds of the waiting Moslem tribes, it will be helpful to remember that the lengthened rule of the Turk, though making him to appear in Western thought as the head and front of Islam, has by no means established his title with vast numbers of the pure Moslems of Arabia and Africa. In those unchanging lands, among the multitudes carefully preserving scores, or even hundreds, of pure lines of descent from Mohammed, the Sultan of Turkey is still a foreigner and usurper. Six centuries have passed since the grandson of Genghis Khan ended the line of temporal successors of Mohammed in the slaughter at Bagdad of the Caliph Mostasem, whose noble kinsmen of the house of Abbas had reigned for 500 years. Five centuries have passed since Bajazet bought the patent of Sultan from the Caliphs serving in Egypt under the yoke of the Mamelukes. Yet among the Moslems of the desert these events are freshly remembered. Those Mussulmans of pure blood know also that the Ottomans can as little even claim kindred with the Tartar Khans of the line of Genghis as they can style themselves descendants or successors of the apostle of God.

The prediction, therefore, and now the appearance of a man calling himself El Mahdi, have excited very different feelings at Constantinople and among the Arabs and the Mohammedans of India. The appearance of the promised Messiah, coming, like a true Moslem, sword in hand, in a kingdom of this world, ruling as an autocrat, and restoring the primitive faith of Islam, means an attempt to overthrow the Turkish power. The penetrating sagacity of the Sublime Porte has long since employed every manner of asserting the rights of the Sultan, as Caliph, to command the support of the faithful. The newspapers of Constantinople, especially those printed for circulation in India and Africa, are continually filled with appeals to Mohammedans everywhere to rally around the Caliph against Christendom. They denounce England, and call upon the Mussulmans of India to arise against her. They denounce France, and appeal to the African Mohammedans to unite and expel the Christians. These articles, it may be imagined, have far more to do with the conflicting claims of Sultan and El Mehdi than with any projected war against Christendom. As the late Sir Henry Bulwer said: "When the Turk does anything, consider what is the reasonable, straightforward interpretation to place on that act. Then eliminate absolutely that conclusion. Any other may be possible; but that certainly will not be."

Meantime events are rapidly marching. There have been several pretenders to the role of the Mehdi, one near Tunis, one in Southern Arabia, but the only one deserving serious thought is the "False Prophet" of the Soudan—called the false prophet by the unbelievers—who has already subjected that vast isolated province of Egypt, and at the head of a large and increasing army, never yet whooked or turned by any force which has been sent against it, is reported to be already half way from Khartoum to Cairo. This man appears to unite all the traditional marks of the Mehdi. Reputed of the lineage of Mohammed, of the tribe of Koreish and the family of Hashem, the most illustrious of the Arabs, Princes of Mecca, and hereditary guardians of the Caabe, he has the physical peculiarity of a right arm reaching below the knee. He was born in the Dongola country, near the great bend of the Nile. He was a poor man, by trade a carpenter and boat-builder. Following the tradition, he went into retreat, retiring to the island of Abbas, about 200 miles south of Khartoum, where he withdrew himself from the world and occupied himself with meditation and prayer. Issuing suddenly, he proclaimed himself El Mehdi, dispatching letters throughout the country, and immediately acquiring a large following. An expedition sent against him by the authorities at Khartoum was defeated with great slaughter, though the forces of the prophet were armed only with spears, against the Remington rifles of the troops. El Mehdi then retreated about two hundred miles further southwest, and took up a strong place of defense among the mountains. Here a great number of Arabs joined him, and being here again attacked by the government forces, he defeated them so utterly that not one-tenth of them escaped. A third expedition being sent against him he was cut off and wholly destroyed a whole detachment, and, falling upon the main body, killed 2,000 out of 3,000, and captured 2,000 rifles and four cannon. No force being then left in front of him, El Mehdi advanced upon Khartoum, and has continued his victorious way until the Herald now reports him near the First Cataract of the Nile, 300 miles to the northward of Khartoum, and within 1,000 miles of Cairo. The Prophet's onward march everywhere arouses a popular uprising, and though the strength of his army at present can only be conjectured, it is known that he had about 10,000 men before his advance began, and it is certain that his present force must be vastly larger. It is probable that El Mehdi does not expect much accession of strength from the fellaheen of Egypt, who are of slight use in war, and may be little moved by his crusade, but he has shown military talent quite sufficient to provide reinforcements over an undefended country even from the remote regions of the Soudan.

It is a striking picture—this last inundation of the Nile—the dark wave along "that ancient river," of races almost unknown, the Arab tribes, the warriors of Kordofan and Darfour, the endless mixed races of the Soudan, in full flood of religious fanaticism, heightened and upborne by prophecy and devotion to a sacred figure and person. And the interest of it grows when we consider that its barrier may be one of the most vigorous products of western civilization, that the British army may be that which shall perhaps encounter the strange shock.—N. Y. Evening Post.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The fourth annual Conference of the Church of God, of Western North Carolina, will meet at Concord Church on Cane Creek, Buncombe County, North Carolina, on Friday, September 1, 1882, at 3 o'clock p. m., and continue over Sunday. All are invited and especially preaching brethren. Those coming by railroad will stop at Asheville Junction, and if they will write to Brother E. M. Anderson, Arden P. O., Buncombe Co., North Carolina, they will be met at the depot with conveyance to take them to the place of meeting.

E. M. ANDERSON, Pres.
R. M. SALTS, Sec'y.

Christ please copy.

The Piedmont A. C. C. will hold its fourth annual session with the church at Beaver Creek, N. C., commencing Friday, Aug. 25, and holding over Monday. Persons traveling by rail will leave the train at Hickory, N. C., and go via Lenoir. J. J. HARSHAW.

The Lord willing, the Christian Association of Iowa will convene at Gifford, Hardin co., Iowa, that place being at the junction of the Iowa Central and Toledo & Northwestern railways. It is to be a tent meeting, and commence Aug. 31, and hold over Sunday, and longer if the interest warrants. Brother C. C. Ramsey and other able ministers are expected. Churches will send delegates at the ratio of one for every ten members or fraction over five. A general turn out is desired as it is the annual meeting.

By order of the Board.

JOHN FITZ, Sec. pro tem.

As per appointment the Northern Indiana Conference will convene (D. V.) at Rensselaer, Ind. Aug. 26, to continue over the 27th. Trains from the south and east arrive at 5 o'clock a. m. and 5 p. m.; and from north and west at 11 a. m. and 11 p. m. each day. Ample accommodations for all who may come. A general attendance of preaching brethren and all others is earnestly solicited. By recommendation of last conference, all congregations are earnestly requested to report to this conference, by delegates if possible, otherwise by letter, as to their respective numbers, condition of prosperity, etc. Come to us here at the commencement, (some on Thursday,) Able proclaimers of the word from home and abroad are expected.

D. T. HALSTEAD.

Justice consists in doing no injury to any one; decency in giving no offense.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M. (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Trilemma," etc.) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now exciting such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 800 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Age to come not a heresy," "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Sinaitic, the New and the Davidian covenants: their definition and relations to each other. By C. H. Myers. 320 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth Set Free; or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Silas Henn. 32 pages, price 10cts.

Sunlight Dispersing the Dismal Shadows; or the doctrine of eternal torments shown to lack reason and Scripture. By Silas Henn. 70 pages, price 10cts.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Silas Henn. 48 pages, price 10cts.

Material Immortality; an Appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact defense Acted Bible view of material immortality, not by birth but by grace. By O. S. L. Crosier. 36 pages, price 10cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, who is he? By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1882, put into tract form.

The Kelpius Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By C. H. Myers. Price 50cts.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PLANS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ. 3. Water Baptism, in type. 4. Immortality. 5. The Kingdom of God. 6. Nature of, Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 7. The Two Ways. 8. What is Religion. 9. The Restitution Age. 10. Destiny of the Wicked. 11. Baptism. Ten copies &c., or assorted packages of 100, 30c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

Can You Believe? A series of 32 questions; We consider this the best tract we circulate in our list.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

The Age to Come not a Heresy. By H. V. Reed.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two cases of these terms, to suit the Theological and Bible way.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Snyder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or 15 for 25c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? E. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Boase, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or 15 for 25c.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Christian Union. Joel A. Stancliff.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each; 15 for 25c, or 30 for $1.

The New Birth. Joseph Price.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Stancliff.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Kelso, D. D. not forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each; 8 for 25c, or $1 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or, the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will by the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Stancliff.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 12 for $1.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Wilson. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition in this pamphlet is in harmony with Bible teachings. 96 pages, price 50c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of Scriptural testimony on the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and encyclopedias; historians, &c. 96 pages, price 50c.

Sacred Poems and Prophetic Visions. By Mary Jane Hatton, Henry Constable, Professor of Deity, Actually the best for the times. 96 pages, price 50c.

The Doctrine of Regeneration, or Baptismal Regeneration Examined. By Rev. Wm. Graham, a presbyterian minister, and Rev. Alexander Campbell, a reformed Baptist minister. Both of these men had been educated in the Church of England and Ireland, and were well versed in the literature of the Church. Their testimony will be found to be very valuable. 96 pages, price 50c.

The Destiny of the Wicked. By Rev. Wm. Graham, a presbyterian minister, and Rev. Alexander Campbell, a reformed Baptist minister. Both of these men had been educated in the Church of England and Ireland, and were well versed in the literature of the Church. Their testimony will be found to be very valuable. 96 pages, price 50c.

Prophecy Unveiled

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
H. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. R. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
J. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HALSTEAD, B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHER, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, G. M. MYERS,
A. R. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 23, 1882. NO. 32.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE--ITS PROXIMITY. No. 119.

Beast Out of the Abyss. French Revolution Under Republicanism. French Deism. Reign of Terror. Robespierre's Creed. His Practice. Close of Historic Testimony.

J. P. WEETHER.

This beast of Rev. xi. 1, comes up out of chaos. St. Just makes this remark: "Government (Republican) had issued out of the bosom of storms. It has this origin in common with the world arising out of chaos, and man weeping at the moment of his birth." We have been considering the French Republic under Atheism; we shall now view it under the reign of Deism, in the rising arc.

Reign of Terror under Robespierre.—Since Robespierre was the head of Republican Deism, our subject requires us to notice his creed and his acts: since a more cruel despot never disgraced the annals of history.

Art. I. "The French people acknowledges the existence of the Supreme Being, and the immortality of the soul."

Art. II. "It acknowledges that the worship most worthy of the Supreme Being is the practice of the duties of man."

This is the Deism under which Robespierre established a despotism of blood. No Christianity, no Bible, no ministers to conduct the services. Bitter against priests. The real temple of the Supreme Being, the universe; his worship, virture; his festivals the joy of a great nation, assembled in his presence, to knit closer the bond of universal fraternity, and to pay him the homage of intelligent and pure hearts. What is there in common between the priests and God? the priests are to morality what quacks are to medicine. How different is the God of nature from the God of the priests. I know nothing that so nearly resembles Atheism as the religion which they have framed. By grossly misrepresenting the Supreme Being, they have annihilated belief in him as lay in their power. They made him at one time a globe of fire; at another, an ox; sometimes a tree, sometimes a man, sometimes a king. The priests have created a God after their own image: they have made him jealous, capricious, greedy, cruel, and implacable; they have treated him as the mayors of the palace formerly treated the descendants of Clovis, in order to reign in his name, and to put themselves in his place; they have confined him in heaven as in a palace, and have called to him to come to the earth, only to demand of him for their own interests, tithes, wealth, honors, pleasures, and power.—Robespierre.

It was under French Deism that the reign of terror reached its climax. Robespierre was its ruling spirit. "The sun of liberty was in eclipse, while the crested hydra of the coalition glared round in the air, except as the silence was broken by a shout like distant thunder, or the wild chant of patriotic songs. There was a fear as in the time of a plague; a fierceness, as before or after a deadly strife. It was a civil war raging in the heart of a great city, as in the field of battle, and turning it into a charnel house. The eye was sleepless—the brain heated. Sights of horror grew familiar to the mind, which had no other choice than that of being either the victim of the executioner, or the executioner himself. What at first was stern necessity, or public duty, became a habit, and a sport; and the eye inured to slaughter, struck at random, sparing neither friend nor foe. The soul, harrowed up by the spectacle of the most appalling cruelties, could not do without them, and nursed the dreadful appetite for death. The habit of going to the place of execution resembled that of visiting the theatre. Legal murder was the order of the day, a holiday sight, till France became one scene of wild disorder, and the revolution a stage of blood. The chief actor in this tragic scene, the presiding demon of the storm was Robespierre."—Hazlitt's Life of Napoleon.

"Seven thousand persons, prisoners, were soon accumulated in the different places of confinement in Paris; the number throughout France exceeded two hundred thousand! The long nights of these wretched victims were frequently interrupted by visits from the executioners, solely intended to excite alarm; the few hours of sleep allowed them were broken by the rattling of chains and unbarring of doors to induce the belief that their fellow-sufferers were about to be led to the scaffold. From the farthest extremities of France crowds of prisoners daily arrived at the gates of the Conciergerie, which successively sent forth its bands of victims to the guillotine. Gray hairs and youthful forms; countenances blooming with health, and faces worn with suffering; beauty and talent, rank and virtue, were indiscriminately rolled together to the fatal doom. Sixty persons often arrived in a day, and as many were, on the following morning, sent out to execution. Night and day the cars incessantly discharged victims. Every family early assembled its members. With trembling looks, they gazed round the room fearful that the very walls might harbor traitors. The sound of a foot, the stroke of a hammer, a voice in the street froze all hearts with horror. If a knock was heard at the door, every one in agonising suspense expected his fate. Unable to endure such protracted misery, many committed suicide."—Alison.

Robespierre tells it, was the expression of all the officers in the committees. These terrible cruelties frightened the people, and produced reaction. "Robespierre had at this critical period, prodigious force at his disposal. The lowest orders, who saw the revolution in his person, supported him as the best representative of their doctrines and interests; the armed force of Paris was at his beck: he ruled with absolute sway at the Jacobins; and all important places were filled by his creatures."—Mignet.

The Republican cruelties in La Vendee, exceeded almost human belief. "This carrier (the Republican agent) might have summoned hell to match his cruelty without a demon venturing to answer his challenge."—Scott's Life of Napoleon.

The revolution reached the lowest point in the arc of oscilation at the close of 1793. The causes of these calamities began to arrest public attention, and the results soon began to appear. People saw the effects of the moral and political earthquake: and as they gazed upon its work of utter desolation, a reactionary movement set in. Fear began to drive the masses toward the ancient order of civil and Divine rule.

Summary of Historic Facts.—1. The infidel writings of Rousseau, Voltaire, and others, introduced the reign of skepticism in France.

2. The decree of the Constituent Assembly, abolishing all titles, Nov. 3. 1789.

3. Suppression of religious orders, or religious titles, June 19, 1790.

4. Suppression of all religious communities and public worship, April 6, 1792.

5. Worship of the Goddess of Reason, at Notre Dame, Nov. 10, 1793.

6. Churches and the Christian worship restored, Oct. 6, 1795.

This was accomplished by passing the Constitution drawn up by the Convention. That Constitution met with strong opposition, before its adoption. A battle, under Napoleon, for Barras, of the National Convention, for their New Constitution, was fought against the sections and factions, Oct. 5, 1795, and completed October 6th. That Constitution restored the churches, Christian ministers, and Christian worship. This battle caused the overthrow of the infidel faction. The events and dates we design to use, are as follows:

By a decree of the Legislative Assembly, all religious communities were suppressed, April 6, 1792. October 6, 1795, the Constitution of the National Convention restored churches, Christian ministers and worship. If we take April 6, 1792 from October 6, 1795, there remain three and a half years. The suppression, April 6, 1792; the restitution October 6, 1795; then 1792, 4 months and 6 days, from 1795, 10 months and 6 days, equals 3 years, 6 months. Let the reader investigate the History of the French Revolution from its origin to the adoption of the Constitution of the National Convention, and he cannot fail to see the finger of God writing upon the palace walls of Mystic Babylon. If the government of the nations is in the hands of God, his power was in that great earthquake.

Application of History.—In our application of the above historic facts, we shall compare sacred and profane records, item with item, and mark their analogy.

Rev. xi. 7. "And when they shall have finished (shall be about to finish) their testimony, the beast that cometh up out of the abyss shall make war with them, and overcome them, and kill them."

The beast is a symbol of some agent. What agent? Some say that it symbolizes one person—the Antichrist of John, and the man of sin described by Paul; others make it symbolize a body of civil rulers. Both views cannot be true. God never speaks in symbols, without somewhere explaining them. Let us now see what interpretation he has given to a symbolic beast: and then examine what he said of this symbolic beast.

Beast, in Hebrew, is חַיָּה chai-wa; in Greek, θηριον theerion. It is found in Dan. vii. 3, 5, 6, 7-12, 17, 19, and 23; and in Revelations, 37 times. In Dan. vii. 23, it is said, The fourth beast (Hebrew, — חַיָּה — chai-wa; Greek, θηριον—theerion) shall be the fourth kingdom (not the fourth man) upon the earth." This is given by the interpreting angel (Gabriel) as the correct meaning of the symbolic word beast—the fourth, or Latin beast, the great persecutor of Christians.

Since this fourth beast of Daniel covers the Apocalyptic chart, the same meaning must be attached to these words in the visions of John as in that of Daniel: the same symbolic agent, having the same Greek and Hebrew names, must have the same meaning in each. It will not do to call the fourth beast in Daniel the fourth kingdom, and the same fourth beast in the Apocalypse the fourth man! If the beast is a kingdom in the one, it must be the same in the other. This conclusion is unavoidable.

These same Hebrew and Greek names of the fourth beast of Dan. vii. 23, are used 37 times in the Apocalyptic visions. Of these, in Rev. xiii. 11, it is applied to the two-horned beast. In Rev. xi. 7; xviii. 3, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17,—nine times it is applied to the scarlet wild beast, which is evidently the fourth beast of Daniel, as appears from the ten horns and from his acts. Thirty-five times the name applies to the fourth beast, once to the two-horned beast, and one other time to the beast that killed the witnesses. This beast, in his character, is not like the two-horned beast; and yet it is a kingdom, as is evident from Rev. xvii.

Its work, chronology, and location, clearly demonstrate its family connection, as a member of the Latin-German family. It is not a horn of the Romano-German beast; nor is it the body. It must, therefore, be the head. When, in A. D. 800, the Roman empire was restored by Charlemagne, France was an element of his empire; and had always sided in sustaining the Roman hierarchy.

This beast (eighth head—the last form of the fourth monarchy) in his special agency, belongs to that period when the witnesses are about finishing their testimony. It belongs to the concluding events of the second woe. It is a special agent to do a special work—God's sheriff; a minister extraordinary to execute the wrath of God upon the apostacy; and as the witnesses were more or less chained, and shut up in that apostacy they suffered martyrdom. This beast, as God's executive agent, is Infidel France. We know of no name more appropriate. The Altar was behind the Throne, and under its patronage and despotic protection. The Throne, therefore, had first to be removed. Who but an untitled people (liers etat) could have accomplished that work? To do this the pillars of the Throne (nobility, and persons of titles) had, first, to be thrown down. This was the peculiar mission of persons without titles. These persons were equally hostile to the state church (Roman hierarchy). They attacked both the Throne and Altar. It will be readily seen that no other than an infidel power could have carried out such an agency.

It may be asked, Did Infidel France come from the creative power of Jehovah? We answer, By no means. God makes use of agents, fashioned by other hands. He used a Pharaoh, a Nebuchadnezzar, a Cyrus, and a Titus; he made use of Gentile monarchies for similar purposes. God did not make Infidel France. The Papacy was its parent, and it was proper that the harlot should suffer from the power originated by her own corruptions. "In the cup which she hath filled fill to her double." Rev. xviii. 6; see Rev. xvii. 16, 17.

Paul in the Synagogues and Among the Gentiles.

Paul was always getting into trouble. He had no sooner been baptized than he went straightway into the synagogues of Damascus, preaching that "Christ is the Son of God, confounding the Jews, by proving that this is the very Christ,"—their expected King, the promised heir to David's throne and to the dominion of the earth.

This boldness did not please the Jews. It was too much to have this minister of the new faith come right into their own places of worship, and tell them that the hated Nazarene whom they had slain was the Anointed of God, to fulfil the promises of an everlasting inheritance made unto the fathers. Day and night they sought to kill him, but being sent by the disciples to Jerusalem, "he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus," "disputing with the Grecians, till they sought to slay him, when he was brought to Cesarea and Tarsus, and thence to Antioch, where he remained a year, teaching many the truth, and causing them to turn to the Lord. Revisiting Jerusalem with Barnabas, Paul again returned to Antioch and was set apart for the work of the Lord. At Salamis we find him in the synagogues preaching the word of God. Then at Antioch of Pisidia, plainly showing to the assembled Jews that God had, according to his promise, raised unto Israel, of David's seed—a Savior—Jesus. That the Scriptures had been fulfilled in his condemnation and death, and in the raising of him up from the dead—that this resurrection was a promise to them of "the sure mercies of David" and that through faith in Jesus they could be forgiven and justified. If they despised the message, they must beware, lest the foretold perishing should come upon them.

The envious Jews, beholding the crowds that flocked to hear, contradicted and blasphemed. Paul turned to the Gentiles. The word of the Lord was published throughout all that region, then he and Barnabas being expelled, went to Iconium.

Here again, we find them in the synagogues speaking so that a great multitude, both of Jews and Greeks believed. Threatened with death they flee to Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and there preached the gospel.

At Lystra Paul was stoned, and drawn out of the city for dead, but coming to, he went back into the place, then to Derbe, preaching the word; revisited the brethren at Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, was imprisoned at Philippi, persecuted at Thessalonica, sent away from Berea, mocked at at Athens, but he everywhere confessed the truth, saying that "there is another King—one Jesus."

At Corinth, he reasoned in the synagogues every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks, testifying to the Jews, "that Jesus was Christ."

At Ephesus, he entered into the synagogue and reasoned with the Jews, disputing and persuading boldly for the space of three months of "the things concerning the kingdom of God."

And as it was with Paul, so will it be with us, if we let our light shine. The people of today like no better to hear of "another King" than they did in the times of the apostles.

If we give "a reason for our hope," in the shop, the store, on the street, and in the churches, "it is not prudent," "it is out of place to bring up Bible topics everywhere," our ministers "are crazy," because they dispute with and strive to persuade those who hold the traditions of the fathers.

"If they call the Master of the house (the king or owner of the earth) Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?"

"We are not above our Master," names will not hurt us. They only show that we are in the path of duty. We need all the boldness of Paul—the danger is that "our lights go out" in the fear that we shall offend by presenting the truth.

As stewards of the manifold grace of God, hold up the light! Be found faithful.

S. ROXANA WINCH.

REPORT OF A DISCUSSION.—No. 3.

July 21st. Met as per adjournment, to discuss the proposition:

Resolved. That the kingdom of God, or of Christ, has not been in existence in this, or the gospel dispensation, but will in the future be set up, or established on this earth.

I showed in the first place what are the principal elements of, and what it takes to constitute a kingdom. The principal parts are territory, or land. A king, or ruler, and his cabinet, or associate rulers. Subjects to be governed. A metropolis, or seat of government, and laws by which the kingdom is governed.

We then showed that God had a "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world." Matt. xxv. 34. And that the territory of this kingdom had been given to Adam and Eve: when they were placed in the garden of Eden, which was the territory. Then I showed that Abraham had a covenant made with him and sealed by an oath unto Isaac; and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant: saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan. Psa. cv. 8-10. And that Abraham beheld this land with his own eyes, northward, southward, eastward and westward; and walked through the land, in the length of it, and in the breadth of it; and God declared he would give it unto him. Gen. xiii. 14-18. The boundaries of the land are given. Gen. xv. 18; Num. xxxiv. 1-8; Deut i. 7.

I showed that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob dwelt in the land as pilgrims and strangers and not as possessors. But that God declared he would give it unto Abraham and his seed for an everlasting possession. Yet he never had so much as to set his foot on, and had to buy a place for a burying ground. See Psa. cv. 12, 13; Acts vii. 5; Gen. xxiii. 17; xxv. 10.

Next I showed that the children of Israel, after they came up out of the land of Egypt, were governed or ruled by judges about 450 years, until Samuel the prophet, (Acts xiii. 20-23; 1 Sam. viii. 1) when they desired to be like other nations, ruled by a king, and that God gave them a king, Saul, (1 Sam. ix. 1; x. 1, 24) and when Saul was removed, "God raised up David unto them to be their king;" (Acts xiii. 21-23) and Christ was promised as the seed, (see Gen. xiii. 15; Gal. iii. 16,) and was spoken of as the child to be born. Isa. ix. 6, 7; Luke i. 30-33. I showed that this kingdom was governed by Saul, and David, and had attained unto the zenith of its glory under Solomon, (1 Kings iv. 21; xi. 42; 2 Chron. ix. 26, 27,) and that it (the kingdom) was in existence, and was ruled over after this until it was overturned by the Babylonians in the days of Zedekiah, their last king.

Showed also, that this kingdom of Israel was located on the proper territory; had a king chosen of God; the twelve tribes of Israel as the subjects, Jerusalem as the metropolis or seat of government, and laws, by which they were governed.

I then brought the account of Daniel, 2nd chapter, concerning the great image which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream, and which Daniel made known to him and declared that the "dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure." That this image represented the condition of the world throughout all ages of the world, and was a history in advance of coming events.

The head of gold to represent Babylon as an universal kingdom over all the earth, and that kingdom came to an end and was destroyed by the Medes and Persians, represented by the "breast and his arms of silver," which was also universal in its power, and was succeeded by a "third kingdom of brass," as did the others. This was "the Grecian kingdom" ruled over by Alexander the Great, and was destroyed in its time by "the fourth kingdom," that was represented by the legs of iron, and part of clay: and it was to break in pieces and subdue all the others. This was the Roman kingdom which attained to the zenith of its power and glory, in the days of Julius Cæsar, about B. C. 31, and continued to hold universal sway and authority until the year 476 A. D., when history informs us that "Rome lost its unity 476 A. D., when Augustulus, the last Emperor, gave up his imperial crown. It was soon after divided into ten kingdoms," as we showed in the 7th of Daniel, and by the feet and ten toes of the image of Dan. ii. 41, and that this divided state of the kingdom was to come. "And in the days of these kings (the divided state of the kingdom) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed," etc. Verses 44, 45.

This was my endeavor in my two speeches today; and to all of which my opponent agreed, viz: That it takes all of the elements mentioned to constitute a kingdom. That God had such a kingdom in the days of Israel. And that those other kingdoms of men had an existence as we described. But he contended that the kingdom of God must have been in existence still in the days of John the Baptist. Referred to Matt. xi. 12. Says he, How could "the kingdom of heaven," or of God, suffer violence, if not in existence? I replied. Now, here was an apparent dilemma; and if we were left with only the King James translation (which is full of mistakes) we would have to concede that this text and others translated in the same manner, favored the idea that the kingdom of God was in existence in the days of Christ's first advent.

But we appeal to the Emphatic Diaglott translation, and we read in Luke xvii. 21, "Behold God's Royal Majesty is among you." And in the foot note we find this explanation: "In this verse it has been found necessary to depart from the usual signification of hee basileia tou theou, the kingdom of God, and render as in the text." That this rendering is admissible and correct, see note on Matt. iii. 2. Basileia here refers to the person to whom the title and honor of king belonged, rather than to his territory or kingdom. Prof. Whiting, an able Hebrew and Greek scholar, says, this clause in verse 21 ought to be rendered, "The king is among you." And Matt. iii. 2, says, "Reform! because the Royal Majesty of the heavens has approached." And by such a rendering we can see how the "Royal Majesty of the heavens," Christ, who was born to be a king, (John xviii. 37) had come and was among them, (the Pharisees) and was assailed, and suffered violence from the days of John the Baptist until now.

My opponent said that the kingdom of God was to be set up in the days of one of the four kings of Dan. ii. But I showed that it was to be set up in the days of the divided state of the fourth kingdom, in its latter end.

Our audiences had increased some and good attention was manifested throughout the debate, and good feeling prevailed with both debaters and hearers, and on the evening of the third day, I closed speaking on the affirmative side of this kingdom proposition, and brought out these facts from Scripture: that the kingdom of God had existed unto Zedekiah, the last king, and was in an overturned or broken-down condition in the days of Christ. The tabernacle and throne of David was in ruins, and is no more until the nobleman Christ returns from heaven, with all holy angels; then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and then the twelve apostles are also to sit upon twelve thrones, and judge or rule the twelve tribes of Israel.

My opponent said in speaking of Luke xvi. 16, that the kingdom must have been in existence, or else every man could not press into it. We showed from the Diaglott, that they "pressed towards it," and not "into" it.

Elder Cobb claimed an immortal kingdom, called "the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," (2 Pet. i. 11) and said that was the "kingdom" to be given when the Son of Man comes with all his holy angels, after the judgment as spoken of in Matt. xxv. 31-34.

I showed here that the kingdom of God, kingdom of Christ, kingdom of heaven, kingdom of Israel, and ever lasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, were synonymous terms and used expressively for one and the same kingdom, and we were contending for and preaching no other than what would be an everlasting or eternal kingdom, as far as duration of time related to it, and that there will be an immortal governing or ruling element in it, in the person of Jesus Christ and his saints, his royal cabinet and wife. But the terms immortal, or spiritual kingdom, was not to be found in the Scriptures, and if we admitted what Elder Cobb claimed, we would have God have two kingdoms and two thrones for the saints; one now all through this dispensation; and one after the second coming of Christ: which would be contrary to all the Scriptures.

But my opponent still assumed that the kingdom of God has been in existence during this dispensation, by saying of Isa. ii. 3 that the word of the Lord which was to go out from Jerusalem was the gospel, and that it therefore was the metropolis, and Christ's laws were in existence; said Christ was the King, but did not show how he sat on David's throne in this dispensation.

My opponent also made a claim here with which I was much pleased as well as much surprised. He said that he would not claim during this debate that the terms kingdom of God, or of Christ, and church, were synonymous terms nor used interchangeably in the Scriptures. I have never heard such an admission made by a follower of Alexander Campbell, or a member of that church before, and I would like to know where then on earth he would have the kingdom of God during this dispensation? If the church, or members of it, are not the kingdom or subjects of it, where would we go to find it this side of the world to come? Surely nowhere.

We here adjourned to meet again the following, and last day of this discussion.

JOSIAH M. FIKE.

CLIFTON, Neb.

Editor Restitution:

We are all alone here in the faith, have no organization and consequently very little preaching; but, however, do all we can by circulating our paper and reasoning as best we can with all who will talk with us on the blessed promises which God has made to his people. We freely read the word with all who are willing to learn the ways to and of "life everlasting." We feel that a good work could be done here by an earnest preaching brother, and if any such could visit us we would gladly receive them, make them as comfortable as we can while they stay and do the best our circumstances will permit financially. Any brother desiring to visit us will find us about two miles west of Glen Rock Station, on the Missouri & Pacific Railroad, and if notified, we will gladly meet them there at any time.

JAMES STEPHENS.

There will be a public discussion, if the Lord wills, commencing on the second Monday in September, and continuing four days, between W. H. Wright, of the Christian (Campbellite) Church, and T. T. Doyal, of the Church of God. The debate is to be held at Deep Creek, Wise county, Texas, nine miles southeast of Decatur, the county seat of Wise, on the Ft. Worth & Decatur road. The propositions to be discussed are—Does the consciousness of man wholly cease at death? T. T. Doyal affirms; W. H. Wright denies. Do the Scriptures teach that the kingdom of God, or the kingdom of Christ, spoken of in the Scriptures, is now in existence? W. H. Wright affirms; T. T. Doyal denies. All lovers of God's truth are requested to come.

CHARLES RUDOLPH.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Aug. 23, 1882.

As we issue four papers each month, and as there are five Wednesdays in August, there will be no paper next week. The date of our next will be Sept. 6.

GOD has blessed the husbandman with ample returns for his labor, and we now have times of comparative prosperity. Consequently, we hope all our friends will remember to aid THE RESTITUTION. It is only by promptness in remitting subscriptions, as they expire, and by some extra financial aid, that the paper goes forth to greet its patrons. Do not forget THE RESTITUTION.

WE have many more articles on hand than we can find room for at once. We must keep our readers posted on the great events of the day. We are in that crisis of human history where we stand "in the center of immensities, in the conflux of eternities." All who look for the Lord are anxious to see how prophecy shapes itself into fulfilment in history. The light that has long been shining in a dark place is focalizing its rays on Palestine and the Orient. Let us walk circumspectly on the solemn border line where all things must change.

A BROTHER asks for an explanation of Josh. xxiv. 4: "And I took your father Abraham from the other side of the flood." The word rendered flood here is נָהָר —Nahar—a river and means the Euphrates. See Gen. xi. 31; xii. 4; and Acts vii. 2-4. Mesopotamia was a country between the Tigris and Euphrates, on the northwest of Babylonia, and south-west of Assyria. The word signifies between the rivers, and in going from this country to Canaan one would be obliged to cross the Euphrates.

News Items.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—Port Said was occupied at 3 o'clock this morning by the English forces. At 3:30 o'clock this afternoon earthworks had been thrown up between the European and Arab quarters of the town. Seventeen transports and five men-of-war are at Port Said, and Admiral Seymour and Sir Garnet Wolseley are both there.

This morning Ismailia also was occupied by the British, and the rebel troops were driven from Nefick. The British have possession of the telegraph line from Port Said to Suez.

ALEXANDRIA, Aug. 20.—It appears that even the Generals commanding brigades were not informed of the intended movement on Port Said. Major General Sir Edward Hamley had been ordered to support the bombardment of Aboukir forts by a flank attack from Ramleh, and was unaware of the real plans till he opened this morning the sealed orders he had received.

The following from the Chicago Tribune will give our readers the completest summing up of affairs in Egypt:

THE ENGLISH MOVEMENT.

After their long season of inactivity the English forces in Egypt have at last commenced to move, and the movements indicate that they are in no haste to attack Arabi Bey, but prefer to keep him where he is until his retreat south can be cut off. The sudden movement of Saturday has already drawn the tolls about him to the east and southeast. While he is kept busy meeting skirmishes and reconnoissances along his front at Kafr-el-Dwar and towards Aboukir, the English fleet suddenly appeared off the latter place as if to commence the bombardment which had been previously announced, but instead of so doing left two or three vessels there commanding the railroad from Alexandria to Rosetta, and when next heard from had taken possession of the Suez Canal. Port Said was occupied without much opposition, likewise Kantara, Ismailia, and Chalouf, which, as a glance at the map will show, includes the entire length of the canal, Chalouf being only about fifteen miles distant from Suez, occupied some time ago by the English, which is only seventy miles due east of Cairo, and connected with the metropolis of Egypt by the Cairo & Suez railroad.

Another glance at the map will show the importance of the English position. Practically the delta of the Nile—though the line running from Port Said, by way of Ismailia, to Suez, and marking the course of the canal occupied by the English lies outside the delta—is the theatre of the war. The sudden movement of the English has now secured the great canal, and also the fresh water canal, which is drawn off from the Nile near Cairo and, running thence to Ismailia, follows about the same line as the great canal to Suez, upon which the entire population of that section depend for drink ing water. More than this, the English are now in position to control the railroad from Suez to Cairo, which is the objective point of the whole situation. Arabi Bey's retreat to the eastward is now cut off; to the west of him lies the desert, in which he cannot subsist an army. Cairo is his natural line of retreat, and from there into Upper Egypt, where he might form a junction with the False Prophet and his victorious Soudan army. If the English troops around Alexandria, however, hold him where he is a short time longer, Cairo will be in possession of Sir Garnet Wolseley, and he will then menace the enemy in front, on one flank, and in the rear. The inhospitable desert is on the other flank, with no option to Arabi except to disperse his forces in its pitiless sand, unless, as is intimated in the dispatches, he proposes to remain where he is and make Kafr-el-Dwar another Plevna. Unless aid comes to him or Europe interferes his doom is sealed. Meantime it will cause a feeling of universal regret that the gallant De Lesseps and his son Victor have been completely routed by this sudden movement of Admiral Seymour and Sir Garnet Wolseley. The canal which he has held so long and so gallantly is at last in complete British possession, and the hated British men-of-war are plowing through its sacred waters sublimely unconscious of De Lesseps' protests, and British marines and troops have landed at half a dozen places along its banks. No vessel can enter at either mouth without British consent, and De Lesseps himself cannot even cross its calm surface in a skiff without the danger of being blown into kingdomcome. Worse than this, his own Government has warned him not to provoke the English by too frequent use of emphatic language. The old man, however, has made a splendid defense of his canal, and now that its neutrality has been disturbed let us hope that he will get swinging damages when this great war is over and he brings England sharply up before the tribunal of the nations to account for her actions.

Communications.

REPLY TO INGERSOLL.

Advance Sheets of the New Edition.

Since the publication of the first edition of this work in June, 1881, Mr. Robert Ingersoll has been brought to bay in his wild raid on all the religions in the world, while "going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it—seeking, like a roaring lion, whom he may devour." His boastful challenge to debate the truth of the Christian Religion has been at length accepted. This champion of the Christian faith appears in the Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, a distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania, justly eminent among his countrymen, in both State and National affairs—an able lawyer and jurist, filling for years a high judicial position in his native state, and more recently the office of Attorney General of the United States, on the wider theatre of the Federal Government at Washington. The abilities of Judge Black, as statesman, jurist, and scholar, especially skilled by his long experience and training as a logician, leaves nothing, so far as acquisitions confer qualifications, to be desired in scholastic learning and forensic skill requisite for the task undertaken. To this it must be added that Judge Black is an honest and earnest believer of the system he undertakes to defend, having been for years a member of the denominational religious fraternity known as the Disciples, or the "Christian Church." The pages of the North American Review of date August and November, 1881, present to the public the initial numbers on either side, of this famous discussion under the head of the "Christian Religion."

The controversy thus began has come, however, to an abrupt conclusion. Judge Black complained that the terms on which he had agreed to discuss with Mr. Ingersoll, the authenticity of the Bible and the truth of the Christian Religion, contained a stipulation that his replies should always appear in the same number of the Review, which contained his opponent's attacks, so that, as he said, "the antidote should follow the poison." He alleges that this contract was broken by the editor, and hence he declined to continue the controversy.

It may seem bold, but it is not too much to say, in the interests of truth, that this result is perhaps not to be regretted, for as each disputant stood on false premises, and so held a false position, persistence in the debate under such disabilities would have issued in a mere logomachy, a war of words, which, without being convincing and conclusive, would, at best, have shown only a preponderance of argument on the one side or the other, leaving the truth in abeyance. This conclusion will be apparent for reasons which will presently be stated, and meantime it is scarcely necessary to remind the intelligent reader, that no conclusion in argument can be sound or satisfactory, which rests upon defective premises. No vindication of the Christian religion can be successful which misstates or ignores the foundation of the system, and no assault on its integrity, however violent, is consistent or effectual which does not grapple with the pillars which support the structure.

The grand peculiarity—the marked characteristic—of the Bible religion, that which distinguishes it from all other creeds, Pagan and Heathen, Infidel or Orthodox, Catholic or Protestant, is the Revelation of a future life to man, by the resurrection from the dead, and by that means only. This guiding star in every intelligent reasoner's horizon seems to have escaped the attention of both these combatants. Yet it is certainly true that all other creeds and religions and all sects in moral philosophy, rest their doctrine of a future life to man, not on the Bible basis of the resurrection, but on their belief in the inherent immortality of the soul. This huge sophism lies at the bottom of all systems of error in religion and moral philosophy. We may be pardoned, therefore, for dwelling, for a moment, on the proof of this position, for, if neither disputant is awakened to the value of this controlling factor in the discussion, they have undertaken a vain task.

It is familiar knowledge that of the seven Bibles or sacred books of all known religions in the world, each one, except the Christian Bible, avows the creed and doctrine of the inherent immortality of the human soul or life, and the corresponding, consequential dogma of the future eternal torment of the wicked class of our race. The Koran of the Mahommedans, the Eddas of the Scandinavians, the Try Pitikes of the Buddhists, the Five Kings of the Chinese, the three Vedas of the Hindoos, and the Zendavesta of the Persians, all, without exception, teach the immortal soul theory and are profoundly silent, as they are profoundly ignorant, of the Scripture doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, which our Holy Scriptures, the Christian Bible, reveals to us, as the only pathway to a future life. It is this Sacred book that propounds, with the irresistible authority of both reason and revelation, the grand scheme of divine wisdom and love for the redemption of our race from the dominion of death and the bondage of the grave.

It is true, and we do not deny that every intelligent Christian "professor" avows his faith in the resurrection of the dead, or, as he prefers to call it, "the resurrection of the body,"—a form of expression which allows room to include also his faith in the immortality of the soul. He makes the mistake of supposing that this dual creed is homogeneous and harmless, whereas it is easily shown that the two are "wide as the poles apart," and cannot be reconciled in any rational and consistent theory of man's creation, constitution and destiny. The one creed affirms that man, being immortal can never die; the other, affirms of man, "Thou shalt surely die." The one affirms every human soul will live forever. The other, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The one declares, "'Dust thou art and to dust returnest' was not spoken of the soul." The other, addressing the first living soul, saith, "Dust thou art and to dust shalt thou return." The one, to man, "Thou shalt ascend to heaven as soon as thou diest." The other, "No man ascendeth unto heaven but the Son of Man who came down from heaven." The one, that the dead are alive and in a conscious state—in heaven or hell, paradise or purgatory. The other, "The dead know not anything. In that very day (of death) their thoughts perish." "There is no device, nor work, nor knowledge in the grave whither thou goest," and so onward to almost indefinite extension, the broad contrast continues. Like parallels, the lines never meet.

Under the influence of this false theory—of this mistaken interpretation of man's constitution and destiny, however sincerely entertained—Judge Black, in the discussion, yields to his opponent the vantage-ground of confounding him by the adverse testimony of his own witness—the Bible—which everywhere testifies against him. By adopting this pagan dogma, current in Egypt and the East, the dark land of superstition and idolatry, and imported by Thales, Socrates and Plato into the Grecian mythology, and thence, unhappily, boldly interpolated into the Christian's creed. Judge Black, logically and of necessity, virtually surrenders the Christian's citadel—the resurrection of the dead—and becomes the advocate or apologist of the eternal torment theory, which is its inevitable sequence: For if every man be immortal, the bad must live forever in the punishment to which divine justice consigns them at the judgment day. With them, to live forever is to suffer forever. This last enormity is naturally seized on by Mr. Ingersoll as an invincible weapon of warfare, and easily converted into an unanswerable argument against the divine mercy and justice, and is regarded by all fair and honest men as the odium theologicum of the Christian's faith. It thus becomes a rampart behind which, as an impregnable Gibraltar, the infidel hurls his most effective bolts against the Bible as the supposed source and authority of that most unmerciful and revolting dogma, although it be a charge of which the blessed book is wholly guiltless; for no such doctrine is found in its pages.

Again, being confessedly uninformed as to the origin, uses and continuance of evil for a time in the present and future state, Judge Black does not meet, but is obliged to ignore or evade, his opponent's argument based upon the imputed malevolence of the Creator displayed in the same endless misery creed. That we may not be suspected of doing him an injustice, we quote Judge Black's words in replying to Mr. Ingersoll's first paper. He says: "Why man is made to fill this particular place in the scale of creation, lower than the angels, yet far above the brutes, not passionless and pure, not mere machines—able to stand, yet free to fall; knowing the right, yet accountable for going wrong; gifted with reason, yet impelled by self-love to exercise the faculty—these are questions upon which we may have our speculative opinions, but knowledge is out of our reach." * * * * "Our ignorance of the whole scheme makes us poor critics upon the small part that comes within our limited perceptions."—p. 133. Again, in answering Mr. Ingersoll's objection that "the punishment of sinners in eternal hell is excessive," he says: "The future of the soul is a subject on which we have very dark views. * * * * No revelation has lifted the veil between time and eternity. * * * * Doubtless many of us are in error, but how can Mr. Ingersoll enlighten us?" p. 143.

If his views upon such subjects are shrouded in "darkness," if "many of us are in error," if we have "no revelation," and "knowledge is out of our reach," how can he gainsay any of Mr. Ingersoll's injurious charges? What advantage hath Christ over Belial? What difference between him that believeth and an infidel? Who can affirm—who can deny—seeing that both are equally in the dark, and are, at best, merely agnostics, or know-nothings?

To carry into the argument such ignorance of the Bible doctrine of time and eternity, and the damaging weight of the dogma of the eternal misery of any of God's creatures, so justly obnoxious to all our ideas of human justice even, and so revolting to divine mercy and benevolence, is to cripple and at last, under the weight of his armor, to overwhelm its champion in disaster and defeat. This the sagacity of his opponent is not slow to discover, and quickly turns to his advantage.

A. B. MASON.

VINDICATION.

My Dear Friends:

I have suffered much since I met with, and startled you all with the simple assertion that I dared not say (I know I shall be saved.) I should like much to meet with you often, but the nervous prostration which excitement throws me into from long continued ill health, leads me to feel that it is not best. I love to meet with God's people, and speak of Christ and his wondrous goodness to mankind, of the rich blessings, love, peace, and joy, that are my daily portion—from the faith and love I bestow upon him. But far better for us all, had I remained silent; I could have spoken and gained your favor (or lie) but conscientiously I could not—even though I had lost for me the favor of the whole world; however, I had no thought of your taking such an alarming view of the case, believing me as chained, dwarfed, and crippled in my theology, and reading for my benefit the fearful words of Revelation xxi. 8. For a moment it seemed as if the whole world were pure and sinless, and I alone a dark spot in the universe, brain and mind were in a whirl, sleep came not, bringing on throbbing temples and feverish frame. I felt a condemnation that I had wronged my maker in speaking at all.

By nature, as well as in Christ—so full of humility—had it not been for the perfect trust I have in Christ, my only precious refuge in the hour of trial, I should have believed myself an outcast from God's love and the children of men; and the devil who—you think—tempts me to deny the assurance of being saved, would have had ample opportunity to try his wiles; but unworthy as I felt, I had no desire to turn to the evil one, but cast myself at the feet of the dear Savior who understands far better than man the nature of wayward ones, and is far more ready to send comfort to the troubled soul than are the children of men. I believe the dear Father does understand me; I have walked with him so long, conversed with him so much by the way, that it seems to me we ought to know each other. And yet I never could, never dared, and believe I never can say, I know I shall be saved. I know all about his precious promises, I know and believe all his teachings as a whole, and could I fix my faith upon a few passages and ignore the rest, I too might say it. You claim I deny them, I deny nothing that God has spoken through all his holy prophets since the world began. Does it not as plainly state, "He that hath two coats let him impart to him that hath none." Luke iii. 11. How many carry this out to the letter? Too few I fear. In Matt. v. 32, is a strict command against marriage taking place while the parties have living companions; but neither in church or state is it heeded, while none should dare to disobey.

And I might mention passage after passage to which none (save a very few) pay any heed. God's every promise is precious and sure, his commands binding and sacred, but when we look to the lessons we may learn from many of our dear Lord's sayings, for instance, the Publican and Pharisee, Luke xviii. 10-14. Matt. ii. 2, "Many shall say unto me Lord, Lord," etc. Again in Matt. xxii. 14, "Many are called but few are chosen." "If we say we have no sin," etc. 1 John i. 8. If the righteous scarcely are saved, where shall the ungodly and sinners appear? Hence when so continually admonished to keep our humble position, and not seem better than we are. No matter how near to God I live, how comforted by his precious promises, how blessed by seeking to do his will, I dare not, lest I be weighed in the balance and found wanting. I might easily deceive myself, but could not deceive Christ. I had rather take the lower seat than begin with shame to descend from the higher. I had rather bathe my Savior's feet with my tears, than accept unworthily a seat at his right hand. Aye, I could more truthfully say I would rather myself be shut out, could I save more worthy ones by so doing. I cannot see why others—even they who believe my life consistent as a Christian—should regard the matter so essential to my salvation, some of whom aver that I have no part or claim to any of God's promises while I thus believe.

I cannot trust more than I do. "And greater love hath no man than that he giveth his life for his friend?" I do know I could give mine for God. I cannot be an unbeliever for I believe all his word. Am I a stranger to the all things in God's word? I believe there is no limit to God's power, no higher standard to his wondrous love. Can I do more than throw myself on his tender mercy and say I know that all will be well. God will know his own, for he sees not as man seeth.

A child once accidently committed a serious fault. The father of the child, usually kind, was cursed with a fearful temper and in consequence his punishments to his children were more brutal than humane. Knowing this a lady promised the child to do all in her power to set matters right, and say nothing to the father. "My father ought to know it," said the trembling child. "But if you tell him he will half kill you," said the lady. Listening to much persuasion, the child was greatly tempted. The little one sat trembling for some time then hervously exclaimed, "I shall tell him if he kills me!"

And so I, dear friends, shall tell my heavenly Father all about it, and I will love and trust him if he kills me.

May God bless you all in your higher life and through his love and abundant mercy permit your humble servant to enter the kingdom.

MRS. O. F. HALL.

Editor Restitution:

Say to the brethren scattered abroad in the different states—especially Indiana—that if the good Lord is willing, I expect to make a trip to Indiana to see my aged mother once more, should we both live till October—about the 20th or near that time. If any of my old brethren—or some newer ones—desire my labors write to me at Galesburgh, Keosho Co., Kansas, and let me know how many want to hear the glad tidings of the coming kingdom once more. Let us have a good time.

JOHN FOORE.

Selections.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHINESE TRADITION OF THE CREATION.

The Chinese tradition points us for the race's origin to the mountains in the Northwestern Province of Shensee. From these mountains flow the mighty streams to fertilize the earth, and on the highest peak of the mountains their tradition places the cradle and paradise of primitive man. In regard to the creation, their book, Fong-sen-tong, says: "When the earth and heaven were made, there were not, as yet, man nor peoples. Then Ninhoa molded yellow earth, and of that made man. This is the true origin of men."—W. W. De Hart, in Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine

A leading journal of Madrid states that the father of Arabi Pasha was a maker of wooden cases, in which dried raisins were kept, at Barcelonia. Arabi was brought up to his father's trade, according to this account, but, manifesting a love of reading, was sent to the University of Valencia, where for four years he studied law. But he abandoned his legal studies and became a chorus singer. After this escapade he was next heard of in Morocco in a regiment of lancers, in which he had enlisted in 1859, and received for his bravery three decorations and a commission as Lieutenant. Falling in love after the evacuation of Tetuan with the daughter of a rich Jewish merchant, he deserted from the Spanish army and took refuge on an English merchant vessel, which was shipwrecked in the Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb. Arabi escaped, and after some wandering in Abyssinia and Nubia, settled in Egypt, became a Mohammedan, and studied the Mosiem law.

The spirits of the people of Italy are in a ferment, a part of the population clinging to the ancient superstitions and the rest rejecting them with scorn even when presented to them by the priests in the churches. In Milan, the other day, a priest, who has become notorious for other reasons, denounced in his sermons the Government, the Liberals, and the newspapers. While he was inveighing one Sunday against Italy and Italian justice, his words were received with a storm of hisses. Confusion succeeded this outburst; the women screamed and fled to the altars for refuge; the chairs were overturned, and the people at the doors were suffocated or thrown down. At last the unpopular preacher left the pulpit, where he had tried to continue his discourse amid howls and hisses, and entered a carriage at the church door. Here he was greeted by fresh hisses, and when a few partisans tried to applaud him they were beaten by the patriotic and insulted crowd.

EGYPT.

The reign of Mohammedan fanaticism is closely connected with the expectation of their coming Deliverer who is looked for in a few months. The Constantinople correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune thus alludes to the general expectation: "The expected Deliverer has arisen in that dimly-known region that lies on the borders of the great Sahara in Africa. In 1878, when the so-called Moslem revival swept over the whole East, this man, Mehdi by name, showed great activity in Morocco, and afterwards went as a missionary through all the regions southward and eastward. He is a learned doctor, belonging to the Shazili order of dervishes. A work on theology, of which he is the author, is celebrated throughout Northern Africa, and is a text-book in the great Egyptian Theological Seminaries. This man has succeeded in gaining a very great influence among the Moslems of Kordofan, Darfour, Sennar, and through all the oases of the Great Desert. In that region, whence active missionary efforts have carried Islamism far into the interior of Africa, Islam seems to be thoroughly alive. Ben Amara, and other leaders who have caused the French so much trouble in Tunis, are among the disciples of this great doctor. Men who come from the oases of the Sahara say that the whole of North Africa is in a ferment under the inspiration of this man. His fervid appeals renew the enthusiasm of the people, and the thought in every mind is that the time is at hand for the whole population to join in a grand campaign for the glory of God and the honor of the Prophet."

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The books of the New Testament were originally written in the Greek language, and at different periods of time, ranging from 50 A. D. to 98 A. D. They were of course in manuscript form, written on parchment or vellum; and of the most ancient manuscripts only five are known to be in existence at this time. The Alexandrian Manuscript, named from the place where it was found, and written in the 5th century, and now in the British Museum. The Vatican Manuscript, named after the Pope's palace, and written in the fourth century. It was taken from Rome to Paris by the First Napoleon, but, having been returned, it is now very zealously guarded in the Vatican Library. The Ephraem Manuscript, written by a Syrian divine named Ephraem in the fourth century, and now in the National Library at Paris. The Beza Manuscript, named after its discoverer and owner, and written in the sixth century. The Sinaitic Manuscript, named from being discovered in the Convent of St. Catharine on Mount Sinai. It was written in the fourth century, and is now in the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg, the capital of Russia. From these manuscripts, none of them, however, being complete, different versions were made, at different times, such as the Syriac, Egyptian, Memphitic, Thebaic, Gothic, Armenian, Persian, Ethiopian, Greek and Latin, so named on account of the language into which, or the place where, they were translated. All of the Bible, including the Old and New Testaments, was translated into the Latin Vulgate in the year 405, this being the only authentic version, according to the Roman Catholic Church, and from this and other versions the English versions were made. —N. A. Truehlood, in Christian Worker.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At Angelo, Wis. Aug. 10, '82, Martha A., wife of Edward Hanchett, aged forty-nine years and ten months.

She had been a great sufferer for many years, bearing all with Christian patience and resignation, her disease (consumption) baffled the skill of physicians, till at last she fell asleep, but will soon join in the chorus of the ransomed host—O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory!—She and her faithful husband, with many others embraced the Abrahamic faith and obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered to them under the labors of J. F. Wilcox and humble self, in which faith she was a shining light to her last. Funeral at their house. Discourse by Elder Herrick of Sparta, from Job xiv. 14, to a large concourse of relatives and friends who were present to sympathize with our lonely brother. May the blessed hope sustain him in his lonely hours, and may the little church at that place endeavor to meet Sister Martha in a land free from sickness and death, where a reunion will be organized that shall have no end.

W. B. PUTNAM.

DIED—At Plains, Pa. July 24, 1882, Geo. F. Cook, aged 83 years.

Brother Cook was one of the pioneers of truth in this place, having long been indentified with those that believe in the second coming of Christ to establish his kingdom and reign over the nations of the earth, the mortality of man, and consequent unconscious state of the dead. He was instrumental with others in organizing a church at Plains in 1875, and soon after of building a neat Chapel to meet in, in which they have held meetings ever since. The church has lost a faithful and efficient member. He being elder of the church his loss will be very much felt, having taken place in just two weeks after the death of his son John E. Cook, who was pastor of the church, whose loss is also severely felt by the entire church, but they sorrow not as others who have no hope, for they died in the triumphs of faith in the resurrection to eternal life. The funeral sermon was preached by the writer to a large and attentive audience from 2 Sam. xiv. 14, showing the condition of man in death and the means provided for their resurrection. T. FINN.

STOCKTON, Kan.

Editor Restitution:

I have preached five or six times at Oyer since the debate, and yesterday, August 13, immersed two, Brother Wm. O. Robinson and wife into the name of Jesus Christ. We had good meetings and good attention paid to the word, and we anticipate more good resulting ere long to the glory of God in the name of Jesus Christ, pray for us. We remain your brother in hope of eternal life in the kingdom of God.

JOSIAH M. FINN.

The Church in Michigan will hold its next Quarterly Conference (D. V.) in the school house at Cost's Grove, Barry County, commencing Friday evening, Sep. 29, at 7 o'clock, and continue over Sunday. Cost's Grove is in the s. w. corner of Woodland Tp., and seven miles n. e. of Hastings. Strangers coming with teams will ask for G. W. Coste. Those coming by rail will come on the Grand River Valley R. R. and leave the cars at Hastings. Trains will be met by teams to convey parties to the meeting on Friday as follows, going east at 1:40 p.m. going west at 2:22 p. m. Able speakers will be in attendance, and a cordial invitation is extended to all to be present and hear the truth.

HERBERT MILLER, Sec.

Poetry.

The Advance.

IN THE LONG RUN.

ELLA WHEELER.

In the long run fame finds deserving man;
The lucky wight may prosper for a day,
But in good time true merit leads the van,
And vain pretense, anointed, goes its way.
There is no Chance, no Destiny, no Fate,
But fortune smiles on those who work and wait,
In the long run.

In the long run all godly sorrow pays,
There is no better thing than righteous pain;
The sleepless nights, the awful tears-crowned days,
Bring sure reward to tortured soul and brain.
Unanswered joys enervate in the end,
But sorrow yields a glorious dividend
In the long run.

In the long run all hidden things are known;
The eye of truth will penetrate the night,
And, good or ill, thy secret shall be known,
However well 'tis guarded from the light.
And the unspoken motives of the breast
Are fathomed by the years, and stand confessed
In the long run.

In the long run all love is paid by love,
Though underlined by the hearse of earth;
The great eternal Government above
Keeps strict account and will redress the wrong.
Give thy love freely; do not count the cost;
No beautiful a thing was never lost
In the long run.

Communications.

THE GOSPEL UNDER VARIOUS ASPECTS.

"The Gospel—How that Christ Died for Our Sins," Etc.

"Without shedding of blood is no remission," is the apostolic dictum regarding the sacrifices under the law in relation to forgiveness; and Jesus said, concerning the shedding of his own blood: "This is is my blood of the new covenant, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." That the just should die for the unjust is incomprehensible to many, and even to some who claim the name of Christ; but however it is to be explained, it is not only a truth, but a gospel truth—glad tidings—good news. An intelligent, well educated, well-disposed man, who claimed to be a disciple of Christ, but who stumbled at his doctrine, said he would acknowledge no authority in regard to any doctrine but the word of God himself. But he was not aware that the Master he professed to serve had said: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him might not perish but have eternal life;" and again: "Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem;" and again: "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Truly does Jesus say: "Thus it is written;" for we read: "It pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief; when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see seed, he shall prolong days. And the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors, and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors." Isa. liii. 10–12. Those who cavil at the innocent suffering for the guilty, affect great regard for the divine justice, but seem to forget that justice is not the only attribute of Deity, and that there is such a thing as generosity. Nay more, they seem to be unaware of the grand truth that, in a remedial point of view, where the morals of the beneficiaries is an important consideration, the exercise of generosity is far more influential than the exercise of justice. So that, even from a rational point of view, God's plan is well fitted to secure the ends in view.

But it is highly probable that the doctrine commonly held on this subject has much to do with the objection referred to. So much suffering endured by the substitute for so much sin committed by the sinners. The following extract from Christ is All, by the Dean of Gloucester, is a fair sample of what is held and taught:—"What then occurs? See Jesus crushed to the earth beneath the load of anguish. Each bleeding pore proclaims that more cannot be borne."

"But whence is the God-man's mighty agony? The fire of heaven's wrath has fallen on him. Vengeance has seized its prey. He undergoes the every pang which would have tortured his redeemed if they had tossed in hottest flames for ever. The fire burns, the anger rages, until each sin has infinitely suffered what it infinitely earned. No fuel then remains. All is consumed. The fire dies. The wrath expires. Hark! Jesus utters the wondrous word, 'It is finished.'" One article in Dean Law's creed is: "I believe in the forgiveness of sins," but it is difficult to see how, if he considers himself one of "his redeemed," whose "every pang" has been "undergone" by Jesus, he can believe in the forgiveness of his sins. If God's "anger raged" against Jesus "until each sin infinitely suffered what it infinitely earned," where is there any room for forgiveness? Is not forgiveness a free gift bestowed without any mercantile equivalent being exacted in exchange? Does a creditor, who has been paid in full by a surety, inquire for a moment that he forgives his debtor? And again, To whom is the sinner's gratitude due? He may feel grateful to his substitute, but how can this feeling be evoked towards that relentless Being who made the fire of heaven's wrath to fall upon Jesus," and whose "anger raged until each sin infinitely suffered what it infinitely earned?" Is it surprising that intelligent minds, whose ideas of Christian atonement are derived from such pictures of divine justice as this extract presents, should seek relief in partial or entire scepticism in regard to the Bible?

The true idea of substitution is not suffering for suffering, but death for death; and that not the death of a separate substitute for each sinner, but the death of one for all—"Christ died for our sins." "The wages of sin is death;" but the death of the entire human race would not constitute an infinite idea. But Dean Law holds that Christ suffered infinitely, and possibly he also holds that he might have suffered infinitely even though he had not died; for that which rendered his sufferings infinite, though of temporary duration, and followed by death—namely, his divinity—would render them infinite although they should cease and he continue to live. But how could his divinity render his sufferings infinite, when, in the nature of things, it was exempt from any participation in suffering or death? If infinity were an element of the sacrifice of Christ, derived from eternal torment as the penalty of sin, it is difficult to see why Dean should not go the length of holding the necessity of eternal suffering on the part of the sinners' substitute.

These remarks are offered to show the worthlessness of such abstract speculations as infinite sin and infinite suffering, and the value of those plain Scripture statements regarding the penalty of sin. From Genesis to Revelation, it is death—literal death—a returning to the ground whence man was taken. The ancient sacrifices were well fitted to impress the offerer with the fact that his life had been forfeited, and that God required a continued acknowledgment of this. Much more the "one offering" of the Christ; for "if one died for all, then were all dead." And the true believer feels that it is not future happiness only that he needs from Christ, but actual existence — absolute life — without which all other blessings are impossible. This is the true evangelical doctrine; for it strips the sinner of every possession, and makes him dependent on the Savior for everything.

As of old, so now—"the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness." They stumble at that stumbling-stone, not knowing that the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and that "it pleased him, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe."

But the cross was not preached till its victim had been restored to life again. What a deep significancy is here! It is hardly conceivable that any power in heaven or earth could have induced the apostles to preach a dead Christ to Israel, or to the world. Nay, more, they were not even required to preach a living Christ, while he lived "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." They preached the coming kingdom; and while doing so, they were charged by their Master "to tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ." And as to the cross, although they were plainly told that it should be the instrument of his death, "this saying was hid from them." But after the event, and after his resurrection from the dead, his receiving all power in heaven and in earth, his exaltation to the heavens, the angelic assurance of his return, and, above all, the descent of the Holy Spirit according to his recent promise—they boldly proclaimed his death, resurrection, and Christship—"This same Jesus whom ye have crucified, God hath made both Lord and Christ." Thus it was after "by his own blood he entered into the holy place," that "the blood of the cross" became a subject of public preaching, and was thus superadded as a new element of that "gospel of the kingdom," which had been made known by Jesus and his apostles, in "the days of his flesh."

The gospel has not escaped the corruption which has overspread other truths of Christianity. The current doctrine is that this latter element—the blood of the cross—constitutes the entire gospel of Christ. The peculiar glory of Jesus as the Messiah, the Lord's Anointed, and that kingdom of his father David, promised to him of old—are almost universally ignored as Bible truths; and even where thus recognized, are in the majority of cases denied a gospel character. How hard it is to come to the knowledge of the truth! and often harder still to estimate truth at its true value, even when we have found it. True, it is "precious blood," yet it is "the precious blood of Christ," who is himself precious, as Peter testifies—"Unto you, therefore, who believe, he is precious." And in whatever aspects of his character and offices his preciousness appears, surely no one will deny it to that official Messiahship of which the apostle says: "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name." Here the most momentous results are suspended on the belief that "Jesus is the Christ"—even "having life through his name." He must indeed be precious to them who believe. But what is he to the unbelieving? "But unto them who are disobedient," continues Peter, "the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner; and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them who stumble at the word, being disobedient." May we all be persuaded to give ourselves no rest until Christ to us is precious, and so avoid the stumbling of those who are disobedient; for "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven—taking vengeance on the [them] that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

J. CAMERON.

Editor Restitution:

In this communication I propose to show how either ignorance or doctrinal prejudice, or both, has warped the translation and obscured and perverted the thought of one or two passages of the Scriptures of the New Covenant; and I will premise by saying that as I understand the general teaching of the Scriptures, God has conferred upon every living human being an allotment of natural life, and is holding out a conditional offer through the gospel, of another allotment of spiritual life to such as shall be accounted worthy to receive it, and those who are accounted worthy, and do receive it, are said to have a κοινωνια with God the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ. See 1 John i. 3, and the last verse of the last chap. of 2 Cor.

The reader will perceive by reviewing verses 1 and 2, of this chapter of John, that he is speaking of eternal life, and the manifestation of it in the word of God meaning all that the phrase implies, inclusive of the living word, Jesus Christ. Then he goes on in verse 3 to say "That which we have seen and heard we declare unto you that ye also may have (what?) with us; and our (what?) is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ."

In answer to this question "what" our translators have said "fellowship," both in this passage and in the one quoted from 2 Cor. Now let us see what a fellowship is. Is marriage a fellowship? No. But this word is used to illustrate the relation of the spiritual bride to Christ. Is brotherhood a fellowship? But the saints are all said to be Christ's brethren. Is sonship a fellowship? But the saints are all said to be the sons of God. Is heirship a fellowship? But the saints are all said to be heirs and joint heirs with Christ of an inheritance, this inheritance being eternal life and all that belongs to it.

No, marriage, brotherhood, sonship, heirship, all imply something far more than mere fellowship, although including the idea of fellowship. Do I speak of my wife, or my son, or my father, or my brother, or my joint-heir as a fellow? No, they are all partners of participants with me in something. Fellow and fellowship are words of very broad application and degenerate frequently into terms of opprobrium. Not so with partner and partnership. We may fellowship with the world; but we partnership with but few. Fellowship is a matter of sympathy or sentiment principally; partnership a question of common interests, purposes, principles, and aims. I fellowship with a person; why? If asked I could not tell perhaps. He pleases me I should say no doubt. I enter into partnership with a person because he have common purposes, principles, aims or objects in view, and our interests, so far as this partnership is concerned, became mutual and common.

Fellowship, then, does not properly translate this word κοινωνια but "partnership" or "a common participation" does, and is the classical use or meaning of the terms. This same term is translated in passages relating to the Lord's Supper "communion." Neither does this word convey the idea of the original. We are not told to commune with the bread and wine, but to partake of them as symbols which are to remind us of the Lord's death and broken body until he come, and implying still more that by faith we have become partners or participants in his suffering, reproach and glory; or as John designates it in one phrase, the eternal life.

Let us consider some of the terms which give the relation of individuals to each other, and first the most general κοινωνος, an assemblage or gathering, more specific εκκλησια meaning a called out assemblage. Still more specific συναγωγη where love limits the association. Still more specific κοινωνια an association or participation where interests are to some extent mutual; as for instance, the general interests of any craft or trade or line of business. All fishermen, for instance, or all hardware merchants, or all farmers, have or each of these classes have certain common interests, which constitute each class separately into a κοινωνια, finally a still more specific term is there, κοινωνος namely, signifying the coming together of two or more individuals into a joint-relationship, based upon a common purpose, aim, object, or hope, and known by the common sense term of a partnership.

To illustrate the classical use of these last two terms, I will call the reader's attention to a passage in Luke v., where they occur as business terms and where their meaning is obvious, even to the casual reader.

In verse 7, after recounting the circumstances of the miraculous draught of fishes, and when Simon Peter and his partners saw that their net was about to break, they beckoned to their μετοχοις (associates, fellow-fishermen) in the other boat to come and participate or take hold with them, which they did.

Now in verse 10 it is stated how many of all those who participated in this matter were partners; viz: Simon Peter, James and John, and the word used to express this relation is κοινωνοι. So if κοινωνος means a partner, κοινωνοι, the word which represents the relation existing between κοινωνος or partners, must be a partnership. Quod erat demonstrandum.

So much for the rendering "fellowship" in the first passage quoted—1 John i. 3. Now let us consider the propriety of the rendering "and the communion of the Holy Ghost," in 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

I suppose all understand this verse to be an invocation, and that the apostle intends to invoke a three-fold blessing upon the church at Corinth to which he is writing. Now the translation of the King James version puts the apostle in the attitude of invoking this blessing from three persons, viz: the Lord Jesus Christ, God, and the Holy Ghost. Is this what he says and means in the original Greek? By no means. What he does say and mean is to ask a threefold blessing from one person, as a source God, and that it may come through the appointed mediator, one Lord Jesus Christ, and that it may take the threefold form of grace, love, and Holy Spirit, with all that these terms imply. Grace means good-will. But the good-will of our Lord Jesus Christ is an infinite thing as compared with any ordinary human good-will. So God's love as compared with any human love. Now any human good-will or human love would be manifested in a human way, and according to the laws which regulate the human mind and heart. But as we are told God thoughts and ways are higher than man's ways and thoughts as the heavens are higher than the earth, and by this Scripture teaches that what is meant is that God thinks and acts spiritually, or according to the laws of spiritual life and nature, while man by nature thinks, feels, and acts according to the laws of his human nature. Hence the necessity of his regeneration.

Paul says "The natural man cannot apprehend spiritual things," meaning by "the natural man" the unregenerate man.

Now then the blessing that he invokes in this passage is that this "good-will" and "love," and regenerating power of Holy Spirit may be with them, and retranslating the whole passage it would read, "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the common participation (or partnership) in the Holy Spirit be with you all."

The grammatical construction of the sentence is as follows: χαρις grace, αγαπη love, and κοινωνια common participation, constitute a compound subject of the intransitive verb ειη third person, imperative present understood. "of the Lord Jesus Christ" adjunct modifying "grace;" "of God" adjunct modifying "love;" "in the Holy Spirit" adjunct modifying the word "κοινωνια," "common participation" (or partnership); "μετα παντων υμων" "with you all" an adverbial adjunct of manner modifying the verb ειη understood.

The first adjective adjunct is what the grammarians denominate genitive possessive; so also the second adjective adjunct; the third adjective adjunct however, is an entirely different construction, and herein lies the secret of the error in the King James rendering. This is a genitive of sharing, as defined in Rule 10, of Crosby's Grammar, and as illustrated under paragraph 367, section 1, where the reader will find quoted the following passages from the classics illustrating the use upon which the rule is based, and first two containing the very verb from which this verbal noun κοινωνια is derived.

Following another general rule the verbal noun takes the same construction and governs its modifying noun in the same case, and according to the same rule as the verb from which it is derived.

The other passage contains also the verb μετεχω from which the verbal noun μετοχοις is derived, the other term for "participation," which we have been commenting upon. The passages are as follows:

εγω δε κοινωνος ειμαι—may I be a participant (or partner) in this fortune.

κοινωνοι παντων — partners in all things.

τον αυτον μετεχειν—to share in the dangers.

Now in regard to the proposition μετα with the genitive in the adverbial adjunct μετα παντων υμων, and in the similar adverbial adjunct in the other passage in 1 John i. 3, viz: μετα του πατρος και μετα του υιου αυτου Ιησου Χριστου, see Liddell & Scott's Lexicon, under definition of the term μετα, remark and example on Genitive with μετα in connection with an intransitive verb denoting community of interest. This case exactly, and an additional argument in support of the correctness of the previous construction and rendering.

I will say in closing, that this rendering and this argument, I fully understand, strikes at the foundation of the doctrine of the trinity, as it is commonly understood and taught in all our so-called Orthodox churches, and I think it is high time that its absurdity and inconsistency with the truth of the Scriptures was critically exposed.

Much more might be said on this very important term κοινωνια, but I forbear, and will close by referring the reader and scholar to one other passage simply, well illustrating its use and bearing upon this subject of "partnership in the eternal life," viz: 1 Cor. x. 15–21 inclusive.

CHAS. GARDNER.

To the Brethren and Sisters in Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

I was glad to see your reply to my letter, through Brother Hoyt, in THE RESTITUTION. I am glad that you so much appreciated my effort, and also for the kind criticism you made. I am not pleased that we differ from each other on the subject. But since we do differ on some points contained in my letter, I am glad that you expressed your views so freely, as a comparison of our different views, is the proper and legitimate way to become one in our judgment. How else can we become one? The true view is always harmonious. Whenever we have different views of the same thing we need to be corrected; the truth is always the standard of Christian union. If we would be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment, we must compare the views in which we differ. We should always strive to be one as Christ and the Father are one. Let us not contend for the mastery, but let us strive together that we may be one in the faith of the gospel. However widely we may differ on any given point, let us not be discouraged. If we are persistent in our search for the truth, and teachable, and as willing to hear, as we are to be heard, we may yet be of one mind, and of one judgment on all important things pertaining to the faith of the gospel.

Will you now allow me to ask a few questions concerning your criticism? Do you understand that God is the Savior of all men in the same sense that he is the Savior of them that believe? Then it must be in a different sense. Was not Noah and those that were with him in the ark saved alive, while the rest of the world perished? If God is the Savior of all men in some sense, is not this one salvation? If he is the Savior of them that believe in another sense, is not this another salvation? Does not bodily exercise pertain to all men in this life? Is it not profitable only for a little while? Are not all men saved during this life by the shining of the sun, and the falling of the rain, and the fruits of the earth? Are men required to be good or bad in order to share in this salvation? Then, in this sense is not God the Savior of all men for a little while?

Is not the special salvation limited to those who are godly? Is not the great advantage of this salvation over the salvation of all men, because it promises life in the world to come, contrasted with the salvation of all men for a little while?

You express regret that you are obliged to differ with me on 1 Cor. xvi. 23, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Are all men in Adam? Are all men in Christ? Does not all men in Adam die because they are like him, because he is their representative head, and because they are sinners? Even so, will not those who are in Christ, of whom he is the head, and who are righteous as he is righteous be made alive? Will not all in Adam die? and will not all in Christ be made alive? Does Adam represent all men? Does not Christ represent all who are in him? Is not Christ the first-fruits of the harvest of the dead? Is he not the first sheaf of the harvest, the first-born from the dead, the first-born among the brethren, and the first-born of those who shall become the children of God, being the children of the resurrection? If the first sheaf was wheat, can it represent any thing but wheat?

Does not the resurrection belong to the gospel? Was not the gospel preached to Abraham? Which of the promises made to Abraham, promise a resurrection to any but Abraham and his seed? Then, may not my interpretation of this passage be the right one?

Yours striving to know the truth,

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

Youths' Column.

Care for the Little Ones.

Gather them close to your loving heart—
Cradle them on your breast;
They will soon enough leave your brooding care,
Soon enough mount youth's topmost stair—
Little ones to the nest.

Fret not that the little ones' hearts are gay,
That their restless feet will rest
There may come a time to the icy and by
When you'll sit in your lonely room and sigh
For a sound of childish fun.

When you'll long for a repetition sweet,
That sounded through each room,
Of "mother!" "mother!" the dear love-calls
That will echo long in the silent halls,
And add to their stately gloom.

There may come a time when you'll long to hear
The eager boyish tread,
The tuneless whistle, the clear, shrill shout,
The busy bustle in and out,
And pattering overhead.

When the boys and girls are all grown up
And scattered far and wide,
Or gone to the undiscovered shore
Where youth and age come nevermore,
You will miss them from your side.

Then gather them close to your loving heart,
Cradle them on your breast,
They will soon enough leave your brooding care,
Soon enough mount youth's topmost stair—
Little ones to the nest.

Poor Girls.

The poorest girls in the world are those who have never been taught to work. There are thousands of them. Rich parents have petted them; they have been taught to despise labor and depend upon others for a living, and are perfectly helpless. If misfortune comes upon their friends, as it often does, their case is helpless. The most forlorn and miserable women upon earth belong to this class. It belongs to parents to protect their daughters from this deplorable condition. They do them a great wrong if they neglect it. Every daughter should be taught to earn her own living. The rich as well as the poor require this training. The wheel of fortune rolls swiftly round; the rich are very likely to become poor and the poor rich. Still to labor is no disadvantage to the rich and is indispensible to the poor. Well-to-do parents must educate their children to work. No reform is more imperative than this.

Boys, Be Neat and Tidy!

"When I was six years old," says a well-known merchant, "my father died, leaving nothing to my mother but the charge of myself and two younger sisters. After selling the greater part of the household furniture she owned, she took two small rooms in W—— street and there, by her needle, contrived in some way—how, I can not tell, when I recollect the bare pittance for which she worked—to support us in comfort. Frequently, however, I remember that our supper consisted simply of a slice of bread, seasoned by hunger, and rendered inviting by the neat manner in which our repast was served, our table always being spread with a cloth, which, like my good mother's heart, seemed ever to preserve a snow-white purity."

Wiping his eyes the merchant continued:

"Speaking of those days reminds me of the time when we sat down to the table one evening, and my mother had asked a blessing of our Heavenly Father on her little defenceless ones in tones of tender pathos that I remember yet, she divided the remnant of her loaf into three pieces, placing one on each of our plates, but preserving none for herself. I stole around to her, and was about to tell her that I was not hungry, when a flood of tears burst from her eyes, and she clasped me to her bosom. Our meal was left untouched; we sat up late that night, and what we said I can not tell. I know that my mother talked to me more as a companion than a child; when we knelt down to pray, I consecrated myself to be the Lord's and to serve my mother.

"But" said he, "this is not telling you how neatness made my fortune. It was some time after this that my mother found an advertisement in the newspaper for an errand-boy in a commission-house in B—— street. Without being necessitated to wait to have my clothes mended, for my mother always kept them in perfect order, and although on minute inspection they bore traces of more than one patch, yet on the whole they had a very respectable air; without waiting to arrange my hair, or clean my shoes, for I was obliged to observe, from my earliest youth, the most perfect neatness in every respect, my mother sent me to see if I could obtain the situation. With a light step I started, for I had long wished my mother to allow me to assist her.

My heart beat fast, I assure you, as I turned out of W—— into B—— street, and made my way along to the number my mother had given me. I summoned all the courage I could muster, and stepped briskly into the counting-room, and made known the object of my calling.

The merchant smiled and told me there was another boy who had come in a little before me, whom he thought he should engage. However, he asked me some questions, and then went out and conversed with the other boy, who stood in the back part of the office. The result was that the lad who first applied was dismissed, and I entered the merchant's employment, first as an errand boy, then as a clerk, afterwards as his partner, until death, when he left me the whole of his business, stock, etc. After I had been in his service some years, he told me the reason he chose me in preference to the other boy, was because of the general neatness of my person, while in reference to the other lad he noticed that he neglected to be tidy. To this simple circumstance has probably been owing the greater part of my success in business."

Sententious.

Genius can never despise labor.

A clear head is desirable, but a clean heart is essential.

The secrets of life are not shown except to sympathy and to likeness.

Every noble crown is, and on earth will forever be, a crown of thorns.—Carlyle.

He who wants to do a good deal of good at once will never do any.

Poverty may excuse a shabby coat, but it is no excuse for shabby morals.

Bear up, bear on, the end shall tell
The dear Lord ordereth all things well!
—J. G. Whittier.

Whosoever passes a hard censure upon another man's life should presently make use of self-examination, and inquire what his own is.

How independent of money peace of conscience is, and how much happiness can be condensed in the humblest home.

To rejoice in others' prosperity is to give content to your own lot; to mitigate another's grief is to alleviate or dispel your own.—T. Edwards.

While thy heart shall flow outward
To gladden and bless,
The fount at its centre
Will never grow less.
—Prof. Thomas C. Upham.

I know of nothing to give unfailing moral energy to the mind but a living faith in a Being of infinite perfections, who is always with us to aid, strengthen, reward, reprove, chasten, and guide to immortality.—Channing.

One yet unfinished story
Is reading all to-day:
To God its greatest glory,
To us the greatest bliss.

Home is not a name, nor a form, nor a routine. It is a spirit, a presence, a principle. Material and method will not and cannot make it. It must get its light and sweetness from those who inhabit it.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—BY A. MALAN, M. D.—

This is a cloth bound book of 328 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee to the worth of the work. Price only 50 cts. each. Send to this office for them.

Poetry.

Appeal.

ONLY WAIT.

When the spirit, worn and weary
'Neath its daily load of care,
Finds the pathway long and dreary
And the burden hard to bear,
Tired with hoping, faint with fearing,
Sighs to reach the golden gate,
Then in accents soft and cheering
Patience whispers, "Only wait;
For a brighter day is dawning,
Joy awaits us in the morning,
In the beauty of the morning—
Only wait."

O sad hearts, whose countless sorrow
Dares not let a murmur fall,
Only wait and trust the morrow—
God's great love is over all.
Only wait, ill wounded spirit
By the cross of life weighed down;
Those shall rarely earth inherit—
Bear the cross, and win the crown;
For a brighter day is dawning,
Joy awaits us in the morning—
In the beauty of the morning—
"Only wait."

Selections.

Age to Come Herald.

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

There is a line of steamers from New York to Jaffa, direct from New York to Marseilles, then direct from there to Jaffa. Fare—3d class, $48. Any one coming that way must bring bed, canned meats, fat, good butter, cheese, teas, teapot and dishes, then they are all right.

Forty more of the poor Gadites came yesterday. They need our care. I think I told you these people are of the tribe of God; they have been in Arabia since the time of dispersion, I think. They have been terribly persecuted. The Scriptures are literally fulfilled now; as we see the lame, halt and blind, are actually brought on litters to Jerusalem. Some poor things have died on the way, but they met with a kind and cordial reception here. The Russian Jews are better off; they have more means, and they have brought some nice horses and carriages. The return of the Jews is the only theme talked of here now, and you will say that is enough, as it is the greatest event that has occurred in their history.

June 6. The Americans are feeding 76 Jews daily; most of them are ill, having been in quarantine eight months. They say there will be millions of Jews coming soon. They see the end has come. They are the people I want to see, for they will do something. The editor of the Gazette has gone to Constantinople. He is totally blind; yet he will accomplish much. I tell you, these Jews have the do in them. I have a good chance to observe and learn the character of these people.

The people are greatly alarmed at the news from Egypt, and are coming to me for the Perihelia papers. I wish I had one of those books on Perihelia, The Coming Catastrophe.

Tell Mr. Fuller the dogs have nearly all disappeared from Jerusalem. No one knows where they have gone, and nobody cares, as no one owned them. Mohammedans have a terrible hatred for dogs.

There is an English lady here who thinks she has a mission to the Jews. She buys tracts and Testaments, and goes round giving them to the poor, hungry people, who care nothing for them. I told her that her course was foolish; that starving people wanted bread instead of books; and she finally thought so too. I think this kind of missionary work is about ended here. If they knew these Jews as well as I do, they would be leaving before they came. Who can abide these days?

Tomorrow I shall go to the soup kitchen to see our poor Gaditos eat their dinner. They fasted three days for their poor Russian brethren. When Mr. Steinhart told me they fasted, I laughed at the idea of their fasting, when they fast most of the time. What wonderful endurance these people have. I told Mr. S. I hoped he would not get discouraged in the good work; he answered never. He says he never was discouraged, and, poor fellow, he has had heavy burdens laid on his youthful shoulders.

Jerusalem is really the most unromantic country in the world; it takes the romance all out of one—it is very real. I thought I was a little romantic, but it is all gone here. Well, that is good; I don't believe there ever were any novels written in Jerusalem. I think when Christ raised the dead they arose and ate their dinner, like sensible people, and they always will. After a stay of six months here we think of the resurrection as of people who will come and go about their business, as they should. How glad I shall be when they come.

I must now go to the soup kitchen and see the poor Jews eat the soup prepared by the Americans.

I have just returned from the soup kitchen; it was a scene worth seeing. To see these dear people who have suffered such terrible persecutions, so calm, so courteous and dignified. Everything, even the smallest act, is done with order and discipline; it seems to be characteristic of the nation. I like to sit and watch their movements, they are very cleanly. Just the people, I should think, God would commence his kingdom with. We consider it is a very great honor to Americans to be permitted to sacrifice for them. Perhaps an article in the Herald might bring us a few dollars. It seems as though some would make a little sacrifice for this noble object. Tell Emeline to go to the churches and beg for us. A greenback dollar will go here; let them come. Tell Mr. Marcus to send to Steinhart; his address is: B. STEINHART, Teacher of the Jewish Orphanage, Jerusalem, Palestine. I am sure that if he could see the sacrifice that he is making he would.

I think we shall see lively times soon. We are watching Egypt to see what God will do there. The Jews are all stirred up in Europe, and they are looking in the right direction. My neighbor is moving to Bethlehem today, for the summer; I shall go often to see her. I will walk over early in the morning next week, and remain all night, when we will visit Urtos. I will give you a description afterwards. I am looking forward in hope.

The wheat crop is the largest this year that has been known for one hundred years. I have been reading the last thirteen chapters of Ezekiel with a new understanding. How can people spiritualize this wonderful prophecy all away, as they do? The Jews have quite a good knowledge of the promises. The nation of Israel are the people who will fulfil them; and God will take care that they shall be notified in due season. As these Gadites have been so miraculously, I will tell you more about them, as we are informed by the Rabbi. It appears they have been settled in Arabia ever since their dispersion. Ezra went down to persuade them to come up to Jerusalem, as the temple was rebuilt. They said, "Why should we go up until a permanent temple is built?" They therefore remained until now. About ten months ago they were stirred up to come; the women fell on their knees praying their husbands to go to Jerusalem. The Rabbi says they acted like mad people. About ten years ago a false Messiah arose among them, and they say if it had happened now they should certainly have followed him. They left their homes, fleeing with just what they could take in their hands.

Our new Consul is coming next week, and this is good news indeed. We are all rejoiced; they say he is a good man.

Mrs. Brinton went with me to walk this evening at 4 o'clock. We walked about and lost our way; Mrs. B. was rather dismayed, but I climbed over a wall and found myself in a gentleman's garden, among a group of ladies and gentlemen, who seemed not at all surprised at my precipitous appearance among them; on the contrary, they greeted us cordially, and as they suspected the true cause of our embarrassment, they led us out, after filling our hands with fruit and flowers. I wish you could see these beautiful gardens, they are simply luxurious. It is astonishing what a little labor will do here.

Ten years ago, a Jew dared not lift his head when a Turk passed him; now it is certain that if a Turkish officer enters a Jew's shop he will kick him out, and he must submit.

I have just learned from Mr. Kyut that the English Vice-consul at Jaffa has gone to Constantinople to confer with the Porte in relation to the emigration of the Russian Jews to Palestine. How the world is stirred up! Mr. Moore, the English Consul, received a new paper from England, called Jerusalem; he will bring it to me. He tells me that the Sultan is favorable to the colonization of Jews in this land.

June 13. I hear this morning that the Sultan opposes the colonization of the Jews in Palestine; but we think they must come, unless we are mistaken in the time. I should think England would interfere, and I think she will.

Please tell Mr. Marcus his card was received; I will write him next mail.

We have summer weather now, which is more agreeable. Our houses are never hot.

If any one will bring a machine to refine salt in this country, he will make a fortune; it is the best thing one can do.

My mind is agitated this morning about the news, and I will write no more, hoping to have more cheerful news next time.

We get mail now three times a week instead of twice, as before.

God bless and keep you all to his kingdom.

June 20. I hardly know how to write to you this evening. I suppose you have heard of the troubles in Egypt ere this, and I believe the true state of affairs is more likely to reach you than us. (This was written before the bombardment of Alexandria.) The rumors are very conflicting indeed. No papers are allowed to be sent here at all. The Consuls, even, know nothing. I saw Mr. Moore, the English Consul, yesterday, and he could tell me nothing certain. I hear today that the Consuls are to meet, and will ask the Pasha to meet with them, to see what means of safety can be devised. It is evident that the Consuls, and also the churches and convents, are alarmed. The Jews seem to be the only ones who are quiet. What will come I do not know. It is the same spirit all over the world, I think. But in Mount Zion there is to be deliverance. Two thousand Jews arrived at Jaffa, yesterday, from Alexandria; many are coming every day.

Today, Mr. Steinhart came to us and said he had a letter from Jaffa, asking aid for a poor family of persecuted Jews from Russia, who had lost all their means. He said they were shoemakers and required a little stock to commence with. Mr. Rudy said, "I will give two Napoleons;" Mrs. Brinton said she would give one, and I gave one. Mrs. Page, who was present, had said, "We will pray over it." I said, "We may as well pray now;" and I did pray, and was inspressed to add my "mite." Thank God! I am able to deny myself of many things that I think I need, and give a little. I never was so happy in giving before, and all the Americans are the same. They are doing great good here, and I think they are the kindest people I ever saw; they visit the sick, nurse them and provide for their wants most wonderfully. Mr. Spofford says he prays that this trouble will not blow over, as he fully believes it is the last days. I wish I could know what you think about it in Boston. What is Russia doing at this time? Yesterday I received a letter from a great farmer in California, who wants to come here to buy farms; also one from a reader of THE RESTITUTION; I will answer.

June 21. We hear from some Jews who have escaped from Egypt, that 2,000 people have been killed. I think most of the Jews have escaped. I feel like the rest that the end has come, and we must look for terrible things. What will our Government do? What will England do? What will Russia do? We shall see. Don't worry about us. God will be the strength of his people. I hear the Catholics are arming themselves. They have the most treasure laid up here.

A Jew and his wife were murdered a few nights ago in their house, by three men in masks, near the Mosk of Omar. It was supposed the object was robbery at first; but since it has become evident that robbery was not the object. It has caused much excitement, and our Consuls are alarmed. We shall soon see what action they take. The Pasha is Mohammedan, and heretofore he has consulted with the Consuls, but in this crisis we know not what may take place.

You ask me if I am in my own hired house. Yes, and it is all right in summer, cool and nice, and as safe as any place, as I am under British protection. I am glad our new Consul is coming tomorrow; this is in season. I wrote you that the check for $50 came, also the bill of lading for the ton of goods sent. I thank all the friends who have thought of me. Tell Mrs. Konorson that there is no Swedish baker here, the bakers are all German as far as I can learn. There are two principal ones, Mr. Lenthall and Mr. Backer.

I hope some one will come in September. A rich Jew came yesterday; he will buy land. God is working in his people. I don't feel like writing today, we are a little excited, but all is well. The Arabs are very friendly. The crops are very abundant. Our soup kitchen is provided for, thank God.

June 28. No letters from America this week. Well, I have much to say, but little time today. Frank has been sick with Syrian fever twenty-one days, but is better now; his mother is very weary. Poor Mrs. Brinton has many trials, but all is well. The news from Egypt is bad, and the poor Arabs here are in great fear. No one can see through the complications, but it is the opinion of all that "the time of the end has come." Both Jews and Christians see this, and are greatly impressed with the fact. I have no fear. As a Jew friend said last night, "It is no use to run away, God can find me in the heights or depths." All Jews that I have seen say, "Messiah is coming." How strange!

Last week I was called to see a poor Jewish family in the evening. I went to the house, or room, and found there three little boys; they were alone. They told me, through the interpreter, that their father was a merchant in Russia; that he had been robbed, persecuted, and fled to this city for refuge; that their father and mother had been absent nearly all day looking for food and work. I was astonished at what I saw; those beautiful little children alone, without anything to eat.

I searched the room; not a morsel of food was there; in looking about I found a young babe in a tray. I was shocked at first, as I thought it was surely dead; but it spread its little eyes and smiled. By its side lay a bottle half filled with water. These children had not tasted food during the day.

Taking my dragoman, we went to the shops, which had not closed, and got some bread, cheese and milk, with which we returned. After a few minutes the father and mother came in with nothing. Words cannot describe the scene that followed; they told me they must leave the room in two days, as they were unable to pay. Thank God! I had money enough to pay the rent for one month, which was done, and they rested that night.

The father is a beautiful Jew, also his dear wife is very handsome. They will get employment in time, but they are strangers and know not what to do. Today, while walking the street I met them. Their faces were radiant with delight. They took me into a shop where there were half a dozen Jews; they had evidently heard the story of their suffering, and came to me saying, in German, "God bless you!" and pointing up exclaimed, "Messiah is coming!"

This so overcame me that I nearly fainted. They brought me some wine, I drank and thought of the promise of the new wine in the kingdom. One of the women told me in Arabic, "You saved them." She said they had nothing.

You may imagine the scenes we are passing through in Jerusalem. I, an American and Christian, sitting with these poor outcast, persecuted and peeled people, with the same prayer, the same interest, weeping together! (Israel and Judah coming together.) Never before did such new and strange feelings and emotions move me. What a privilege it is to be able to share with Christ's brethren the little we have. How much suffering there is here! so many refugees from Russia and Egypt.

One of the richest Jews in Alexandria, we are told offered about $1,000,000 for his life, but it was not spared. Some Jews say that Messiah will come in two years; we think he will. What strange events are about to take place! We pray that God will open some hearts to send money for the relief of Jerusalem. Our friends have been able to keep the soup kitchen open thus far; it has been the greatest blessing.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd are coming to stay in Jerusalem a few weeks; it will be pleasant for me, as they will stop in my house. Our Consul, Mr. Merrill, came last Monday; have not seen him yet.

We have no mail from Egypt, but we hear that many ships of war are there, among them American; we hope our Government will take some interest in this country.

We have answered many letters from people, asking about many things, but all must use their own judgment about coming. They can rest assured they will not find peace here at present. I shall not run; if God don't protect us here, he won't anywhere, and if we die it is well. Russia will come. The time of the end has come; fear is on every face, except the Jews and Americans.

July 5. Yesterday I was invited to meet Mr. Merrill and wife, our new Consul, who came last week. Found many Americans assembled to welcome him to Jerusalem. Mrs. Merrill is from Andover, Mass., where she had been acquainted with the wife of Mr. Davis' cousin, who had told her about me, and that she would meet me here. Our interview was agreeable to us both.

Mr. Merrill is a man eminently fitted, both by nature and education, for the position to which he is called, and he will doubtless command the respect of other nations. We dare not think what is before him, however, in these troublesome times, but our hope is in the God of Jacob; his promises are sure and steadfast.

Russian refugees, and also many from Egypt, are coming daily. Nearly all have come empty-handed, having left all behind when they fled. However, I have no fears. You probably hear more about the state of affairs in Egypt than we do here. There is no connection at present by cable.

The weather is delightfully cool day and night. Mrs. Merrill remarked that she was most agreeably disappointed in the climate, also in the appearance of the country, as she expected to see it looking much more dry and barren.

While walking the street yesterday, I came upon my poor friend David, whom we have assisted, as I told you; he was so glad to see me and Mrs. Brinton, who was with me. He told us that his family had no food; that the babe had no milk. We assisted him, and poor David was overjoyed at the prospect of food for his babe, and we gave him money to buy food for himself and family.

What shall we do for these poor people? It is so sad to see them, having been robbed and ill treated, and still suffering so much. God, who has so kindly cared for them thus far, will provide.

Frank is well now; he has been very sick. He would like to join a colony of farmers, which we hope to see this fall. I have answered all letters of enquiry as far as able.

Mr. Cummings, I wish you would write to the address of the following persons, and see if they will join in a colony and come about September. They can come cheaper, as they tell me that tickets can be bought at lower rates by taking a certain number. I wish you would write at once, and if these families decide to come, I can hire a house large enough to accommodate all for six months or a year, as they please. It will be necessary to hire a house and take time to buy and look about, and it is much cheaper to live together in one family. I leave it to you to arrange. There is a house now vacant near me, which can be had for $100 a year. There is room for six families.

I should judge these men are just fitted for the work. We have encouragement from our Consul, who will assist Americans in purchasing. He has spent three years in Palestine and understands the language and customs, which is a great benefit to purchasers. I shall also be of some service, perhaps. Should like to live on a farm myself. The country is lovely, all parts of it, and yields abundantly with proper treatment.

Mrs. John Stewart Henderson, 21 Park st. N. Hamilton, Ont; S. Goodrich, Farmington, Kan; J. W. Heath, Ashville, Ala; Wm. Platts, Fonthill, Ont; Wm. Dresser, Tipton, Cal; A. Robinson, bookseller and stationer, Bellville, Ont.

You had better write to all to start together. Perhaps there are others whose names I have not given.

MRS. A. E. DAVIS.

IS THE HOLY WAR BEGUN?

When the signal is given it is expected that the followers of the False Prophet, Mohammedans everywhere, will begin what they call a "holy war." They are waiting for the signal. There is no one at present who is competent to give it, and that may be the reason why the outbreak is delayed. The truth is that the Sultan of Turkey, the nominal head-centre of Mohammedanism, is not in universally good odor, and it is quite probable that one of the first results of such a war would be the overthrow of his empire, the usurpation of power by some fanatical military leader, and the inauguration of a reign of anarchy, rapine and blood, such as modern times have not known. Turkey has been very contemptuously treated of late years: her dependencies have been stripped from her. Russia, Austria, France, England, have all had a hand in humbling and bleeding poor Turkey, until she lies before the world the most abject of kingdoms, the derision of the powers of Europe. Egypt is nominally subject to Turkey, but a foreign Government bombards her forts to protect her from her own subjects, and the world looks on, and heartily hopes that England will stay where she has gone with her guns, and maintain the Government of civilization in the land of the Pyramids.

It was not the purpose of the British Government to drive out the Turk from Egypt. But God disposes very differently from the purposes of man. And it may be that a great Christian power is to be established in Egypt at this critical juncture in the history of Islam. The rumors of "a holy war" are filling the East with apprehension. If it begins it will probably take the form of a general massacre of Christians by the Moslem hordes. They will seek to make progress westward. They must be met on the eastern border of civilization. And our belief is, that when such an enemy comes in like a flood the Lord will lift up a standard against him. It is not for a moment to be supposed that the light of the world is to be extinguished by an invasion of darkness; that the cross is to go down before the crescent in the latter part of the nineteenth century. Rather do we believe that, if this so-called "Holy War" is to begin now or within a few years, it will be the beginning of the end of Moslem power; it will prove to be the great battle to which history and prophecy, both, point, when the forces of truth and error, of light and darkness, of the cross of Christ and the powers of hell, will come into conflict. To this consummation events seem to be tending. Prophesying is very poor business for uninspired men to undertake, and we make no pretensions to the gift. But we are living in expectation of great events, and our eyes are turned toward the East.—N. Y. Observer.

Letter Drawer.

CARTHAGE, Mo.

To the Brethren of the One Faith, Greeting:

It has been a long time since I have written through THE RESTITUTION to the scattered ones, and many wishing to hear from me, I have concluded to give a short sketch of my work since I come to Carthage. I arrived here the 11th of November last. Found my son, P. Binn, engaged preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. That in Abraham's seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed. That according to Paul this seed is Christ and includes the church, for says Paul, If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 29. That from the fact that the seed by which all the families of the earth are blessed is not yet developed, the great and grand blessing promised lies still in the future, and will not obtain until the kingdom is set up; until Christ the head, the church the body, reign jointly on David's throne; and then commences the promised blessings of the families of the earth. This good news, this glad tidings of the kingdom in its connections constitute the gospel.

Finding our faith in these things a unit, we commenced meetings together in different parts to full houses and anxious listeners. In February, by request we went to Southwest City, Mo., and held over two Sundays, with much interest manifest; baptized one, and others would have obeyed the gospel had it not been for sickness. There is quite a number of warm-hearted believers in that place, and we had a good time.

We continued our meetings in different places until late in the spring. We then had to quit the field and go to work for food and raiment. We expect to take the field again by the first of November next, and to fill all calls for preaching within our reach. Hoping in the meantime the Lord will come very soon for waiting ones. So come Lord Jesus.

W. S. FINN.

Great things are not accomplished by idle dreams, but by years of patient study.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The fourth annual Conference of the Church of God, of Western North Carolina, will meet at Concord Church on Cane Creek, Buncombe County, North Carolina, on Friday, September 1, 1882, at 3 o'clock p. m., and continue over Sunday. All are invited and especially preaching brethren. Those coming by railroad will stop at Asheville Junction, and if they will write to Brother E. M. Anderson, Ardun P. O., Buncombe Co., North Carolina, they will be met at the depot with conveyance to take them to the place of meeting.

E. M. ANDERSON, Pres.
R. M. SALTS, Sec'y.

Crisis please copy.

The Piedmont A. C. C. will hold its fourth annual session with the church at Beaver Creek, N. C., commencing Friday, Aug. 25, and holding over Sunday. Persons traveling by rail will leave the train at Hickory, N. C., and go via Lenoir. J. J. HARSHAW.

The Lord willing, the Christian Association of Iowa will convene at Gifford, Hardin co., Iowa, that place being at the junction of the Iowa Central and Toledo & Northwestern railways. It is to be a tent meeting, and commences Aug. 31, and hold over Sunday, and longer if the interest warrants. Brother C. C. Ramsey and other able ministers are expected. Churches will send delegates at the ratio of one for every ten members or fraction over five. A general turn out is desired as it is the annual meeting.

By order of the Board.

JOHN FITZ, Sec. pro tem.

The next general meeting of the Church of God will be held at Adeline, Ogle Co. Ill., commencing Thursday, Sept. 28, and continue over Sunday, Oct. 1. A general attendance is desired. By order of the COMMITTEE.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Trilemma," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now existing such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 800 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Age to come not a heresy," "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Sinaitic, the New and the Davidic covenants; their duration and relationship to each other. By G. H. Mayer. 380 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth Set Free: or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Miles Grant. 80 pages, price 50cts.

Sunlight Dispersing the Dismal Shadows; or the doctrine of eternal torment shown to lack reason and Scripture. By Miles Grant. 70 pages, price 50cts.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Miles Grant. 68 pages, price 50cts.

Material Immortality; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a complete defense and Bible view of material immortality, not by birth but by grace. By O. R. L. Crosier. 16 pages, price 5cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, who is he? By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 4cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1882, put into tract form.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By C. M. Myers. Price 25cts.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PRIMER. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by SILAS Baptist, in 1660. 3. Immaterial ality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Principle for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 40c., or assorted packages of 100, 35c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

Can You Believe? A series of 20 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in our list.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof texts.

The Age to Come not a Heresy. By H. W. Reed.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two ages of these terms. 40 with the Theologic at and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Magruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 25 for 60c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? H. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 15 for 35c.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 15 for 60c. or $3 for $1.

The New Birth. Jonah Pelton.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Kelso, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
7c. each; 8 for 50c. or $1 for $1.

Das Kommen des Herrn Nahe Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or, the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 15 for $1.

The Restitution of the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 96 pages, price 10c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 44 pages, price 20c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Grattan, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 200 pages, cloth, $1.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by Ezekiel prophecy, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Containing a map of Europe and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy and of intense present interest. 128 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Book, Rise of Antichrist. J. H. Pettingell. A comprehensive and able historical sketch of the leading powers of Bible imagery. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate, for the notice of many. Just issued. Price 25c. each, or 3 for 50c., by mail postage paid. Over 100 pages, cloth 50c.

A Letter to a Friend; in answer to the Eternity of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Nature of the Dead, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Steward. Price 10 cents, or 20 cts. per dozen.

Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Pilgrim. Price 10 cents.

Hymns, Old and New. The newest and best Hymn Book compiled by Charles H. Spurgeon, Mr. Bagster examined in this book the "Hymns of the Morning and Evening Service" of the Psalms of David. Daniel Steward. Price 10 cents, or 20 cts. per dozen.

Hymns of Consolation and Praise. A selection of "Spurgeon Hymns," whose music is set to beautiful words. Those having the "Christian Endeavor" and "Gospel Hymns" will do well to get this work. Price 40c., each 50c.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public and family worship, compiled by C. M. Myers and Prof. Ayers. 320 pages, cloth, $1.00.

The Symbolic Diction. Benjamin Wilson. Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with its interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of the most critical, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious collection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the cases of infidelity have been built up; and this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 864 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED WEEKLY AT
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
E. L. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. H. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSBACK,
I. D. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN;.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HALSTEAD, B. WILSON,
J. P. WESTLAKE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, O. M. MYERS,
A. H. MAURER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 6, 1882. NO. 33.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

REPORT OF A DISCUSSION.---No. 4.

July 22. Met again at 10 o'clock a. m. to discuss the following proposition, viz:

Resolved, That the kingdom of God or Christ has been in existence here on earth through this or the gospel dispensation; Elder Cobb affirms: I deny. Elder Cobb still assumes that the kingdom of God has been, and is now in existence during this world. He quoted Col. i. 13, "Who delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." Of course claiming that we must be in it now if translated into it. I replied to this by showing that it was not in harmony with the general tenor of Scripture to assume that we were now in the kingdom by translation or in any way, shape or manner. And I showed by the Diaglott this to read, "Who delivered us from the authority of darkness and caused a change of sides for the kingdom of the Son of his love." And it was plain to be seen by this that only those who were in Christ had changed sides, or been converted from the kingdom of this world, for the kingdom of the Son of God. But although we have changed sides now, it does not signify that we are yet in the kingdom.

My opponent next read from Matt. xvi. 18-20, and assumed that the kingdom was in existence because Peter had the keys. And that Peter was binding and loosing subjects for the kingdom. But I showed that a man may possess keys to unlock that which is not in existence as spoken of by the prophet Isa. xxii. 22-25. And I showed also in reply that Jesus said "my kingdom is not of this world" or age, and that we are to pray to God, "Thy kingdom come, that thy will may be done upon earth as it is done in heaven." Why pray for it if already in existence?

I showed by Dan. xii. 27, that the kingdom of God "under the whole heavens was to be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom." Elder Cobb never assumed during this debate that the kingdom would ever be anywhere but upon this earth; and he had small inducement indeed by which to claim its present existence. I showed how the apostles exhorted the disciples of Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, confirming their souls, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. Acts xiv. 21, 22. Then they were in the church, but not in the kingdom of God.

Elder Cobb here produced his strongest passage to maintain his idea of the kingdom being set up, Matt. xvi. 28; Mark ix. 1; and Luke ix. 27. The words of Jesus, "Verily I say unto you, that there be some of them that stand here, that shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God come with power." He used his best argument and endeavored hard and long here to sustain his position. I replied that the matter is explained right in the immediately following Scriptures concerning the transfiguration scene; but which was not a reality but was only a vision of things to come; a miniature representation of the kingdom as it shall be. Peter, James, and John saw in vision, not in reality, a panoramic view of the world to come, the kingdom of God, or the Royal Majesty of the heavens. See that you tell the vision to no man, said Peter refers to the same thing. 2 Pet. i. 16-19.

I showed that those in the Lord in the Colossian Church, Col. iv. 7-11, "Can all be fellow-workers unto (or for) the kingdom of God." And also that Paul declared "The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom," and not that he was in it now, but would be at that day of his appearing and kingdom. 2 Tim. iv. 1, 8, 18. Showed also that Christ was not upon his own throne, but with his Father in heaven upon his throne. Rev. iii. 21. And that the saints will not receive power over the nations conjointly with Christ until he leaves the courts of heaven and takes his father David's throne. Rev. ii. 26, 27; Luke i. 33. And then will David's throne, though now in ruins, be built up again. Acts xv. 16. And then will it be our "Father's good pleasure to give us the kingdom." Luke xii. 32. Then may Joseph of Arimathea realize that for which he waited: that is, the kingdom of God. Luke xxiii. 51. And now also may we who live and see the things occurring as spoken of in Luke xxi. 25-32, knowing that the kingdom of God is near; lift up our heads and rejoice for our redemption is near. Have an entrance ministered unto us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Thus closed this discussion. Good feeling prevailed throughout, and, although the audiences were not large, yet good attention was given to the things spoken. Elder Cobb complimented us on our fair and honorable conduct in this debate, for which we expressed our thanks, and we also made the remark that Elder Cobb had acted very fairly, and we expressed our hope that he and all who heard this discussion might yet be brought to see the real truth upon all these things. And now I would say a word for our aged brother and dear fellow-laborer in the gospel, Elder Hugh Barnhill, who remained with us through the debate. He indeed endeared himself to all with whom it was his lot to meet while here with us. Everyone who became acquainted with him had to acknowledge that here was a man---a thorough Christian, full of gentleness and love, whose faith was manifest by his walk and conversation. We adjourned sine die at 10 o'clock, on Saturday evening; announced preaching for the following day, Sunday, at 11 o'clock a. m., by Elder Barnhill. Met again on Sunday as per arrangement, when the Elder preached to a pretty good audience, from John iii. 14, 15. He spoke over an hour upon the themes of death, and how we can, if we will, be saved by faith, repentance and baptism, so as not to perish, but have eternal life by faith and works, obedience to the requirements of the gospel. This discourse left a very good impression upon the minds of all that heard it, some confessing the truth.

Brother Barnhill spoke again in the afternoon at half past three o'clock, upon Heb. ii. 1, 2, 3, and delivered another good and interesting discourse followed by a few remarks from the writer. Brother Barnhill's preaching was received with very good feeling, even to tears, when he showed to the audience our sinful condition; how that the Devil had the power of death, and how we all, sooner or later come under his power. He also showed how by faith, obedience, and good works, and a good Christian life, we may come out from the power of death and have eternal life in the kingdom of God. And so closed a work of five days in which we were engaged, and though we can not yet tell what good has come of it, we hope and trust much good may grow out of our labors. And our thanks are also due Brother and Sister Bryant, for their labor in the gospel. We had previously announced through one of our county papers, that Elder Hugh Barnhill would preach in the Court House, on Monday evening at 8 o'clock, and we therefore came together at the appointed time and place, and Brother Barnhill spoke unto a small but interested audience. (The audience was not large; if a dance or political meeting had been announced, no doubt there would have been a large turnout. Stockton, our county seat, can boast of as many infidels as any other town of its size on the face of the earth, I think.) Brother Barnhill spoke upon the promises made unto the fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Good attention was given to the words spoken, and we hope some good may come out of it yet.

The Elder went home with Brother Reuben Walk after preaching, as did also my brother Daniel's wife and mine. Brother Bryant and family drove home eleven miles, and I and brother Daniel walked home five miles. On Tuesday Brother Walk brought my wife and Elder Barnhill to our home, and after dinner Brother Walk took him to the railroad station, Bulls City, distant 20 miles, accompanied by Brother Daniel. We grieve to part with a brother so kind and gentle as the Elder has proved himself in his stay with us, and although we could not reward him here, we feel assured that he will have an entrance ministered unto him abundantly into the kingdom of God, where we hope to meet him with all the redeemed. Amen. JOSIAH M. FIKE.

Youths' Column.

Hymn for a Little Child.

God make my life a little light,
Within the world to glow,
A little flame that burneth bright,
Wherever I may go.

God make my life a little flower,
That giveth joy to all,
Content to bloom in native bower
Although its place be small.

God make my life a little song,
That comforteth the sad;
That helpeth others to be strong,
And makes the singer glad.

God make my life a little staff
Whereon the weak may rest,
That so what health and strength I have
May serve my neighbors best.

God make my life a little hymn,
Of tenderness and praise;
Of faith that never wanders dim,
In all its wondrous ways.

Put Life Into Your Work.

A young man's interest and duty both indicate that he should make himself indispensible to his employers. He should be so industrious, prompt and careful that the accident of his temporary absence should be noticed by his being missed. A young man should make his employer his friend, by doing faithfully and minutely all that is entrusted to him. It is a great mistake to be over-nice and fastidious about work. Pitch in readily, and your willingness will be appreciated, while the "high-toned" young man who quibbles about what is and what is not his place to do, will get the cold shoulder. There is a story that George Washington once helped to roll a log that one of his corporals would not handle, and the greatest emperor of Russia worked with a shipwright in England—to learn the business. That's just what you want to do. Be energetic, look and act with alacrity, take an interest in your employer's success, work as though the business was your own, and let your employer know that he may place absolute reliance on your word and on your act. Be mindful; have your mind to your business, because it is that which is going to help you, not those outside attractions which some of the "boys" are thinking about. Take pleasure in work; do not go about in a listless, formal manner, but with alacrity and observfulness, and remember that while working thus for others you are laying the foundation of your own success in life.—Christian at Work.

A True Chinese Story.

An American merchant who has been engaged in the tea business for seventeen years in Hong Kong related lately some incidents which had fallen under his own observation in China, which throw a pleasant light upon the character of these little known people.

"Americans," he said, "are the best fed and best clothed people in the world. It is absolutely impossible for them to realize the excessive poverty which exists among the agricultural population of Northern China. They have no food but rice and water, and seldom enough of that. There are hundreds of thousands of them who do not possess twenty cents in currency in the course of a year.

"When famine comes—and it needs but a partial failure of the rice-crop to produce famine—they are reduced to live upon earth and grass. Lots are drawn to find which of the children shall be sacrificed for the others, and the victim is brought down into the town and sold for fifty cents as a slave, the parents parting with it with a grief and despair which are, I believe, genuine.

"Female infants are strangled at birth in a 'hard summer,' because, the parents aver, it is simply impossible to feed them, and it is better for them to die in this way than by slow starvation.

"I tell you of these extreme conditions of their life to make you understand my story. I once went with some English officers duck-shooting up into those barren regions. Becoming separated from my companions, I lost my way, and asked the assistance of one of the poorest of these Chinese 'rice-planters.' He left his work instantly, and with the smiling, friendly courtesy of which, by the way, one is always sure in the poorest Chinaman at home. He remained with me from noon till dark, searching among the winding creeks and flat marshes for my companions. When we had found them, I handed him a dollar, a sum larger than he would own probably in two or three years. He refused it, nor could all my persuasions force him to take it.

"My religion," he said, "bids me be kind to strangers, and the chance to obey the rule comes to me so seldom that I dare not destroy the good deed by taking pay for it."

"How many Christians might learn a lesson in humanity and faith from this poor follower of Confucius!"—Youth's Companion.

Selections.

THE JEWS.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 23, '82.

Le Messager Officiel publishes today a long circular from Count Tolstoi regarding the Jews. It says in substance, that while existing laws must be respected, local exigencies must also be taken into consideration. All attempts against Israelites will be promptly and energetically repressed. The recent exceptions were due to the slowness or inertness of those charged with the repression of outrages. The circular menaces with dismissal all the functionaries who display a similar weakness or negligence.

AN ASYLUM FOR THE EXILES.

Our Constantinople correspondent sends the following:—Since the days when Sultan Bajazet offered an asylum to the Spanish Jews flying from the stakes and scaffolds of Ferdinand II. there never has been promise of such a wholesale migration into the Ottoman dominions as there is at present. Already upward of a thousand Russian Jewish refugees are wandering homeless in the streets of Constantinople, and this in spite of all efforts to stem, or rather to delay, the stampede until proper arrangements can be made to receive them. The two pilot fish of the exodus—Mr. Laurence Oliphant and Mr. James Alexander—have made Constantinople their headquarters. As to the sincerity and as to the disinterestedness, both pecuniary and personal, of these two gentlemen in their efforts to repatriate the Jews, there is not the slightest doubt. But as to the method of realizing the philanthropic object that both have at heart, Mr. Oliphant and Mr. Alexander hold somewhat different views. It will be remembered that two years ago Mr. Oliphant, in his work "The Land of Gilead," advocated a beginning of the repatriation of the Jews by a settlement, under the auspices of a sort of joint-stock company, of a number of Jews from Eastern Europe and Asia in an agricultural colony situated in the territory which formerly belonged to the tribes of Reuben and Gad—a district comprising about a million and a half acres of rich alluvial soil, and bounded on the west by the Jordan and the Dead Sea. This most favored portion of Palestine is scarcely inhabited. It was once a portion of the great Hittite Empire of Western Asia, whose very existence had already been forgotten as far back as the days of classical antiquity, and whose greatness is only now just beginning to be revealed by modern research. Comparatively recent relics may also be found in the isolated eminences of this region, which contain reservoirs and cisterns constructed in Scriptural times and which have fallen but slightly out of repair.

ISLAM'S OPPORTUNITY.

Mr. Oliphant's scheme warmly commended itself to the Sultan as an opportunity for proving that Islam could be more tolerant to a persecuted race, and hence more compatible with modern civilization, than some of the foremost nations of Christendom; and also as a means of obtaining a well secured and increasing revenue from a province that from time beyond memory had yielded nothing to the Imperial exchequer. Mr. Oliphant was even feted at Yildiz Kiosque, and the signature of the Sultan to the firman repatriating the Jews was hourly expected. At this promising stage of the negotiation Mr. Oliphant's work, "The Land of Gilead," unfortunately appeared. The Sultan at once thought that he saw the germs of a Jewish autonomy, backed by England and France, springing up in his already dwindling dominions. Naturally suspicious and prone to see a "nigger on every fence," Abdul Hamid remembered that Mr. Oliphant was an Englishman, strongly backed by the late Lord Beaconsfield, by the Marquis of Salisbury and by M. Waddington. Moreover, one of the numerous orthodox Moslem habitues of Yildiz Kiosque, singularly enough translated to the Sultan various altering passages from George Eliot's "Daniel Deronda," where the hopes and possibilities of a great Hebrew kingdom are so vividly portrayed. The wily sheik could have hit upon no better device to arouse the suspicions of the mystic, visionary mind of his imperial master. There was no longer any question at Yildiz of the repatriation of the Jews in Palestine; and Mr. Oliphant was henceforth regarded as a wolf in sheep's clothing, whose real mission was to insert an additional wedge in the already strained fabric of Ottoman autonomy. Three weeks ago Mr. Oliphant again appeared upon the scene. English influence being at the lowest known ebb at Constantinople, he is now urging the United States Minister —who is at present a persona gratissima at Yildiz Kiosque—to advocate the colonization scheme to Palestine; whither the Jews, for sentimental reasons, much prefer to go and whither they can be transported at much cheaper rates than to America.

AN ASYLUM FOR THE EXILES.

Our Constantinople correspondent sends the following:—Since the days when Sultan Bajazet offered an asylum to the Spanish Jews flying from the stakes and scaffolds of Ferdinand II. there never has been promise of such a wholesale migration into the Ottoman dominions as there is at present. Already upward of a thousand Russian Jewish refugees are wandering homeless in the streets of Constantinople, and this in spite of all efforts to stem, or rather to delay, the stampede until proper arrangements can be made to receive them. The two pilot fish of the exodus—Mr. Laurence Oliphant and Mr. James Alexander—have made Constantinople their headquarters. As to the sincerity and as to the disinterestedness, both pecuniary and personal, of these two gentlemen in their efforts to repatriate the Jews, there is not the slightest doubt. But as to the method of realizing the philanthropic object that both have at heart, Mr. Oliphant and Mr. Alexander hold somewhat different views. It will be remembered that two years ago Mr. Oliphant, in his work "The Land of Gilead," advocated a beginning of the repatriation of the Jews by a settlement, under the auspices of a sort of joint-stock company, of a number of Jews from Eastern Europe and Asia in an agricultural colony situated in the territory which formerly belonged to the tribes of Reuben and Gad—a district comprising about a million and a half acres of rich alluvial soil, and bounded on the west by the Jordan and the Dead Sea. This most favored portion of Palestine is scarcely inhabited. It was once a portion of the great Hittite Empire of Western Asia, whose very existence had already been forgotten as far back as the days of classical antiquity, and whose greatness is only now just beginning to be revealed by modern research. Comparatively recent relics may also be found in the isolated eminences of this region, which contain reservoirs and cisterns constructed in Scriptural times and which have fallen but slightly out of repair.

ISLAM'S OPPORTUNITY.

Mr. Oliphant's scheme warmly commended itself to the Sultan as an opportunity for proving that Islam could be more tolerant to a persecuted race, and hence more compatible with modern civilization, than some of the foremost nations of Christendom; and also as a means of obtaining a well secured and increasing revenue from a province that from time beyond memory had yielded nothing to the Imperial exchequer. Mr. Oliphant was even feted at Yildiz Kiosque, and the signature of the Sultan to the firman repatriating the Jews was hourly expected. At this promising stage of the negotiation Mr. Oliphant's work, "The Land of Gilead," unfortunately appeared. The Sultan at once thought that he saw the germs of a Jewish autonomy, backed by England and France, springing up in his already dwindling dominions. Naturally suspicious and prone to see a "nigger on every fence," Abdul Hamid remembered that Mr. Oliphant was an Englishman, strongly backed by the late Lord Beaconsfield, by the Marquis of Salisbury and by M. Waddington. Moreover, one of the numerous orthodox Moslem habitues of Yildiz Kiosque, singularly enough translated to the Sultan various altering passages from George Eliot's "Daniel Deronda," where the hopes and possibilities of a great Hebrew kingdom are so vividly portrayed. The wily sheik could have hit upon no better device to arouse the suspicions of the mystic, visionary mind of his imperial master. There was no longer any question at Yildiz of the repatriation of the Jews in Palestine; and Mr. Oliphant was henceforth regarded as a wolf in sheep's clothing, whose real mission was to insert an additional wedge in the already strained fabric of Ottoman autonomy. Three weeks ago Mr. Oliphant again appeared upon the scene. English influence being at the lowest known ebb at Constantinople, he is now urging the United States Minister —who is at present a persona gratissima at Yildiz Kiosque—to advocate the colonization scheme to Palestine; whither the Jews, for sentimental reasons, much prefer to go and whither they can be transported at much cheaper rates than to America.

MR. ALEXANDER'S VIEWS.

The modus operandi of Mr. Alexander is somewhat different. Mr. Alexander—himself an Israelite—represents Mr. Cazelet and other well known Jewish capitalists in England, France and Germany, who believe that all purely humanitarian efforts must fail unless established upon a sound commercial basis. Mr. Alexander demands of the Sultan a concession allowing him to construct a railway, tramways, and ordinary roads within the vilayets of Aleppo, Tripoli and Damascus. The length of the railway from the ancient port of Tripoli to Damascus would be about 200 miles; and it is proposed to obtain a grant of the uncultivated land along the entire length of the line for a distance of two miles on each side, whenever such land belongs to the government. The whole of the profits accruing from the proposed railways are to go to the government. The opening up of such a route would speedily develop the wonderful resources of the country.

The estimated cost of the line is about $50,000 per mile, $10,000,000 for the whole distance. For the construction of the railway and the occupation of the conceded territory, 800 square miles, employment and a resting place would be found for a large number of Jewish refugees. Should the government refuse to grant land in the above named vilayets, then the promoters of this scheme would take any other concession of land suitable for colonization purposes.

Mr. Alexander and his backers are practical business men, and they are fully aware that any wholesale migration of Jews into Asia Minor or Syria would involve the greatest misery and privation, unless immediate employment be provided for them beforehand. Mr. Alexander and his agents have lists containing several thousand names of Russian Jewish artisans and mechanics who desire to emigrate to Turkey. The moment that the concession is granted those men and their families will be transported by special steamers to Syria, and upon their arrival will at once receive their wages. The Grand Vizier sent a few days ago a most favorable report upon Mr. Alexander's scheme to the Sultan, and last Sunday the Minister of Foreign Affairs received the delegates of the Jewish artisans and mechanics of Odessa, and assured them that a peaceful home denied them in Russia would be accorded them in Turkey.

AN OFFER OF REFUGE.

The following is the letter of instructions written by the Porte to the Turkish Consuls:—

"In all cases when Russian Jews express a desire to establish themselves in Turkey, the following conditions, which the Ottoman government imposes upon such immigration, shall be made known to them:—

1. The immigrants must be established in separate groups, and they are at liberty to settle anywhere in the Ottoman dominions with the exception of Palestine.

2. Without any exception or reserve whatever, they shall be subject to the laws of Turkey and shall become Ottoman subjects."

It should be remembered that the legal status of the Jews in Turkey is exactly the same as that of all other Ottoman subjects, whether Moslem or Christian. They have their own hakim bachi, or chief rabbi, who is the head of their nation in the whole empire, and its official representative at the Porte. The hakim bachi enjoys the same rank and privileges as the Greek and Armenian patriarchs.

It is a curious fact that whenever the Jews have been oppressed in Turkey the oppression has come, not from the Moslems, but from Christians; and then not from rivalry in commerce, but from fanaticism. Jews cannot remain in Greece on account of bad treatment; and thus far the Turkish government has proven itself to be the only Oriental government capable of maintaining order between the Christians and the Jews. During Easter week at Jerusalem, the Turkish authorities are obliged every year to send two regiments of infantry to prevent the Catholics and the Greeks from tormenting and killing the Jews, and in all Turkish towns the Jews are specially placed under the protection of municipal councils. In Constantinople it is by no means rare to find Jews entrusted with high official functions, and many of them form part of the Sultan's Privy Council; and of all other subjects of the Porte the Jews have always been the most peaceful and easily governed.—N. Y. Herald.

SELECTED MISCELLANY.

ENGLAND REBUKED.

P. J. Lackersteen of Calcutta, a Mohammedan, with dark skin and a red Turkish fez upon his head, lectured at 114 West Fourteenth street yesterday, August 27, on "Mohammedanism and Buddhism Compared with Christianity, and a Mohammedan View of the Present War in Egypt." The speaker used correct English. He said that each of the three Oriental religions taught substantially the same doctrines, that Buddhism and Mohammedanism were the more liberal, and that Christianity could easily be embodied in Buddhism without changing any of its important doctrines. In fanaticism and cruelty Christianity was foremost of the three. Russia's cruel and horrible war upon Turkey was a Christian war and her persecution of the Jews today was without a parallel in the history of other religions. England was engaged today in a bloody war upon Egypt merely to satisfy her thirst for blood and her greed for power, and England's Queen bore the title of the "Defender of the Faith." "If Arabi is proclaimed a rebel," the speaker said, "and England succeeds in disarming him, she will gain nothing. She will never have a foothold in Egypt. For if Arabi is disarmed this war will be but the precursor of greater events. The Moslems of the world expect a Messiah at this time, not as the Christian Messiah was expected, to offer his blood for the atonement of men, but who shall be a man who, by dint of arms and supernatural power, shall force belief in the true and everliving God. We believe this, for are we not told by our prophet that when people fall into sin and forget God that age shall see a new prophet? We have come to a crisis when we shall see great things. I shall soon leave for Egypt," the speaker concluded, "to enter the war myself."

Land grants to the Jews driven out of Russia have been decided on by the Turkish Government. Free grants are to be made of vast tracts of land for Jewish refugees and other immigrants, situated in fertile districts in the provinces of Adana, North Syria, and Mesopotamia (which three provinces are as large as France), specially adapted for agricultural purposes, and if facilities are afforded for opening up communications, the country will be greatly benefited and the revenue improved by the addition to the present scanty population of that region. The only restrictions put upon intending colonists are that they shall be subject to the existing laws affecting land tenure, as well as to future taxation and police, and that no villages shall contain more than two hundred families. Liberal facilities are to be given for the first few years in the form of exemption from taxation and conscription.

The Jewish exodus from Russia to Palestine still proceeds, notwithstanding the alleged prohibition of the Sultan against the founding of colonies there. Families are constantly arriving at Jaffa from Odessa, and are received by M. Lovantin, the Charkoff Commissioner, who is the superintendent of a society in Jaffa which provides temporary homes for Russian colonists. Most of those now migrating towards Palestine are persons of capital. More than 300 families are at present assembled in Jerusalem, and having obtained the sanction of the Turkish Government to found a colony, their agents are now employed in trying to obtain land for them in a suitable locality. Eighty families, too, are to be found in Tiberias. Land has been purchased by the Jaffa society at a village called Jehudi. On the whole, it is apparent that, practically, every facility is afforded by the Government of the Sultan to Jewish immigrants who arrive in Palestine for the purpose of colonization.

Fears of a Moslem rising in the Holy Land have been prevalent since the massacre in Alexandria. Miss Jacombe, who is conducting mission work at Bethlehem, writes: "At the news of the outrage on the English Consul in Alexandria, the Christians were in great fear, supposing the Moslems had done it; but after the arrival of the mail all quieted down for a few days. But after that some natives of Palestine, who were residing in Egypt, came home with terrible tales of what was going on, and this set all Bethlehem in a stir again. The men have provided themselves with firearms, and the women have hidden away all the jewelry and money, and many people have taken refuge in the convents, but there is no real cause for all this. The Moslems might rise at any time, but we consider we are as safe here, or perhaps safer, than either Jerusalem or Jaffa. Our house is a good strong one, and the owners in defending themselves would be all the human defence that we could have; but what is more than all, we feel that we are in our Heavenly Father's keeping. We could not feel justified in leaving our work in the present state of affairs."

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The next general meeting of the Church of God will be held at Adeline, Ogle Co. Ill., commencing Thursday, Sept. 28, and continue over Sunday, Oct. 1. A general attendance is desired. By order of the

COMMITTEE.

There will be a public discussion, if the Lord wills, commencing on the second Monday in September, and continuing four days, between W. H. Wright, of the Christian (Campbellite) Church, and T. T. Boyal, of the Church of God. The debate is to be held at Deep Creek, Wise county, Texas, nine miles southeast of Decatur, the county seat of Wise, on the Ft. Worth & Decatur road. The propositions to be discussed are—Does the consciousness of man wholly cease at death? T. T. Boyal affirms; W. H. Wright denies. Do the Scriptures teach that the kingdom of God, or the kingdom of Christ, spoken of in the Scriptures, is now in existence? W. H. Wright affirms; T. T. Boyal denies. All lovers of God's truth are requested to come.

CHARLES RUDOLPH.

The Church in Michigan will hold its next Quarterly Conference (D. V.) in the school house at Coat's Grove, Barry County, commencing Friday evening, Sep. 29, at 7 o'clock, and continue over Sunday. Coat's Grove is in the s. w. corner of Woodland Tp., and seven miles n. e. of Hastings. Strangers coming with teams will ask for G. W. Coats. Those coming by rail will come on the Grand River Valley R. R. and leave the cars at Hastings. Trains will be met by teams to convey parties to the meeting on Friday as follows, going east at 1:40 p.m. going west at 2:02 p. m. Able speakers will be in attendance, and a cordial invitation is extended to all to be present and hear the truth.

HERBERT MILLER, Sec.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Sept. 6, 1882.

FIFTY persons were killed and many more injured by a railroad disaster in Germany, Sept 4.

THE Emperor and Empress of Russia had a narrow escape on Monday last. A bridge over a ravine fell directly after they had passed over it. The Minister of War was slightly injured.

SNOW fell on the mountains of Southern Colorado and New Mexico a few days ago to the depth of several inches. Nothing like this has occurred there in the last twenty years. It has interfered much with mining operations.

THE cholera, that dreadful scourge of mankind, has made its appearance once more in the East. In Japan it has assumed the form of a virulent epidemic, and a ship load of the diseased is said to be on its way down the Nile in Egypt.

A BOOK entitled "A Critical Exposition; comprising all that is said in the New Testament relating to the Holy Supper," has come to hand. The author is H. M. Paynter A. M., and it is published by Wm. H. Wilson, Room 20, 182 Clark st. Chicago, Ill. Price 50c. From a very hasty reading we judge the work instructive.

THE news from Egypt is that Arabi occupies a strong position. M. De Lesseps reports that his army amounts to 25,000, and that he can be largely reinforced as he needs additional troops. If this representation be correct the war is not likely to end soon. It is our own opinion that this conflict will inaugurate great changes in the East.

ABOUT 1 o'clock Sunday morning the whiskyites burned down the residence of John Paul, City Marshal of Mt. Vernon, Ind., brutally beat the Deputy Marshal, and guarded the telegraphs and telephones to prevent communication with other towns. This was done in resistance to closing the doggeries on Sunday and after 11 o'clock week day nights.

IN order to give part of a recent communication from Mrs. Davis in Jerusalem we have little room left. The remainder of her letter will appear in our next. Wonderful changes are transpiring in that city. The time to favor Zion is at hand and her King is soon coming. We learn that the money sent from this office to Boston has been duly forwarded to her. We now hope to have direct and regular news from Jerusalem.

Communications.

PARIS, France, Aug. 16, 1882.

Editor Restitution:

I wrote you a few hurried lines from Geneva three or four weeks ago, promising to write again before my return if I could find the time. I have but little leisure, and less inclination for literary work, while being tossed about from place to place, as I have been on this brief tour. But I will now try to add a few more lines, from this great Babylon, where I am to spend three or four days before leaving for home.

I had a delightful visit of eight days with my good friend Dr. Petavel, at Geneva, and much pleasant and profitable intercourse respecting the things concerning the kingdom of our Lord. Differing from him, as we both probably do from you, on some minor points, it was all the more pleasant and profitable to confer together, each from his own standpoint upon those greater matters on which we are so well agreed. It has always seemed to me very unfortunate that Christian friends, who are substantially in accord, should quarrel with each other about their minor differences, or hold to these minor differences with such bigotry and uncharitableness as to be driven asunder, and, as is sometimes the case, to disfellowship each other. They may, and should discuss these points with each other, but always in the spirit of Christian love and forbearance.

It is inevitable that independent thinkers, coming to the truth from different approaches, as to any physical object, should view it in different lights, and in different forms. Indeed I think it quite desirable that they should, in order that the whole may at length be brought out in its true perspective proportions. It is not probable that any one man in this imperfect state ever sees the truth in all its true relations, without any admixture of error, the truth—the whole truth and nothing but the truth—as he will see it in the future. But we should all of us keep our minds open to further light, and endeavor, each by contributing what he can, to help his fellow-seeker to a more perfect understanding of the truth as it is in Christ.

While at Geneva the two numbers of your excellent paper, which you kindly sent me, came to hand. We both read them with interest. I also found in Dr. Petavel's well-furnished library Henry Dunn's "Destiny of the Human Race," a book which I had never seen before. It interested me much. I suppose you are acquainted with it—if not, you ought to be; for he holds, I think, exactly your views, and sets them forth very clearly. It is published by Simpkins, Marshall & Co., Stationers, Hall Court, London. He hopes for the final restoration—not of all,—but of a very large portion of the human race, either in the intermediate state, or after the resurrection. To my mind there are insuperable objections to the doctrine of any moral change in the intermediate state, which I believe to be a state of unconsciousness; as for any moral change in the state beyond, I would gladly accept of any light which the Scriptures or any fair deduction from their teaching may throw on this subject. But I must say, that the Scriptures have always seemed to me to teach that the present life is the only period of probation, and of hope for perishing man. And hence, the urgency of the command to seek for their salvation while they may receive the gift of eternal life.

Since leaving Geneva, I have been among the Alps, around the Alps, over the Alps and under the Alps, and have seen and enjoyed them quite thoroughly; and have enjoyed the cool, sometimes too cool, breezes from their glittering glaciers and snow-clad summits. These experiences are interesting, as a change from the scenery to which we are accustomed at home; but after all, a more level country is to be preferred as a place of residence.

That repulsive disease, the goitre, which is a swelling of the glands of the neck, prevails to a dreadful extent throughout all this region. One sees a great number of such cases, especially among the women he meets in all the villages. Not a few of them are hideous looking objects, with great protuberances on their necks as large as one's head. It is said, I don't know how truly, to be caused by the water which runs from the snows and glaciers in the mountains.

I have sailed across and around not a few of the beautiful lakes of Switzerland and Northern Italy, and have visited and explored some of the more attractive and celebrated towns and cities of this region—and that most unique and interesting of all cities, old Venice. These scenes are not new to me; for I passed through this part of Europe twenty-five years ago en route from Constantinople via Athens, Trieste, Milan, etc., to Paris and London. Venice is the same queenly old city that it then was, and indeed, that it has been for several centuries. Its houses are palaces, or at least, so called; its streets are crooked canals; its carriages are gondolas, and the fantastic medieval cathedral St. Marks, with its towering campanile is as beautiful and attractive as ever, and I again had the pleasure of sailing hither and thither through the city in one of its easy-going luxurious gondolas, and through the harbor in a little barquette.

But I am wrong in saying it is altogether the same; for now there are a few little omnibus steamers plying on the grand canal, and a steamer runs almost hourly across to the little island of Lodo, where there is a series of bathing houses, very conveniently fitted up, with an immense restaurant for the accommodation of the multitudes of citizens and strangers, who flock hither during the season: and here I took a bath in the Adriatic Sea, the most enjoyable bath I ever took anywhere.

I crossed the Alps a quarter of a century ago, from Como to Lucerne, in a diligence, by a ride of nearly twenty-four hours. I crossed again by the same route—the St. Gothard route—last week in a rail car, the whole distance, in one-third of that time. Though I went through more than half a hundred tunnels, the longest of which required twenty minutes, I enjoyed the ride exceedingly. This road is a marvel of engineering and of human skill. The prospect it affords of the surrounding country is equal to that from the diligence ride, and far superior to that of the route by the Simplon Pass, over which we came the week previous.

But nothing in the world, that I have ever seen or heard of, equals the beauty of the river from the top of Mount Righi. This is a mountain of some 5,000 feet in height, just across the lake from Lucerne. It has long been the favorite resort of tourists to this region. The ascent on foot, with an alpine stalk, is not dangerous, or difficult, though wearisome. But a railroad has now been laid to the top; and the locomotive, with its single passenger car containing about fifty persons, goes up and down many times a day at this season of the year. The grade of ascent is about one foot in four, and the engine is constructed kangaroo fashion, with its hind wheels much the highest, so as to keep it level; and it goes behind the car pushing it as a man pushes a wheelbarrow. There is a central rail, into which the teeth or cogs of an extra wheel of the locomotive fit to prevent it from sliding.

But I have no time to give you any further description of places or of scenery. I am now here so far on my return to Antwerp, from which port we are expecting to sail for home on the 26th of the month.

I have used up all my paper, and I must abruptly close, with many good wishes for yourself and for the success of your paper—and in the full confidence of the final success of the cause for which we together labor and pray.

J. H. PETTINGELL.

Selections.

EGYPT AND THE PROPHETIC DATE OF JULY, 1882.

A Fresh Chronological Sign of the Times.

It is with solemn joy that students of Scripture prophecy receive year by year, from passing events, confirmation of their views and of their hopes, that we are living in the end of the age, and that the marriage of the Lamb, for which the Church has so long waited, draws nigh. We are making history fast in this nineteenth century; one great event quickly follows another, and fulfilments of chronological prophecies follow each other in such rapid succession that a flood of light is being thrown on principles and details of interpretation, and on our own position in the stream of time.

As miracles were the great witness to the truth of Christianity in the early days of its promulgation, so fulfilled prophecy is the peculiar evidence of the last days. We do well to study it, for the confirmation of faith and for the quickening of zeal and hope.

Public attention is being widely directed at this time to Egypt, and we have plainly reached a fresh crisis in the downfall of the Ottoman Empire (the mystical drying up of the Euphrates in Rev. xvi. 12). The events of the last week or two, and those now transpiring and pending, though of an intensely and painfully interesting nature in themselves, are, to the Bible student, far more interesting as fulfilments of chronologic prophecy.

On Sunday, the 16th of July, 1882, there terminated a period of 1260 years from the hegira, or flight of Mahomet—the epoch from which the whole Mohammedan world reckons its chronology, just as the whole Christian world dates from the era of the birth of Christ, A. D. 1. The new moon of Saturday, July 15th, was first visible on the evening of Sunday, the 16th, and the phasis, or appearance of the new moon, is the point from which Mohammedans reckon their months. The great Moslem fast of the month Ramadan commenced the following day, Monday, the 17th.

Now, this period of 1260 years is both a great astronomic cycle and prophetic interval. It is mentioned in Rev. xi. 3, and xii 6. 14, as the measure of the duration of certain momentous episodes in the history of the Israel of God, both natural and spiritual. It is prophetically announced as the chronological duration of the great Western Apostasy, the Papacy, and it is also given as the measure of the last stage of the long depression and affliction of the Jewish people—that during which Jerusalem is under the Mohammedan Antichristian power. The long oppression of the Jews has lasted in its widest measure nearly double that time, i. e. 2520 years from the days of Nebuchadnezzar's conquest of Jerusalem—the commencement of the times of the Gentiles.

Since then the Jews have never enjoyed an independent nationality. This prophetic period of 1260 years is the second half of the great "week" or "seven times," Dan. iv. 16, or 2520 years of the Gentile dispensation, which synchronizes with the depression of the Jews. It commenced with Nebuchadnezzar—the "head of gold" of the great image—and is to terminate with the Second Advent of Christ, to establish the kingdom of God on earth.

Already the history of the Western Antichrist, or Papacy, has fulfilled in a marvellous manner the chronological prophecies connected with this period of 1260 years, and now the history of the Eastern Antichrist, or Mohammedan power, is fulfilling them in a way no less remarkable.

We must premise that there are in nature years of three different lengths; years measured by the moon, years measured by conjoint movements of sun and moon, and years measured by the sun alone; i. e., there are—

1. Lunar years, of 354 days.
2. Calendar years, of 360 days.
3. Solar years, of 365¼ days.

Hence 1260 lunar years equal only 1222½ of our ordinary (solar) years, and 1260 calendar years equal only 1242 (solar) years, and, therefore, lack 18 years of 1260 solar years, while they are about twenty years in excess of 1260 lunar years.

Had the events predicted to mark the close of the great cyclical and prophetic period of 1260 years occurred at the close of any one of its three fulfilments, as lunar, calendar or solar years, we should have been entitled to point out the fact as a fulfilment of chronological prophecy. But if there events occur in three stages and at the close of each of its three fulfilments, how much more confidently may we point to the fact as a triumphant demonstration of the inspiration of Scripture, and as an awe inspiring witness to the foreknowledge of God, and to his control of the events of history.

This is the way in which they have occurred, and are occurring. Such events must needs occur in stages, seeing systems and nations neither rise nor fall in a year, but generally in a series of years, of which some are marked years of crisis. And we must remember that there is no natural reason why these years of crisis should coincide with the close of 1260 years on the lunar, calendar and solar scales.

This 1260 years is linked in various forms with the rise and fall of the two peculiarly blasphemous and persecuting Powers, which are predicted as the final forms of Gentile rule in the prophetic earth (or sphere of the four great empires). These two Powers (symbolized by the two little horns of Dan. vii. and viii.) are, as is well known, the Papacy in the West, and Mohammedanism in the East. Both these Powers have run peculiarly evil careers; both claimed authority on the ground of religion; both have blasphemed God, and both have persecuted his people. Both are destined to exist as false religions up to the Second Advent, and to be destroyed as such only by it; but both are to cease and fall as temporal, secular Powers, at the close of 1260 years from the era of their rise.

The critical years in the rise of the Mohammedan Power were especially two, that of the Hegira, A. D. 622, the terminus a quo of the Mohammedan calendar, and that of the capture of Jerusalem by Omar, A. D. 637.

From the first of these, A. D. 622, 1260 lunar years (and the Mohammedan calendar employs only such) extend to A. D. 1844-5, the date of the issue by the Ottoman Porte of the Hattihumayoun, or edict of toleration, the first patent proof that its independence and power were gone. This edict, extorted under threat of European interference, abolished executions for conversion to Christianity, and insured religious toleration. This compulsory sheathing of the sword of Islam was a marked epoch in its loss of independence, of a confession of its helplessness against the Christian nations of Europe.

It is from this same Hegira date, the 16th of July, A. D. 622 the starting-point of the Mohammedan calendar, and the notable era of the rise of Mohammedanism, that 1260 solar years lead down to the terrible and tragic scenes just enacted in Egypt in July, 1882.

The flight from Egypt of 78,000 European Christians from fear of Moslem massacre in July, 1882; the bombardment and destruction of all the forts of Alexandria by a British fleet, acting independently of Turkey and against her wishes; and the Conference now sitting, without his permission and against his will, in the city of the Sultan—in a word, the present crisis in the East, unexpected and sudden as its occurrence has been, comes thus in a remarkable terminal year, one which prophetic students had long anticipated as a year of crisis in the Mohammedan world. Surely this coincidence of actual facts with Scripture chronology ought not to be allowed to pass unnoticed.

Measured from the second critical date in its era of rise, the capture of Jerusalem by Omar, and the erection of his mosque on the Temple site, A. D. 637, 1260 years run out on the three scales, as below:

A. D. 637 { 1260 lunar.....1859-60.
1260 calendar.....1878-9.
1260 solar.....1897.

Now the year 1860 was, as we all know, the time of the Druse massacre of Christians at Damascus and on the Lebanon, at the instigation and with the assistance of the Turkish Government. This massacre led to the French occupation of Beyrout, and to the appointment of British and French commissioners to see to the government of Northern Syria, i. e., to the virtual cessation of independent Mohammedan rule in that province, 1260 years after the capture of Jerusalem.

When, eighteen years later, the prophetic 1260 years ran out on the scale of calendar years, there came another marked crisis, in the fall of the Ottoman Empire. Turkish atrocities and massacres at Batak and sixty-five other towns and villages in Bulgaria and in the region of Philippopolis—massacres in which 15,000 Christians perished—roused Europe to remonstrances which were, as usual, vain and useless. The ambassadors were recalled from Constantinople, Russia declared war against Turkey in April, 1877, and waged it so successfully that in March, 1878, the Porte was forced to accept humiliating peace, and, but for English and French interference, would have been virtually overthrown. By the treaties of San Stefano and Berlin, a large portion of Armenia (Turkey in Asia) was ceded to Russia, the Dobrudja was lost to Turkey, and complete independence of Roumania was recognized, the limits of Servia and Montenegro were extended, and Bulgaria became an autonomous Christian Principality. By a special convention Cyprus was ceded to England, which undertook, in return, to protect the helpless and ruined empire from further Russian aggression in Asia. This year 1878, would have completed the destruction of the Porte, but for Lord Beaconsfield's interference, which secured it a brief extension of existence.

The 1260 years will not run out on the third or full solar scale till A. D. 1897. We shall then, in all probability, if not before, witness the final downfall of the Turkish rule in Syria, and the deliverance of Jerusalem from the Turkish domination, the Jews having been previously restored to Palestine.

THE PAPAL ANTICHRIST.

From Justinian's decree, A. D. 533, 1260 years lead down to the French Revolution, that great upheaval of the waters in which the Papacy for a time perished, and Rome became the second city of Napoleon's Empire.

From the more important decree of Phocas, A. D. 607, 1260 years terminate thus:

A. D. 607 { 1260 lunar.....1830.
1260 calendar.....1868.
1260 solar.....1866-70.

Now each of these years were unmistakably years of crisis in the downfall of the Papal power, years of revolution and of anti-Papal movements on a great scale.

In 1830 occurred the revolution which led to the abdication of Charles X., and in 1848 there were revolutions in almost every country in Europe. Louis Philippe abdicated, a Republic was proclaimed in Paris, 16,000 persons perished in the conflict with the Red Republicans, and 3,000 prisoners were taken. This revolution broke out in Paris on the 23d of February, and before the 5th of March every country lying between the Atlantic and the Vistula had, in a greater or less degree been revolutionized." On March 15th a Constitution was proclaimed at Rome itself, and the Pope fled to Gaeta before the close of the year. He was formally deposed from his temporal authority and a Republic proclaimed February 8th, 1849—1260 years from the decree of Phocas.

THE 1260 YEARS MEASURED BACKWARD.

We may measure from these central dates, backward into the hoary past, as well as forward into the actual present, with our triple standard of 1260 years, and when we do so we find ourselves landed in the midst of a series of events closely related to, though contrasted with, the present series—the events connected with the fall of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah and the rise of the kingdom of Babylon, to the commencement of the great week of 2520 years called "the times of the Gentiles," of which the 1260 years of which we have been speaking form the second half.

Measured back, for instance, from the Hegira date, A. D. 622, 1260 lunar years bring us to the original overthrow of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar; and measuring backward from the erection of the mosque of Omar, A. D. 637, the same period leads up to the burning of the Jewish temple by Nebuchadnezzar, B. C. 587—and so on.

Let us worship and adore, as we note the hand of God in history, and observe how its operations fulfil the intimations of the mind of God, given in prophecies, most of which are now twenty-five centuries old, and yet are fulfilling under our eyes.

Who but an omniscient and Almighty Being could thus foretell the end from the beginning, and thus foresee the course of action which should be adopted by agents absolutely free to choose their own course—and acting without the remotest reference either to his will or purpose? "Oh! the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God; how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out."

We are living in the closing years of the Christian age. Dated from Nebuchadnezzar, the "seven times" of the Gentiles, or 2520 years, have already run out in lunar years. It only remains for them to do so in full solar years in 1897, and then Jerusalem shall cease to be trodden down of the Gentiles, for the times of the Gentiles shall have been fulfilled! We know what follows! Luke xxi. clearly reveals it, and if ever there was a generation that needed to ponder the parable of the fig tree it is ours! Heaven and earth shall pass away, but Christ's words shall not pass away! "He is near, even at our doors." Matt. xxiv. 33. Let us watch. We know not the hour when our Lord doth come. And meanwhile, let us work as those who await his immediate Advent, and who covet their Lord's "Well done!"—Mrs. Grattan Guinness, in Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

Age to Come Herald.

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM, July 9, 1882.

Before this reaches you, Egypt will probably be plunged into a bloody war. We hear that the British have already arrived there. This is the "push" of "the king of the South." Some Jews claim that the Russians are the descendants of Esau, and believe they will come down soon, and that Messiah will then come. This is their salutation—"Messiah is coming."

Jerusalem is filled with Jews; and they begin to lift up their heads believing their redemption draweth nigh. This changes them in appearance. It is wonderful to see how differently they look and act.

Rothschild has sent to his agent here to build eighty houses, and he has already commenced the work. The occupants are to pay a certain sum upon taking possession, and then yearly installments until the premises are paid for. Through the influence of my Jewish friends I can obtain one on the same terms. The building of these houses will give employment to the workmen for some time. There are also other fine houses going up around the city, all built upon improved plans. I trust there will be no more poor houses, unfit to stand the heavy storms that we may hereafter expect, built at Jerusalem. The Spirit of the Lord seems to have entered into the people as it did anciently when they set about building the tabernacle.

I have no fears of war, nor of the Bedawins. War will come of course; and it will have an end too; and somebody will be found alive after it is over, and their condition will be so much improved by it that they will never regret that it came. God is Almighty and Just; and he, the Judge of all the earth, will do right. Why should we fear?

I shall expect a colony this fall, and shall feel greatly disappointed if it does not come. I cannot see why those who love Jerusalem should not make an effort to get to the object of their love. If like David they preferred Jerusalem above their chief joy, it does seem they would be making their way to it.

We like our new consul much, and think God has sent him at this time for some special purposes.

July 10. The Jews who throng Jerusalem are sitting about in groups, on the streets and in the market places, because there are no houses for them. Even those who have means to buy, and hire, cannot do so, because the houses cannot be found. Many will, no doubt, purchase land in the vicinity of the city and build upon it and make small farms. This will raise the price of land, and be a protection and benefit to the city.

The dreadful persecutions in Russia, and the war in Egypt, which drives the Jews to Jerusalem, awakens new ideas in their minds, and they begin to act as though they meant business. They think their Messiah will now soon come, and say he will be a descendant of King David. In this they will not be disappointed. He will come, a lineal descendant of David, and take his father David's throne. The veil that has for so many centuries hung so heavily over the minds of the "choicest vine" of our race, will be removed; and they will look upon him whom they pierced; and they will mourn for him as for an only son. The bitterness of that mourning will be genuine. They will accept their King; and those outcast persecuted Jews, together with the ten lost tribes, so-called, will become the first Christian nation upon the earth. The great work has begun. All this I can realize in Jerusalem as I never could before. Thank God that I have lived to see this day; and Jerusalem; and the returning of the Jews: and the precursors of the kingdom of God.

A party of Jews, with considerable wealth, came yesterday, bringing household furniture. They will be obliged to build houses, and this increases the business prospects, and must have a tendency to raise the price of labor.

When is Mr. and Mrs. Allen coming? I hope they will not delay till the kingdom is set up. I shall be glad, however, to see them any time. Also their son-in-law and family. His business capacity, and experience in the hardware business, would be a great benefit in building up Jerusalem. These families are just such people as are needed here now—stirring, competent, business, Christian people. We want more of the right stamp of believers in Christ to mix in with these Jewish converts. I know the Lord will save the tents of Judah first, for specific reasons; but Joseph will be here, nevertheless, to furnish corn (the elements of Christianity) to save him from perishing.

July 12. I have just learned from a reliable source that there are five thousand acres of land in a favorable locality, which can now be bought for seven dollars per acre. There is a flowing well and small village on the land. Mrs. Brinton has sent by this mail for money to buy with any colony which may purchase it. Her son has also sent for a four-wheel carriage. If Americans will come here to farm it will be a great benefit to the Jews, who are not so well acquainted with agriculture. They will settle with Americans, and would, in turn, be a help to them in many ways. The Brintons are great farmers.

The sorghum, growing from the seed which Mr. Ellsworth, of Windsor, Conn., gave me, is looking finely. All kinds of cane will do well here. When will Brother Ellsworth come to help in that line of business?

Another fine opportunity for somebody has just opened up. I can now buy a good house and large fruit orchard, with two cisterns of water, only one-half mile from the city, for two thousand dollars. I fear this opportunity will not wait for our friends in America.

Whoever come should bring all kinds of seeds—Pie rhubarb, asparagus, celery, squash, melons, Indian corn, pop corn, oats, by all means; heat beans, peas, and potatoes. Also bring raspberry, blackberry, blueberry, barberry, strawberry and hop seeds. All kinds of seed from California would be preferable to those from the Eastern States. I hope Mr. Dresser, from California, will come and bring all kinds of grass seeds from nearly the same climate. Bring hammocks, medicines and cayenne pepper.

July 18. It is now three weeks since I received a letter from Boston. There has been no mail at all this week from either England or America. You have daily telegrams, of course, from Egypt, and know all about the terrible condition of things there. The refugees tell a sad tale of human woe. There have been fears that the same scenes would be witnessed here. It is said the Bedawins are ready to cut the throats of the Arabs and Jews. The spirit of war seems to be rife: but I should judge that the most of those who feel ready for it hardly know who to fight, or where to begin. For some cause we Americans do not seem to have any fears of war; even if we should see it at our very doors, I do not think we should be much moved by it. I have had fears that you in America would be afraid to come to Palestine now because of the threatening war clouds. But they will only keep away the fearful and unbelieving after all, those who dare not trust God.

Our kind Americans still keep the soup kitchen open and feed the poor. The people who came from Alexandria came with nothing. The rich lost all and are no better off now than the poor. But strange to say, there is no scarcity in food, nor rise in prices. The markets are still full; and really, even now, this is a "land of plenty." As Moses prophesied, the land has had its Sabbaths of rest; still there is plenty. It has been made desolate; nevertheless, it is even now a fruitful land. What, then, must it be when restored?

I am well now, and have a good appetite. The weather is delightful, cool and pleasant.

July 19. No mail yet. I hope my American friends will not get discouraged about coming. Notwithstanding the influx of refugees, I think the rumors of war will make it an opportune time to buy land. At least, prices will not go up as they otherwise would. Many who dread to be drafted, will be anxious to sell and bid themselves away to places of supposed safety. This will make it favorable for the poor immigrant who believes and acts in the fear of God instead of the fear of war.

Inform me as soon as possible of what can be done. Mr. Floyd would buy or build and run a hotel in connection with a colony, do business for and assist the people in many ways besides acting as dragoman whenever necessary.

Poetry.

"VOICES." Isa. lxvi. 6.

A voice of noise from the city,
From its haunts of sin and pain:
The groan of a mighty multitude.
Oh! shall they plead in vain?
A voice of the little children,
Not knowing where they go.
Oh! silently appealing
In the cry of that mighty throng,
That voice of noise from the city,
"How long, O Lord, how long?"

A voice from the midst of the temple,
A voice of dismay and fear,—
"How long shall evil triumph?
O God the Father, hear."
A voice of wide-spread crime.
A voice of those that say,
"There should be wider entrance
To this too narrow way."

A voice of the plenteous harvest
That few men go to reap,
Though the enemy's subtly sowing,
While the weary watch or sleep.
So through the lonely waiting
Of these years of care and wrong,
There ever hear voice from the temple,
"How long, O Lord, how long?"

A voice of the Lord that speaketh
To those who work and wait:
Tell on a little longer,
His step is at the gate.
Ere long the shadows lengthen
Athwart the evening sky;
Lift up your heads, ye children!
Your redemption draweth nigh;
And those in the unknown distance,
In the valley of pain strong,
Is the voice of the Lord proclaiming,
"I will not tarry long."

Communications.

OUR PLATFORM.—No. 5.

ONE BAPTISM.

The one essential baptism—what is it; an immersion in water in the name of the holy ones for the remission of sins. The necessary qualifications in order to a valid baptism, faith, repentance, obedience. Faith, or a belief in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus the Christ, God's anointed one. Is baptism essential to salvation? We have so stated in our heading and repeat it; it is a positive command of the Lord Jesus Christ, if any can be saved without it let them take their chance, we dare not. Humble obedience to all his commands i. the only safe course we know of, or dare recommend; his commands are just and right altogether and in keeping his commands there is great reward.

So much has been said and written on baptism that it is difficult to say anything without crossing some one's track. Our theory is to get at the truth, never mind others' theories, hobbies or crotchets. The plan tracing of the word answers our purpose admirably well; there we rest the case; we are a little shy of any theory that Scripture that resorts to sharp technicalities to do away with the plainly revealed word of God. It does seem much the better way for us, who are so soon to render up our accounts, to accept plainly revealed truth, and give our attention more fully to the practical part of Christianity.

To be buried with Christ by baptism into death is indeed a glorious privilege, but no more so than to walk with him in newness of life, to live out all the commands of the great teacher. Do we remember that we shall be rewarded as our works shall be; how will those poor deluded ones meet the gaze of him whose eyes are as a flame of fire, who have trifled with the positive command of Christ in the ordinance of baptism? "Oh!" said an orthodox minister to us not long since, "we never thought baptism consisted in the amount of water." This was about equal to another when we asked him what he thought of the second coming of Christ; he said he was not aware that there was any Scripture that taught his second coming. Can it be possible that the pulpits in the Capital of our nation and the learned city of Cleaveland are filled with such luminaries? Truly darkness covers the land and great darkness the people.

A few things a baptized believer may not do; the law of Christ is imperative, it cannot be set aside: all his words are words of truth. Not one jot or tittle will fail from the law till all be fulfilled, so says the Master, so we believe, and so we teach, and so we write the marriage contract versus divorce; this has become a glaring sin of the age. It is really painful to see to what subterfuges men will resort to justify themselves in open violation of Christ's plain and positive law. Save for the cause of fornication shall a man put away his wife; if there were no divorces only for the cause named by the Savior and backed up by the apostle Paul, there would be very few divorce suits. Let us understand you, do you say and mean that we must live and drag out our days with that intolerable scold; the picture is a sad one. It would be more tolerable if it did not include members of the body, men of loud profession and of high standing. The Lord save us from the scrutinizing eye of our coming judge.

The taking of usury is another crying sin of the age, one that is condemned by both Old and New Testament teaching, yet it is a common practice by Gentile professors and baptised believers. It is painfully distressing to hear the excuses that men of intelligence, yes Bible intelligence, they will reason like a philosopher, they will bring forth their strong reasons, and their logical arguments to show the importance of baptism and an intelligent faith in order to inherit the kingdom, and at the same time and almost in the same breath, reach his hand down deep into a brother's pocket and take usury, unlawful interest, and when reproved will say I was doing business for others, with many other weak excuses which conclusively show the true condition of the covetous heart.

We have named but two out of many cases that might be advanced to show the things a baptized believer may not do; or cannot do without endangering his salvation. Are these things being done that we have named; painful as the reflection may be we cannot deny the facts. Has the church any duty to do under such circumstances? We have advised that communication coming from such persons be suppressed, but our advice is unheeded. But we forbear and turn from these things and would fain spread the mantle of charity over poor fallen humanity, and pray the God of heaven to keep us from the hour and power of darkness. Our days are fast numbering, the rumbling of his chariot wheels is heard, omens of a fearful storm beclond the Eastern horizon, what we do must be done quickly.

I have written thus plainly and I believe truthfully; blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me. It is a dreadful thing to be offended in Christ, and when we get so we can't bear a plain reproof though it cuts up the old man of the flesh, we may well fear. God help us to bow our wills to the cross of Christ and learn of him who was lowly in heart. He has given us a law that we can keep, and in keeping his commandments there is great reward.

NEWELL BOND.

"THE FALSE PROPHET." Rev. xix.

The Pope—Papacy—has often been taken for the False Prophet. But not so. Please dear brother do not take it for truth because some one has said so. Notice,

1. This would identify it with Islam—whereas Mohammedanism is, and ever has been antagonistic to Rome. It is so geographically, in its [illegible] nationally, in its history; and politically, in its government and religion. The one is European, the other is Asiatic.

2. The four kinds, dynasties or families, Jer. xv. 3; the four parts of the image, Dan. ii. 31–45; the four beasts, Dan. vii. 17; the four horns, Zech. i. 18–22, were of like nature and working together, politically and religiously. They were homogeneous.

3. The religion of Babylon was incorporated in, and a part of the government of system. Its Rab-saris, great prince; its great sheik was Rab-sheka, and its great high priest was Rab-maj, (magician) Jer. xxxix. 3. Thus Rome Pagan had its Pontiff—its idolatrous chief priest—for centuries before it knew of the Papacy at all. Its titled chief in religion, after Constantine's conversion to Christianity, was still Pontiff, but [illegible] time was changed to "Pope,"—papa in violation of Matt. xxiii. 9.

4. The symbol of Roman Ecclesiasticism in prophecy, was a peculiar "horn among the ten horns of the fourth beast." Dan. vii. 24, 25. All the horns are Roman. It "had eyes," as a bishop to oversee all the others; it "had a mouth to speak great things—the bulls" that shook Notre Dame and St. Paul, (in Paris and London) and dominate all Europe.

Nay more, in Rev. xvii. the symbol was a harlot-woman riding the beast, to hold the reins and guide the affairs of the Roman world.

5. Hence, it follows that Mohammedanism that rose in the 7th century of our era (too late, and away in Arabia outside of Rome) adverse in politics and religion to Rome, and conquering "the third part"—Eastern Division—of "the Roman world," was not at all in any way "the false prophet" (or teacher) of Rome.

It was the mightiest foe of Rome, and had no more affinity with Rome than anti-Christ with the holy Lord Jesus Christ.

In prophecy, in history, in geography, and in chronology it sustains no affinity with the Papacy. It is as antagonistic to Roman apostasy as is Belial to Christ.

Let all then stop confounding races and religions that God has made most distinct—except in their destiny. Rev. xix. 24. J. B. COOK.

He preaches sublimely who leads a sober, righteous and pious life.

CHARACTER OF JEHOVAH.

In the second of the lectures recently delivered in Glasgow, Scotland, by Prof. W. Robertson Smith, the moral character of Jehovah was contrasted with the gods of heathendom in this effective manner:—

"It was argued," says the journalistic report of the meeting, "that the fundamental difference between the Old Testament religion and the Semitic heathenism lay neither in the idea of a theocracy (i. e. government immediately directed by God) nor in the forms of worship, nor in the theological system, but in the personal character of Jehovah, who continued to assert a consistent purpose of righteousness and love throughout the great controversy with Israel,' which is the chief theme of prophetic theology. The idea of such a controversy between a nation and its god is unknown to heathenism; for in heathenism the divine character one will is never at variance with the character and usual moral standard of the nation."

The gods of the nations were made after the image of their producers—manufacturers, as we might say—and in moral attributes were often below some of the distinguished characters in the countries that set up their miserable conceptions of the divine for local adoration. The god, as a rule, represented average human nature, and that was poor indeed over the benighted regions where the male and female candidates for supreme honors were evolved, and had temples, often magnificent ones they were, dedicated to their service. Whence the vast moral difference, contrast in fact, between Jehovah, the God of Israel, and the deities, great and small, acknowledged by the neighboring, as well as far distant idolatrous communities?

No better answer can be given than the following, taken from the correspondence, issued since his decease, of that saintly and accomplished man—Thomas Erskine of Linlathen.

"When I find," says he, "a small despised people from the first asserting a righteousness in the Divine Being which I do not find in the gods of more enlightened nations, I cannot feel that this is mere accident. This was the teaching of God."

In the order of cause and effect, no elevating impulse could descend from the imperfect, frequently deeply debased being, myth though he was, called his god, to the heathen devotee. The worshipper saw in his deity nothing morally above himself, nothing to address a silent rebuke to his conscience, and as a result his higher nature stood like a rock rather than grew and spread out its branches like a tree. His religious ideal and standard of excellence was low, and fitted exactly to his native passions and desires.

Compared with all such children of darkness and superstition, how signally favored are we! The voice from above says: "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." That perfection is revealed in the Lord Jesus, and in beholding him we become acquainted with unsullied spotlessness of character, and exhaustless love for man. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

W. G. MONCRIEFF.

An Explanation of the Terms τέλος, τέλειος, τέλειος, τελειόω, τελείωσις, in their connection with the Scriptural doctrine of Perfection or the Perfected State, so-called.

I purpose in this article to point out to the reader another instance of the singular fatality of the translators of the Scriptures, in digging pitfalls for the unwary and unstable to fall into, and to show how what seems at first sight but trivial errors, have proved to be yawning gulfs of destruction, perhaps to multitudes, and certainly grievous pitfalls into which many an ardent but heedless truth-seeker has fallen.

Church history is full of the fanaticism and failure of so-called "Perfectionists," and the reason of their fanaticism and failure is that while they supposed they were following, and with all sincerity too, the straight path of Scripture teaching, they were pursuing the devious way of false teaching and mistranslation.

Now the fundamental error of the Perfectionists, so-called, has been the supposition that the Scriptures taught that perfection was attainable in this life, as well as an entirely mistaken apprehension of the nature of scriptural perfection. While the Scriptures teach unequivocally the ultimate moral perfection of the individual in the ordinary sense of the term. Yet in the passages commonly quoted and relied upon in teaching so-called perfectionist doctrine, the meaning of the inspired writer, as expressed by the original text, as well as indicated by the connected thought of the context, is something entirely different—one is absolute, the other is relative.

This misapprehension of doctrine arises from a misapprehension on the part of the translators, and their consequent mistranslation of such words as τέλειος, for instance, which occurs in Heb. vi. 1, where the writer says, "therefore leaving the argument for Christ's beginning let us be borne on in quest of his completed state." The meaning of the writer is this: His argument thus far to the epistle has been to assert the fact and nature of Christ's beginning in the sense of origin, as taught in the Old Covenant Scriptures, and now at this point he says, let us leave the argument for his beginning, and go on to the scriptural teaching in regard to his completed state, meaning his initiation by the resurrection into the completed or final spiritual state or organism, which awaits all the saints, the forerunner of whom in this regard, the writer in the last of this same chapter says Christ is. The expression "let us be borne in quest of" is a nautical phrase, and singularly appropriate and beautiful as a figure of speech.

The inspired word of God is represented as a ship, in which the writer exhorts his hearers who have embarked with him to be carried to their next port of inquiry in regard to who and what Christ is. The figure is complete when with his hearers aboard at the close of the chapter and arrived in the harbor of God's sure word of prophecy he drops the anchor of hope through the mist that veils the unseen shore, and hears the prophetic reply, "who hath become a high priest forever after the order of Melchisedek."

This answer tells us if we understand the language of the old Levitical types where Christ is, what his present office is, and what the nature of a τέλειος or completed state is as regards those who are destined to attain unto it. That is, they are to be begotten of God, or receive the germinal life, to be planted in the likeness of their Lord, awakened to life as he was; is a completed state of spiritual organic life, become not high-priests to make an atonement such as he has offered "once for all," but a royal priesthood who participate with him in the service of God, and like their antetypical Melchisedek have become first kings of righteousness, after that kings of peace, and then priests of the Most High God or Lord forever.

And now a word in regard to these terms which constitute the heading of this article in their etymological and classical use. And first τέλος. This is a primitive word and the basis or stem of all the rest, and means a completion, an end in this sense, not an end in the sense of a limit, and does not correspond to the Latin "terminus." If I was building a house and looking forward to the end of the job, it would be proper for me to conceive of such an end or fulfillment as a τέλος, but it would not be the proper term for me to use in speaking of the end of a stick of timber. If I was speaking of the completeness of the house in all its parts after it was done, that is its state of completeness, τελειωσις or τελειοω would be the proper word for me to use. If I wished to speak of myself as being of adult age when I built the house, the proper term for me to use would be the derivative adjective τέλειος. If I wished to say that I had completed the house, I should use the appropriate form of the derivative verb τελεω. Now these as to a peculiar, but very common use of τέλος with the preposition εις both in the Scriptures of the Old Covenant and in the Classics. In connection with much if not all of the old heathen religious worship there were doctrines and ceremonies understood only by the priesthood of such particular forms and these doctrines and ceremonies for this reason came to be known to the common people or the uninitiated as "mysteries," and an initiation into them came to be known as a τέλος or an initiation into a completing process. For such was the sway of superstition and the priesthood that a person's education however complete otherwise, came to be considered incomplete without the knowledge which this initiation brought. This initiation as an end in view or a summum bonum of life was spoken of and known as an εις τέλος or το τέλος.

The rites and ceremonies attending an initiation into the so-called "Eleusinian mysteries" are best known perhaps to the general reader, and an initiation into these we learn was, in some way, superstitiously regarded not merely as completing one's education, but by its sanctifying procession as completing this natural life and ushering the initiated into a new life, and that, no doubt, is the reason that the Latins translated the Greek word τέλος which signifies the completing rite of initiation by the Latin word "initia," a beginning from which we derive our word initiation, and in respect to the mere form of the process, we herein see how closely idolatry has copied true religion. For the life doctrine of the Scriptures is that we are not consummated as mortals without passing through the "mysteries of death" and the resurrection into the new life of immortality, and the consummation of the mortal state is simultaneous with the introduction into the immortal state Paul says "in the wink of an eye," that is to say, the period of death which intervenes between the fact of death and the fact of immortal life is a part of mortality, and therefore though an unconscious state is spoken of when applied to the saint as asleep, and an unconscious sleep too, for the reason that all strictly healthful and normal sleep is unconscious. And every state in regard to the saint is spoken of in its true and normal sense in the type. Now Christ is not called a τέλειος a spiritual adult until "awaken'd to life from among the dead," and then he receives the new epithet of υἱὸς θεοῦ, the first brought forth or born. And this is what is told us of the life processes of Christ. He is begotten according to the flesh, not naturally, but by the miraculous power of God, of a virgin, and is said to be the only human being begotten in this way, and is therefore called "an only begotten." For all the saints are "begotten of the spirit" or "begotten" by God, and this epithet could in no other sense be appropriately and consistently applied to Christ. He is born naturally. We are told that he receives the spirit without measure. If so he is regenerated, or received the spiritual germinal life, and is tried in all points as we are though without sin, passes through a life of "tribulation," dies a natural, but violent death as a mortal, passes a period of time in the grave, which must have been an unconscious state as he is said to have been "awakened to life" not "raised." (The word εγειρω here it is very evident is used in its primitive not its derived sense, and this is "to awaken" or "to arouse," as from sleep) and simultaneously with the awakening was "changed" to the completed spiritual state of organism, or became a τέλειος spiritual being that is an adult spiritual man or a Son of God, or as he is called a god. The Scriptures clearly teach that the saints are all Sons of God in promise, but he becomes a Son of God in reality, the first υἱὸς or adult as he is the τέλος of God's creation in every respect. Christ himself refers to his prospective τέλειωσις completing change in his answer to the Pharisees when they warn him of Herod. He says, "go, tell that fox, lo I cast out demons and fully complete works of healing today and tomorrow, and on the third day I shall be completed." Luke xiii. 32. In the 33d verse he states more clearly what he means, "moreover it behooveth me today and tomorrow and on the coming day to go my way." This way was to death, through death, and into life. See how the grammatical construction teaches the "change," by a change in construction in the adverbial modifiers of time. Today, adverbial accusative denoting duration or extent of time, tomorrow the same; these two periods completing Christ's work of casting out demons and healing. "With his stripe (death) are we healed" "on the coming day" or as expressed in the preceding clause "the third day." an adverbial dative of time, denoting a point of time at which something takes place. What is it? He goes his way changed, a τέλειος. This perfecting or completing change of Christ is spoken of in various places in the Scriptures.

For instance, in chap. ii. ver. 10, of this epistle which tells us how this perfecting change was being brought about, or at least one of the instrumentalities employed—namely, suffering. In chap. v. ver. 8, again, the fact accomplished is referred to as a fact, and obedience is mentioned as another instrumentality which add to it. Isaiah in chap. liii. mentions three perfecting blessings which Christ receives after this first change, ver. 10, last part: "And the Lord purposeth to take him away from the labor of his natural life, to show him light, and mold him in understanding, to justify again a just one who serveth many well." In ver. 12, same chapter, he says speaking of perfecting results, "and he will inherit many." Again in the last clause of this verse, "and he will divide spoils with the strong."

We have then three instrumentalities mentioned as leading up to this first perfecting process or change, viz: suffering, obedience, and being taken away from natural life (which is death) being awakened to spiritual life, and following this first change, spiritual enlightenment, molding in understanding, justification, and the receiving of the inheritance and the dividing of spoils.

Again in chap. vii. last verse, he is said to be, in contrast with men who have weakness whom the law constituteth high priests by the word of the oath-taking, "a son who hath been perfected forever." Then sonship being final and forever and indicating the full participation in the divine nature is the summing up of all these perfections in one word, or the τέλος, of which the τέλειος is the initiatory process. If this exposition of the terms which constitute the subject of this article shall remove the impressions of false teaching and mistranslation and help forward any truth seeker toward the light, the object of the writer will have been accomplished.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Conference Report.

Pursuant to notice the Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Northern Indiana was held at Rensselaer, commencing Friday, Aug. 25, and lasting over Sunday. Conference convened at three o'clock Saturday afternoon for business. Meeting called to order by D. T. Halstead. Alfred Thompson called to the Chair. A. R. Underwood, Secretary. The Chairman appointed R. S. Duiggins, N. Nordyke and Rob't Railsback a committee to arrange programme, etc. Reports of churches were called for and no complete list being at hand, delegates were requested to read such written reports as they had, otherwise verbally. The following were reported:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Plymouth | members 39, meet every Sunday | |
| Bremington | " 24, " " | |
| N. Salem | " 44, " " | |
| Rensselaer | " 85, " " | |
| Burnettsville | " 5, meet 2 per month | |
| Antioch | " 20, " 1 " | |
| Argos | " 35, " 2 " | |
| Eagle Creek | " 20, " 1 " | |
| Island | " 22, " irregular | |
| Pine Creek | " 15, " " | |
| Dundee | " 13, " " | |
| Gospel Home | " 13, " " | |
| Millwood | " 5, " " | |
| Nels Hollis's | " 5, " " | |
| Hamlet | " 25, " " | |
| Cold Creek | " 10, " " | |
| West Rome | " 11, " " | |

Several of these reports are not authentic being presented by brethren from memory. Chairman called for reports from twenty-one churches, but only seventeen responded. Let all try and report next time.

The following proposition was presented by R. S. Duiggins:

We each agree to pay the amount set opposite our respective names, to be paid as follows: One-fourth in thirty days, one-fourth in four months, one-fourth in seven months, and one-fourth in ten months from this date; said money to be used for the promulgation of the gospel within the state of Indiana. The following named persons are hereby constituted a committee to collect and expend said money in the manner that will, in their judgment, accomplish the most good, to-wit: H. T. Halstead, Rob't Railsback, and R. S. Duiggins.

Any one wishing to put his name on this paper will be furnished a copy by notifying R. S. Duiggins, Rensselaer, Ind. Rob't Railsback, Argos, Ind. or A. R. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind.

Speakers present from abroad were H. V. Reed, Chas. Gardner, S. A. Chaplin, Hugh Barnhill, H. R. Carter, and J. F. Wilcox; besides these about fifty brethren and sisters from different parts of Indiana and Illinois were present, and the house was filled at every meeting. One young man—a son of brother W. J. Boebee, of Argos, was immersed on Sunday afternoon and rose from the watery tomb to walk in newness of life. May he continue faithful to the soon-coming end.

The next Conference meeting will be held in connection with the Annual meeting of the stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association, at Plymouth, Ind., commencing Nov. 1st, 1882, and [illegible] Sunday.

ALFRED [illegible] Chairman.
A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

Sententious.

Hasty tempers, like hurricanes, often do irreparable injury.

The first thing which is required of genius is the love of truth.—Goethe.

The trouble and worry and wear and tear that comes from hating people makes hating unprofitable.

Speech is noble only when, like an honest money, it represents the gold of thought.

It seems to me that beauty is part of the finished language by which goodness speaks.

There's always a river to cross;
Always we object to make
If there's anything good to win,
Any rich prize to take.

Impoliteness is derived from just two sources—indifference to the divine and contempt for the human.

Language is a revealer of character, and that which a man would conceal by his acts and manners he cannot hide in his words.

The staff of a printing office were once surprised and and delighted by a delicious perfume which suddenly filled every part of the room. Upon inquiry, it was found that one had passed through the office who being constantly occupied with sweet spices and odorous drugs, became literally saturated with fragrance. The consequence was that wherever he went, he diffused a delicious sweetness, evoking such inquiries as: "Where has the man come from?" "What is the secret of this sweetness?" This illustrates the fragrance of the Christian as set forth in Ps. xlv. 8: "All thy garments smell of myrrh, aloes and cassia."—Times of Refreshing.

He who is false to present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he may have forgotten the cause.

He who betrays another's secret because he has quarreled with him was never worthy of the name of friend; a breach of kindness will not justify a breach of trust.

Christ comes with a blessing in each hand, forgiveness in one and holiness in the other, and never gives either to any who will not take both.—Thomas Adams.

The eye of faith, when clear and bright,
Can pierce the gloom of darkest night,
And draw from heaven a flood of light:
No false alarm,
Or suffering real, can then affright
The soul which, by this inner sight,
Beholds itself encircled, quite,
Within the arms
Of everlasting love.

As the moon shines not by its own light, but by giving back the radiance which the sun sheds upon it, so our hearts can not otherwise shine in holiness than by giving back, in the exercise of gratitude, the light of the divine love, as manifested to us in Jesus Christ.—Dean Goulburn.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Galatic, the New and the Davidian covenants; their duration and relationship to each other. By C. H. Myers. 320 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth Set Free; or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Silas Hem. 30 pages, price 20cts.

Sunlight Dispersing the Dismal Shadows; or the doctrine of eternal torments shown to lack reason and Scripture. By Silas Hem. 70 pages, price 30cts.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Silas Hem. 48 pages, price 15cts.

Materialismus illy; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact defense and Bible view of material immortality, one by faith but by grace. By O. B. Crozier. 16 pages, price 10cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, who is he? By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 4cts. This is an article that appears in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1882, put into tract form.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By C. H. Myers. Price 80cts.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent forthwith to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address Restitution

THE RESTITUTION.
Plymouth, Indiana
1 Year in Cloth, suitable for wide distribution. 1 Year (lower). 2. The Saving and Kingdom of Christ, by Selah Hopkins, in 1862. A demonstrative. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Resurrection Hope. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Per copies 5c., or assorted packages of 100, 25c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 50c; 50 for 75c; 100 for $1c.
Can You Believe? A series of 20 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in one $2.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

The Age to Come and Heaven. By H. V. Reed. Life and Death. A concise statement and consideration of the two ages of sweet terms, to-wit; the Theological and Bible ones.

Russia Government a Failure. By A. R. Magruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
6c. each, or 25 for 40c.
Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? R. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints: Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
6c. each, or 25 for 80c.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
8c. each; 15 for 50c. or $2 for $1.
The New Birth. Josiah Peirce.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Which is Right? T. Wilcox. Showing the Bible's teaching on the question as to whether Christ's kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
7c. each; 4 for 25c. or 20 for $1.
Das Evangelium des Reichs Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.
Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilcox. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or $1 for $7.
The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilcox. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 96 pages, price 15c.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 48 pages, price 10c.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Durl. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.
The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work valuable to every Student of prophecy and of current practical interest. 176 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.
God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading points of Bible teaching. Our brethren will find this just the thing to hand out promiscuously. The nature of man, the kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 100 pages, cloth $1.
A Letter to a Methodist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Nature of the Law, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. Price 15 cents, or 2 cts. per dozen.
Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Ellsworth. Price 15 cents.
Hymns of the Advent, in the compass of a New Church Book, compiled by Charles C. Harker. Mr. Barker considers in this book the "Hymns of the Morning and Even and rare selection of music. Also appended is quite a selection of Favorite Hymns, whose magic is a household word." Those having the "Christian Psalmody" and no hymn book full or well to get this work. Price 60., cloth 80c.
The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public and family worship, compiled by C. H. Myers and John A. Lord. 80c. each.
The Emphatic Diaglott, Benjamin Wilson, contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with literative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious Grammatical references.
The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament, for the translations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.
New improved edition on larger paper, 866 pages, cloth $4.00. Library binding $5.00.

Communications.

THE WORD MADE FLESH.

Seeing in THE RESTITUTION for July 5, 1882, a paper on this subject by J. H. Thomas, M. D., I felt a strong desire to set before the readers another view of the matter. Instead of formally controverting the argument used in the paper referred to, I shall simply state my own view of the case, leaving the interested and candid reader to form his own judgment.

It is only necessary to premise that what follows was printed seven years ago, for the information of brethren in Britain, and is now presented to those of like faith in America.

As I regard the question as one which might safely be left open, and knowing it to be one which has been made an occasion for strife, I have hitherto restrained my utterances to an occasional statement of my own belief, and, for the most part, expressed my belief in the unaltered words of Scripture—which, indeed, serve the purpose very well. A thought, however, has impressed me that I should do a little more. Many are perplexed with the subject; few have considered it closely, and apart from theological dogma; and the unscriptural and unreasonable deliverances of Trinitarians have driven many to the opposite extreme. With a view, therefore, of assisting those who may wish to study the subject, I have resolved to set forth my own convictions on the point, and my reasons for holding them. While doing so, I will occasionally animadvert on the expositions in favor of the opposite doctrine; but my main object will be to point out the grounds of my own belief. Before doing so, I will endeavor to state as distinctly as I can what I believe.

I believe that "there is one God—the Father—of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord—Jesus Christ—and we by him"—1 Cor. viii. 6. I believe that "The Word" who was "in the beginning with God," was a personal being, distinct from the Father, and created by him, before any other creature existed; and that, through the power and appointment of God, the Word created or made all things. That, in accordance with the gracious purpose of God, this one—The Word—became flesh, by some mysterious mode of which I have no knowledge, being conceived by the power of the Holy Spirit, and born of the Virgin Mary.

By the phrase, "was made flesh," I understand, became a human being—a man in the truest sense of the term. "became a man—not became united to a man, still retaining the nature he had before; but became a man, as really as the water became wine, by his divine power; as thoroughly a man as though he had no prior existence as The Word; yet retaining the personality and self-consciousness he had "in the beginning with God."

I trust that, however inaccurate and unscriptural this statement may seem to any one, it shall not be misapprehended. It is, at least, no hasty conception on my part, but has been very carefully weighed and examined frequently by me during the last twenty years. Indeed, it has gradually grown up in my mind.

I have read very little in favor of it—only what is found in John Milton's treatise on "Scripture Doctrine," Rammohun Roy's "Precepts of Jesus," and what occurs in the letters of Dr. Channing, given in his life and correspondence. The deliverances of these three remarkable men gave shape to the conceptions I had floating in my own mind; and a careful and, at least, honest study of the Scriptures bearing on the matter has grounded and settled me in the conviction, that the idea which I have tried to express in the foregoing statement is the only one that truly conforms to all the declarations of Scripture regarding our blessed Lord and Savior. I am not aware of a single statement that conflicts with it, while in many instances the language of Scripture expresses it exactly.

I would now request your attention to the following Scriptural testimonies:

In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life, and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not. There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that light, but was sent to bear witness of that light. That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. Who were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And the word was made flesh, and dwelt among us; and we beheld his glory—the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.—John i. 1–14.

In the first verse it is affirmed that "the word" was "in the beginning." The term "beginning," viewed in the light of the context, is plainly equal to "at the commencement of creation," and corresponds to a common Scriptural expression, "before the foundation of the world." At that period, "the word was;" that is, existed. It is also affirmed that "the word was with God." The question has been asked of those who believe that the word that was in the beginning with God was a person, "Was this personality distinct from the one God, in the sense of a separate being, or was it simply the personality of the one God which, in some way not revealed, became embodied in Jesus? And is Jesus a unity or a duality?" It seems to me that we cannot find an answer to the second of these questions, in the text or context. I have given my opinion in the introduction. But I think the first question is answered by the statement that "the word was in the beginning with God." What conceivable purpose could John have in declaring that the personality of the one God was with himself in the beginning? The same question may be asked of any of the attributes of the one God. Substitute "John" for God, and see how it would read—thus: "In the days of Herod was John; and the personality, wisdom, or word of John was with John!" Surely any one might ask, Where else could we suppose it to be? On the other hand, how could the idea that "the word" was a separate being, distinct from the one God, be more plainly expressed than in the terms here employed? "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God." This I know; I find these simple terms quite suitable to express that idea. The same expression is repeated in verse 2d: "The same was in the beginning with God." The repetition is surely meant to emphasize the declaration, and impress the minds of the readers with the reality and importance of the fact, that "the word was in the beginning with God."

But we also find the declaration, "And the word was God." On this declaration, Trinitarians generally found their doctrine that the word is one of "the persons of the godhead," or, as they sometimes express themselves, "of the triune God." And here I would say for those who hold that doctrine, that it is very unfair to charge them, as is very often done, with believing in three Gods; for however logical such a deduction from their teaching may appear to those of an opposite belief, it is certainly repudiated by themselves. For they maintain that there is "only one, the living and true God." They, however, believe that the one living and true God consists of "three persons—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit." They might correctly state their belief thus: "To us there is but one God, even the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit." I put the matter thus, because it is true, and to show its discrepancy with the statement of Paul, "To us there is but one God, even the Father." This teaching of the apostle is in perfect harmony with the whole doctrine of Scripture regarding God.

How, then, are we to understand the language. "The word was God?" Evidently the term "God," in this clause, must be used in a different sense than in the other clauses, and in a sense agreeing with the truth that there is only one God, even the Father, and consistent with the statement that "The word was in the beginning with God;" and some Trinitarians do so, and understand the term "God," in the clause in question, to be used as an adjective—thus: "And the word was divine." Thus, James Morrison, D. D., in the Day Star for Feb. 1845, has: "'And the word was God:' that is 'The word was divine.' The term 'God,' in the previous clause, has, in the original, the article, because it designates the Father. In this clause it wants the article, because it is here equivalent to the adjective 'divine.'"

Mr. Edward White in his famous work "Life in Christ," has the following: "In the beginning was the Logos; and the Logos was with the (great) Theos; (this is the force of pros ton theonn and the Logos was Theos, (without the definite article.) He was a divine person, not the great original Theos, or Deity." In a foot-note Mr. White quotes from Origen, where he points out the force of the definite article in the second clause and its omission in the third clause of this verse. "The scruple of many pious persons may be thus solved. We must tell them that he who is of himself, God, is ho theos, but that whatever is God, besides that underived one source being so by communication of his divinity, cannot be properly styled o theos, the great God, but theos, a divine person."—Life in Christ, p. 219.

This explanation, if correct, completely solves the apparent contradiction; and coming from an acknowledged scholar and zealous Trinitarian, is of considerable weight. There is, however, another solution of the apparent contradiction, which seems to me the true one. It is also based on the fact that the word theos, rendered "God" in this clause wants the article before it. Literally rendered, the passage stands thus: "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was a God." I am the more convinced that the dropping of the article in this last clause of verse 1st was intentional, and meant to convey this idea, from the circumstance that it is resumed in verse 2d: "The same was in the beginning with the God." If the term be not used as an adjective, or in the sense that I have suggested, then why does the term theos, God, in this clause want the article, while it has it in those occurrences before and after? Every one at all acquainted with Greek knows that the rendering I suggest, so far from being strained, is in perfect harmony with the usage of that language. I am the more confirmed in the correctness of this rendering, by a translation which the late Professor Dunbar gave of another passage where the term theos, God, is used with and without the article—namely, 2 Thess. ii. 4: "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above and against all that is called a god, or the object of worship so that he seats himself in the temple of the God, showing himself that he is a God." (Quoted in the Bulwark, vol i., p. 144.) It is not the simple fact of the absence of the article on which I rest, but on the fact of its use in the other occurrences in the passage, and its absence in this particular case. And, taking into account the wide and varied application of the term "God," in the Scriptures, we will not think it strange that the word, who was in the beginning with God, even the Father, is called God, or a God; the more especially when we consider the mighty things which he is said to have done. Thus:

"All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." Well, then, this one who was in the beginning with God, by whom all things were made, was himself, in the fulness of the time, "made flesh," or "became flesh." That "the word," who became flesh, was a real, personal being who made the world, may be seen by considering the language of verse 10. "He was in the world: the world was made by him; and the world knew him not." To whom does the pronoun "he" refer? Let the context answer. "He," who "was in the world," by whom the world "was made," and whom the world knew not. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not; but as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." All these pronouns relate to one person, even "the word," who "was made flesh," and who, adds the historian, "dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory—the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Have we not here an explicit statement that "the only begotten of the Father" is "the word" who "became flesh?" And if so then we have a distinct acknowledgment that "the word" is a person, distinct from the Father, in the sense of a separate being, seeing that "the only begotten of the Father" cannot be the Father himself.

Very similar to the statements of John are those of the apostle Paul in Colossians i. 12–19.

Giving thanks unto the Father, who hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature. For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities or powers: all things were created by him and for him. And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church; who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell.

Here, as in John i. 7–14, we have several things affirmed of some one whose name is not mentioned, but who is simply referred to by the terms "he" and "him." A careful reading of the passage will show that those pronouns belong to the same person; and the nature of some of the things affirmed of him shows distinctly that the person referred to is none other than "God's dear Son."

Thus, beginning at verse 18, and tracing the stream of thought upwards, we find that "he," who "is the head of the body, the church," and "the first-born from the dead," is "before all things, and by him all things consist" —(verse 17); that "all things were created by him and for him;" that "by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are on earth, visible and invisible;" that he "is the image of the invisible God, and the first-born of every creature"—(verse 15); and that in him "we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of our sins."

This language reads like a transcript of the first 14 verses of John's gospel; and, whatever others may think, are, to me, distinct and corroborative testimony that he, through whose blood we have the remission of sins, was in the beginning with the Father; and that the Father, by him, really made all things.

This truth is also confessed by the writer of the epistle to the Hebrews, where, in chapter 1st, verses 5–13, he quotes from the Old Testament several declarations which, he says, were addressed to "the Son," among which is the following: —"And Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thine hands"—verse 10. A reference to the context will show that this declaration is as really applied to the Son as are those which immediately precede it; and I am surely warranted to believe that it is as true of him as the language, "Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." In the authorized English version, the second verse of this chapter of Hebrews expresses the same idea. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners, spake in time past to the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath anointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." The term "worlds," here, however, is affirmed by acknowledged scholars to be an incorrect translation. The Greek word is aion, which does not denote matter, but duration, and should here be rendered "ages." "By whom also he made (arranged, constituted, or established) the ages." This amended translation however, does not favor the idea that he whom God "appointed heir of all things," had no personal existence before being made flesh; but is in strict harmony with the declaration, that, "in the beginning he laid the foundations of the earth, and that the heavens are the works of his hands." It simply tells us something more of the honor bestowed by the Father on the Son of his love. The expression, "the ages," is unqualified, unlimited. There is no warrant for applying it exclusively to the ages succeeding that in which our Lord tabernacled among men. There were "ages" prior to that—yes, prior to the existence of man on the earth; and we are warranted to understand the expression in its widest sense—"the ages" past, present and future.

Here it is affirmed that God arranged, constituted, or made the ages by the son whom he hath appointed heir of all things. If God did so by him, then he was with God prior to that arrangement. In the language of John, with which we started, "He was in the beginning with God."

In strict agreement with this is the testimony of John the Baptist, when he bore witness of him, and cried, "This was he of whom I spake, he that cometh after me is preferred before me." John i. 15. When we remember that John was before Jesus, both in regard to office and to his appearance as a public teacher, it is most reasonable to believe that he alludes to that prior existence of the word, when he was in the beginning with God. This seems so plain and reasonable, that it is difficult to see how any one can allege a different application of the words. Yet it has been done. The translator of the Diaglott New Testament has taken the liberty of rendering the words, "he was before me" "he is my superior," although the Greek verb en is in the past tense, not the present, esti. Surely this is the result of a foregone conclusion. For my own part, I cannot understand the words otherwise than I have indicated.

And how else can we fairly understand the reference of our Lord when he exclaimed, "What and if you should see the Son of man ascend where he was before?" John vi. 62, et seq. Our Lord did afterwards ascend to the heavens, and sat down at the right hand of God. It is reasonable to believe that he here alluded to that event. He might have said: "You are offended because I said: 'I am the bread which came down from heaven; he that eateth of this bread shall live forever.' but what if you should see the Son of man ascend to heaven?" But he used those words. "What if you should see the Son of man ascend where he was before?" And since he really did ascend to heaven, how can we refuse to believe that he was there before? Rather, how can the language be otherwise intelligible?

An objection has been raised, to the effect that the language applies to "the Son of man," not "the word;" and "the Son of man" had not been in heaven. The objection is a very silly one. As well might it be objected to the statement, that "the Queen of England was born on May 24, 1819," and that she has only been Queen since June 1837. No person would deny that the language, "the Queen of England was born on May 24, 1819," is equal to, "she who is now Queen of England was born on May 24, 1819." Then why say the language in question is not equal to, "What if you should see him who is now Son of man ascend to where he was before?" Though "the word" was not "Son of Man" before he was "made flesh," yet after he was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory." He was in the world, the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. The sacred historian writes as if he believed that the person whose glory he had beheld, and whom the world did not know, was the person by whom the world was made, and who was in the beginning with God. We need not wonder, therefore, that he added no comment to the Lord's words when he spoke of the Son of man ascending where he was before.

The Lord affirmed the same thing of himself on a subsequent occasion, when he said, "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again I leave the world, and go to the Father." John xvi. 28. In these words our Lord affirms four things to be true concerning himself—namely, 1. Coming forth from the Father; 2. Coming into the world; 3. Leaving the world; 4. Going to the Father. Did he come into the world? Did he leave the world? Did he go to the Father? Only one answer will be given. The person speaking did all that. Well, then, how can I help concluding that the same person came forth from the Father? And if he came forth from the Father, he was with the Father before he came forth from him into the world. Just as he went to the Father after leaving the world, so he came to the world after coming forth from the Father. Is he personally with the Father after leaving the world and going to him? Even so was he personally present with the Father before he came forth from him. How can I, then, believe that he did not exist personally before he became flesh?

"But," say some, "there was a man sent from God, whose name was John;" and that does not mean that John was personally with God before he was sent, but simply that he received a commission from God. Granted—what then? Why, this: "Coming forth from the Father" means "receiving a commission from the Father." Let us try this exposition by the sense of the context. If, then the Lord said, "I came forth from the Father," then it necessarily follows that when he said, "Again I leave the world, and go to the Father," he only meant, "Again I give up my commission to the Father." Surely no one so understands his declaration of going to the Father; and I put the matter thus, that the error of so construing the statement, that he came forth from the Father, may be clearly seen. The language quoted about John is distinctly different from that which our Lord applies to himself. Had it been written of John, "There was a man sent from God whose name was John, who again went to God," I would have felt myself shut up to conclude that the writer expressed a similar meaning to that which I apprehend from the words of Jesus in the passage before us. But it is not so. There is nothing in the context, nothing in any part of the record concerning John, to warrant any other acceptation of the language quoted above than is commonly understood. When I read the words, "I came forth from the Father," I am compelled to believe that Jesus meant to express the idea that he was personally himself with the Father before he came into the world. Thus the Lord himself confirms the testimony of John concerning him, that he "was in the beginning with God."

There is one common objection to this view of the testimonies, which I will now mention—namely, "How can these things be?"—"How could a person, existing for ages before, become a man by conception and birth, as Jesus really came into the world?" My answer is, I cannot tell, or understand the process. Like many other events past, present, and future mentioned in Holy Scripture, it is beyond my comprehension. How the word became flesh is not described in Scripture, and I have never attempted to imagine it; but the fact itself is plainly stated, and referred to in terms most explicit; so much so that, whatever others may think, I must either believe it or deny the truth of the testimony.

Before proceeding further, I will re-state the testimonies already considered.—

In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was a God. The same was in the beginning with the God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. And the word became flesh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth. He was in the world, and the world was made by him; and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not, but as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name.—John.

In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature; for by him were all things created that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible; whether they be thrones or principalities, or powers, all things were created by him and for him. He is before all things, and by him all things consist; and he is the head of the body, the church.—Paul.

God hath in these last days spoken to us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he constituted the ages. Unto the Son he saith, thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity, therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. And thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thine hands.—Paul.

John bare record of him, and cried. This was he of whom I spake he that cometh after me is preferred before me, for he was before me.—John.

When Jesus knew that his disciples murmured at it, he said, Doth this offend? What if ye shall see the Son of man ascend to where he was before? . . . I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again I leave the world, and go to the Father.—Jesus.

To these testimonies I now add another:

And now, O Father, glorify thou me with the glory that I had with thee before the world was. John xvii. 5.

Can we conceive a more distinct expression of the idea that the person who uttered these words had a conscious personal existence "before the world was?" He plainly refers to a consciousness of the possession of glory with the Father before the world was; and it may seem almost silly to insist that personal existence is necessary to consciousness. Yet, in spite of the language, it is denied that Jesus had a personal existence prior to his manifestation in flesh. But those who make such a denial misunderstand the passage. I have no very clear idea. The only explanation of the kind which I remember, is to the effect that Jesus was filled with the spirit of God, which spirit was with the Father before the world was. That is true, but if he was filled with the spirit, the spirit was not him; and he prays, "Glorify me with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."

These words of our Lord not only confirm the ideas that he had a personal existence along with the Father, "in the beginning, but also refer to the possession of a glory which he now wanted, and desired to be restored. In what that glory consisted, or the extent of its excellence and splendor, we have no direct information; but doubtless it was befitting one who was in the beginning with God and who is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person.

The allusion which the Lord makes to his glory with the Father before the world was, enables us the better to appreciate the reference of the apostle, when he says of him: "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be like God, emptied himself—(divested himself of his God like form)—and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men." Phil. ii. 6, 7.

To what else than this pre-existent glory of the Lord can the apostle allude when, in another place, he says of the Lord Jesus Christ, that "though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich?" Those who deny the "pre-existence" of Christ, understand the "riches" here alluded to to be the divine favor with which the Lord was invested while on earth, and which he refused to exercise for his own behalf. I have seen it stated thus: "Though Jesus may have been poor, did he not possess the riches of power, which he refused to exercise, at the instigation of the Adversary, for the supply of his physical wants? Would not this exercise, during his life, warrant the language of Paul?" Decidedly not; that would simply be remaining poor, while he might have been rich. Paul's language is: "Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich." On the assumption alluded to, Jesus had not been rich; for if his poverty consisted in his refusal to exercise his power, while on earth, to supply his physical wants, then he had been poor from his birth, for he never so exercised his power, and if so, then when was he rich?

And further reflection will show that the term "rich" is altogether inapplicable to the state of our Lord in the circumstances referred to. Granting that Jesus had the power, in the sense of ability (dunamies) to command stones to be made bread for his own use, he had not the power, in the sense of authority (exousia) so to use his ability. His reply to the tempter implies this. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." He had received the commandment from his Father to lay down his life. Though possessed of the spirit without measure, though he had the ability to have seated himself on the throne of Cæsar, and commanded the homage of the world, he could not have done so without violating the will of his Father. The term "rich," to one in these circumstances, is entirely inadmissible. As well call a beggar, rich, because he had the power to steal treasures.

Looked at in the light of the declaration of his pre-existence, his glory with the Father in the beginning, before the world was, the language of the apostle is plain, forcible, and impressive. He who was so rich, voluntarily became poor. "Lo I come," said he, "to do thy will, O God." We can thus understand how the Lord laid down his life "of himself," and yet at the command of his Father. He of his own consent became dead—born of a woman, made under the law. God gave his son, and yet that Son gave himself for us.

I need not pursue the line of proof further. Passages might be quoted from the Old Testament Scriptures referring to the same truth, and, to me, inexplicable in any other view than that here maintained; but I confine myself to these New Testament testimonies, believing them to be plain, explicit statements of what I believe about the "pre-existence of Christ."

Having thus stated my belief, and the grounds on which it rests, I must leave the candid reader to judge whether it be according to Scripture. The reader will perceive that I am in no doubt about the matter myself. No however others may think—however others may reckon it to be "subversive of the faith"—I heartily believe it to be taught in the Bible.

Let me here repeat, what I stated at the outset, that while I so believe, I am also persuaded that many who differ from me in this important matter, are nevertheless genuine disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ, and joint heirs with him of eternal life and glory. How they come to believe in this matter as they do, I cannot tell; but I have confidence in their integrity and allegiance to the Lord.

I have already referred to the fact, that my belief, as here stated, has been declared subversive of the gospel; and I am sorry to add, that I have met some who regarded the confession of it as necessary to fellowship in the church. They regarded a denial of it as equal to a denial that Jesus was the Son of God. This I regard as a very serious mistake. Notwithstanding the Scriptural character of the doctrine I have endeavored here to set forth, it formed no part of those glad tidings which the apostles and their co-workers preached to be believed for salvation. True indeed, a belief that Jesus is the Son of God is as necessary for salvation as is a belief that he is the Christ—see John xx. 31; but the man who is persuaded that Jesus of Nazareth was conceived by the power of the Holy Spirit, as really believes that Jesus is the Son of God as I do. He believes that God—not Mary's husband—is the Father of Jesus; that Jesus is God's Son in a sense true of no other being. The period of time, when the Father first called our Lord into being, does not affect the fact of his divine origin. It was not the fact of his existence with the Father "in the beginning," or even his miraculous conception that formed the purport of the testimony which the apostles set forth among all nations for the obedience of faith; but that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ, the Son of the living God, demonstrated by his resurrection from the dead. Therefore, though we see not eye to eye on this pre-existence question, yet if we believe that he who was born of Mary in Bethlehem, and died on the cross for our sins, is indeed the Son of God and Seed of David, of whom Moses and the prophets did write—the Messiah of Israel—the Savior and Judge of the world, and Lord of all; and, so believing, have been baptized in water in his name, and are living in conformity to his will, then are we fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God.

Fellow-disciples of the same Master, let us learn his doctrine side by side, and rightly seek to aid each other in our studies. But let us never so forget our position, as to forsake, or expel from our fellowship and affection, any faithful disciple, because we suppose him to have learned less accurately than ourselves.

Both from experience and observation have I learned that the true faith and hope of the gospel can live, and operate effectually, along with much error. We have heard much talk of this belief and that subverting the gospel. I very much doubt if anything will subvert the faith, where it really exists, except a walk according to the flesh. That, indeed, would subvert any one's faith, however intelligently and accurately he may be able to state it; for "if we live after the flesh we shall die."

Having thus set forth a defence of my own position, in reference to a very important matter regarding our Lord and Savior, and my attitude to those who see this matter in a different light, I have accomplished what I intended. May God grant his blessing on the same, and use it for his own glory, and the good of his children. Amen.

W. LAING.

---

[See Marked "Q" on the Epistles.]

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
E. B. DUNGUMB, ..... President.
CHARLES PALMER, ..... Vice President.
D. C. DANSHILL, ..... Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN, ..... Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
I. C. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN, ..... EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HALSTEAD, H. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, J. M. MYERS,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 13, 1882. NO. 34.

THE RESTITUTION,
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR;
Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:
THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked, eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE—ITS PROXIMITY, No. 120.

Application of History Continued. Beast. His Identity With Infidel France. War. Conquered. Slain. Three Acts. Exposure.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Sacred and profane history compared.—What have we to do with history? Much every way, chiefly because it is a record of the foot-prints of Jehovah among the nations. Without profane history Christ's official priesthood in its effects among the great powers of the earth would be a blank. The people of God were designed to be historians. To be interested in history is to take an interest in God's dealings with man; the wanderings and trials of the church—the Lamb's wife. Come let us reason together. A writer on the Apocalypse said, "We have no use for history; the Bible, complete and perfect in itself, is always its own interpreter. It asks no aid from profane or secular history." As a rule of faith and practice this may be true; but in its prophetic department God has had some very distinct object in view; for prophecy is history in advance. What has been the object of the Deity in giving his people history in advance? The very obvious reason that they should make use of that knowledge. We forecast meteorological changes for a similar purpose. Our interests are involved in having some knowledge of the future. The Bible contains many striking illustrations of this truth. Let us notice some remarkable instances and their objects.

The coming flood was know to Noah for a practical purpose: that he might secure his own salvation and that of his family. Lot was visited, and had history in advance given him for a similar purpose. Jeremiah was sent to the Jews with a volume of advanced history, which, if heeded, would have saved them from a severe and protracted captivity. The revelations to Zechariah had a practical bearing, so it may be said, of the prophetic histories of all the prophets. To Daniel was given an almanac of prophecy for the use of the people of God in all ages. The Apocalypse is a second edition of that little volume. It is very interesting to peruse these old volumes of the world's future history. It is also of great utility, since they shape our Christian lives. The lessons taught by the advanced histories under God's Old Covenant to the Jews are very clear, and highly practical. Are they not equally so under the New Covenant? Let us see. What was the character of that private lecture given by Christ to Peter and James and John and Andrew upon the Mount of Olives? Matt. xxiv; Mark xiii; and Luke xxi. It was a historical narration. It was an epitome of civil and ecclesiastical history, covering at least the times of the Gentiles. Was this historical chart given to these four disciples to gratify an idle curiosity? The record explains itself. "Behold, I have told you before." Matt. xxiv. 25. I have given you this chain of future events that you may not be deceived by false Christs. I give you the signs of my return for the same purpose. Study this chart and compare it with national developments, that you may always know your prophetic location. Peter, John and Paul in their epistles, follow the same plan. They touch on coming events that Christians of every age should be fully instructed in the general outline of prophetic history, that the world's unfolding history might be readily and accurately applied. Christ taught his disciples the use of history, and the duty of its study. History is a record of words and deeds. Man records events only as they transpire; God writes the future as readily as the past; and as the future events concern his people, men were sent to open up the future. These men were called prophets.

History is called sacred or profane according to the state of the writer's mind. If he is under divine control, so as to secure his work from error, his record is called sacred, such as the writings of Moses, Ezra, and Nehemiah; if the writer is left to his own knowledge, memory, and judgment, his writings are called profane; as Josephus, Rollin, and Gibbon. The writings of the four evangelists (called gospels) are sacred records. Ecclesiastical histories, as well as all civil histories, written since the compilation of the New Testament, are profane.

Two conclusions will finish this part of our subject:

1. The record of God's words and deeds does not change, or in any manner control the words and deeds themselves. God's real utterances and his actions are the same, with a true or false record, or without any record. Moses, Ezra and Nehemiah have written histories and sketches of what God said and did to the Jews and to other nations. Matthew, Mark, Luke and John wrote histories of what Christ said and did. The thought we are presenting is this:—The words and the acts of the Father and the Son are above and independent of all historic record; and that they act among the nations, since the close of the inspired record, as certainly and as freely as they acted before the close of the inspired record. Of these governing actions we have no histories except prophetic and profane records. The prophetic history is admitted to be true. Where the two histories agree they may both be assumed to be correct. A fact is the same whether it is made known by a Christian, an infidel, or whether it is without any record.

2. Christ is the author of two prophetic histories; the one written in literal terms, the other in symbols. The literal history was delivered on the Mount of Olives to four disciples; the other was made known to John on the Isle of Patmos. Wherein do these records differ? From A. D. 96, both records follow the same actors and actions so far as they relate to the people of God. The terms of the records do not change the events. Daniel's prophetic histories of the four monarchies are as accurate in symbols as in his prophetic literal narration. Dan. xi. xii. If Daniels symbols of the iron and clay in the image of Dan. ii. and his sea monster in Dan. vii. cover the Christian era; the first Apocalyptic beast of Rev. xiii. being identical, must cover it also. That Christ's literal prophetic history, recorded in Matt. xxiv; Mark xiii; and Luke xxi. extends from his leaving the earth to his return and his symbolic history be limited to a few years of the close of that period would not appear probable; nor will the symbols allow any such construction.

Acts of the beast.—"Shall make war against them, (the witnesses) and shall overcome them and kill them." These three progressive acts finish the work of the beast. As we have said these expressions are not synonomous, but enunciate three distinct acts.

1. He made war on the witnesses. This is first, and we might say introductory. It is a declaration of war succeeded by acts of the most decided hostility; a period of enlistment and combination of forces. It is a period replete with acts of hostility. The infidel elements had been spreading among the lower classes in France for some years. The leaven of infidelity, however, was not confined to the corrupt masses. It was diffused through the entire body of the nation; both in the church and among the officers of the state. The Bible and the defenders of its divine truths, were objects of hatred. The first national warfare on the witnesses was by the Constituent Assembly. This was followed by the Legislative Assembly, and the revolution was completed in the National Convention, when the witnesses had their resurrection. The witnesses were slain by the beast, the symbol of a body of civil rulers. Their death was therefore national; inflicted by a national act or decree. That decree was passed April 6, 1792. All religious communities were suppressed; public worship ceased; and the witnesses lay dead. France, then, had no God, no religion, no worship. Infidelity had triumphed, and the witnesses lay dead in her street. Rev. xi. 8. "And their dead bodies (shall lie) in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." Where are the dead bodies (πτωματα) corpses, carcasses, to lie? Answer. In the street (πλατειας) of the great city. What city? Ans. Jerusalem, says a recent expositor, who adds the following:—"This verse (8th) establishes, beyond cavil, the fact that the witnesses testify in Jerusalem. The introduction of this prediction laid its scenes in the 'holy city,' related them with a 'temple of God,' and now further confirms it by defining the city as being that one 'where also their Lord was crucified.' There can be no ambiguity on this point. The dead witnesses are thrown into the street of Jerusalem that the fact of their destruction may be evident to the citizens. The people regard it as a triumph of the lord of the earth over the anointed ones of the God of heaven. Doubtless their zeal for antichrist becomes more fervent, and they construe this achievement as scarcely less wonderful than his survival from the death-stroke, by which he secured their recognition as the deity. Triumphant over the two prophets, the man-of-sin anticipates no further obstacle to his ambition. Jerusalem is appropriately styled 'the great city,' since it is the residence of the beast while in his lordly character, and possibly it compares favorably with Babylon in pomp and splendor. The iniquity of the holy city reaches its maximum in the time of antichrist. It had not only crucified the true Messiah, but it accepts and renders homage to a false Christ. Her sin is as vile as that of Sodom, and her oppression of the saints as wicked as Egyptian bondage."—Christian Chilliast.

Are these views in harmony with the holy Scriptures? We think not; and for the following reasons:

1. Jerusalem is not named in the text; neither is the word in any Greek text that we possess. The authorized and revised versions do not insert Jerusalem, nor do they give any marginal reading to sustain such an idea. No such a reading can, therefore, be correct.

2. Jerusalem, no where in the Bible, is called "the great city." In Rev. xxi. 10, the authorized version calls New Jerusalem "the great city," but in the revised version it reads, "And he carried me away in the spirit to a mountain great and high, and showed me the holy city Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God." No Beast ever dwells there.

3. The attributes named do not agree with any Jerusalem. Its two attributes, designated by the proper names Sodom and Egypt, are metaphorical, since "the great city" takes the names of those objects which it resembles, thus we call a man a Tartar, because he is like a Tartar; so we have Yankees, Jews, Turks and Arabs, metaphorical, because of their similitude. For like causes, this city is called Sodom and Egypt, for her resemblance of Sodom and Egypt. Our objection is that such analogy is not peculiar to Jerusalem. We wish to be understood here as speaking of a future Jerusalem, one that shall be in existence when these events take place, but not the new Jerusalem. That city is described in Zech. xii; xiii; xiv. This Jerusalem is not, metaphorically, either Sodom or Egypt; for the Jews dwelling in that city are of quite another character.

4. The construction of the sentence does not allow such an interpretation. Expressed fully, substituting Jerusalem, it would read as follows, "And their dead bodies (shall lie) in the street of Jerusalem, which spiritually is Sodom, and is spiritually Egypt, and spiritually is Jerusalem, where (in which) their Lord was crucified; for 'also' has the force of 'and,' since it connects an additional place to Egypt and Sodom. Jerusalem is like three places, and it, therefore, metaphorical Sodom, metaphorical Egypt, and metaphorical Jerusalem; the literal Jerusalem is metaphorical Jerusalem!

5. This idea of Jerusalem's being "the great city," originates in the expression, "where also their Lord was crucified." This is not true to history, since Christ was not crucified in Jerusalem. "Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his blood, suffered without the gate." Heb. xiii. 12. "And he, bearing his cross, went forth into a place called (the place) of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha, where they crucified him, and two others with him.... This title then read many of the Jews. For the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city." John xix. 17, 18, 19. Nigh to a city is not in the "street" of it.

Early Pioneers of the Truth in Virginia. No. 8.

The writer was not present at the debate on the Life Question between Campbell and Thompson at Painesville, Va. He was at that time just licensed and located as a pioneer member of the bar in a somewhat remote position in the upper valley of Virginia and of no visible church connection but a sort of "proselyte of the gate" of all sectarian orthodoxy and consequently on this particular tenet of orthodoxy—the immortal-soul theory—strongly in sympathy with Mr. Campbell and his party. In his verdant simplicity and ignorance of the Divine testimony on the subject, it seemed to him a sort of audacity amounting almost to impiety to doubt what all the preachers said, all the churches believeth and all the schools and colleges in the land taught; and consequently he shared largely in the indignation, if not contempt, with which Dr. Thomas and the mere handful with him were visited, for boldly denying the orthodox popular creed and presuming to demand the proof of what they dared to call the "popular delusion." But circumstances soon brought me into contact with these fair-minded, brave and earnest defenders of what they claimed to be the Bible teaching and faith and I found out though much against my will and to my surprise, at first, on which side lay the great preponderance of reason and testimony. It was not however until after a long mental struggle, that I had to renounce the cherished faith (credulity) of my early teaching and training and take my stand in the ranks of the despised few who preferred truth to tradition and knowledge and light to ignorance, prejudice and error.

But to return from this digression: The great debate lasted four days and was attended by a large assemblage of people. Such discussions were then very uncommon in this country and were, of course, very naturally condemned and opposed by the clergy and religious leaders of the people. Under the pretence that all religious controversy was wrong and even wicked and contrary to the Bible—a position which impeached the wisdom and practice of our Lord and his apostles who always confronted error with her dreaded rival, truth—these clerical leaders had the sagacity to perceive that "their craft was in danger" and that it was perilous to invite or encourage examination into the foundation on which they stood. It has been always so. The Great Teacher saith "He that doeth the truth cometh to the light that it may be made manifest that his deeds are approved of God." When men's deeds are evil and when their light is darkness, they prefer darkness to light. Hence all such condemn discussion and free enquiry.

The result of the debate between Campbell and Thomas was a sort of compromise. There were many sincere sanguine brethren on either side who were strong advocates for peace and harmony and thought it of the first importance to secure union and hearty co-operation in what they honestly thought was "preaching the gospel" by such able men and as the "peace and safety cry" is always popular with the timid and politic, this party succeeded in patching up a hollow truce between the disputants in the form of a written covenant by which it was agreed that the further discussion of the mooted points, orally or in their respective journals, should be discontinued, Dr. Thomas assenting, with the appended condition "except in self-defence and in case of misrepresentation of the sentiments and position of the opposite side."

This result was not expected by either party; Mr. Campbell was content to be "quits" after he saw and felt the force of the testimony and the arguments which his opponent presented and which he evidently had no further disposition to encounter. Dr. Thomas yielded to the great pressure in favor of peace and harmony warmly urged upon him by many of those whose judgment and friendship he could not well disregard. Nevertheless it was a concession to a timid spirit of compromise and policy which, on further reflection and on a question of truth and conscience, he felt it did not become him to yield. But he had not occasion long to indulge in these misgivings and regrets, for no sooner had the partizans of Mr. Campbell reached their homes than they began to publish everywhere, the triumph of their champion in the debate, and the humiliating defeat of Dr. Thomas, while they preached and published not mere misrepresentations but the most gross caricatures of his sentiments and positions in the discussion such as that "man had no soul—was no better than a brute and that death was the end of all things," etc.

Dr. Thomas was in no haste to avail himself of the opportunity of re-opening the statement of his position, etc., in respect to the questions debated. His private affairs and a just regard to his personal interests induced him to suspend the publication of his paper, to sell his plantation in Virginia, and to emigrate to one of the Northwestern States.

He fixed his residence at St. Charles, Ill. Here he became a Professor and subsequently President of St. Charles College, and resumed his literary labors in publishing The Investigator, a monthly paper most appropriately named, for beyond his discovery of the great truth of "immortality only in Christ," Dr. Thomas' faith and doctrine of the future of our race and world were by no means well-defined.

He had explored and exposed as utterly unworthy of confidence and without Scripture support Mr. Campbell's "Three-fact Gospel" of 1 Cor. xv. 1-5, and his "Pentecostian kingdom and reign," based on Acts ii., but none had then learned "the gospel of the kingdom of God" and the coming and kingdom, and personal literal reign of Christ and his saints on earth and over all nations, in fulfillment of Dan. ii. 44; vii. 13, 15, 18, 22, 27.. and the plain teaching of John the Baptist, the angel Gabriel to Mary in Luke i. 30 35, and the words of Jesus and his apostles.

It was only by a long, patient and thorough investigation of the Scriptures of truth afterwards that Dr. Thomas, still in the advance in the diligent search for the whole truth, and his brethren, found "the pearl of great price" in the gospel of the kingdom, which unveils to us the hope of immortality with all its rewards and exceeding great and precious promises fulfilled and opens up to us the bliss and blessedness of our future life in the kingdom and age to come.

But not to make these numbers too long we must defer our historical narrative for the present.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

(To be Continued.)

VISION, SYMBOL, REVELATION.

On reading Wm. Kelly on "Revelation"—his effort to make out the futurist theory of prophecy, and of antichrist yet to come, I was glad to find that he was constrained to recognize "the protracted and historical application" of prophecy; and "the Turkish horsemen in the vision." Rev. ix. 17. See pages 259, 263, 264.

In other words, he so far confounds himself. Because it cannot be both "historical," that is a record of prophecy fulfilled, while yet designed of God to belong to the future. It is "not yea and nay."

"The vision" does not authorize him to assume his own standard by which he can make "the horsemen" and the events visionary.

Abraham's "vision," Gen xv; in which his "horror and great darkness" portrayed the terrible captivities and oppressions of his posterity, did not alter the character of the realities so foretold.

Thus of "the vision" of the transfiguration. It did not reduce Jesus or Moses or Elijah or the cloud, or the voice from the excellent glory, to a figure. No, no.

"The symbols" of the four great governments, Dan. ii. 7, Zech. i. 18, did not change their character or course as recorded in history. The symbol only disclosed their demonic desolating dominion over Israel; and the martyred servants of God in a stronger light.

"Revelation" is the crowning prophecy of the Bible; for it is the unfolding of events through the gospel age, under the then anti-christ. Matt. iv. 1-11; John xvi. 11; 1 John ii. 18-22; Rev. xii. 20. Surely these Scriptures do not disclose "the anti-christ" after "the beast, the false prophet and the devil!" No, indeed; because these grouped into a united opposition to Christ, were then, and on, the deceiver—the anti-christ, 2 John vii—the anti-dikos (adversary 1 Peter v. 8.) the anti-keimenos (who opposeth. 2 Thess. ii. 4.) Let one such schedule of "the evil one" suffice. Christ comes to consume him! Amen. 2 Thess. ii. 8; Heb. ii. 14; Isa. i. 28-31; 1 Cor. xv. 24-27.

The principle of error which employs a figure of speech to make all prophecy mysterious (while it was only designed to illustrate and emphasize it) is often applied to the ordinances of religion (however essential in their place.)

Thus "the lamb in sacrifice," was rested in, rather than employed to foreshadow "the lamb of God who taketh away sin and the sin of the world!" John i. 29. "Circumcision" was rested in by Israel rather than the "circumcision of the heart." Deut. x. 16; xxx. 6; Col. ii. 11-13.

So "baptism" has been exalted and extensively made to fill the place of "re-generation." In a beautiful book, just seen, baptism is virtually made the pivotal and essential point in human redemption! (Of course it is subtle and eludes exposure, like all error.)

But mark! the mis-leader makes it apply to his pride of party and his own popularity and support, and here we may detect his own right delusion. Abraham's example of faith, and his righteousness by faith, was only developed by obedience. Rom. iv. 1-25; James ii. 22. "The righteousness of faith," is known by "the obedience of faith." But it is quite another matter to make the most significant ordinance a sort of substitute for the righteousness and the salvation it signifies! It is only the error of all who make the grandest realities seen in prophetic "vision" only visionary and the subjects of speculative science and theology.

"To err is human; but to forgive divine." Let us then turn to, and rest only on the divine.

J. H. COOK.

Selections.

SELECTIONS ON BAPTISM.

THE ORDINANCE OF BAPTISM.

Dr. Chalmers, the celebrated leader of the Free Church Presbyterians, thus beautifully expresses himself, with regard to the original mode and design of the ordinance, in his late lectures on the Epistle to the Romans, Vol. II., pp. 64, 65: "The original meaning of the word baptism is immersion; and though we regard it as a point of indifference, whether the ordinance so named be performed in this way or by sprinkling, yet, we doubt not that the prevalent style of the administration in the apostle's day was by an actual submerging of the whole body under water. We advert to this for the purpose of throwing light on the analogy that is instituted in Rom. vi. 3, 4. Jesus Christ, by death, underwent this sort of baptism—even immersion under the surface of the ground, whence he soon emerged again by his resurrection. We, by being baptized into his death, are conceived to have made a similar translation. In the act of descending under the water of baptism, to have resigned an old life; and in the act of ascending, to emerge into a second, or new life; along the course of which it is our part to maintain a strenuous avoidance of that sin which as good as expunged the being we had formerly; and a strenuous prosecution of that holiness which should begin with the first moment that we were ushered into our present being, and be perpetuated, and make progress toward the perfection of full and ripened immortality."

Dr. Herman Witsius was one of the most eminent divines that have ever honored the Christian Church. He was born in Holland in 1636, and died in 1708. His greatest work was the "Economy of the Covenants." In regard to proselyte baptism among the Jews, Dr. Witsius says, Vol. III., 334: "The manner of baptism among the Israelites was this: 1. They examined the proselyte, who was to be initiated, with respect to the sincerity of his conversion to Judaism: whether he desired to make a profession thereof, from the hopes of riches or honors in a flourishing republic; or from fear; or from affection for an Israelitess; or any other such like motive that was not good. And after he declared that his motive was the alone regard he had for God, and an unfeigned love to the Divine law, they instructed him in the several articles thereof; as concerning the unity of God, the abominable nature of idolatry, the reward of obedience, and concerning the future world, and other heads of their divinity. Which, after he solemnly professed to receive without the least exception, he was directly circumcised. 2. After the wound of circumcision was perfectly healed, he was led to baptism; which was not performed but in the presence of triumvirs, or three men, who were the disciples of the wise who could exercise judgment, that is, Israelites of the purest blood. It was their business not only to take care that everything was duly performed, and to testify concerning this due performance, according to the practice of their ancestors: but further, to instruct the person to be baptized, and already placed in the water, concerning some more, and some less, important precepts of the law. Such triumvirs are generally in Scripture called Elohim. Christ in like manner declares, that, in the baptism of the New Testament, the Elohim are present, Matt. xxviii. 19, who are called the three witnesses in heaven. 1 John v. 7. 3. It was unlawful to administer baptism but in a natural current or collection of waters; as a river, lake, fountain: because, according to them, none could be duly baptized in water fetched from any place, and received in artificial receptacles. 4. The entire body was to be plunged at once: for, if but the tip of a finger was undipt, such a person was accounted to remain still in his uncleanness. Yet it was not necessary, that the person to be baptized should put off all his clothes, provided they were such as the water could easily penetrate. 5. But we are especially to observe, that even little children were baptized, generally at the same time with their parents. For thus it is said in Talmud Babylon, tit. Kent, fol. 11. c. 1: 'They baptize the little young proselyte, in consequence of the mind of the Sanhedrim.'"

PEN PICTURE OF LONDON.

"I stood upon the dome of Wren, a marble mountain reared into the sky, solid as the hills, and yet vibrating to every passing cart and omnibus upon the thronged streets below. The day was glorious with sunshine; for you must not believe the nonsense that puts London under perpetual fog. The sky would have done no dishonor to Colorado. And far as the eye could reach swept away to the misty horizon the roofs and domes and towers of the one great city of the world. The roar of London rises faint to your ears—a multitudinous, indistinguishable mass of mingled sound. You are alone. You are above it all. It comes to you as the sounds of the great world ascend to heaven. Every human passion is in it, and every human pain. God only can distinguish between the laughter and the tears, the curses and the prayers, the groans of the vanquished, the shouts of the victors. I know not how one can help being saddened at the sight of a great city. I know not how one can stand upon the dome of St. Paul's, and not feel knocking at brain and heart all the riddles of human life and destiny. The roar of the great city faintly rises. You are in its very center. Every street radiating from St. Paul's is crushed and thronged. It is not the roar of London only, it is the murmur of the world. No sound of war or peace, no change in state or kingdom, but mingles its echos with the sounds of London. No misfortune or fraud, or failure at the world's end, but repeats itself in the streets below you. No disaster by flood or fire, but sobs its sad story at your feet. No ship goes down in farthest seas, but the moaning wind and the plunging waters toll of it here at last. No blight falls on the vintages and harvests of men in Europe, Asia, or America, that the cry of distress vibrates not along the granite masses of London's hearts!"

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Sept. 13, 1882.

THE following clipped from the N. Y. Witness is exactly in the line of our own experience. We have many pieces sent that are unobjectionable, but our space is limited. We are writing little editorially to give place to others: "One of the most painful things in our editorial experience is the necessity of leaving unpublished a great number of good letters, as well as a much greater number that have no special claim for publication. We insert as many as we have room for, and give a preference to those that we think will be most interesting to the readers. Many that we are under necessity of leaving over may be as good as those we put in, but we have not room for all. If correspondents would only write when they have something to say that they think will be of general interest, and study brevity, they will greatly oblige us."

Communications.

[Read before the Conference at Reynolds, Ind. Aug. 28, 1882.]

The Words πιστις and πιστευω.

Sound or unsound doctrine is very largely a matter of a correct or incorrect understanding of terms. By terms I mean words that are fundamental or pivotal in the expression of thought. As for instance, ἐστιν faith, αγαπη love, ἐλπις hope. Then there are other words, which while not strictly fundamental or pivotal in their use are of vital importance in their explanatory or adjective use, well illustrated in the two I have chosen as the subject of this article. In the 13th chapter of 1 Cor. Paul says, "And now abideth faith, hope, love, but the greatest of these is love," and in these three terms he metaphysically lays the three foundation stones of Christian character in their true order, both as to time and relative importance. Faith must precede, but the love that has its source in religious faith is the crowning grace of character. Any other words that serve to explain these terms then are of vital importance, and a correct understanding of their signification and use must not be overlooked if we would understand the inspired writer when he defines as he does one of these terms, namely the first ἐστιν, faith. The 1st verse of the 11th chapter of Hebrews contains such a definition, and is the only full and explicit metaphysical definition of this term that I have been able to discover in the whole length and breadth of the Old and New Covenant Scriptures, and as a definition I consider it the concisest, fullest, and most perfect in the whole range of metaphysical writing sacred or profane.

But it has been very much misunderstood and misinterpreted and misapplied because of mistranslation. As an illustration see the translation of this verse in the old and revised versions. The first reads, "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." The second reads, "Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the proving of things not seen." Two statements, differing so radically and entirely from each other that it does not seem possible to any common sense person that they could by any ordinary blundering be two different translations of a text that does not vary so much as in an accent in any of the best manuscripts. And yet so it is. Any person who has ever experienced religious faith and any metaphysician who has ever analyzed the term faith as a concept must reject both of those translations as definitions of faith. A religious person knows by experience that his faith is a state of his own mind and heart, and so does the metaphysician. How can faith be the substance of a thing or things? Faith has to do with living thinking beings. Things are inanimate. Or, how can faith be evidence? For faith includes belief and how can you believe until you have heard the evidence in regard to things unseen? Still more how can one believe when he is forever proving or testing the evidence of this unseen, upon which his belief, if he believe at all, must rest? No, faith so far as it is belief is an accomplished fact, not something that is always going to be accomplished. As the Scripture saith, "I have believed, therefore have I spoken." This is the language of faith, not I am proving something of which I am going to speak.

Let us analyze the word πιστις, and see if it does not mean this, namely, something accomplished. The word is a verbal noun derived from the verb πειθω which means to persuade, and is formed from the root of the perfect passive. 1st person perfect passive, I have been persuaded. What is my state or condition if I have been persuaded? Belief, is it not? Well that is accomplished fact then, is it not? But let not the reader fall into the error of supposing that this word which means belief, because it comes from a passive form of the verb indicates a passive state. No, the accomplished fact of persuasion opens the door straight into an active state which we call belief or faith, and this accords with the general rule (see Crosby 305, 1.) for verbal nouns with this ending; that is, they denote the action of their primitive verb. I cannot believe by merely putting forth an effort of will, but I cannot help believing any truth if I have willed to honestly and carefully examine the evidence upon which it rests and the evidence is presented to my mind. Therefore faith, being conditional upon the fact that I must put forth an effort of will to have it and keep it after I have got it, is necessarily an active state and the person who has it is in an active state of works as James so ably argues in his epistle. Now there are active states of mind which may or may not be of any value and may even be pernicious according to circumstances or conditions determining each case. A flight of the imagination is an active state, and it may be beneficial or it may be pernicious. An hypothesis of any sort is such a flight of the imagination and while a useful instrumentality often in arriving at or illustrating truth, yet too often perverted and an over indulgence in it leaving us in a positive distaste for the more difficult grasp of fact and truth. The inspired writer is evidently aware of this danger and intends to warn the reader against the allurements of these hypothetical beliefs or flights of the imagination, and therefore uses a term in his definition that, to the Greek mind at least, would close the door to this danger.

This term is ὑποστασις. Now this word ὑποστασις means just the opposite of πειθω which we have Anglicized and carried over body and spirit into our language, using it exactly in the sense in which it was used by the old Greeks.

Not so with ὑποστασις. We have Anglicized it, it is true, and adopted it into our vocabulary, but seldom use it, and then with some peculiar theological-metaphysico-nonsensical meaning. Well now what is an hypothesis? An imaginary state or an imaginary conception is it not? That is just exactly what the old Greek meant too when he was talking metaphysics, and by a ὑποστασις he meant just the opposite of an imaginary state or conception, and that is a real state or conception, or a conception of realities. Then as the inspired writer here meant to say, that faith was not a flight of the imagination merely, but a conception of realities and a conviction of the truth of these realities though unseen, and as I have already hinted, he is speaking of persons as having it, not of things. Things do not have faith, and things did not have hypostases, to the old Greek mind at least. He did not speak of faith being "a hypostasis of things hoped for." What he did say was: "Now faith is a hypostasis of those who hope;" meaning that Christians or those who have religious faith are hopers for something, and that faith, in a word, expresses their condition of mind and heart as hopers. That is, he means to say that their hopes are founded upon realities of conception and belief and desire. Why? Because they rest upon God's promises and credible evidence overwhelming in its fulness and variety and power to produce conviction, though it is all in regard to the unseen

But what does the fact of a reality being unseen signify to me or any ordinary believer? I have never seen London, or Paris, or Berlin, but I believe in their reality, and so does every enlightened person in his sane mind. But to the grammatical argument.

Does not ἐλεγχομενων mean things hoped for? No. If you will examine your Liddell & Scott's lexicon you will see that it is commonly used in the intransitive signification of the middle form of ἐλεγχω and this form here is the participle of the present tense of the middle form.

Now I do not imagine that the inspired writer ever dreamed that he would be supposed to be attributing faith or hypostasis, its explanatory term, to things or inanimate objects, and if he had I do not see how he could have better guarded against any such supposition in the use of language according to grammatical rule and common sense. I would further remark that his reason for using ἐλεγχω instead of ἐλεγχω was the same as that which determines the use in the Scriptures of πιστις instead of πιστευω, namely because of its frequentative and intensive force which ἐλεγχω would not have.

Before leaving this half of the definition I would like to say a word more upon the term ὑποστασις. To illustrate the consistency of the translators of the Old and the New Revised this same word is translated in Heb. i. 3, Old Version, "person," and in the Revised "substance." The clause should be translated "and a characteristic expression of his being."

The reader will see that this rendering is consistent with the rendering given in the other passage under consideration. For an actual state or condition is "being" and just exactly what it is when applied to a living person, but it is very far from meaning the same thing, or being the same concept, as person or substance. The only other place where this term occurs in the book of Hebrews, and it is quite a rare word in both the Old and New Covenant Scriptures, is in chap. iii 14, where it is translated both in the Old and Revised, "confidence," and should be translated here "state" or "existence," and would read "if we hold fast the beginning of our state or existence," etc.

Let us now proceed to a consideration of this other word ἐλεγχος and the other half of the definition. The Old Version translates this word "evidence" the Revised "the proving," the Douay "evidence." I purpose to show that this word ἐλεγχος does not here nor anywhere else ever mean evidence, nor the proving, and this I purpose to do etymologically and by grammatical rule.

Ἐλεγχος is a verbal noun derived from the verb ἐλεγχω —verbal noun termination signifying "the effect or object of the action." See Crosby 306, 2.

Meaning of ἐλεγχω the verb in common Attic usage, "to convince or confute by argument or evidence." Now what would be the effect of convincing one by evidence or argument? Conviction, would it not?

Well that is just what ἐλεγχος means and I could cite passages from the Scriptures and the classics by the page illustrative of this use of the word, did time and space permit. Then our common sense and experience both teach us that faith is not evidence but the result of the acceptance of evidence and that is "conviction" as the inspired writer here says. Neither is it a proving or testing of something that we do not see or know, but the result of having proved or tested something of this sort. I have never seen London nor do I know except from testimony that there is such a place, and yet I am fully persuaded, in fact convinced, or in one word have faith that there is such a place, and had I the money and leisure would show my faith by going to see it, as Abraham did when God called him to go out and look for "the city which hath the foundations," and moreover my faith would differ in no respect from Abraham's except in kind, my faith would be in regard to a temporal object, Abraham's was in regard to a spiritual object. I have men's word in regard to the fact of London. Abraham had God's word in regard to the fact of that city.

I will cite one or two passages illustrative of the use of ἐλεγχος in the Old Covenant Scriptures, and a correct understanding of the use of this word in the passage I am about to quote teaches another important thought, namely, how God reproves the sinner, I gave as one of the definitions of the verb ἐλεγχω "to confute." There is still another which it is sometimes proper to use, but always with caution, and that is "to reprove." Now how does this word come to have this signification ever? Because argumentative conviction frequently amounts to reproof. The interesting fact to realize though is that when God reproves he addresses our reason and does not stop short of conviction. That is what is taught in the use of this word in this passage, namely, the third verse of the first chapter of Proverbs, and it reads, "Nor would they give heed to my counsel, but mocked at my ἐλεγχος convictions or reproofs."

Again in the 25th verse of the second chapter God says again by the mouth of wisdom in addressing the sinner, "Moreover, ye made my counsel of no authority and were unpersuaded by, that is disobedient to my ἐλεγχος convictions or convincing arguments." It would be interesting and instructive to cite more such passages, but I refrain and will close with a translation of the whole definition in question, "Now faith is a hypostasis (a real state, a reality, an existence, a life you might say) of those who hope, a conviction of realities not seen."

CHAS. GARDNER.

PIERCETON, Ind., Aug. 15, '82.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

You all like to hear when the great Abrahamic army has been increased by new enlistments. Well, yesterday, quite a company gathered on the banks of a quiet stream in Huntington county, and with joyful song, hearty amens and glad thanksgiving, watched four happy candidates press forward, to be buried in the likeness of Christ's death, receive the pardon of sin, the name of Christ, and the adoption into the family of God.

And oh how thankful they were, as they came up out of the water to receive the welcoming hands of their new relations; to know, that now, the atoning blood was upon them—their names written upon the Surety's hands, and God, their Father indeed.

They are all intelligent men and women, and able to give a reason for the hope that is in them.

Brother Shuser is a young married man who has been preaching in the U. B. church, but who, upon learning that the Bible taught "life only through Christ"—a kingdom here in the regenerated earth, with Christ and his saints as rulers over the nations, and that the wilful rejectors of God's word will be destroyed—left all to follow Christ. His wife bitterly opposed him for a time, but a little tract falling into her hands one day, startled her by the question—"Can you believe?" She read and did believe, the light flashing in upon her mind almost as the lightning flashes from one part of the heavens to another, and like the noble ones of old, she too took the stand with her brave companion upon the side of truth.

Brother and Sister Moore had heard the truth preached in the grove near Brother Griffin's, something near a year ago, and have since been investigating, until they too, have planted their feet upon the Rock, happy to suffer on behalf of Christ.

For years, the brethren in Huntington county have held the "Pass of Truth" against mighty odds. They were a mere handful against a great army, now they have their reward. Precious sheaves have been given them to lay at Christ's feet in the day of his coming.

Brother Oppy came to Brother Fry's neighborhood last week to hold a meeting of days, and battled boldly for the doctrines of God's word as contrasted with the creeds. Much interest and some opposition was manifested, God give him wisdom to preach the words of truth and soberness so men may hear, receive, and be saved.

Brother Fry became acquainted with something of the truth several years ago, and has been patiently and faithfully teaching it ever since.

By the fireside, in the fields and on the road, he has portrayed the unsearchable riches of Christ. The action of these dear candidates for God's favor has been a great measure due to his efforts. Last week, his name was erased from the class book of the U. B. church because he refused to be governed by its creed only so far as it was in conformity with God's word. Sunday evening we had the great pleasure of welcoming him into the household of faith.

He is a man of strong faith and earnestness, and an impressive speaker. We pray God to bless him a thousand fold.

And now may the favor of him who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think rest upon these new friends and upon all the Israel of God, is my prayer.

S. R. WINCH.

Selections.

AMID PERILOUS TIMES.

Prophecies of the world's progress and improvement widely accepted thirty years ago have been strikingly falsified. At the time of the first Great Exhibition in London in 1851, it was a current article of faith that the world was entering upon a new era of brotherhood and peace. Commerce was destined to charm away all thoughts of conflict from the hearts of men, and to command the fullest employment of national energies in deeds of mutual service. The millennial hour of rest looked and longed for by ancient seer had already dawned. In the kindly emulation of skill and science, and in the helpful interchange of crops and merchandize, there appeared the happy promise of a bright and beneficent future.

That this statement is no exaggeration, the following extract from a widely-circulated book by one of the most popular preachers of that time plainly proves: "It (the Great Exhibition) may be a contribution to the peace of nations by showing a nobler rivalry than arms, better trophies than banners and garments rolled in blood, and a warfare whose field is the Crystal Palace in Hyde Park—whose artillery are steam engines and hydraulic presses—whose soldiers are philosophers and engineers, and spinners and dyers—and its protocols treatises on science, and its traces good feeling, amicable rivalry, and social and universal advancement.

Such movements have always been connected with the elevation and progress of mankind. It was when the Medes and Parthians and dwellers in Mesopotamia—and I speak it with a deep sense of the solemnity of that event—were assembled at Jerusalem, that the Holy Spirit came down, and made them the ambassadors of God and the benefactors of mankind. It may be that during this great assembly of the nations of the earth, the Jew and Gentile, Greek and barbarian, bond and free, God may have in store unknown to us—I pray that it may be so—social blessings that the world shall not be able to exhaust."

In the light of subsequent history how satirical such writing seems! It is certain that from that time onward to the present hour there have been wars and rumors; and these, perhaps not altogether untraceable to that great display of riches and skill.

How sadly and sternly the three decades following give the lie to these confident predictions of human foresight all the world knows. Again and again has the trump of war summoned hosts to carnage; the plains of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America have been repeatedly deluged with blood, and now, when the generation so hopefully inaugurated is nearing its close, there remains perplexity of nations, and men's hearts are failing them for fear.

A few years more, and in 1892 the centenary of the French Revolution of 1793 will be reached. What has been the result of the varied experiments in democracy which owe their origin to that startling crisis? Is government safer and stronger today than it was before that wild volcanic outburst? Is there greater reverence for law, and do rulers more fully command the respect and obedience of their subjects? These are questions to which thoughtful men are slow to give reply. They are discouraged by the manifest presence and prevalence of lawlessness wherever they look, and they find little of that loyal subdission to authority which is the only guarantee of order and progress.

The nations which form the very vanguard of civilization are threatened from within. In America the rights of labor are clamorous for a favorable settlement. France, having suppressed insurrection with a strong, firm hand, is still anxious about the near future. In Germany, Bismarck's stern will has hitherto held in check rebellious spirits, but it is no secret that the fatherland is filled with Socialistic theories which only wait a favorable season to ripen into action. The Czar of Russia scarcely dares to hold with firm grasp the reins of government, and his assumption of the emblems of autocratic power by coronation has been hailed by Nihilistic threats and terror. The minor States of Europe, with hardly a single exception, are pervaded by a visible unrest; and our own country, which we have proudly called the home of freedom, is face to face with an organized and secret rebellion in Ireland against both liberty and law.

Nor is the outlook more hopeful when we consider the attitude in which the powerful European nations stand in relation to each other. Armed to the teeth, they exhibit a distrust and suspicion of one another which they are at no pains to conceal. Yet each one of them fears to provoke an explosion. They all dread the extent and consequences of the conflagration which the least spark might kindle. The whole forces of their diplomacy are combined to secure a hollow and deceptive peace. Their consciousness of internal weakness makes them fearful of external troubles.

These circumstances occasion us no surprise. We see in them a fulfilment of the sure word of prophecy, and we are even prepared for the issues. Events are ripening the nations for judgment.

[The above sentiments strikingly agree with what many commentators hold, viz., that we are at the close of the Sixth Vial and on the margin of the Seventh, see Rev. xvi. 12-17.—ED.]

—Dr. Sinclair Patterson, in Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

News Items.

AN UNFORTUNATE LAND.

MADRID, Sept. 11.—Great damage has been done by storms and floods in South Spain.

ATHENS, Sept. 11.—It is believed the Turkish Government is purposely preparing for a collision with Greece to divert Turkish public opinion from Egypt.

NAPLES, Sept. 11.—Telegrams from Tunis report great excitement in the Italian colony there in consequence of the sentence passed by a French council of war on an Italian, condemning him to a year's imprisonment for attacking a French soldier.

ROME, Sept. 11.—The conflict of jurisdiction in Tunis between Italy and France is considered an incident of the gravest importance, tending to aggravate the strained relations between the two countries.

A prominent financier estimates that Egypt will lose nearly £70,000,000 by the war. The cotton crop, which is entirely lost, would have been worth £40,000,000. There is little hope of saving any of the sugar crop. If the country is not in a settled condition within two months it will be too late for the sowing of next year's cereals. Several large failures are anticipated shortly.

CHOLERA—THREE HUNDRED AND FORTY DEATHS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS SUNDAY.

MADRID, Sept. 11.—One hundred and three deaths from cholera at Manilla Sunday.

Two hundred and thirty seven deaths were reported in the provinces.

LOSS OF LIFE AND GREAT DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY BY THE PANAMA EARTHQUAKE.

A dispatch from the Superintendent of the Central and South American Telegraph Company at Panama, dated Sept. 8, says: "The damage done by the earthquake turns out to be greater than was first thought. The Cathedral and many of the largest buildings in Panama are badly injured. The loss in this city is estimated at several hundred thousand dollars. Several lives have been lost in Aspinwall. There is no communication with Aspinwall either by rail or telegraph, and many bridges on the line of the road are broken."

YELLOW-FEVER—GLOOM PREVAILING IN THE STRICKEN CITY OF PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.

PENSACOLA, Fla., Sept. 11.—Today was the most discouraging since the fever made its appearance. Gloom seems to pervade every quarter of the city. The Board of Health reports twenty new cases and two deaths in the past twenty-four hours.

THE SITUATION OF MATAMORAS.

MATAMORAS, Sept. 11.—The fever shows no change. During the twenty-four hours to 9 a. m. yesterday there were four deaths, and for the past twenty-four hours also four deaths. For the week ending at 9 o'clock yesterday morning there were nineteen deaths of fever.

BROWNSVILLE, Tex., Sept. 11.—There were fifty-eight new cases of yellow-fever in the past twenty-four hours. No deaths. There are twelve cases of fever in Fort Brown.

MOHAMMEDAN AGITATION.

The new element in the Egyptian struggle continually gains in force and significance, and, though it has not yet completely asserted itself, its agitation is looked upon as so dangerous that the French Government is alarmed and is sending vessels of war to various points along the African coast. Mohammedan agitation is the hidden enemy which threatens to appear, not joining hands with Arabi Bey against England, but striking at France and driving all Europeans out of Northern Africa. One of the most influential chiefs engaged in this movement is Mohamed-es-Senoussi, who is declared to be a more formidable foe to Europeans than Arabi Bey. M. Gabriel Charmes, who is recognized as one of the best authors on Oriental matters, says of him in the Debats:

Though nominally belonging to Turkey, the region of Cyrenaica is in reality in the hands of a kind of Arab Government, perfectly organized, and of which the ramifications extend northward as far as Morocco and southward to the very centre of Africa. At the head of this Government is the Marabout Mohamed-es-Senoussi, Chief of the Senoussia Brotherhood. His authority over all the tribes is absolute and unbounded, and to him all taxes are paid. At any moment these tribes might be engaged by him in the most savage and ambitious of enterprises without any local authority being able to exercise the slightest control. Mohamed-es-Senoussi lives in no town, but in the little oasis of Djerboub, from whence he rules over Cyrenaica, Tripolitania, Fezzan, Wadai, and Soudan, where his commands are considered equal to divine decrees. Should he at any time determine to throw into Egypt, Tunis, and Algeria the fanatical population under his influence it would be a terrible time for the Christian world. The dream of Mohamed-es-Senoussi, who is a young and handsome chieftain, is nothing less than to purge Africa from the Europeans.

The same author goes on to declare that Islam is approaching a very critical period, as the thirteenth century of the Hegira will close in November next, when, as the Prophet declares, a time of revival and re-generation is to dawn. His prophecy runs: "At the end of every hundred years God will send a man to restore to the Mussulman world the splendor of its religion." Some of the Mussulmen regard Arabi Bey as the coming man of the new century. Others look upon the False Prophet of the Soudan as the man, but by far the larger part are inclined to accept Mohamed-es-Senoussi as the real Messiah who is to restore them and their religion to their old power, and they are waiting for him to give the signal when to rise. It is the opinion of M. Charmes that he will not join Arabi Bey in Egypt, but will operate against France in Algeria and Tunis, and that the uprising will also extend to Morocco and Tripoli, but such an uprising joined with the contest in Egypt would be sufficient to rouse the whole Mussulman world. "Hence," says M. Charmes, "Frenchmen blind enough to desire disasters for England in Egypt ought to perceive that they are playing the enemy's game, and that they are sowing the wind to reap the whirlwind. In the face of the struggle of Mohammedan fanaticism against Christianity it behooves all the nations of Europe to be united." It is possible that the work has already begun. It is only a few weeks ago that the French Minister in Tunis announced to the Home Government that all the rebel tribes had submitted and given in their adhesion to the Bey, and yet the news is now coming of fresh engagements between the French and Arabs in Tunis, and all Tripoli is in a ferment.

Contentions.

Apology is often egotism wrong side up.

Quarrel not with God's unfinished providences.

He needs no other rosary whose thread of life is strung with beads of love and thought.

Education begins the gentleman, but reading, good company and reflection must finish him.

The intercessor and he for whom he intercedes, must both supplicate for the same thing before intercessory prayer can be answered.—Henry Calderwood.

The little flower that opens in the meadows lives and dies in a season; but what agencies have concentrated themselves to produce it! So the human soul lives in the midst of heavenly help.

Pray though the gift you hope for
May not be comfort your fears,
May never hope your pleadings,
Yet pray, and with hopefulness rare;
Ask, answer, not what you hoped for,
But better will come one day:
Your eyes are too dim to see it,
Yet strive and wait and pray.

True goodness is like the glow-worm, it shines most when no eyes save those of heaven are upon it.—Feller.

A life devoted to trifles, not only takes away the inclination, but the capacity for higher pursuits. The truths of Christianity have scarcely more influence on a frivolous than on a profligate character.—Hannah More.

My Redeemer and my Lord,
I beseech thee, I entreat thee,
Guide me in each act and word,
That hereafter I may meet thee,
Watching, waiting, hoping, yearning,
With my lamp well trimmed and burning;

Christianity is more than history. It is also a system of truths. Every event which its history records, either is a truth, or suggests a truth, or expresses a truth, which man needs assent to or put into practice.—Noah Porter.

We are not forbidden to mourn. The smitten heart will bleed; the workings of nature must have vent. It is right. Tears were not made that they should never be shed; nor the passion of grief implanted to be stifled.—J. M. Mason.

In the still air, the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble, beauty lies unseen;
To make the music and the beauty, need
The Master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.

Great Master, touch me with thy skilful hand:
Let not the music that is in me die!
Great sculptor, hew and polish me, nor fail,
Hidden and lost, the form within me lie!

Spare not the stroke! do with me as thou wilt!
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred!
Complete thy purpose, that we may become
Thy perfect image, thou our God and Lord!
—Horatius Bonar.

No Root.

There are those who hear the word and receive it with joy. They are "glad to know the truth, the glorious truth." They feel the pressure of God and for a time look forward with anxiety to the time, when they shall become God's dear children by adoption. But the worldling scoffs at the step. "There is no need of such a text, you have come to God already, and are as good now as you would be were you to go down into the water."

The scoffs offend, the joy abates, the heart is suffered to grow cold, the joyful hearer never becomes a doer of the word. He deceives himself, and the fruit that will have its reward in the kingdom, is never borne. There was no root, no such well-grounded faith in God—that nothing could shake or turn it away. Reader, are you one of these?

S. ROXANA WINCH.

Poetry.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

JOSEPH TUTT.

"Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is."—Mark xiii. 33.

Come suddenly, O Lord, or slowly—one
I wait thy will, thy servant ready for
Thou best preparest thy follower a home,
The heaven in which thou dwellest too is his.

Come in the morn—at noon, or midnight deep,
Come, for thy servant still doth watch and pray;
Even when the world around is sunk in sleep,
I wake, and long to see thy glorious day.

I would not fix the hour, the day, nor hour.
Were these with all thine angels shall appear;
Who in thy kingdom these shall come to power,
Even now, perhaps, the promised day is near!

For though in slumber deep the world may lie,
And e'en thy church forget thy great command,
Still year by year thy coming draweth nigh,
And in the power thy kingdom is at hand.

Nor in some future world alone I wait for,
Beyond the grave, beyond the bonds of time;
Put on the earth thy glory we shall see,
And share thy triumph, powerful, pure, sublime.

Lord! help me that I faint not, weary grow,
Nor at thy coming slumber too, and sleep;
For thou hast promised, and full well I know
Thou will to us thy word of promise keep.

Communications.

LETTER FROM EUROPE.

ANTWERP, Belgium, Aug. 21, '82.

Editor Restitution:

I wrote you last week from Paris, not expecting to write again before my return to America, but having some leisure hours in Antwerp while waiting for the sailing of the steamer I improve them by adding a few more lines.

Antwerp, or Antwerpen as the Flemish inhabitants call it, or Anvers as the French say, is, historically, one of the most interesting cities of Europe. From its situation it has been the battle-ground of many conflicts between the eastern and western nations of Europe, and has experienced a great variety of fortunes. It was one of the leading commercial centers of the world in the 15th century. The great reformation may be said to have begun here, and here the blood of the martyrs under that reformation was first poured out. The history of the long and cruel persecution which the Protestant Christians suffered under Charles V. of Spain, and of Philip II., and his successors, is graphically given by Motley in his "Dutch Republic." It resulted in the commercial, civil and moral ruin of the city. All its best citizens were put to death or driven into exile; its world wide trade broken up, and the wide deep flowing Scheldt which fits it to be one of the best ports on the continent of Northern Europe, was closed; it fell into comparative insignificance as a provincial town with not one-tenth part of the inhabitants it formerly had.

While the northern portion of the Netherland province, now called Holland, achieved their independence and became the celebrated Dutch Republic, Antwerp in the southern portion now called Belgium, fell completely under the Spanish yoke and the chains of the Papacy were more securely fastened upon her than perhaps any city of Europe.

During the present century, since the Belgium provinces have become independent, Antwerp has been gradually rising to her natural place in the commercial world. It owes much to the ambitious plans of Napoleon Bonaparte, who designed to make it his great naval depot and who constructed its first capacious docks, which have since been greatly enlarged. It has already risen again to be one of the leading ports of Continental Europe. It contains a population of nearly 150,000, which is rapidly increasing. The old wall of its fortification has given place to a magnificent new wall embracing three or four times its former territory; American tramways (street railroads) have quite recently been introduced; new boulevards have been constructed around the city, and many modern improvements have been introduced. The old reactionary municipal government which long resisted improvements, has recently given way to a more liberal government, and the city seems to be on the high road to a still higher eminence as a prosperous commercial city.

Still Antwerp may be regarded as one of the most thoroughly Roman Catholic cities in the world. Protestantism makes but a very faint show here. The city abounds in magnificent Papal churches, and the fete days and public ceremonies of this church are here observed more rigorously than in any other place I know of. Here was the scene of my missionary labors from 1866 to 1872, the fruit of which still remain in a flourishing Bowman's Bethel where Protestant religious services in English are held twice every Lord's Day and often during the week, and many scores of English and American sailors and visitors and residents find a religious center and a congenial place of worship.

It is interesting to me to revisit this place after an absence of ten years and note the real progress that has been made.

Yesterday, which was Sunday, the annual procession in honor of the Virgin Mary took place. This is the greatest religious ceremony of the year. It is observed as a grand fete day in other Catholic cities, but in none with so much eclat as here. It took place from the great cathedral, which is celebrated the world over as one of the most beautiful in Europe. It is here that the two masterpieces of Rubens the famous painter, the "Elevation of the Cross," and the "Descent from the Cross," are on exhibition. Antwerp was the birthplace of Rubens, and the religious (?) honor of the city is divided between him and the Virgin. This cathedral was erected centuries ago in honor of the Virgin, on the spot where her image is said to have fallen from heaven. This of course attracted many pilgrims to the shrine where the image was kept. Finally a church was built in which it was enthroned, and this gave place to the present beautiful structure. She has her throne and her altar in this cathedral, and once every year the—that is, her image most richly clothed and adorned is brought out and carried through the streets with great pomp and ceremony.

The streets through which the procession is to march are carefully swept, and strewn with sand and then with flowers and multitudes of bits of gilded and silvered paper. Large candles are affixed to the sides of houses, to be lighted when the procession comes along. The whole city is out in the streets or at the windows and doors to witness the display. The great and little bells of the cathedral ring out their loudest and sweetest music. The ecclesiastics of every name and clad in their religious robes, and carrying their insignia of office in their hands, come together at the appointed hour. Various bands of music, and all the different guilds of the city with their enormous and richly adorned banners are there.

At eleven o'clock the great front doors of the cathedral are thrown open and the long procession defiles out into the street. A way is made through the surging mass of spectators by the police. I cannot take the time or the space to describe the procession in detail. But it must suffice to say, it is composed of the various guilds and officers of the city, and ecclesiastics, singing choirs of boys and chanting priests, all bare-headed, in their robes of office, hundreds of them clad in white tunics and with skirts of red and crimson and yellow, each carrying a long candle in one hand and a string of beads in the other, with banners of every device and description.

Midway in the procession, erect on a crimson velvet platform borne of eight men on their shoulders, comes the virgin with a golden crown on her head, the infant in one hand and a scepter in the other swaying hither and thither with the steps of the bearers.

Multitudes of spectators along the streets raise their hats or drop on their knees on the pavement. After this more music and more banners and more lighted candles, and then comes under a crimson velvet canopy the host carried by a priest and preceded by boys swinging smoking censers and followed by other boys carrying baskets of flowers, and after this more chanting priests and more banners and more lighted candles to the end of the procession.

Arriving at Place de Mer, the widest street in the center of the city, after a long detour, there is a large altar which has been erected in the middle of the street with another image—I suppose of the Virgin also—on the top of it. Here the procession halts. Some religious ceremony—I know not what—high mass perhaps, is celebrated, and then the procession returns, after a walk of about two hours to the cathedral from which it started and the great image is restored to her accustomed place, and the crowd disperses and the rest of the day is given up to mirth, jollification, and social enjoyment.

All this in the name of the Christian religion. In what is it better than the worship of Diana of the Ephesians?

But I have no time left for reflection or comment. I must leave these for the reader to make for himself.

J. H. PETTENGILL.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.

Editor Restitution:

Minerva J. Woodworth thinks that John xvii. 5 "seems to prove that Christ existed as a distinct person before the world was made," and wishes I would give an explanation thereof. I will with pleasure do what I can to assist her to a correct understanding of the passage which reads, "And now O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."

If this passage proves that Jesus existed as a person before the world was, then Eph. i. 4, which reads, "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before him in love," proves that the apostle Paul and Ephesian brethren existed as persons before the foundation of the world: and Rev. xiii. 8, which reads, "The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," proves that Jesus the Lamb of God existed and was slain from the foundation of the world. But as we understand Rev. xiii. 8 to teach that Jesus the Lamb of God was, in the purpose of God, slain from the foundation of the world, and Eph. i. 4 to teach that Paul and the Ephesian brethren were, in the purpose of God, chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, so by the same mode of interpretation we should understand John xvii. 5 to teach that the glory Jesus had with the Father before the world was, was in the purpose of God. Therefore Jesus prayed that he might be glorified with that glory which he had in the mind or purpose of his Father before the world was. To say that Jesus the flesh born Son of Mary existed as a person before the world was is to contradict the plain statement of John who says, The word was with God and the word was God and the word became flesh. Therefore the flesh born Son of Mary before the world was made was not a pre-existent Son or person but the spirit-word or logos with God and was God. Therefore when the word became flesh it was God the Father, and not a Son, that was manifested in the flesh born of Mary, and John says, "He dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory the glory as of the only begotten of the Father." To beget is to begin to exist as a person, hence Jesus being the only begotten of the Father could not have existed save only as the wisdom, word, or promise with God, before he was begotten by the power of the Holy Spirit overshadowing Mary.

To be glorified, then, with the glory he had before the world was, with the Father, as the word in the mind or purpose of Deity, was the desire, or the prayer of Jesus. In the first verse of the chapter Jesus says, "The hour is come." What hour? I answer the hour of his obedience unto death when he should offer himself as a sacrifice for the sins of the people he raised from the dead and exalted to the glory which in the purpose of God had been his from the beginning. What that glory was may be understood by the following expressions: The glory of being the "Alpha and Omega;" "the first-born of creature," "the beginning of the (new) creation of Deity," "highly exalted and given a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth and things under the earth and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ (the flesh born Son of Mary) is Lord to the glory of God the Father." No pre-existent person, or son could have had this honor and glory with the Father: for says Paul, speaking of Christ Jesus, "That being found in fashion as a man (though God was his Father) he humbled himself, and became obedient unto the death of the cross; wherefore, God highly exalted him," etc., to all the glory and honor expressed in the above words of Scripture and which was his, in God's purpose as much as it was his to be the Lamb slain.

But some one may be ready to say that Paul says in this same chapter (Phil. ii. 7) that Jesus Christ "made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of men." Does not this passage teach that he was pre-existent as a person distinct from God, for how could it be said of him that he took upon him the form of a servant? I answer, this language was written after his existence and therefore in speaking of "God manifested in flesh," as the Son of God, yet born of a woman it would be quite proper to say "he took upon him the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of men," without meaning that he pre-existed. Hence "Paul to the Hebrews, second chapter, says of Jesus, that he was made lower than the angels whereas if he pre-existed as a "distinct person" from the Father then he must have been made higher than the angels. But Paul further adds, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood he also himself took part of the same." If because Paul says of Jesus, that he took the form of a servant, and took part of a flesh and blood nature, he teaches that he pre-existed, then where he says, "the children are partakers of flesh and blood," he teaches that they pre-existed: and when the mother says of her boy "he took more of the features of his father than of myself," she teaches that he pre-existed. Such an interpretation of language is unwarranted, and it is equally so when spoken of Jesus who was God manifested in the person born of Mary that he "might taste death for every man." But he has been crowned with glory and honor, that glory which he had in the mind or purpose of God before the world was. Hence Paul says God hath "made known unto us the mystery of his will according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ both which are in heaven and which are on earth even in him." Eph. i. 9, 10.

Again Paul says in Heb. ii. 10 (Diaglott), "For it was becoming him, on account of whom are all things, and through whom are all things in conducting many sons to glory to perfect the Prince of their salvation through suffering." Such then is a view of the glory which Paul says God had purposed in himself should be Christ's in the dispensation of the fulness of times, and with which he has already been crowned by being raised from the earth-born state or nature of the woman to the high and heavenly estate of incorruptibility and life, or nature of God, "that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father." God having exalted him to his own right hand and made him both Lord and Christ he hath answered the prayer of Jesus by glorifying him with that glory which he had in God's purpose before the world was. Therefore he who was rich in the purpose of God being "Lord of all" but who for our sakes became poor, by being made for a little while lower than angels that he might taste death for every man, has been "taken up into glory" and all power has been given unto him both in heaven and in earth. That what we have written may assist not only Minerva J. Woodworth but others to a greater knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus is the sincere wish of the writer.

DR. J. H. TAGMAN.

Youths' Column.

Make Home Happy.

More than building showy mansions,
More than dress and fine array;
More than parties, power, and wealth,—
Make our home both neat and tasteful,
Bright and pleasant, always fair,
Where each heart shall rest contented,
Grateful for each pleasure there.

Seek to make your home most lovely,
Let it be a smiling spot
Where, in sweet contentment resting,
Care and sorrow are forgot.
Where the flowers and trees are waving,
Birds will sing their sweetest song:
Where the purest thoughts will linger,
Confidence and love belong.

There each heart will rest contented,
Seldom wishing far to roam,
Or if roaming, still will ever
Cherish happy thoughts of home.
Such a home make—scek the better,
Sure and lasting the control:
Home with pure and bright surroundings
Leaves its impress on the soul.

The Dear Old Mother.

Honor the old mother. Time has scattered the snowy flakes on her brow, ploughed deep furrows on her cheeks, but is she not beautiful now? The lips are thin and shrunken, but these are the lips that have kissed many a hot tear from the childish cheeks, and they are the sweetest lips in the world. The eye is dim, yet it glows with the soft radiance of holy love which can never fade. Ah, yes, she is dear old mother. The sands of life are nearly run out, but feeble as she is, she will go further, and reach down lower for you than any one else upon earth. You cannot walk into a midnight where she cannot see you; you cannot enter a prison where bars will keep her out; you cannot mount a scaffold too high for her to reach, that she may kiss and bless you in evidence of her deathless love. When the world shall despise and forsake you, when it leaves you by the wayside to die, unnoticed, the dear old mother will gather you in her feeble arms and carry you home, and tell you of all your virtues, until you almost forget that your soul is disfigured by vices. Love her tenderly, and cheer her declining years with tender devotion.

A Lesson of Providence.

In the baptistry of the Pisa Cathedral is a wonderful dome—not only spacious, symmetrical, and beautiful, with the richest marbles, but possessing a power of blending all sounds into harmony. A traveler writes thus of his experience in this cathedral: "As I stood one sunny April day beneath that dome, the air became instinct with melody. The waves of music vibrated to and fro, loudly beating against the walls, swelling into full chords, like the roll of a grand organ, and then dying away into soft, long-drawn, far-reaching echos, melting in the distance into silence. It was only my guide, who, lingering behind me a moment, had softly murmured a triple chord. But beneath that magic roof every sound resolved into harmony. No discord can reach the summit of that dome and live. Every noise made in the building, the slamming of seats, the tramping of feet, all the murmur and bustle of the crowd, are caught up, softened, harmonized, blended, and echoed back in music." So, it seems to me, that over our life hangs the great dome of God's providence. Standing as we do beneath it, no act in the divine administration toward us, no affliction, no grief, no loss which our Heavenly Father sends, however hard to bear it may be, but will come back at last softened and blended into harmony within the overarching dome of his wisdom, mercy, and power, till to our corrected sense it shall be the sweetest music of heaven.—Dr. Kittredge, in the Interior.

A Night in the Police Station—A Foel.

A drunken father, blear-eyed and bloated, to whose hand a child of five years old clung with a tenacious grasp.

"What is this man brought in for?" asked the police sergeant.

"Disorderly conduct, throwing stones at people, cursing and swearing," was the reply.

"Very well, put him into the cell. But stop; there's the child!"

The little fellow was an exceptionally beautiful boy. He had grave blue eyes, so large and so pitiful, that their glance appealed to the sergeant's stout heart. His complexion, where it was not discolored by dirt and tears, was the finest and fairest. His lips were like cherries. His yellow hair curled thickly over a noble shaped forehead.

"That man has seen better days," says the sergeant to himself. "Come, my boy, your father must go in the cell. We'll find a place for you somewhere."

"No, no, sir, oh, no!" cried the boy in a terrified voice. "I go with father. O! please don't take me away from my father."

"But, child, you must. See here, Colbert you must take the child away."

Kanier said than done. The little fellow caught his father's hands, clung to his body, which staggered at his touch, all the time screaming in heart-broken tones that he must, he would, go with his father.

"I'm not lone," said the man, seeming to come out of his stupor for a moment. "Don't you see, he's got nobody but me? I'm alone."

"I can't allow the child to go into the cell," said the sergeant, "but I can't bear to hear his cries. I suppose there is nothing else to do. He must go. Put them in together."

So they were put in together in the dark, stifling den, and the door was shut. The little fellow cuddled himself against the half-insensible form, and laid his head upon his father's bosom. So they slept together.

The faint light looked in through the grimy bars, when on the following morning the father awoke and bestirred himself. Of course, as is usually the case, he wondered where he was, and how he got there. The last thing he remembered, he had gone into a public house alone, and drank a few glasses, and then recollection ceased. Where was his hat? Where was his coat? And, looking around, he cried out in agony:

"O, God, forgive me! There's little Bonny!"

Yes there was little Bonny, the pure fair child, the idol of a broken-hearted mother. There was little Bonny, and he had spent the night in this hole.

The man beat his breast as he looked down on the bright, curly head.

"Husband and child both," he muttered bitterly. "Too bad, too bad!"

At that moment the blue eyes of the boy opened. He raised himself in wonder, but he met his father's gaze, and he smiled like an angel.

"The bad man put you in here, father, but I wouldn't let him take me. You didn't know anything, father, when I found you in the street. You lost your hat—I suppose the wind took it—and the boys were all laughing. You was sick, wasn't you, father? And when the bad man took you off I came too. Now, let's go home and tell mother all about it. Let's tell her we was stolen!" and the dear unconscious little fellow laughed merrily over the brilliant idea.

But that father! His heart was touched as it never had been before. He could not speak—could scarcely think. What was the mother suffering that moment. And this awful sin that had led him into its toils—it never had looked as it looked to him now, within the unsullied cell, the faint light lying on the curls of his innocent boy.

And when they went out, there stood the mother, who, half distracted, had been wandering and searching all night. Oh what a sight for the gentle loving eyes! With a wild cry she fell upon the neck of the child, and drawing him away, sank to the floor with him, sobbing as if her heart would break.

Such are the sad scenes that God sees, and which policemen see from day to day. Poor maniacal poor wives! poor children! who shall protect you from this deadly curse? Who shall deliver you from this dark and terrible thrall?—Temper.

Brevities.

Captain Condor and Consul Moore accompanied the young English princes during their recent tour in Palestine, and were with them when they were allowed to enter the mosque over the Cave of Macpelah. They could look down into the cave through the hole in the floor of the mosque, but it is not said that they made any discoveries.

A few weeks ago, on the fifteenth day of the Ramadan, or month of fasting, the Sultan repaired, according to ancient custom, to the old seraglio at Constantinople to pay his homage to the precious relics of the Prophet Mohammed there exhibited, to-wit: his cloak, some hair from his beard, and a molar tooth. Abdul Hamid was accompanied by the Sheikh-ul-Islam, all the Ministers, and the principal dignitaries. The Sultan knelt before the cloak, kissing it devoutly. A number of silk handerchiefs, into which verses from the Koran had been woven, were placed on the cloak, and afterward distributed as priceless amulets among the dignitaries and the ladies of the harem.

"Between Heliopolis and Zagazig," says the London News, "there is an interesting spot connected with later Jewish history. It is called Tel-el-Yehoudee, or 'The Mound of the Jew.' In Josephus, b. xiii., c. iii., will be found an account of it. Onias, son of the high priest of the Temple of Jerusalem, got permission from Ptolemy and Cleopatra to build a temple in Egypt which should be like the one at Jerusalem. Josephus says it was much inferior. Still, such a temple was constructed, with priests and a service the same as the Jews were accustomed to. The place was known previously as Leontopolis, and a temple had stood there, and a palace of Rameses III. existed at it, all of which was in ruins when Onias constructed his temple, which also is now gone, and nothing but mounds are left to mark the spot. Onias in his letter to Ptolemy quoted in favor of his proposals the prophecy in Isa xix. 19, 'In that day shall there be an altar in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord.' These words are acknowledged by Ptolemy and Cleopatra as being the inducement which caused them to make the grant. This temple attracted Jews, and there were other cities in the district where they predominated, but little is known regarding them."

IMPORTANT STATISTICS.

The nations are divided, according to the Christian World, as follows:—Jews, 6,000,000; Mohammedans, 166,000,000; Pagans, 200,000,000; Asiatic Buddhists, 300,000,000; total, 365,000,000; the Christians are divided into Protestants, 75,000,000; Roman Catholics, 153,000,000; Greek Church, 80,000,000—317,000,000. Whole population, 1,283,000,000 souls, of whom it is computed one dies every second, or 3,600 every hour, or 31,557,600 every year. This is a frightful condition of the world, nearly nineteen hundred years after the advent of Jesus. While there are 317,000,000 men nominally Christians, there are about 1,000,000,000 opposed to Christ and his religion. Of the 317,000,000, 153,000,000 are Roman Catholics, 80,000,000 belonging to the Greek Church, leaving but 75,000,000 Protestants, all told, of every description and sect.

FREE-THINKERS IN CONVENTION.

The New York Tribune thus comments upon the "Free-Thinkers' Convention," held last month at Watkins Glen:

It seems to us that the Christianity of this great commonwealth of ours ought promptly to present a vote of thanks, a real cordial vote engrossed on parchment and framed without regard to expense, to "The New York Free-Thinkers' Association." This Association has just been holding its sixth annual meeting, and in spite of itself has succeeded for the sixth time in demonstrating the unqualified baldness of infidelity. Free-thinking as it exhibited itself at Watkins during the past week must have impressed every intelligent and candid man who read the report of the proceedings as simply a synonym for puerile and purposeless thinking, and therefore, entitled to no respect. Concerted thinking that leads to nothing worth while, that is not followed by action for the furtherance of the public weal, may be "free" but is not fore-sight. What comes of the free-thinking of "The New York Free-Thinkers' Association?" Once a year, the Association meets to deny the existence of a personal God, to idolize "humanity," to adore "reason," to declare that if a man dies he shall not live again, to burn incense to Tom Paine, to revile Christianity, and to poke fun at the Bible. There are no other "exercises" of any importance. Now and then, indeed, a desperate effort is made by the Association to formulate its belief, but a dismal failure is always the result. The Association knows what it does not believe. It has on hand a large and varied assortment of negations, and it has on hand nothing else. And so it blasphemes to its heart's content, and takes a great deal to content its heart when it comes to blasphemy, and evinces the true inwardness of its much-vaunted liberality by liberal allusions to those who fail to see eye to eye with it. And then it adjourns. Pretending to be passionately devoted to the Brotherhood of the Race, to believe in "works" to the exclusion of "faith," it seldom or never gets any further than ill-digested talk. Other associations that are not so free, certainly not so loose, in their thinking, that believe in God and a hereafter, are constantly putting their creed into hospitals and asylums and reformatories and schools and missions at home and in heathendom. The tree of free-thinking bears no such fruit. It bears only a talk, a large crop every year.

Witnesses of Christ's Resurrection.

It is impossible to doubt the good faith of those simple and devout men, who could have had no possible motive for committing a fraud, and perpetrating a falsehood. Writing twenty-five years after the event, the apostle Paul states that Christ was seen by Peter, by the twelve, by five hundred at once—most of whom, he added, were still alive at the time of his writing, by James, and again, by all the apostles. Belief in the resurrection of Christ is not made to depend on the testimony of one or two women, who have visited the sepulchre at the early dawn of a spring morning and been deceived by some appearance and sound, or upon the assertion of some ecstatic visionary, whose imagination has represented the Person whom he had followed so long, the voice which he had so often listened to. The evidence is enumerative; and, as far as one hears, no single person who had averred that he had seen the risen Christ ever shook off the impression or conviction, or discovered that he had been in error.—Pearl of Parma.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The next general meeting of the Church of God will be held at Adeline, Ogle Co. Ill., commencing Thursday, Sept. 28, and continue over Sunday, Oct. 1. A general attendance is desired. By order of the

COMMITTEE.

The Church in Michigan will hold its next Quarterly Conference (D. V.) in the school house at Coat's Grove, Barry County, commencing Friday evening, Sep. 29, at 7 o'clock, and continue over Sunday. Coat's Grove is in the n. w. corner of Woodland Tp., and seven miles n. e. of Hastings. Strangers coming with teams will ask for G. W. Coats. Those coming by rail will come on the Grand River Valley R. R. and leave the cars at Hastings. Trains will be met by teams to convey parties to the meeting on Friday as follows, going east at 1:40 p.m. going west at 2:52 p. m. Able speakers will be in attendance, and a cordial invitation is extended to all to be present and hear the truth.

HERBERT MILLER, Sec.

There will be a conference meeting of the brethren of the one faith at the Union Star school house, Cloud Co., Kansas, commencing October 13, and continuing over Sunday. The Union Star school house is eleven miles southwest of Concordia, and twelve miles north of Delphos, on Wolf Creek. Those coming by rail will please drop a card to A. Kasinger, Graves post office.

SAMUEL NOE.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingill, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Trilemma," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now existing, such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 200 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—By A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a Cloth Bound book of 180 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee to the worth of the work. Price only $1 per copy, post-paid. Restitution office for them.

Poetry.

The Cattle.

THE BANNER OF THE JEW.

EMMA LAZARUS.

Wake, Israel, wake! Recall today
The glorious Maccabean age:
The stirring call, the thrilling cry,
The flag inscribed with words of fire,
The Lord, the Light, the Truth of God,
The Banner of the Jew.

From Mizpah's mountain ridge they saw
Jerusalem's empty streets, her shrine
Laid waste where Greeks profaned the Law,
With idol and with pagan sign,
Mourners in tattered black weed there,
With ashes sprinkled on their hair.

Then from the stony peak there rang
A blast to ope the graves; down poured
The Maccabean clan, who sang
Their battle-anthem to the Lord.
Five heroes led, and following, see,
Ten thousand rush to victory!

Oh, for Jerusalem's trumpet now,
To blow a blast of shattering power,
To wake the sleepers high and low,
And rouse them to the urgent hour!
No hand for vengeance—but, to save,
A million naked swords should wave.

Oh, deem not dead that martial fire,
Say not the mystic flame is spent:
With Moses' law and David's lyre
Your ancient strength remains unbent.
Let but an Ezra rise anew,
To lift the Banner of the Jew.

A rap, a mock at first—ere long,
When men have bled and women wept,
To guard its precious folds from wrong,
Even they who shrank, even they who slept,
Shall leap to bless it, and to save,
Strike for the brave revere the brave!

The sons of Mattathias—Jonathan, John, Eleazar, Simon (also called the Jewel), and Judas, the Prince.

Selections.

Age to Come Herald

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

July 23. Letters from Boston arrived yesterday. Also the June number of the Age to Come Herald, No. 84. I think this number is the best yet published. The Herald is read and appreciated by the English reading people, both Jews and Christians. We shall reap in due season if we are patient, which I find to be rather a hard matter on my part. I think you are doing much better in this respect than I can hope to do.

The Gadites have all arrived and many have found employment. They seem cheerful and hopeful. The Americans have fed them liberally for two months, besides giving them clothes, paying rent, etc. I hope friends will be raised up to help them in their noble work of love and mercy. They are making great sacrifices.

We are having a very wonderful atmospheric phenomenon, something hitherto unknown here at this season of the year. Heavy moist clouds hover around these hills, which seems to change the climate altogether. They tell me that nothing of this kind has ever been known in the dry summer months. Last night we had a most magnificent sunset scene, similar to the one I gave you a description of on the ocean between Quebec and Liverpool.

Yesterday I saw fifteen carriages arrive from Jaffa, loaded with Russian refugees. I counted seventy-five passengers. They are coming every week; and if they do not scatter through the country, Jerusalem will be overrun soon.

The news from Egypt is fearful. Some say it is a false cry, and others believe the state of things there to be as bad as represented. I wish we could know the facts. How anxious we feel to foreknow what will come next!

Mr. Floyd has gone to Jaffa and will bring my boxes, which I think have arrived. He is one of the kindest, most noble and honorable men I ever met, and one of the most abused. But all his trials, after all, will work for his eternal good. So they will for all the elect. I realize, in some degree, how necessary for our crucifixion and development these sore afflictions are. Well, we will endure them, because they are working for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

"I feel truly grateful to my Heavenly Father for the privileges I have had to learn many great and important truths, and that I have been able to cast off many errors in which I had been educated. How very absurd they appear to me now when I hear them advanced by others! May the God of Israel abundantly bless those who have been my teachers; and who have so nobly and fearlessly stood by the truth through great opposition. It must surely bear fruit in due season. I believe preachers will yet come to Zion, who will proclaim the truth as it is; who will "speak comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins."

I read today an account of the dreadful storms in America, and of the deaths caused by them, and other calamities, and I am impressed that this is only the beginning of sorrows. I hope God's people will flee to this country for safety, those who discern this time. It would seem that these scourges might open their eyes to the danger of procrastination. "The prudent foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple pass on, and are punished."

Many people think the French will make some kind of a demonstration soon in this country. Well, I should not be surprised to see it. But everything is quiet here now; it cannot, however, remain quiet long. The train is in motion, and nothing will stop it. We have already seen Jewish refugees returning home to the land of their fathers, from the north, south and east; and some belonging to the ten tribes from the west.

The cyclone passed near Mrs. Brinton's home in Iowa. Many thanks for the New York Herald; we get the most reliable news from Egypt in this paper. Our despatches and telegrams here are very conflicting. We have no newspaper in Jerusalem now. Everything here is quiet and prosperous at present. We seem to be hid away from the world. When righteousness and praise spring forth at Jerusalem before all the nations, she will be a city on a hill that cannot be hid; and her influence will be felt.

July 24. The news from Egypt this morning is exciting. Mr. Floyd came today. He says it is rumored that the Sultan has sent troops to Gaza, expecting the English there. He thinks matters are beginning to look rather serious. I am not frightened at all, but still, the alarm of war, and such a dreadful war as we know must come, throws a gloom over everything.

I think of Mrs. Brinton's dream. You will remember I wrote about it. She saw a man standing over Jerusalem with a sickle in his hand. It was doubtless designed as a warning to us. I really expect to hear the shrieks of the dying, as I heard them in Boston before I left. [If we remember correctly, it was in the day time when Mrs. Davis heard dreadful shrieks as though many persons were in the deepest agonies of death struggles, and supposing it to be a reality she looked wildly out upon the streets and backways to ascertain from whence the fearful sounds came, but no trouble could be found.] I shall never forget the sound. Oh! the dreadful time of trouble such as never was before is at hand, and who shall abide? "The Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel."

My boxes will come in the morning, and I shall have but three dollars to pay on them. [The boxes measured forty cubic feet and were billed one ton, and the whole expense from Boston to Jaffa ($18.30,) was prepaid in Boston. The three dollars of which Mrs. Davis speaks, was the expense at Jaffa, and freight to Jerusalem; and the probability is that Mr. Floyd, a true friend of the cause, charged nothing for his efficient services. We mention these affairs that friends who may think to carry, or send freight to Jerusalem or Palestine, may get something of an idea of the expense. Heavy articles that will go by weight instead of measure, will cost about three dollars per ton more.]

Our friends in America will doubtless feel some anxiety about us here in the troublous times; but we shall put our trust in God; and if we die, there will be this consolation: there will be no loss, but Christ will be glorified by our deaths. I thank God that "Darling Bertie" sleeps sweetly unconscious of all sorrow. How good the Lord is, who so arranged his plan, that all things are done according to the counsel of his own will, and work together for good to them who are called according to his purpose.

July 28. Upon opening the boxes everything was found to be all right. The little stove worked to a charm. It is astonishing what a change a little Yankee stove will make in a Jerusalem home. It is just the thing here. The natives look upon the strange things I have received, with astonishment, and say, "Americans are a great people." Well, this is true in many respects. Mrs. Brinton and Mrs. Floyd each want a stove sent like mine. They will pay all expenses.

The beautiful clouds still hover over Jerusalem; and this morning we had a little rain. (Think of it, skeptical rain in Jerusalem on the last of July!) The clouds are heavy and moist. I watch them eagerly every day. They are most certainly signs in the heavens that the restitution of this land is at hand.

There have been fifteen Sheiks of the villages arrested, who are now in prison for trying to incite the people to plunder Jerusalem! The information was brought to the Latin Church, when the Pasha caused their arrest. Somehow, there is no alarm in Jerusalem about it. I do not feel at all frightened; still we may see terrible things here.

We are highly pleased with our new Consul and his wife. I am to invite them to dinner tomorrow. They have been sent here, I think, to take part in the restitution of the city of the Great King; at least, his action, I trust, will prove beneficial to the cause of truth. I find he makes a favorable impression upon all classes.

The pop-corn which you sent is a great treat. The natives at first thought it was some kind of wood, or shavings, but after finding out what it really is, they are delighted with it. We shall plant some of it this fall, and soon it will be quite plenty.

What I wrote about groundsocks is quite true. They are as good here as gold. The rise of land is also rather more than I even dared to state.

We went to hear a Mrs. Hall speak on Sunday, a lady from America, of the Society of Friends. She is on her way to Australia, where she thinks she has missionary work to perform. These people seem to have made very little progress in the great truths now stirring the world; but remain the same as in the days of Geo. Fox, whom they are very fond of quoting. They still believe the kingdom of God is set up in the heart, and that death is the portal to endless life! How strange, that apparently intelligent people in other respects, should hold on to such absurd doctrines, especially when they are so directly in opposition to the truths of the Bible!

I wish to thank all the friends most heartily who contributed to the boxes. Everything sent is appreciated very highly. I can only wish the dear friends were here in the land of promise. Those also who have contributed money, either for myself or the poor Jews at Jerusalem, have my sincerest thanks. Situated as I am, trusting wholly in God for support and protection, more than five thousand miles from my native land, kindred, and the friends I have held so dear, you may be assured that the offerings you make in my behalf and those for whom I labor, are received with the deepest gratitude; first to God, the giver of every good and perfect gift, and secondly to the donors. I am not egotistical enough to suppose that your gifts are bestowed out of personal regard to myself, but out of sympathy for the objects of my mission, a love for Jerusalem and the Holy Land, and a desire to see those things restored, and the promises of new things fulfilled, "which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

July 31. Last evening, between seven or eight o'clock, we had thunder and lightning, followed by rain this morning. I need not say that such an event was never known here before at this season. All are astonished and the majority of the people know not what to think. This alone ought to silence the skeptic and encourage the believer. The promised blessings are beginning to be poured out.

A native Arab said to me this morning:—"We don't know what this rain means. We have heard the Americans have been praying for rain; but God does not change his laws." "My friend," I replied, "God is, as you rightly say, unchangeable and his laws immutable; but the time has come, in harmony with his unchangeable plan and immutable laws, for more rain in Palestine, because there is a necessity for more rain; consequently the time has come to pray for this rain, and God will incline the prayers. We agree that his plans, or purposes, are unchangeable, and his laws immutable, which is simply saying there is a cause for every effect. But in taking causes into consideration we must not leave out of the question the phenomenon of the will. God wills that I should pray. What for? Why, that something may be accomplished by that prayer. In praying for the object for which I have the spirit of prayer given to me, I exercise my will. Just how my will affects the atmosphere and clouds, as one factor among the causes of rain, we may not be able with our present limited knowledge to explain; but the fact is demonstrable, and it is in harmony with the immutable laws of cause and effect. Thus everything is of God. He works through his agents; and man is an agent. Under God's direction and control, his tongue, his hands, his feet and his will, accomplish the purposes of the divine will.

"When I landed in Palestine the spirit of prayer for rain was given to me, and I prayed for rain. Others have been praying fervently for rain, and the rain has come. God has not changed; his plan has not been changed; neither have his immutable laws been changed; but his purposes have been accomplished and his word fulfilled."

This argument was new to my friend; and so different from what he had expected, that he had nothing to say.

Please give us an article in your next issue upon the plan of restitution, to stop the mouths of infidels. If we are praying for rain, and the rain comes, it must be in harmony with God's promises. He says he will pour upon us the spirit of supplication. Supplication for what? For what we need, of course. He will not give us the spirit of prayer without directing us what to pray for.

Before this gets into print the war powers will probably have made some advance movements. I hope also, that those declaring the Age of Peace will have made some progress. This is the time for action: let us not get weary of service.

Communications.

LETTER FROM BRO. OLEGROVE.

Groaning Creation. Interview with a Jewish Rabbi. Climate of Arkansas for Consumptives.

Thanks to our kind, appreciative, and sympathizing Brother Cook. His comment is gracious and correct. I say as he does, creation groaneth. Well may all things lift up their hands in prayer, hills and fields, mountains and oceans, four-footed things and the fowls of heaven, yea the world itself, with its dead entombed in ten thousand chambers of silence, and the troubled and burdened millions that live and walk upright—all may pray and cry unto God—for there is a grand call to intense and wonderful prayer. We live in a crisis of times. Let those live prayerless who can, and let those pray with endless supplications, who may and who must. Thanks be to God for that lesson of the Great Pyramid, even, which seems to have a witnessing voice, in the great world-confusion, which with the great hour-hand on its mighty clock face of stone, tells us unto what an epoch of change we are even now coming. Blessed day of wonder, day of ages, day of signification—hasten on and on—and let the people of God's love and patient watching, cry—forward march! Onward, O great new dispensational period, onward! Long have we groaned and lifted up our earnest cry to God; long sought him with tears, and fervent appeals, long raised our supplicating hands in midnight darkness, and our aching hearts at early dawn, and at noon, and in the dusk of the dying day—given him no rest as we walked the street or threaded the forest—plied the argument of entreaty in silence impenetrable to mortal sight, or with audible sighs and sounds in caves and places where God only could hear and understand. O burden of imperative necessity! O pressure of perpetual longing! Is not the earth tired and sick with its histories and experiences, its scenes and spectacles of sorrow and wrong, its miracles of suffering, its tragedies of madness, and its centuries and ages of tribulation? Is it not tired? Does it not groan deeply even on days of sunshine, and in the tender enchantment of moonlight? Moonlight indeed! Thou mute witness in heaven, night-illuming moon, what hast thou seen, and what dost thou say? What couldst thou tell of slaughtered thousands, and wounded ten thousands, of prisons of despair, and dens of wickedness, of sick beds and new-made graves—and the crying poor? It seems as if all things cried to God to stop the misery, and bring salvation.

For one, Brother Cook, I am glad there is a great stir that signifies, it may be, a soon coming Lord. If I could speak, I would say, O Euphrates, dry quickly, and Jesus, follow on, to save the suffering, and break the long power of evil. I would say, come, O merciful man; heart of love, and hand of power, come! There are eyes too dry for tears. There are hearts weary with the unprofitableness of the transient, and all the pains of earthly reverse, and the vexation of human uncertainty.

What mean the floods, the waves, the pestilences, the wars and revolts, the simmering restlessness of multitudes and millions, the mutterings overhead, and the rumblings underground, oh! what means the very prophetic photograph of Christ, fulfilled in the reality of this very potent and portentious time? My soul cries within me, come O man of Israel, souls! and make me new, and make all things new. I would rather die, than live without thee; I would rather die, than live without thy life and help. The world needs thee, needs thee, needs thee. The fearfulness and weariness of things, needs God, and calls for him to put his hand to the work of extrication and rectification, and reconstruction. The Lord grant a new work—a new earth—restored Israel—Christ coming—saints saved, hearts rested, evils cured, and all things good according to grace and promise.

I would like to speak of my interview with a Jewish rabbi in St. Louis, Dr. Spitz. I had previously seen other Jews at their places of business. One of these, a dealer in jewelery, said, "No,—I am a bad Jew—I care nothing for these things—I only want to know how to earn bread for my family." Another, who declared himself a "liberal Jew," said he had no interest in Palestine—America was his home, and Jews in America were going to stay here in their chosen and adopted country. I then saw Dr. Spitz at his house on Park Avenue. He is an educated man, a Hungarian, of dark eyes and rather dark complexion, rather under medium height and size, and perfectly free to converse with a stranger. During a long interview he exhibited no impatience, and gave no impression of being weary. I gave him at once to understand that my errand was conversation about his people. I said, "I am interested very much in the Jews—their history and prophetic destiny as a race. I want to talk with you. The Jew is my brother. I am very sure we live in times of critical interest to you as a people. I am earnestly anticipating—you will excuse me for saying—the reoccupation of Palestine, and the renationalization of the Jews in that country. Many intelligent and good people, who have thoroughly studied the subject, believe as I do. They are deeply interested in the present war in Egypt, and they do not question that the Turkish Government, which is obstructive of good, which is so many ways foolish and oppressive and odious, is very near its downfall. I certainly believe it, and I am in earnest in coming here to talk with you. I sympathize with Great Britain in this war, and I am not sure but she is destined to pave the way with her great power for the overthrow of Turkey in Palestine, and the liberation of that wretchedly ruled land, from the Sultan's power. We learn from the Great Pyramid that a period of tremendous changes is probably at hand, if it has not already commenced."

The Doctor listened quietly and replied substantially—"I am glad of the privilege of conversing with you. I have lived in America twelve years, and we who are 'reformed' or 'liberal' Jews, are well satisfied with our home in this country, and we intend to remain. There are probably 250,000 Jews in America, and we love our adopted country. We have no idea of going to Jerusalem, nor do we believe in the renationalization of the Jews in Palestine. I am not by any means so liberal or radical as Dr. ——, a rabbi of this city, who very nearly rejects the inspiration of the Bible. I am moderate in my liberal views and have much regard for the Bible. As a people, we have fulfilled a great mission for the last 1800 years, while we have suffered incredible injuries and wrongs. Our mission has been to disseminate the knowledge of One God among the nations of the earth. But I ask you what good is to be accomplished by the restitution and renationalization of the Jews in the land of Palestine." Several times the Doctor repeated this question.

"My dear sir," said I, "I firmly believe the positive declarations of the great prophets of Israel, that there shall be a future restoration of your people. These predictions are with so much circumstantiality of detail, as to render misapprehension impossible. What God has ordained, must be right. And very clearly where there is organization and order, there is power. Your people are to be chief among the nations of the earth, and Jerusalem will be the capital of the world. I am interested in your destiny. Jesus Christ is your best friend, and will reveal himself to you as your brother. It seems to me you ought to be interested in your own predestined glory, and prepared to welcome it. I am a native born American. This is the country of my birth and love, but I do not put so much confidence in the perfection and perpetuity of our political system as you appear to do. There are elements of evil and danger among us. Socialism and various other disruptive agencies exist here. Our safety is in the virtue and wisdom of the people, but there is great peril from the ignorance and passion of radical and turbulent and insubordinate persons and classes among us. Mr. Stofer, of Little Rock, told me the other day, he believed the liquor interest in this country would precipitate a terrible conflict with the temperance and prohibition people. We want really a Divine Kingdom of righteousness on earth."

"You speak of Christ as our friend," replied the Doctor. "I want to tell you truly, that as a people, we have the greatest respect for Jesus Christ. (This was spoken impressively.) We believe that he was the agent for the communication of great ideas of Jewish belief to three hundred millions of men. But Hillel who lived seventy years before Christ taught practically the very same things that are ordained in the Sermon on the Mount. Yet Jesus Christ gave voice and authority to these truths and teachings. We believe in the unity of God, and we can have no faith in the Christian doctrine of a Trinity."

"Sir," said I, "you may as well understand that I am not in subjection to the authority of a church creed, and from this freedom of action, and liberty of opinion, I can speak with perfect honesty when I say I do not believe in a Trinity, more than you do. Christ was the Son of God, and not God himself. He said his Father was greater than he."

"Give me your hand upon that," said the Doctor, and we grasped hands at once.

"Now," said I, "I believe in the divinity of Christ and his mission as a Savior. I am sorry you do not recognize your opportunity and destination as a race. If, as you say, the land of Canaan cannot at present contain, or maintain all your people, please consider that its powers are dormant. God can awaken and develop its great natural possibilities. Observe that in Ezekiel's prophecy, the future allotments of the tribes cover an enlarged territory. Are there no orthodox Jews in St. Louis, who believe in the restoration?"

"There are three hundred Austrian refugees here, and they are orthodox, but illiterate. They are poor and we assist them. We have no poor houses among us."

"Well, let me say, that I do not understand all the Jews will necessarily at first go to Palestine. God says, he will take them; one of a city, and two of a family and bring them to Zion. There will be a great representative company in Palestine, certainly."

"Do you believe that Jesus Christ rose from the dead?" inquired Dr. S.

"Most certainly I do—all my hope rests on that fact."

I can only give a brief abstract of a long conversation. I assured him that though we might never meet again, I believed he would find it true, that from this time forth, great events were coming, events that would astonish the world. We parted with assurances of respect and friendship—the Doctor saying that it was his law of life to love all human kind, and I answered him that it was noble and right.

Let me say, that while blindness in part, still prolongs its "happening" to Israel, nothing of this—nothing of the doubtfulness or the unbelieving of this rabbi shakes my faith one iota. The land and people of Israel are reserved for each other, and great will be the day of Jezreel soon, and wonderful the works of God's wisdom and mercy, even while judgments hasten.

I want to speak, in closing, of the extremely favorable climate of Southern Arkansas, to those who have tendencies to consumption and bronchial trouble. I have facts showing the rarity of these diseases there. November and December will be good months for emigration. I have seen no case of consumption in Arkansas. I expect to return to Prescott, Ark., very soon.

Letter Drawer.

HUGHEIRIN, TEX.

Editor Restitution:

I take THE RESTITUTION, have very recently become a convert to the one true faith, a German by birth, but thoroughly Americanized. My Christian life, the doctrine of A. Campbell, for over thirty years has been some comfort to me, and I am very well satisfied that the same approaches or comes nearer to the true faith than all the other societies or doctrines. I am a Bible reader but nevertheless I have been stone blind in regard to the true resurrection, the speedily coming of our blessed master, conqueror and king, the millennium in which the seed of Abraham shall be restored to his former country, or Palestine, and also the immortality of all his true believers that have part in the first resurrection. Blessed be the Lord God our Father who gives us the victory, and changes these old bodies of clay like unto his own glorious body, (and I believe to be like the body that the Savior brought forth from the tomb.) Now dear brother, may his especial blessing rest upon you and your labors in the Lord. May we love the Lord Jesus Christ who gave himself for us, more and more unto the end, for Paul tells us we must love the Lord, or be accursed when he comes. 2 Cor. xvi. 22.

W. E. LIPP.

VERNDALE, MINN.

Editor Restitution:

THE RESTITUTION makes its weekly calls, filling my heart with gladness while perusing its columns. I do not feel able to take the paper, but I do feel that every dollar that I send to THE RESTITUTION is helping to aid the cause of Christ. I am a poor day laborer, having a large family to support. I thank you for sending me the paper so long without pay. I wish I had the means to employ one of the One Faith preachers to hold a series of sermons and lectures at this place. There has been a Seven-day Advent tent meeting here this summer; they had a good turnout and seemed to awaken an interest, but they seem to ignore the Abrahamic Covenant, and deny that the prophets teach the restoration of the Jews. They teach that in the coming age Christ will reign over the saints, which the Scriptures recognize as his brethren, and try to bring us under the law of Moses. They teach that because Mary rested on the Sabbath according to the commandment, and went to the sepulchre on the first day of the week, that we ought to keep the seventh day, not seeing the fact that Mary was under the law. Forgiveness of sins had not been proclaimed through the death and resurrection of Jesus, consequently she must have been debtor to the law. Respectfully,

W. H. HOUSEHOLDER.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Sinaitic, the Jews and the Davidian covenants: their duration and relation to each other. By G. N. Hyatt. 250 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth Set Free; or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Silas Hems. 80 pages, price 25cts.

Sunlight: Dispersing the Mistal Shadows; or the doctrine of eternal torments shown to lack reason and Scripture. By Silas Hems. 70 pages, price 20cts.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Silas Hems. 48 pages, price 15cts.

Material Immortality; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact Scripture and Bible view of material immortality, not by birth but by grace. By O. R. L. Crozier. 16 pages, price 10cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, who is he? By Dr J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 7 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1865, put into tract form.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By H. N. Myers. Price $1cts.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION
Plymouth, Indiana

BIBLE PRAISE. Suitable for private distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Dr. Brown, 32 pp. 16mo. 3. Immanuel's Glory. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Society of Man Just Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 50c., or assorted packages of 100, 80c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

Can You Believe? A series of 30 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in any list.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

The Age to Come not a Heresy. By H. V. Reed.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two views of these terms, to-wit: the Church-ical and Bible-ical.

Human Government a Failure. By A. S. Maxwell.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 25 for 50c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? R. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold withering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 15 for 40c.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hays. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each; 12 for 30c. or 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Joseph Peirce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Wiswall.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each; 8 for 25c. or 25 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Witchcraft Cavalier; or, the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 40 for $1.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. M. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 96 Pages, price 10c.

The Doctrine of Babylon as taught to the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, historians and ecclesiastical Historians. 64 pages, price 10c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 200 pages, cloth $1.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future greatness and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Containing a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 176 pages, price $1.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. H. Stephenson. A comprehensive and plain statement of the leading theory of Bible theology. Any thinking man will see the light in which he reads and considers. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the conditions of faith, are fully and clearly set forth. Over 200 pages, cloth $1.

A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven. The Return of the Jews, and the Restoration of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. 72 pages, cloth, 60c; paper, 40c.

Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Illingworth. Price 15 cents.

Hymns of the Ages, in the name of a New Hymn Book, as quoted by Christ. Matthew xxvi. Barbers' counter of the Book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare collection of hymns. Also appendix by Lady a collection of favorite Hymns, proper to be sung by the Saints in worship. Those having the Christian Psalmody and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 25c. cloth 50c.

The Believer's Pass Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public and family worship, compiled by H. N. Myers and John Stocker. 400 pages, cloth $1.00, Library binding $1.50.

The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson. Containing the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word for word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with literal notes and explanatory foot notes, and a copious collection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundation on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words have literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 864 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. B. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
M. K. BATSHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER. WM. BAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HALSTEAD. B. WILSON.
J. F. WESTHUE. J. A. SIMONIS.
WILEY JONES. C. M. MYERS.
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 20, 1882. NO. 35.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

AN OPEN LETTER TO ELDER W. D. OWEN, OF LOGANSPORT, IND.

Dear Sir:

Having written a private letter to you concerning the philosophy of the churches you referred to, in a sermon you preached in this city August 6th, in that letter I take the position, that the popular doctrine of the immortality of the soul, is the leading philosophical character in the popular churches. I then informed you that God did not teach inherent immortality in his Holy Word; giving you the Scriptures wherein the words immortal and immortality occur; thereby showing that immortality can only come through Christ, by a resurrection from the dead, or a change at his coming.

I invited your attention, and a reply. This reply arrived last Sunday night, Sept. 3rd, in the form of a lecture, which was listened to by a large audience, and I doubt not that the ears of many were tingled.

So I take it upon me to write an open letter to you through THE RESTITUTION upon your reply, or lecture.

I was much pleased with your eloquence, but not so well pleased with your subject matter, because it was not in harmony with the word of truth. In your opening ideas you advanced the thought that "immortality is boneless and nerveless." If such is the case, why did Jesus (after he was raised from the dead) say to his disciples, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have?" Luke xxiv. 39. Was Jesus not immortal when he was raised from the dead? Here we see that he was not boneless; neither will his disciples be boneless when they too have been raised from among the dead, for we read in 1 John iii. 2, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him: for we shall see him as he is." And by reading 1 Thess. iv. 13-18, it is seen that the saints who shall be living when Christ shall come will be changed, but not a word said about their becoming boneless. But in 1 Cor. xv. 53, we read. "This mortal must put on immortality."

You next proposed to speak on the origin of the soul, and said, "There are those who believe in the pre-existence of the soul, others believe that the soul begins to exist when man is born." Here is shown a philosophical difference. You then said, "We have not to do with philosophy." Now if we have not to do with philosophy, I ask why should you spend so much time in proving inherent immortality by the belief of the Africans, Mexicans, Peruvians, Chinese, Hindoos, Persians, and by the Egyptians? and also to make such effective reference to the death-bed expression of Black Hawk, who "went to look down upon his people from heaven."

Are we to believe in the popular immortal-soul doctrine, because these people all believe it? Is it policy to be governed by the sacred books that the people here referred to have regarded? Do they not in many cases worship cats and monkeys, and holy bulls, and bits of sticks and stones from the banks of the Ganges? and roll the wheels of the car of Juggernaut over their children, and often burn women alive with their dead husbands, unmindful of the great cry of human woe, and believe that they are doing service to their god, the self-existent Brahma, who they believe has revealed to them in their sacred Vedas, some of the most foolish things, such as the idea of the seven great continents of the world, separated by seven rivers and seven chains of mountains, and of one of their kings having a hundred sons, another ten thousand, another sixty thousand, who were born in a pumpkin, nourished in pans of milk, reduced to ashes by the curse of a sage, and restored to life by the waters of the Ganges? Yet these people may have believed in the dogma of inherent immortality.

We might refer to the Zendavesta, the Koran, and the five kings of the Chinese, but this is enough.

Your reference to the roll found in the bosom of the Egyptian mummy, only goes to prove the doctrine under consideration to be of pagan origin.

In the closing part of your lecture, you said, "God gave immortality to Adam, in the creation," but you quoted no Scripture to prove it, therefore, it stands as an assertion without proof. And in your attempt to prove that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were immortal you labored under a mistake, by saying that "God said to Moses, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. I am not the God of the dead, but of the living." The Scripture reads, "I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." Exod. iii. 6.

But when the Sadducees came to Jesus, and asked him questions, Jesus called their attention to what God said to Moses. "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob," (then Jesus adds) "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Matt. xxii. 32; Mark xii. 26, 27; Luke xx. 37, 38.

Does Jesus refer to the Scripture in Exodus to prove to the Sadducees inherent immortality? Certainly not, for the subject under consideration is the resurrection from among the dead. The Sadducees ask Jesus, whose wife the woman (who had had seven husbands and then died) should be in the resurrection of the dead, "And Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage, but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised, even Moses shewed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he (God) is not the God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him." Luke xx. 34-38.

So the argument is the resurrection from the dead, and not the consciousness of an immortal soul separate from the body when it is dead. The Sadducees saw the pith of the answer, and said, "Master thou hast well said." Verse 39.

Your proof text, in Rev. vi. 9, or in xx. 4, (whichever you intended to refer to) will not prove the immortal-soul doctrine any better than the text already considered.

For John saw (in vision) the fifth seal opened. He then "saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held."

It is evident that these souls were righteous, for they died martyrs for the truth's sake.

The Greek word, translated "souls" in the common version, is rendered "persons" by Whiting.

What shall we understand by the word "altar?" Is it not a place where sacrifices are offered? Now these souls or persons were to rest under this altar, or place of sacrifice, until their brethren should be killed as they were. Thus we see that they were mortal souls.

But perhaps you will say, if those souls (persons) were dead and unconscious how could they cry "with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" But have ye not read what God said to Cain, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground."

Here is the blood of the first martyr, and by this reference we see how those that were slain for the word of God spoke, through their blood, and by reading the twentieth chapter, we see that these slain ete to reign with Christ a thousand years, after they are raised from among the dead; and chap. v. 10 shows that this reigning is to be "on the earth."

Thus the summary of the whole matter would be, that those persons who have testified to the word of God, and have died martyrs for the truth's sake, and have been buried beneath the place of sacrifice, shall come forth in the resurrection of the just, and be clothed in white robes and have dominion with Christ, and shall reign with him on the earth a thousand years, in an immortalized state. But not one word to prove inherent immortality, as taught by the popular teachers of the day. Thus you left your lecture in this disorderly condition.

What is the Bible teaching of man and immortality? We read, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

After that, God placed this living soul under a test trial to prove his loyalty, under the penalty of death, and because of the disobedience of that living soul, God said to it, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" Hence through disobedience death entered into the world, and the "living soul" was remanded back to dust. But God in his great mercy opened a way in the gift of his Son Jesus, whereby man, mortal man, may be gathered again from the dust, and become a partaker of immortality with Jesus "who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." To this agree the prophets, Jesus, and the apostles. The Psalmist said, "Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust. Thou sendest forth thy spirit they are created: and thou renewest the face of the earth." Job also expected to see God for himself, with his own eyes, in his flesh, but not until he would come back from the dust. Martha looked for a future life, she said, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." And Jesus said unto her, "I am the resurrection and the life."

Paul said, "The wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Paul therefore looked for a future life through Jesus, by a resurrection from the dead, this he earnestly contended in his preaching. We have an example of this, when "certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the Stoics encountered him. And some said, What will this babbler say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them, Jesus and the resurrection."

In conclusion I say, let us "seek for glory and honor, and immortality, and eternal life," that "this mortal may put on immortality." For Paul says, "For our citizenship is in heaven; from whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able even to subject all things unto himself."—New Version.

Here I leave the matter with you, hoping you will examine for yourself, and give a reply, either by a lecture, or private letter, or through THE RESTITUTION, as may suit you best.

Yours truly,
J. B. COX.

Crawfordsville, Ind.

"GOOD HOPE THROUGH GRACE."

Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God even our Father, who hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work.—2 Thess. ii. 16, 17.

The tidal waves of infidelity are sweeping over what has hitherto been called "high and dry" land, or what was once considered impervious to the attacks of infidels. Many true Christians have heretofore rejoiced in the fact that the strong bonds of ignorance and superstition which had so long enslaved the world were being sundered, priestcraft was compelled to relax its hold on its victims, people could view things from their own standpoint of observation, see with their own eyes, and hear with their own ears; more independence of thought and action characterised the masses; but all this, alas, was not proof against the seductive influence of infidelity.

Umbrage was taken from this independent action (which was good, abstractly considered) to prove that the world was improving or progressing toward the attainment of each his or her several ideality, whatever it might be. No greater absurdity could possibly be conceived or imagined. With many, and even with the large majority of mankind, the wish is father to the thought, which often betrays them into the grossest errors. Mental does not always walk hand in hand with moral improvement. Pure Christianity is the only balance wheel (to use a familiar figure) which will hold the physical, mental and moral faculties in their respective orbits, and prevent their flying off in a tangent.

Often the most vociferous in the advocacy of the improvements of the age both mentally and morally, betray themselves, being very clamorous against the hypocrisy, duplicity and the political and ecclesiastical corruption of every sect or party of which they do not happen to be themselves indentified, they often unsparingly denounce their opponents without rhyme or reason.

Our own corporeal senses take cognizance of the moral corruptions of the age in which we live, of the testimony of the Scriptures relative to it, in spite of ourselves. Without citing a tithe of the Scripture testimony bearing on this point, I will refer the reader to St. Paul's letters to Timothy, 1 Tim. iv. 1-7; 2 Tim. iii. 1-9; iv. 3-4.

To reject the testimony here adduced is to reject not only the Bible but what our own senses take cognizance. Without adducing further proof of the position here taken, I wish to make an application of the comforting and consoling thoughts suggested in the text. Good hope (desire and expectation) of things promised, through grace, (favor). Priceless boon, without money and without price to the recipient.

Who hath loved us, yea, and that too, while we were his enemies, and given us everlasting (age lasting) consolation, to comfort and cheer us up under the sorrow and grief caused by the surrounding wickedness and apostacy.

Let us exercise faith and hope, the moral telescopes, which will enable us to penetrate through the dark mist which surrounds us—bring the, seemingly distant object near, which is the province of the telescope let us forget our present surroundings in the more full comprehension of the glory to be revealed at the resurrection of the just.

Ours is a glorious hope indeed; soon it will be announced—there shall be no more curse, no more death! The signs of the times are ominous of a glorious future to the true believers in the glorious gospel of the kingdom.

M. L. LEWIS.

LETTER FROM ARKANSAS—SOME QUESTIONS.

What is our duty as Christians, or as Christian Israelites (if so we are) to our brethren, the Jews? What burden of blessed and important responsibility rests upon us, at this great juncture, this hour and epoch of culmination, and expectation, and vast, probable transitions? A pertinent question!

Who does not feel himself moved with grave solicitude mingled with hope—and with an enthusiasm sobered with a sense of the magnitude of things impending?

I have talked with Jews in St. Louis, and have returned to Prescott, Arkansas—but this very work of conversation, is but a work commenced, which ought to be systematically continued, and persistently prosecuted throughout the whole country. (At least I may put it in the form of a proposition, subject to amendment if necessary.) Look at the interests at stake! What if blindness has happened in part to the Jews! Does this lessen our faith, or diminish our obligation? Are we to be shaken from the firmness of our convictions, by the unbelief of the people of great affliction, and of great promise also? Are we not to give the benefit of our eyesight to those who are yet groping in darkness, on the theme of their own future destiny? Are we to sit or lie supine, when the world is feeling the throes of coming stupendous developments? Have we no duty? Have we no mission? Is there not a mission for some one at home in these United States—a missionary work of visiting and conference and exhortation? Is there no one who feels called to this work—who with love, gentleness, discretion and intelligence, may enlist the interest of leaders and laymen among these brethren of Christ in the flesh, these sons of Jacob, who are so soon to be called to their fatherland—at least by their chosen representatives?

In reflecting on the kind and patient manner of Rabbi Spitz—and his declared love of mankind, and on the whole course of the interview—I am led to think that a great mission may be allotted for some one who has a heart for this work and a fitness for it, to go as the representative and servant of earnest Christian people in America, and seek out the chief men of the Jews—men of intelligence and candor, and sow in their minds great thoughts of the Divine purpose of mercy—and kindle a fire of new desire and just anticipation in their hearts, in citing their attention anew to the positive predictions of their own great prophets. I feel confident that as a zeal according to knowledge, is in its appointed season, not to be supposed fruitless—so now, courtesy, sympathy, earnestness and faithfulness, will prove effective in inducing a new current of thought and emotion in the Jewish mind. We might expect the contagion of a lofty and loving expectation and assurance of conviction in the Christian heart, to take the living subject of its interest, in some sense captive, at least to new ideas. I would much like to go to Jerusalem—but as I seriously doubt if the time is auspicious, just now. I should prefer the aperture mission of labor, by conversation among the Jews in America—seeking to win them by argument and persuasion, and prepare their minds, with kindling expectations of Messiah. My interview with Rabbi Spitz was rather tentative and introductory than otherwise. Another time, I would enter more into detail. What say the brethren who have understanding in these matters of prophecy, in relation to a busy and thorough home mission of wise purpose, gentle instinct, and cautious and careful conduct, to prepare, or help prepare the way for the Jews to receive their coming Messiah, and enter on their predestined millennial mission? It is a subject of interest, and of present, earnest interest. What brethren will raise their hands in the attitude of sympathy in so good a cause?

Look at the Grand Gallery of the Great Pyramid. Measure 1812 plus years from its beginning to the stone step. Then start your measuring line from the year A. D. 70, when Jerusalem perished, and where do the 1812 plus inches end? At the Grand Gallery's end. Or measure from the death of Christ to the destruction of Jerusalem, and there are 36 plus inches—equal to the height of the stone step. Whatever may be said—there is some apparent hint of events, of deepest interest, to Jew and Gentile, between 1882 and 1884.

I was lately speaking of prayer. Prayer is something hard to let alone. Why, Jesus said, "watch and pray always." Now what does "pray always" mean? Does it not mean much more than has been generally conceived? How many feel that so terrible is the urgency laid on them, that they must pray or die? How many feel so almost heart-broken that life without prayer is impossible? How many have such a pressure of indescribable feeling—such a sense of necessity, such constraint, such conscious nothingness, such inward agony, such experiences of trial, that they can never rest—never let God himself take rest—but beseige and besiege him day and night, as if they might almost as well stop breathing as cease praying. How many are thus mightily, thus awfully in earnest? Who feels in his own heart, the pang of distressed creation, crying as if he were at the end of all hope or refuge, unless Jesus reappear from his long hiding, and put an end to all the falsehood of the age, and folly of so many kinds in power or in high career, and the world captive to it? Who is thus oppressed with this great burden of oppressed creation, that he would rather die than live powerless—rather die than be unanswered—and can never, never let the Creator himself rest until he stretch forth his Almighty hand? Give us even the little finger of the Omnipotent. Give us even the smallest phalanx in it. Give us the lifting power of the least merciful contraction of the least mechanism, in the Almighty hand.

Yes, it is something to pray always—it is no sinecure, it is no trifling, it is no periodical, and spasmodic phrase—it is no halting and uncertain petition—it is work, dead in earnest. It is something even that savors of taking the kingdom with a John the Baptist violence, or something that followed this John. O, the pressure, the mightiness of this work—even with all its human imperfection! In the end of Gentile times, what pressure of need, what aching, what tremendous appeal of hanging petition—what impossibility of rest, what impossibility of yielding one hair's weight or hair's breadth to the enjoling and poisonous spirit of "the age," as the word goes! The age indeed! Let us have help from heaven, or we are undone. The air we breathe is tinged with poison of false ideas. Let us have help. There is a depth of dead-in-earnest praying, that hides from human sight, and wrestles and cries in the deepest secret of struggling. There are two that know about this; one is God—the other the beggar that cries after him day and night.

C. COLEBROOK.

Letter Drawer.

CENTROPOLIS, KAN.

Editor Restitution:

I now return you my sincere thanks for the continuance of the paper. I cannot think of doing without the paper, as I am alone—none of the faith here. I am trying to live so that I can meet all the loved ones in the kingdom of God. Brethren and sisters remember poor unworthy me in your prayers. May we all live so that we will be gathered in the kingdom of God's dear Son, is the prayer of your sister.

ELIZABETH TINKEY.

BETHANY, MO.

Editor Restitution:

Just returned home from a two months preaching tour through Missouri, Kansas, Indian Territory, Texas and Arkansas. I will now, as per agreement with many of the brethren who take THE RESTITUTION, make a short report, and will say that everywhere the interest is increasing to hear from those who teach the much neglected Bible doctrine of the "Blessing of all nations." At Parsons, Kansas, I found our learned brother, Dr. Trowbridge, who is doing a noble work and who can teach those the "word of God more perfectly" who do not understand the "oath of God to Abraham." Eight miles out I found my old time-honored brother, John Foore, who has never yet failed. At the meeting near Brother Phillip John we found many from different parts, all zealous workers. At Forestburg, Texas, we found our wealthy brother, B. F. Hodges, who does more for the cause than any man in the State of Texas; the brethren in his neighborhood are noble workers. We baptized a number here. Other brethren scattered over the country whose names we have forgotten, but not their kind treatment. At Bonham, Texas, we found all zealous as ever. It is the intention of the friends for Brother Foore and myself to run a tent for them next fall, if the Lord will, as the means are all subscribed. The brethren at South West City desire that any teacher teaching the "blessing of all nations," call on them when passing that way. May God bless all the friends I met for their kindness to me while among them.

JOHN S. LAWYER.

COTTON HILL, W. VA.

Editor Restitution:

Since June, 1881, I have been receiving your very excellent paper. I was then informed that my brother, J. D. Sheridan, of Iowa, had subscribed for me for six months. Since then it has been coming to me regularly like a messenger of light, to brighten my pathway, through whose kindness I know not. When the allotted time expired and it continued to come, I was greatly distressed, not being able to pay for it, and thought I must write and have it stopped. But want of time and inability so hindered, till the weekly visitant became essential to my life. THE RESTITUTION grows brighter and dearer to me as it tells of the present Jerusalem and the foreshadowings of the approach of her King to redeem her from dust and ashes. Today when reading Mrs. Davis' letter, I resolved to send my mite to help feed some hungry child, even if I do with less than my usual allowance. I send this dollar for Mrs. Davis, wishing I had a thousand to send.

MARY J. SHERIDAN.

N. TOPEKA, KAN.

Editor Restitution:

It has been a long time since I have tried to pen a thing to our paper. I often think of you and the dear brethren scattered abroad, and the good meetings and happy greetings we used to have—my mind runs back to those bright spots, and I long to be there. We find ourselves out in lovely Kansas, near the capital, toiling on trying to keep soul and body together. We seldom hear the gladsome sound of the glorious gospel any more—its voice seems to be dying out, while theologians are doling out a mess of hash. It seems we are starving for the pure bread of life, like the poor prodigal, while there is plenty in Father's house and to spare, while I perish with hunger. Away with those bitter husks the swine would not eat. I will arise and go to my Father, and say unto him, Father I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son, make me as one of thy hired servants. And he arose and came to his father.

J. S. MILLER.

BELLEVILLE, ONT.

Editor Restitution:

The truth is making a little progress here, and consequently two persons were baptized into Christ Sept. 11, namely, John Harris and Geo. Allen. They were both members of the Methodist church in good standing. Brother Harris is sexton of the largest Methodist church here, and I presume will fulfil his contract with them. Brother Allen was assistant postmaster here but the government has appointed him to a similar position in Winnipeg, at a higher salary, and he starts for his new home to-morrow. We three and my wife are the only ones holding the truth in this city of 10,000 inhabitants, but others are searching the Scriptures to see if these things are so. The P. D. who ministers to the church of which Brothers Harris and Allen were members has been preaching against the truth some lately, but it does not have the desired effect as he lost two of his members and more may follow soon.

A. ROBINSON.

CLEVELAND, O.

Editor Restitution:

Am happy to state that I receive THE RESTITUTION quite regularly and take great comfort in reading its pages, especially that portion pertaining to the East and the soon coming King of Israel. Yes it is really grand to live away down here in these last days.

Truth is still making gentle headway here—two that have long been learning the truth finally came out last first-day and made an open confession, and were baptized into the all-saving name of the Anointed. But, oh! how few there be that find it in their hearts to believe and obey that form of doctrine which makes them heirs of salvation, finally to become kings and priests to God.

L. C. CATALL.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

There will be a conference meeting of the brethren of the one faith at the Union Star School house, Cloud Co., Kansas, commencing October 13, and continuing over Sunday. The Union Star school house is seven miles southwest of Concordia, and twelve miles north of Delphos, on Wolf Creek. Those coming by rail will please drop a card to A. Kasinger, Graves post office.

SAMUEL NOE.

The Lord willing the Church of God will meet in conference at Severance, Kan., Oct. 27, and continue to Oct. 30. C. M. Myers, T. H. Adams, and J. F. Pierson are expected, and we extend a cordial invitation to preaching brethren to be with us, and all others of like faith. Come one and all, let us have one more feast of fat things in the name of the Lord, and encourage each other. Severance is 25 miles west of St. Joseph, Mo., on the Union Pacific R. R. and passenger trains reach here at 11 o'clock A. M.

LOTT CLEVER.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Sept. 20, 1882.

THANKS to Brethren Hoyes and Cameron for late foreign papers. Marked pieces will receive attention.

A PAMPHLET entitled, "The Second Advent of Our Lord Jesus Christ," has been sent us by the author, Prof. J. C. Randolf, of Danville, Ky. It contains 106 full sized pages, and is a good work on the topic of its title.

THE sermon by Dr. Lorimer, published this week, was sent us by Mrs. Stephenson directly after its delivery as reported for the Chicago Tribune. As copied into other papers two brethren have sent it for publication. As showing that some ministers in the older and more popular denominations are looking for our Savior's personal manifestation it is valuable. An allusion to ascension programmes—mostly unwarranted fabrications—would have been far better omitted. Otherwise the sermon is most admirable.

LAST week we sent forward all that had come to hand for Mrs. A. E. Davis. The turn in Egyptian affairs will probably be favorable to the colonization of Jerusalem and Palestine. We learn from a letter, written from Jerusalem by Rolla Floyd, dated August 2, published in the last number of Messiah's Herald, that Jerusalem and its suburbs has now a population of 46,000, of which 24,000 are Jews. When we compare this with the population of 1874, when the whole number was 20,000, and 8,000 Jews, we can see that the restitution has indeed commenced. Our prayer is that God may remember Zion for we are persuaded that the set time has come.

In the war in Egypt the English have won important victories, while the army under Arabi has suffered a most crushing defeat. It will be seen, by reading Isa. xi. 11–16 and xix. 19–25, that Egypt is to share in the political blessings of the last times, when Jewish restoration shall take place, and be delivered from its grevious oppressors. To effect the fulfillment of these and other prophecies, the power of Islam must be broken in Egypt as well as in Palestine—and, we might add, in Assyria, also. The question of our age is the Oriental Question. Its solution important prophecies will meet a fulfillment. Brother Westbeo has commenced on this important part of prophecy. From his extensive reading we shall anticipate much.

Communications.

COVENANT VS. TESTAMENT.

I purpose to show in this article the fact of another blunder or perversion in the translation of the sacred Scriptures, and the far-reaching significance of the blunder as effecting doctrine and the testimony of the truth, and I would right here remind the careless Christian reader that the great end and object we are subserving in this life, according to his word, is in being faithful witnesses to the truth as he has revealed it to us.

The blunder or perversion is this, namely, In translating the word διαθηκη by our English word testament. This English word does not now and never did in the whole history of the English language translate the idea contained in the Greek word διαθηκη. Therefore to speak of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, is a misnomer and grossly misleading in its teaching, and before I conclude, I purpose to show to what a startling and absurd logical sequence this false premise has led. As a foundation for my argument therefore, I will just give the etymological signification and classical use of the term.

Διαθηκη is a compound word derived from the verb τιθημι and the preposition δια; the verb meaning "to place, put, or set," the preposition meaning "through, or by means of," and in a derived sense frequently "between," and also having here a reciprocal force, as for instance, I pass through the gate, meaning, between the posts to which the gate is attached; or I pass through the country, meaning that particular province lying between certain boundaries on the right hand and the left as I go through; θημι is a verbal noun derived from the verb τιθημι meaning "put, set, or place," and formed from the stem of the perfect active τεθεικα first person, I have set, or placed something. The abstract verbal noun θηκη then, expresses the completed notion of its primitive. What is this? A completed action of setting, placing or putting, is it not?

Now from the general tendency of the human mind to pass unwittingly from the action to the result of the action, or even to the object of the action, we find verbals of this ending used frequently in their derived meanings, like verbals whose endings denote the object or result of the action. And so this verbal θηκη besides meaning a completed action of setting, etc., even comes to mean a receptacle, a case, a coffin.

We have the same use in English where we speak of the setting of a diamond or any other precious stone. So much for θηκη.

Let us consider the force of the preposition δια with which it is compounded. Crosby says the force of the proposition in composition is adverbial as a rule, and in this case, according to rule, the adverbial force and signification in the verb διατιθεμαι would be carried over to its verbal noun, διαθηκη, and we should thus have the signification of the word to be a completed action of putting or setting or placing something between two or more persons or things on the one hand and the other, and moreover from the additional fact that δια in composition always expresses a relation, and frequently a relation that is reciprocal in force, we must embody this idea of relation or reciprocity in our definition.

Then our analytical definition would read a διαθηκη is a completed action of putting or setting or placing something between two or more persons or things on the one hand and the other which are thus brought into some sort of a reciprocal relation to each other. But as I have said, this tendency of this class of verbal nouns, namely, those ending in θηκη to pass over in their common every day use from their signification of the action to the effect of the action of their primitives, and the word we are analysing is no exception, and comes to express and signify the result of a very common, world-wide, and every day transaction and that is a "bargain." How do we make a bargain binding in law and morals? By a contract, do we not? and this expresses a completed reciprocal agreement between two or more parties—a completed act of putting something reciprocal in force between said parties—does it not? Then such a contract is a covenant is it not in its broadest signification? Well that is just what this word διαθηκη means in its broadest signification, and a contract in its narrowest common usage.

Do you see any resemblance, reader, between such a contract or covenant and a testament or a last will of a person which was duly attested or witnessed before his death? Let us compare and see.

A covenant or contract is between two or more parties and denotes some sort of reciprocal relation existing between them as parties of the first and second part. A testament or an attested will, while there is thereby implied some sort of a reciprocal relation, as existing between two or more parties, denotes and is simply the expressed will of the one person who makes it duly attested.

The one, if the term is used in its fullest legal significance, is a contract expressing the conjunction of the wills of all the parties to the covenant signed, attested or sealed and delivered.

The other, although signed and attested or sealed must be proved accepted and delivered to become effectual.

The one is valid as soon as the delivery takes place, all the parties thereto being still alive.

The other, if a testament in any legal sense of the English language, is not valid during the life of the testator, and of course cannot be delivered during the life of said testator.

And now let us consider a passage in Hebrews where the translators have made the inspired writer predicate an argument upon the assumption that a covenant is the same thing as a testament. For up to the point of this argument they have translated this word διαθηκη by our English word covenant, and right here they begin and continue through the whole argument to translate it "testament," and also mistranslate and pervert the whole passage from its true meaning to one which will comport with this false assumption as a first premise. The translation and perversion is substantially the same in the old and the Douay, and the revised I will speak separately of.

I have already given the argument in regard to the term διαθηκη and I will now proceed to point out the other mistranslations and perversions, and by way of introduction, I will say that the word διαθηκη occurs five times in their translation of the preceding chapter (8th) and once in ver. 1 of the 9th chapter, where in every case they translate it covenant. The perversion begins with the 15th verse, and the following are the violations of plain grammatical rules.

1. The mistranslation of διαθηκης καινης "of the new testament," should be "of a new covenant."

2. Translating θανατου γενομενου as though there were no γενομενου in the clause, and θανατου were merely "a genitive of means," whereas it is a "genitive absolute," with the participle γενομενου.

3. Inserting the definite article "the" before the word redemption.

4. Failing to give the force of the "genitive of separation" expressed by the clause beginning with τουτεστι and ending with παραβασεων, and again mistranslating διαθηκη in this clause.

5. Translating the perfect passive participle κεκλημενοι as though it were a present passive.

Omitting to translate the definite article τα which the inspired writer uses to make the inheritance specific in meaning.

7. In verse 16 again mistranslating διαθηκη and failing to translate at all or give the force of the verb φερεσθαι in the last clause.

8. In mistranslating and entirely perverting the meaning of the participle διαθεμενου in this clause, which participle is used substantively, and is in the Aorist middle to correctly express the attitude of Christ as "the sacrificial lamb" whose blood sealed the New Covenant. They have translated the phrase "of the testator," changing the middle to at active sense, and giving an entirely unwarrantable meaning; to the word. The literal translation of the phrase would be "of the one who placed himself between," meaning here the sacrificial victim placed between the parties to the covenant, and the middle instead of the passive voice being used here, because while illustrating with a sacrificial rite taken from the general custom in sealing covenants, the mind of the inspired writer has in view the scene of the great covenant and the attitude of its sacrificial victim—Christ.

9. In verse 17 διαθηκη again mistranslated, also διαθεμενου, which means "the victim," not "the testator," as I have shown.

10. An entire perversion of the meaning of the first clause, by a mistranslation of the proposition επι and the word νεκρασι, which literally means any dead body, and not that of men alone, although generally so used; and I would say right here that the perversions in this verse in the revised are bolder and more apparent than in the old or the Douay. It is evident that the revisers saw the perversion already made and for reasons of their own suppressed the truth by further perversion, and I would further state that the only variation of text in this verse is in the use of μηποτε in the Sinaitic instead of μηποτε in the "textus receptus," which is unimportant except as making the antithesis of time still stronger and more marked.

11. Giving an entirely misleading turn to the clause beginning with the conjunctive adverb επει, making a question of it when it is really a conclusion drawn from the declaration in the preceding clause; mistranslating επει by "for" (I am now commenting on the revised) omitting the force of the negative ου entirely, and mistranslating διαθηκην by the phrase "he that made it." The old and the Douay say "the testator." See comment above on this phrase.

In verse 18 the revised supplies "covenant" after πρωτη, seeing the absurdity of the idea of "a testament" in its relation to the argument that follows the old and the Douay stick consistently to "testament" and so supply it.

Now I would remind the reader that from the 6th verse of the 8th chapter to the 22nd verse of the 10th chapter the whole argument is based upon the promise stated in the said 6th verse, namely that "Christ hath now attained unto a service differentially better by as much as he hath become a mediator of a better (in the sense of more efficient) covenant;" and that this first promise of truth is constantly fortified and the argument resting upon it logically built up by a carefully drawn differential antithesis between the two covenants and the two mediators of these two covenants.

And at this juncture to clinch the foregoing grammatical and etymological argument I will first re-translate the passage commented upon, namely, 15, 16, 17, and 18th verses of the 9th chapter and then re-translating a portion of the 8th chapter, will draw a common sense argument therefrom.

"And for this reason he is a mediator of a new covenant, in order that, death having occurred to bring about a redemption from the old covenant imperfections (not "transgressions") those who had been called might secure the promise of the eternal inheritance. For where there is a covenant, there is a necessity that the death of the victim be brought about. For a covenant over dead ones (that is victims) is valid, since it never is strong while the victim is alive. Hence not even was the first consecrated without blood."

Now let us re-translate and consider the common sense bearing of a portion of the 8th chapter, beginning at the 7th verse:

"For if that first had been faultless a place would not have been sought for a second. For finding fault, he saith unto them, in days are coming, saith the Lord, and I will consummate in unity (that is perfect) a new covenant for the House of Israel and for the House of Judah, not according to the covenant which I made with their fathers, on the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they did not abide in my covenant, and I disregarded them, saith the Lord; because this is the covenant which I shall have covenanted with the House of Israel after those days, saith the Lord, I who give my laws unto their purpose of mind, even upon their hearts will I write them, and I will be unto them for a God and they will be unto me for a royal people; and they shall not teach each one his fellow citizen and each one his brother, saying, know the Lord, because all will know me from their least unto their greatest; because I shall be merciful unto their iniquities and their sins I shall no longer remember. In saying new, he hath made the first old, and that which is waxing old and hoary is nigh unto vanishing away."

Now what is the common sense bearing of this passage, so far as confirming what I have said about this word διαθηκη meaning "a covenant" and not a testament? Is the idea of reciprocity or reciprocal relations apparent here or not? Is not the avowed object of this new covenant to obtain the united co-operation of the whole House of Israel in doing the will of the One whose laws he says he will write upon their hearts? Is there not thus brought about a confederation of all these separate wills by means of this διαθηκη or covenant?

Is the use of such a means or instrument for such an end or object a testamentary use, and is such an instrument now known or has it ever in the history of the English language been known as a "testament?"

I will now point out the absurd and contradictory (contradictory to God's own word I mean) logical sequence to which I casually referred at the outset. If this διαθηκη is a "testament" or some person's "last attested will" whose is it? who is that person? Is it not God's, and is he not that person? But the translators say that this or any other testament is not valid nor of force while the testator liveth. Has God died? Has he not clearly and repeatedly announced himself as the ever-living God, the only living Being to whom deathlessness belongs? Need I say more? Do I need to point out the too apparent purpose in thus perverting God's word? Do I need to stigmatize such zeal for doctrine as "zeal without knowledge?"

CHAS. GARDNER.

Youths' Column.

The Children's Song.

FRANCES E. HAVERGAL.

God of heaven hear our singing;
Only little ones are we;
Yet a grand petition bringing.
Father, now we come to thee.

Let thy kingdom come we pray thee;
Let the world in thee find rest;
Let all know thee and obey thee,
Loving, praising, blessing, blessed.

Let the sweet and joyful story
Of the Savior's wondrous love,
Wake on earth a song of glory,
Like the angel's song above.

Father, send the glorious hour;
Every heart be thine alone;
For the kingdom and the power
And the glory are thine own.

Maternal Affection.

The excavations among the ruins of Pompeii continue to develop streets, houses, temples, statues and human remains.

This city was destroyed by an eruption of Vesuvius seventy-nine years after Christ. A shower of pumice stones first fell, then ashes, and then boiling water, which made a compact mass, filling the streets, and at length covering the entire spot on which it stood. Lately a woman and a child, the latter a boy about ten years of age, were unearthed about ten feet above the pavement of a street. She is supposed to have been the mother of the boy, who is emancipated as from sickness, and made an effort to escape with him through a window of her house. Her hands grasp the legs of the boy, and in the act she and he were suffocated and buried beneath the mass of stones and ashes. Jewels were found on her, showing her to be above the ordinary class. On the arm around the lad are two bracelets, and on her hand two gold rings, one set with an emerald, graven with a horn of plenty in honor of mythological Ceres, and the other an amethyst, on which is graven the head of the winged Mercury. The discovery exhibited the maternal instinct strong in death, for the hold upon the sick boy is firm and motherlike.

This is the most beautiful and touching of all the discoveries of the once gay city of Pompeii.

The Children of Zion have some good doctrine in their creed, or belief, which we understand is that when one is truly converted that the taste for chewing, smoking and snuffing tobacco ceases, and that cleanliness is not only next to godliness, but is a part of it, and that one might as well claim to be a Christian and swear, steal, cheat, lie and rob as lay claim to being a Christian, with smoke or tobacco juice running out of the mouth or nose. Several old people who have joined the church have quit using the stuff, and say they have no desire for it, although some of them have used it for forty years and over.—Cherokee Courier.

"Old Limpy."

Civility is cheap, but incivility is sometimes very expensive; and those persons who graduate their behavior according to the dress and personal appearance of those they meet, are liable to make serious mistakes. The following incident is a very good illustration of this:

"Get aboard, old limpy," said a pert conductor to an aged, plainly-dressed lame man, standing on the platform, waiting for the signal to depart; "get aboard, or you'll be left."

At the signal, the old gentleman quietly stepped aboard and took a seat by himself.

When the conductor, in taking up the tickets, came to him, and demanded his fare, he replied,

"I do not pay fare on this road."

"Then I will put you off at the next station."

The conductor passed on, and a passenger who had seen the transaction, said to him,

"Did you know that old gentleman?"

"No, I did not."

"Well, it is Mr. C——, the president of this road."

The conductor changed color and bit his lips, but went on and finished taking up tickets. As soon as he was done, he turned to "old limpy," and said,

"Sir, I resign my station as conductor."

"Sit down here, young man. I do not wish to harm you, but we run this road for profit and to accommodate the public; and we make it an invariable rule to treat every person with perfect civility, whatever garb he wears, or whatever infirmity he suffers. This rule is imperative upon every one of our employes. I shall not remove you for what you have done, but it must not be repeated."

This story, which has often been related, is said to be strictly true. "Old Limpy," it is said, was the Hon. Erastus Corning, of New York, one of the leading railway men of the United States, and for eight years a member of Congress, who died in 1872. This occurrence was probably worth as much as a quarter's schooling to the conductor; and it is pretty safe to say that he was a good deal more of a man at the close of that day, than he was at the beginning of it; though it is probable that if he had been called upon to fix his own value, he would have rated himself much higher in the morning than in the evening. He never after addressed a passenger as "Old Limpy," but learned a lesson of civility which would be worth a small fortune to many a young man at the present time.

An uncivil word, or look, or tone, is often ruinous to the prospects and fatal to the success of men who might otherwise become honored and eminent. The Scripture bids us be courteous; and in this respect, as in all others, we shall find that godliness is profitable.—The Christian.

A Mother's Responsibility.

"Mamma," said a delicate little girl, "I have broken my china vase."

"Well, you are a naughty, careless, troublesome little thing, always in some mischief; go up stairs and wait till I send for you."

And this was a mother's answer to a tearful little culprit who had struggled with and conquered the temptation to tell a falsehood to screen her fault. With a disappointed, disheartened look the sweet child obeyed; and at that moment was, crushed in her little heart the sweet flower of truth, perhaps never again in after years to blossom into life. O, what were the loss of a thousand vases in comparison! 'Tis true "an angel might shrink from the responsibilities of a mother." It needs an angel's powers. The watch must not for an instant be relaxed; the scales of justice must always be nicely balanced; the hasty word that the overtaxed spirit sends to the lips must die there before it is uttered. The timid and sensitive child must have a word of encouragement in season; the forward and presuming, shocked with gentle firmness; there must be no deception, no trickery, for the keen eye of childhood to detect, and above all, when the exhausted brain sinks with ceaseless vigils, perhaps, and the thousand petty interruptions and unlooked for annoyances of every hour almost set at defiance any attempt at system, still must that mother wear an unruffled brow, lest the smiling cherub on her knee catch the angry frown. Still must she rule her own spirit, lest the boy so engrossed with his toys repeat the next moment the impatient word his ear has caught. For all the duties faithfully performed, a mother's reward is in secret and silence. Even he, on whose earthly breast she leans, is too often unmindful of the noiseless struggle till, too late, alas! he learns to value the delicate hand that has kept in unceasing flow the thousand springs of his domestic happiness.—Toledo Naturalist American.

News Items.

LONDON, Sept. 16.—The Times, in its leading article, says: "If the lives of Arabi Pasha and his immediate followers are spared, these men must be put once for all out of the way of doing further harm. They can't be permitted to retire to Constantinople to become the centre of impalpable intrigues. To restore the authority of the Khedive, the army must be disbanded, and replaced by gen'd armories sufficient to maintain civil order. If troops are needed to defend distant frontiers, it is sufficient to maintain them on the frontier, and not keep them at Cairo."

MUST CONSULT THE POWERS.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 16.—The Gazette de St. Petersburg says: "To allow England to settle the Egyptian question without consulting the Powers, is not to be thought of."

READY TO CAPITULATE.

ALEXANDRIA, Sept. 16.—Kurshid Pasha, commanding at Aboukir, has sent in a message announcing his readiness to surrender.

ALEXANDRIA, Sept. 16.—The Khedive has learned that the commander at Damietta refuses to surrender. He has 5,000 black troops.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—It is known that the Sultan has quite recently been in communication with Arabi Pasha, through Damietta, and there can be no doubt that the resistance of the commander of that place originates from Stamboul.

PORT SAID, Sept. 18.—The commander of Damietta also holds the ports of Dibha and Ghemilish. The Governor of Port Said sent an Arab to the rebel commander on Friday, but the messenger has not returned.

ALEXANDRIA, Sept. 18.—It is reported that gunboats and troops have been ordered to act against Abdullah Pasha, who is still holding Damietta.

Train service on railroads has been resumed. All stations will be occupied by the English.

ARABI'S MISTAKE.

One of the Egyptian officers who surrendered explains that Arabi left his best soldiers at Kafr-el-Dwar, because he thought the move on Ismailia was a ruse, and the real attack of the British would be on Kafr-el-Dwar!

THE CZAR'S CORONATION.

ST. PETERSBURGH, Sept. 14.—In the council of ministers held Saturday it was finally decided that the coronation of the Czar should be put off till next year. This grave decision was arrived at in consequence of numerous revolutionary indications discovered by the Moscow police as the preparation progressed. The empress wished the ceremony to take place on Sept. 17, the Russian 29th, the anniversary of her arrival in Russia. The council of ministers had decided to adopt this date provided that General Dolgorouki, governor-general of Moscow, was favorable. It was this information furnished by the latter on his arrival which determined the postponement. This decision disconcerts every one, as it will furnish ailment to the party of the Grand Duke Constantine, which bases its hopes on the theory that a Russian sovereign is not really an Emperor until he is crowned, and that the people should depose the prince who refuses to submit to the ceremony. It was resolved in the same council that, to mitigate the evil effect of this decision, their Majesties would soon pay a private visit to Moscow.

YELLOW FEVER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Owing to the increase of yellow fever in Mexico, it having appeared in several towns along the Rio Grande, contemplated removal of the upper cordon (from Laredo to Corpus Christi) was not made, and additional guards have been stationed at the river crossing opposite the infected districts to prevent its further introduction into Texas. Guards are also placed around the infected camp of refugees forty miles south of Corpus Christi on the Brownsville road. The total number of cases at Brownsville to Sept. 16, is 3,771; number of deaths, 94. Official dispatches from Texas indicate that the disease has spent its force at Brownsville, and is still confined within the lower cordon and the refugees' camp above referred to south of Corpus Christi. Number of cases at Pensacola to September 12 during the epidemic, 114; deaths, 19. No means have been adopted by the Treasury Department for the suppression of the epidemic in Florida.

Sententious.

Manners are the shadows of virtues.

To every duty God has joined a reward.

Eloquence is the best speech of the best soul.

Genius and virtue, like diamonds, are best plain set.

Love is never lost. If not reciprocated, it will flow back and soften and purify the heart.—Irving.

The power to do great things generally arises from the willingness to do small things.

Prayer was stronger than prophecy once and Nineveh was saved, and that not the prayer of an apostle, but of a sinful, heathen city.—Mrs. E. H. Charles.

For still in mortal sufferance lies
The secret of true living;
Love rearest to love that never knows
The sweetness of forgiving.
—J. G. Whittier.

The sweetest word in our language is love. The greatest word in our language is God. The word expressing the shortest time is now. The three make our greatest and sweetest duty.

Fret not because the promise of the buds
The frost doth but fulfil;
Were not the hope and fragrance which they brought
To me a blessing still?

Nor count as lost the seed we sow in faith
Upon a barren land,
And reap not. Doth not God the purpose know,
And life as the power's hand?

A sunny patience, a bright-hearted self-forgetfulness, a sweet and winning interest in the little things of family intercourse, the divine lustre of a Christian peace, are not fortuitous weeds carelessly flowering out of the life-garden. It is the internal which makes the external. It is the force residing in the atoms which shapes the pyramid. It is the beautiful soul which forms the crystal of the beautiful life without.

"Be what thou seemest; live thy creed;
Hold up to earth the torch divine;
Be what thou prayest to be made;
Let the great Master's steps be thine.

"Fill thou his hands with living prayer;
Bear witness for him still;
Speak boldly for the truth he loves,
And do his holy will."

Christianity a failure! Then man is a failure. Then the race is a failure. Then the gift of God is a failure. The man whose face is seamed and ridged all over with fruits of vice says virtue is a failure. The bloated, besotted, driveling inebriate says temperance is a failure. The highwayman and the murderer say law is a failure. The reckless violators of the laws of health say the science of medicine is a failure. Pope Pius IX. said the civilization of the 19th century is a failure. The owl says light is a failure. Is it any wonder that men may be heard to say Christianity is a failure?—Herrick Johnson.

ROBERT ROBINSON ON TRINE IMMERSION.

In The National Baptist of Aug. 17, there is an article on "Trine Immersion," which conveys the impression that the historian, Rev. Robert Robinson, endorsed the doctrine. The following is Robinson's testimony of the Baptism of the Apostolic Age: "There is no mention of any of the ceremonies which modern Christians have affixed to baptism; no consecration of the water, no sprinkling, no use of oils and unguents, no sponsors, no kneeling in the water, no trine immersion, no catechumen state, no giving a name, no renunciation of any demon; none of the innumerable additions, which, under pretence of adorning, have obscured the glory of this heavenly institute; it belongs to those who practice such additions to say how we came by them, and under what Master they serve."—D. W. Hunter.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—BY A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a Cloth Bound book of 188 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee to the worth of the work. Price only 50 cts. each. Send to this office for them.

Poetry.

Our Continent.

ABIDE WITH ME.

Abide with me; the sunset's golden finger
Has drawn a veil between the world and me;
Upon the mountain top his rays still linger,
But in the valley I deep darkness see,
And whelming shadows hover over me.

Abide with me: The way is weary and lonely,
And frightful phantoms rise from every side,
Which battle for my soul, that soul which only
Knows thee on earth, in heaven, oh, Crucified!
For that dear reason keep thou near my side.

Abide with me; earth's blandishments beset me;
They rise like clouds between my soul and thine,
Hiding thee, so that soon I must forget thee,
Unless a beam from loving eyes divine
Shall through them cast its radiance to mine.

Abide with me; near Lord, let me not perish!
Chase from my heart and way these phantoms dire;
Thine "altar coals" on my heart's altar cherish,
So that each sin consumed in love's pure fire
May clog no more my soul's deep, strong desire.

And when at last through earth's dark vale ascending
I reach the heavenly hills, and at thy feet
Look, Lord, upon thee, doubts and fears all blending
In one long pæan of joy, so sweet,
Then ruthless I need no more repeat
Abide with me!

Selections.

AN EXPECTED MESSIAH.

The Advent of the Long-Promised Redeemer of Islam Hourly Anticipated by Arabian Mohammedans. The Significance of the War in Egypt. El Mehdi, the Prophet of the Soudan.

A Constantinople correspondent of the New York Sun says: If I again call your attention to the future of Islam, it is because the Egyptian conflict is mainly interesting as being the prelude to the great drama which must shortly unfold in the east. The ultimate effects of the military operations now in progress in that country and the diplomatic negotiations of which Constantinople has been the center are all tending to precipitate a catastrophe, the nature of which seems scarcely to have been sufficiently understood by the European powers. When we hear members of the British Government making sanguine predictions that the Egyptian question will be settled by a three months' campaign, and find a conference still sitting in Constantinople which has been convoked for the purpose of restoring the status quo ante, we have sufficient evidence that neither the British statesmen in England nor the European diplomats on the Bosporus have the least idea of the nature of the task they have undertaken. If they correctly understood the situation, the former would abstain from vaticination which events must falsify, and the members of the latter would recommend their governments to dissolve an assemblage whose protracted labors can only have the effect of rendering more utterly impossible the recurrence of that status quo which it is their supposed function to restore.

The only effect of a continued military and diplomatic pressure upon Egypt and Turkey is to intensify the resistance which Islam is determined to oppose to European aggression, from whatever quarter it proceeds. If Turkey yields to Europe, if Egypt yields to England, the problem will be in no measure solved. The effect of the conquest of Egypt by England will merely be to extend the theater of war to African and Asiatic Arabia. The effect of the submission of the Sultan to the will of Europe will merely be the transfer of the caliphate from the Turk to the Arab, and a more determined resistance to the Giaour under a new spiritual head, and under conditions more difficult to grapple with.

Hitherto Islam has been represented to the European mind by the Turks, Christendom has had little to do with Semitic Islam. With the exception of the French, no European nation has been brought politically into intimate relations with the Arabs, who have been regarded as wild nomads, incapable of united action, destitute of any strong national sentiment, ignorant, savage, and fanatical, but not dangerous as a force, because lacking a head or a country in the patriotic sense. But recent events, both in Arabia and North Africa, have induced those who have been watching them to modify their old impressions upon these subjects. It is becoming daily more and more apparent that the Arabs are capable of real patriotic feeling, quite apart from religious sentiment; and unmistakable evidence has been forced upon the French authorities in Algiers, by repeated massacres of an isolated character, and other circumstances, that a combination has been formed among them which extends from Morocco to Cairo. The recent events in Tunis especially have had the effect of rousing a patriotic enthusiasm which has resulted more than once in concerted action, affording proof of the determination at which the tribes of the desert have arrived, to make a last and decided stand against the inroads of Christendom, which they are convinced, if not resisted, will lead to their final extermination. It was to a very great extent the sending of letters written in blood by the surviving sheiks of the Chiaia tribe to all the great clans in the regency of Tunis, immediately after the regrettable occurrences of the 30th of March, 1881, when the French in Algeria came into collision with the Kroumirs on the Tunisan frontier, which provoked the general rising which shortly afterward took place.

In considering the question of the capability of the Arab tribes to participate in a general and concentrated movement, an important element in the discussion is almost invariably omitted. I refer to the growing power of the Khouan, or semi-political, semi-religious fraternities which seem destined to cover the whole of North Africa with a web of Moslem Freemasonry. At the head of these associations are the Senoussia, the avowed opponents of the French mission of civilization. This powerful brotherhood has sprung into existence during the last thirty years, but it now threatens to overshadow, if not to absorb, six other older but less militant corporations. These various orders differ chiefly in form, but they are all ostensibly based on the pure tenets of Islam as expounded in the Koran. Each confraternity claims to have had its origin in a dream of its founder, who is supposed to have received a revelation from the prophet as to the farik, or most acceptable way of salvation. Each order has a supreme director, or khalifa, who transmits his orders to his subordinates. The seat of the order in any particular locality is called a zaouia, which seems at once to be a chapel, a school, a place of refuge, a hospital, a library, and a political debating club. The brethren are charged with the task of preserving a complete record of contemporaneous events. The most celebrated and important of all these zaouias was that founded by Senoussi about thirty years ago at Djarbub, an oasis about twenty-two days' journey inland from Benghazi, and not very far, therefore, from the western frontier of Upper Egypt. He then established no less than three hundred of these convent monasteries in every considerable place between Morocco and Mecca, and appointed mukhedlemin or vicars in every part of Islam.

In 1860 Senoussi died, leaving two sons, the elder of whom bore the name of El Mehdi, or the Director. Before his death Senoussi sent emissaries to convey guarded hints to his followers that a glorious future was in store for his son. The prosperity of the zaouia at Djarbub increased. Pilgrims to Mecca from North Africa, as well as those coming from Bornou and the Saharian provinces, flocked in thousands with their offerings, while the Sultans of the interior sent caravans laden with ivory and ostrich feathers and other costly presents to the great saint. At the same time the cargoes of arms and ammunition for the purpose of arming the Arabs all through the interior arrived from Europe at the almost unknown harbors of the coast. The zaouias of the Senoussia increased in number, and their tenets gained ground in countries far beyond the Lybian desert. "The Moslems' object," they said, "must be to combat Christian ideas and Christian innovations. The Moslems must employ all possible means to check further Christian advancement into Dar el-Islam." Four years ago El Mehdi withdrew himself from his followers and became a hermit, thus seeking to involve his very existence in mystery. This proceeding at once increased his fame. From zaouia to zaouia of the Senoussia, and consequently from Mecca to Morocco, the attention of the faithful was assiduously called to the following prophecy: "On the first of the month of Moharrem, in the year 1300 (12th of November, 1882), will appear El Mehdi, or Messiah. He will be exactly 40 years of age, and of noble bearing. One arm will be longer than the other. His father's name will be Mohammed, and his mother's name Fatima, and he will be hidden for a time prior to his manifestation."

The old Senoussi's name was Mohammed, and persons who have seen the younger remember that his right hand reached as far as his knee. During these last four years the power of this great confraternity has increased until its influence has become controlling all through North Africa. The neighboring tribes take the name of Marabboutin, and pay no tribute. The great zaouia of the Libyan desert is enlarged and adorned, and the Senoussia look anxiously for the day when El Mehdi shall fulfil a second prophecy of reigning from a T to a T—which they interpret as meaning from Tangier to Tripoli in Syria—the much-longed-for Arab empire of the future.

El Mehdi has, however, not waited for the 12th of November to manifest himself. Possibly he found matters ripe in the interior sooner than he anticipated. Possibly events were precipitated by the Egyptian crisis. Be that as it may, he appeared at the head of an army a few months ago at Darfur, and, marching upon the Upper Nile, utterly defeated the Egyptian General who, at the head of two thousand men, went out to meet him. He then advanced victoriously upon Khartoum, the capital of the province, and, according to the last accounts, defeated Ziegler Pasha, the Governor, a German officer, who vainly attempted to oppose his progress. Making himself master of Khartoum, he now threatens to advance down the Nile and participate in the conflict which is impending in Lower Egypt. Arabi, on the other hand, has announced that in the event of his being defeated, he will lay Cairo in ashes and march up the Nile to meet El Mehdi, with whom he is in communication by means of the emissaries who keep the zaouias all through Arabic Islam informed of his movements, and in the late letter addressed by him to Mr. Gladstone, and which Mr. Wilfred Blunt forwarded to that gentleman, since published in the newspapers, he declares his power and his determination to spread the flame of religious fanaticism from the Atlantic to India.

Meantime in the Turkish papers published in this city El Mehdi is always called "The False Prophet;" but, though that may be the view taken of him by the Moslems in European Turkey, it remains to be seen how far it will be adopted by the rest of Islam. No doubt much will depend upon his success, and upon the sanction he receives from the mosque of El Azhar in Cairo, from the spiritual authorities in Mecca, and from the various colleges of Ulemas scattered throughout the east. Much, too, will depend upon the attitude of the Turkish Government. If the Sultan were to issue a proclamation denouncing Arabi as a rebel, and to lead his army in Egypt, cordially to co-operate with English troops, all Islam would probably rally around El Mehdi, while if he were to defy Christendom and ally himself to Arabi, he might still find El Mehdi a useful ally.

Under any circumstances, it is not impossible that this mysterious personage may play an important part in the coming drama. What influence he possesses in Arabia can not as yet be definitely ascertained. At present that portion of Asia is the center of intrigues of which some say the object is to declare the present grand oherif of Mecca, Abdul Mantahib, Caliph. This high functionary is fiscally qualified to occupy this exalted position, and enjoys immense spiritual authority, while his ambition, in spite of his advanced age (he is 68), is as unbounded as his loyalty to the Sultan is questionable. Others say that the Arabs elected as their future Caliph a certain Cherif-ed-deen, also of the Koreysh tribe, and of direct descent. He has been living in seclusion for many years in Bombay, but is now the head of the insurrectionary movement in the Hedjaz, where the celebrated chief Ibn Raschid is the controlling spirit.

What relations these interesting personages may maintain with the new Moslem Messiah, or what importance they may attach to his claims, the near future will probably disclose; but this slight sketch of the forces at work in Islam is enough to show that a defeat of Arabi by British troops means practically nothing, so far as the main question is concerned. What has come clearly out of the Egyptian imbroglio is this, that a discontent has been steadily growing throughout Islam for the last half century at the steady encroachments of western civilization upon its domain, at the successive defeats of the Ottoman forces, and the loss of Moslem territory to the Giaour, at the constantly increasing subserviency of the Turkish Caliph to the will of Europe, and at the influence which follows European capital and commercial enterprise as it penetrates into the recesses of Islam, and undermines the belief and modifies the habits and customs of the faithful. The Egyptian question was merely the drop that made the cup of indignation run over. It was the spark that set fire to the magazine. Islam has determined, if the Sultan will not champion it, to choose another champion. And the decisive moment has now arrived when this profession of devotion to the Pan-Islamic idea, which events forced the Sultan to make three years ago, will be tested. If he espouses the cause of the religious and military party in Egypt, good and well. He may be accepted by Islam, but his rejection by Europe will be inevitable, and may involve the disruption of Turkey, and probably a European war. If he clings to Europe it will cause a split in Islam, and the same result will arrive from the east which in the other case would have overtaken Turkey from the west.

As it is, the only question which the conference at Constantinople will settle will be that of its own impotence, and the only prediction in which British statesmen can indulge with certainty is that three months hence they will understand the nature of the conflict upon which they have entered a good deal better than they do now.—Chicago Times, Sept. 4.

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Jehovah is abroad among the nations. His foot-prints are everywhere visible. His voice is heard in the heavens, and the rushing of his chariot wheels sound along the cloud pavements of his tempestous highway. The finger of his anger is again seen writing upon the palace walls of nobles, kings, and emperors.

The masses are restless; a feverish excitement prevails. Many are running to and fro and knowledge is increasing. Any unusual movement among the nations puts the world on tiptoe of expectation.

God, as of old, is again showing his wonders in the land of Ham. He is collecting his forces to carry out his long predicted purposes. What mean these rapid developments? What bearing has this Egyptian uprising upon the Eastern Question? What location has it on the chart of prophecy? These problems we propose to investigate.

The Eastern Question, an expression quite familiar, but who can define it? It may be presumption in us to make an attempt at a definition; still, it requires some knowledge of the Eastern Question in order to describe satisfactorily its Egyptian phase, for it has a phase for every nation involved in its numerous and still unfolding complications; as many phases as there are peoples to be gathered to the coming struggle. Among its most noted phases we may reckon its English phase, its Russian phase, its Turkish phase, its Hebrew phase, its Egyptian phase, its Mohammedan phase, and last, but not least, its Christian phase. We shall give our definition of the Eastern Question in various forms that the reader may discern its complicated elements. Our definition is the following:

How can the balance of power, now existing among the Western or European nations, relative to their intercourse with the Oriental nations, such as India, China and Japan, be so protected and maintained as not to infringe upon their individual rights, privileges and interests, political, social and religious? The great Western world and the great Eastern world must interchange their physical products, also their manufactured articles. They must have very extended commercial intercourse. To do this there must be channels of communication, highways by sea and land. How shall these national highways be managed? Who shall control them? The solution of these questions must involve the Eastern Question.

What highways now exist? How, and by whom are they controlled, and managed? By what laws and regulations? These are elements of the Eastern Question. This question will be more fully explained by considering the following questions:

1. What national highways between Europe and the Orient now exist?

2. Who now control, or are the custodians and trustees of these great Eastern highways?

3. If the Sultan is deposed, who shall accomplish that task, and what nation shall fill his responsible office?

4. Shall Russia or England control them?

5. If not, shall Russia manage the northern channel and England the southern?

6. Shall they be held and operated jointly?

7. Or shall they be strictly neutral, but under the care of a new custodian, who shall (officially) manage them?

8. Who shall be that custodian or commission nation?

These problems are parts of the great Eastern Question which we propose to consider.

Another form of the Eastern Question is the following:

What position shall each nation occupy in the coming struggle? What shall be its military status?

Another question arises: How can there be a free commercial intercourse between the East and the West without bringing on a conflict between the Crescent and the Cross? How can either Jesus or Mohammed put on the diadem of the world without an entire subversion of the present order of things? Both classes of religionists are expecting their chief to establish universal dominion; which shall conquer? What shall be the nature of the struggle? Such questions as these must claim our attention.

Allow us to give another statement to the Eastern problem. What shall be done with the Turkish empire and its territory in order to restrain the Russian bear from devouring the national flesh of Asia, and thus causing ruin to the Eastern interests of all Western Europe?

For a century the Western nations have been anticipating the dissolution of the Ottoman empire (the empire of "The sick man"—Voltaire.) How can that empire be sustained? Or, if it must fall, what disposition shall be made of its territory?

The geographical position of Russia, and also of Austria favors the idea of its absorption by those two powers. How can the West prevent this catastrophe? Or, if the Turkish empire cannot be held in being as a check to Russian aggression, by what other means can Western Europe protect her own interests?

The British and Russian empires, with equal areas, (8,000,000 square miles each) seem designed to head two great national confederacies, which from their geographical position may be termed, Northern and Southern, and in prophetic language, "King of the South," and "King of the North." This outline will be filled out as we advance. Take notice, however, that the empire of the "False Prophet" has its location in the great conflict. (Rev. xvi. 8; xix. 20—Mohammedan empire as we have taught for twenty-five years.

The Eastern Question involves the entire international communications of the West with the great East. In its full extent America would not be excluded, though in its ordinary meaning Europe and Asia, with a part of Africa include all the territory particularly interested. We propose to consider the following questions, which will develop the principal elements of the great Eastern Problem and fix the position which each nation is to occupy in the approaching contest.

1. We shall consider their geographical position.

2. We shall sketch the vastness and the variety of their products.

3. The immense power involved in the interchange of these products.

4. We shall examine their channels of communication—national highways.

5. Their limited number and contracted form require greater activity in the exchange.

6. The qualifications necessary in the custodian and exchange-merchant to manage efficiently these channels of communication.

7. We shall show the incompetency of the present occupants, the Sultan of Turkey, and the Khedive of Egypt, his Viceroy.

8. God is educating and preparing one to fill this high station.

9. How and by whom are the present custodians to be removed?

10. How shall this new custodian be inducted into his office?

11. What position shall each nation occupy in the coming struggle?

Such is the outline of the subjects we propose to investigate.

In doing so we shall strive, in as few words as practicable, to show the political, social, and religious aspects of the Eastern Question; and, more particularly to point out the future of Egypt and Turkey.

Europe and the East, their geographical position. Under this head we shall consider their size and their relative position, with such other points as may illustrate our subject.

Touching the great sea (Mediterranean) are the three grand divisions, Europe on the north, Africa south, and Asia on the East. An oblong basin of brine, with side and rim composed of semi-continents. Let us examine this noted territory.

Set one foot of the compass at Jerusalem, and with the length of that sea as a radius, describe a circle. Through this centre draw two diameters, cutting each other at right angles. The four extremities will represent the four cardinal points, north, south, west, and east. From the east point, with the same radius, describe an arc, having its extremities in the circumference of the circle. You have a circle, a crescent and a cross, symbols of the two great religions of the world.

Within the circle are included the localities of the noted events of man's history; the place of his birth; the garden of Eden; the empires of Egypt and ancient Israel under Solomon; the territories of the four Gentile monarchies, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome; and the land of the future restored Israel. The crescent includes the empires of China and Japan (principally) and contains nearly one half the population of the globe. With this circle and its crescent we are now concerned, as they include the territory principally involved in the Eastern Question.

Let us examine this circle. Europe occupies its north-west quadrant. Its north-east quadrant contains Babylonia and Persia; its south-east quadrant has Arabia; its south-west quadrant contains Egypt and Carthage. Each quadrant has had its noted empire, and its interesting historic record. In the crescent is the Mongolian family, on a territory of surpassing interest. Clustering about this mid-earth sea is the national swarm. The principal nations of the globe either occupy its coasts or navigate its waters, the highway between the West and East. This water highway has three principal gates: 1. The channel or ocean outlet. 2. Dardanelles. 3. Through Egypt by the Suez canal. These are water outlets for ships of commerce.

This water highway between Europe and the West and the Orient, extends east and west, occupying the southern part of the northern temperate zone, extending from latitude 30½ deg. to latitude 42 deg. It is in the zone of human intellect; the belt of empires, where man attains his highest development.

Within the area of our circle, and about its middle belt of waters cluster those nations that are so deeply interested in the solution of the Eastern Problem; all striving to gain their full share of the immense wealth of India, China and Japan, with their adjacent Islands.

In this circle of human nation, physical, social, moral, and political, let us again take a view of the geographical positions of Europe, Asia, and Africa, with their environed sea. Europe occupies her northern sea coast with all its lakes, rivers, gulfs and bays, and it is crowded with dense masses of the Caucasian race, the most active, intellectual, and fully developed of the human family; actively occupied with all human knowledge and all industrial pursuits. With a territory of the same extent as that of our Republic, it has a population of 302,000,000. The products of the soil cannot feed its inhabitants, while its manufactories are far in advance of her home demands. Europe, therefore, must have an outlet for her surplus productions. It is properly denominated the world's commercial metropolis. Its vessels are on every ocean, in every sea of both hemispheres. Europe looks eastward for a large portion of its territory.

Examine the map of Asia, especially that part of it within our circle and its crescent. With a population of 700,000,000, its soil cannot feed the masses. It must look to other countries for some of its provisions. If this Asiatic belt had an European population, circumstances would have quite another aspect. But with races without intelligence or industry, poverty and want must follow. Much of the Asiatic soil is uncultivated and waste. Its moral, social, and political condition compares favorably with its physical state. They all require renovation by associating with the active and intelligent West.

Our circle includes all of Africa that has any historic record. Take from that grand division, Egypt, and those states along the Mediterranean, once included in the empire of Carthage, Rome's rival, and nothing remains but semi-barbarous tribes.

The East must be renovated. Asia was once enlightened with the gospel, but long since its light was extinguished, and its Christian lamp-stand removed. In these Eastern movements God has evidently one purpose, while man's intention is actuated by other views. It is quite evident, however, that God, as of old, rules among the nations, and all that he has uttered by the prophets will certainly be accomplished. The nations will rapidly be mustered into their places to fulfil their divine commissions. Lord hasten that day.

J. P. WENTWORTH.

SELECTED MISCELLANY.

AN OLD TREE.

Pliny says there was growing in his time a famous holly near the Vatican; upon it was a brass plate bearing an inscription recording its age. The tree was older than Rome itself and had stood there 800 years. Many branches it must have given for the festivals in honor of the god Saturn, for the people considered it an emblem of peace and friendship. The Bo tree of the second city of Anuradjapoora, is in all probability the oldest tree in the world, of which the age can be ascertained by historical evidence. It was planted 288 B. C., and is therefore now (1882) 2,170 years old. Sir James Emmerson Tennent, in his work on Ceylon, gives reasons for believing that the tree is of this wonderful age and refers to historic documents in which it is mentioned at different dates as, 182 A. D., 223 A. D., and so on to the present day. "To it," says Sir James, "kings have even dedicated their dominions in testimony of a belief that it is a branch of the identical fig-tree under which Gotama Buddha reclined at Uruwelaya, when he underwent his apotheosis." Its leaves are carried away as streamers by pilgrims, but it is too sacred to touch with a knife and therefore they are only gathered when they fall.

The oldest newspaper in the world is the King-Pau, or "Capital Sheet," published in Pekin, and since the 4th of last June issued in a new form prescribed by special edict of the reigning Emperor Quang-soo. It first appeared A. D. 911, but came out only at irregular intervals. Since the year 1351, however it has been published weekly and of uniform size. Until its reorganization by imperial decree it contained nothing but orders in Council and Court news, was published about midday, and cost two kesh, or something less than one cent. Now, however, it appears in three editions daily. The first, issued early in the morning, and printed on yellow paper, is called Heing-Pau (Business Sheet), and contains trade prices, exchange quotations, and all manner of commercial intelligence. Its circulation is a little over 3,000. The second edition, which comes out during the forenoon, also printed upon yellow paper, is devoted to official announcements, fashionable intelligence, and general news. Besides its ancient title of King-Pau, it owns another designation, that of Shuen-Pau, or "Official Sheet." The third edition appears late in the afternoon, is printed on red paper, and bears the name of Titani-Pau (Country Sheet). It consists of extracts from the earlier editions, and is largely subscribed for in the provinces. All three issues of the King-Pau are edited by six members of the Han-Lin Academy of Sciences, appointed and salaried by the Chinese State. The total number of copies printed daily varies between 13,000 and 14,000.—Chicago Tribune.

THE FUTURE OF RUSSIA.

This Turko-Egyptian embroilment is backed up by history which must be understood in order to comprehend the significance of events and acts. Russia has not for one day taken her eye from St. Sophia and the Bosporus. She means one day to have Constantinople for her winter capital. Nature has decreed it. The edict is published in the physical geography of Europe and Asia. Courts and capitals and diplomats may postpone the realization of that splendid dream for one decade or five. The Cossack stretches his imperial arm from the Baltic Sea across Asia to China, and from the Arctic Ocean down to Afghanistan, and almost to the shores of the Persian Gulf. Three hundred years ago he was as much of a barbarian in Europe as the Apache or Seminole is in America today. A half-dozen years ago the rattle of his artillery made half of Europe tremble with apprehension, and the Great Powers caught their breath lest he should break their balance of power forever by throwing his sword into the scale. He belongs to a virile, and conquering race. The centuries are his allies. Francis Joseph is an old man, sitting on a throne made of mosaic, whose bits he holds together by his weight. Frederick William is tottering on the verge of the grave, and Bismarck is an invalid at the head of Germany that endures them both with a sullen determination to be free. Great Britain has read the handwriting on the wall. If Russian statesmanship shall prove equal to the opportunity, he would be bold indeed who should challenge the prediction that the next Emperor of Russia will celebrate his coronation under the dome of St. Sophia.—N. Y. Star.

NON-CREEDO.

A preacher of the gospel, on being introduced to a skeptic, with the explanation that the man was a skeptic, in the midst of an extended circle of friends, said to him, "I suppose, then, you do not believe anything!" "Oh, yes," replied the skeptic, "I do believe many things." "Will you then," said the preacher, "be so good as to tell us what you do believe?" The skeptic replied, I do not believe that old story of the Bible about Cain obtaining a wife in the land of Nod, where there was nobody living." "Never mind what you don't believe," said the preacher; "no doubt there is much of that; but tell us what you do believe." The skeptic rallied, and said, "Well, I will tell you: I don't believe the account given by Moses, that God commanded the Midianites to be destroyed." "I am not inquiring for what you don't believe, but what you do believe." Recovering himself a little, and clearing up his voice, he made a desperate effort, saying, "I don't believe that old fable of the Bible, that God commanded the Canaanites to be destroyed." His belief was all disbelief. It commenced all the time with, "I don't believe"

Poetry.

"FOR MY SAKE."

Three little words, but full of tenderest meaning!
Three little words, the heart can scarcely hold!
Three little words, but on their import dwelling,
What wealth of love these syllables unfold!

"For my sake" cheer the suffering, help the needy:—
On earth this was my work, I gave it thee:
If thou wouldst follow in thy Master's footsteps,
Take up my cross, and come and learn of me.

"For my sake" let the little ones be tended,
All that I gave into thine safely keeps
I took them in my arms, pressed and blessed them,
Do now the same for me, "Feed now my sheep."

"For my sake" let the harsh word die unuttered,
That trembles on the swift, impetuous tongue:
"For my sake" check the quick, rebellious feeling,
That rises when thy brother does thee wrong.

"For my sake" ever press with patience onward,
Although the race be hard, the battle long;
Within my Father's house are many mansions,
There thou shalt rest and join the victor's song.

And all in coming days the world recite them,
If "for my sake" thou suffer pain and loss.
Bear on, faint heart, thy Master went before thee,—
They only wear his crown who share his cross.

O Thou, dear Lord, who walked on earth incarnate,
Pain would we follow, but we fear to fall!
Let at thy feet we bend, thy aid imploring,
Our only plea that "for thy sake" we call.

Selections.

"THE FUTURE OF JESUS."

The following sermon was preached last June by the Rev. Dr. Lorimer in Immanuel Baptist Church, Chicago, Ill. It was the last one in the series on "The Life of Jesus."

"I will come again." John xiv. 3.

"Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. xxii. 20.

The eye taught by civilization beholds in granite and marble quarries the fair promise of future cities, stately edifices, magnificent temples, and of the varied and beauteous forms which art can impart to stone. To the mind instructed in the annals of the race, mighty navies are visible in the tall, sinewy trees of the virgin forests, and blazing fires on happy hearths are seen emerging from dark and forbidding coal-fields. Potentially the structures, improvements, inventions, and whatsoever of material splendor or utility shall distinguish the coming time exist already in the boundless resources of physical nature. He who could compass and measure the treasures of the latter could almost give an inventory of the former. While he could not anticipate the details of the labor nor describe in advance the precise fashions and shapes which human ingenuity shall give to its creations, and while he could not foresee the voyages which the yet unmade ships shall take, nor all the circumstances which shall attend the building of the yet unprojected homes, he could sum up and portray, at least roughly and in outline, the results of material progress as they shall be in the age that is to be.

Much more can the student of Holy Writ determine the moral and religious development of the world from the teachings of prophecy. History is foreshadowed in the Sacred Books, and may there be read as the character of a proposed palace or cathedral—may be traced in the working plans of the architect. But it should be remembered that there is much in the way of minutiæ which cannot be discerned, and which defies the skill of the interpreter to sketch. He cannot be certain about date, and when several events occur close together about their order, neither can they be sure about the application of particular predictions. He sees "through a glass darkly." The future lies in a mist, and he should be satisfied with the dim glimpse which is granted him of bold headlands, quiet valleys, and frowning mountain ranges. When this is not the case, and when he undertakes to give a specific account of everything that is to be, he involves himself in contradictions, and is betrayed into evident absurdities. From this fruitful source of mischief arise ridiculous prognostications towards Jerusalem, dissolution programmes, and other farcical proceedings which scandalize Christianity, and which bring its revelations into contempt. If, therefore, in this discourse, I confine myself to what is plain, and avoid what is obscure, it is because I am convinced that any other course would launch us on a stormy sea of incertitude, devoid of beacons and destitute of harbors.

We crave completeness in everything, whether in the process of nature or in the affairs of human life. The flower that never blooms, the corn that never ripens, the orchard that never bears, and the fruit that never mellows we turn from with a sense of disappointment. Their promise has not been realized. We would rather own a century-plant whose floral glory we should never see, but which would assuredly delight the eyes of our children, than an annual whose vitality exhausted itself in rubing its form in mantle of green and never served to crown its brow with variegated beauty. So, likewise, we grieve when genius is suddenly eclipsed, when strenuous exertion falls of adequate return, when self-sacrifice and heroism are wasted, and when great movements end in disaster and shame. Now, it must impress us that the career of Jesus demands something more than a resurrection from the dead and an ascension into heaven. We are not satisfied with the climax. As far as it goes it is well enough; but it does not go far enough. If this is all, if the ages are to witness an endless repetition of what has been, if the struggle between good and evil is to continue pretty much as in the past, only varied by slight advantages on one side or the other, and if there is to be no decisive and triumphant outcome of the work which our Lord inaugurated, then there is an incompleteness about it which is hardly reconcilable with any fair idea of its Divine origin. It will not do to say that Christianity is a flower whose roots are in the earth and its blossoms in heaven; that the beginnings are beneath and the consummations above; for we feel that what has been commenced here should be perfected here. If Christ brought salvation to this world, then in this world ought it to be fully accomplished; all of its blessings, fruits, and achievements should be witnessed in the very domain where they were first projected. This feeling the Scriptures abundantly justify. They foretell the time when Jesus shall return and finish the salvation which he began in tears and blood, when he shall restore all things, when the works of the Devil shall be destroyed, and when the drama of redemption shall find a fitting close in glory everlasting. And it is to this future of our Lord I would direct your thoughts in bringing this sermon series to an end.

The promise of a second advent was not an afterthought; much less was it a shrewd invention of cunning priests to account for ancient predictions which failed of fulfilment in the life of Christ, and neither was it a device to strengthen faith in the gospels by placing its triumphs in a far-off era, and in connection with a remarkable group of events which would maintain constant expectation, though they might never be realized. It was uttered by Christ himself, as in the text, not once, but frequently. To the disciples he said, "I will come again," and to the malignant priests he confessed himself the anointed one who should yet be seen in the glory of his Father. Some of his parables, such as the rich nobleman who goes to a distant land to procure a kingdom and return, involve this hope; and his sermon preceding his arrest, while devoted in no small degree to the destruction of Jerusalem, brings out very vividly the manner and certainty of his return to earth. The apostles likewise dwell upon this expectation in such a way as to preclude the supposition that they were trying to blind the eyes of their followers to defects and discrepancies in the Christian scheme. Their revelations on this subject harmonize too fully with what had preceded and partake too strictly of the nature of a climax and denouement for them to be liable to any such suspicion. From the first it is contemplated as inevitable, and enters so largely into the subject of the inspired writings that it is not only impossible to regard it as a hasty expedient to meet emergencies, but equally impossible to escape the inference that it is a doctrine of transcendant importance. Next to the absurdity of imagining the doctrine to be an afterthought ranks the infatuation of those who speak of it in disparaging tones as of very little moment and as unworthy of serious consideration. For such an opinion there are no sufficient grounds. Whatever the Almighty has taken pains to make known is deserving of earnest endeavors to understand. And if it has been abused, perverted, and made the occasion of fanaticisms and extravagances as the hope of the second advent has—and what article of the creed has not?—there seems to me an additional obligation resting on the expositor to rescue it from the misinterpretation of its friends and from the malignant slanders of its enemies. This duty I recognize, and in discharging it I shall present for your consideration a comparison, a contrast, and a climax.

Jesus is to come personally. This is the evident import of his own words, and of those spoken on this subject by his apostles; and in this respect his second coming is similar to his first. I know there is a vague impression abroad that it sometimes denotes a spiritual and providential manifestation. But were this the case the confusion would be lamentable and endless. If identical phraseology is employed to describe different events we can never be certain which is intended, and for all practical purposes it is worse than useless. The brethren who so ardently insist on attaching a metaphorical or mystical signification to the language which refers to the second advent should remember that they are sharpening a sword on both edges. If they are warranted by the exigencies of a theory which they consider more reasonable than any other to manipulate plain declarations of Scripture, and to account that figurative which is clearly literal, why may not the opponents of evangelical views adopt the same rule, and, as it appears to them more rational to deny than to credit the divinity of Christ and his resurrection, why may they not resolve all the proof-texts in favor of these truths into mere poetic or metaphorical expressions? When this is done by either party it is apparent that rationalism dictates the faith, not revelation. Are evangelical teachers prepared to assume the right of shaping the testimony of Holy Writ to suit their preconceived ideas and fancies? If they are, then let them not blame those who, imitating their example, reject the distinctive and essential doctrines of grace. If they are not, then let them interpret the passages which relate to the second advent, as they do those which relate to any other subject. In adopting this course, they will find that Jesus has carefully discriminated between that event and the operations of the spirit and the interpositions of Providence. He assures his disciples (John xvi.) that it is expedient for him to depart; that the Comforter may come and glorify him and speak of him, thus distinguishing between the being who goes and the being who comes. We have, therefore, no right to confound the one with the other, or to substitute the one for the other according to our own whims or the exigencies of some cherished theory. Our Lord is equally guarded when describing the fall of Jerusalem. Some commentators urge that Christ was to appear, and did appear in the Roman armies, or, in other words, that his advent was simply a movement of Providence accomplished when the forces under Titus besieged the holy city. This, however, is an error, and, strange to say, it is the error which our Lord tries to shield his disciples from in his great prophecy. He tells them distinctly, when they shall see "the abomination of desolation"—that is "the armies compassing Jerusalem"—"if any man shall say, 'Lo, here is Christ,' believe it not," and assures them that he shall not appear until the Jews have been carried captive into all nations, and until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled. Matt. xxiv., Luke xxi. The first of these predictions has been accomplished; the Jews are scattered everywhere; but the second has not yet been met, for the Gentiles are still the gospel people. If, then, the invasion of Judea was to precede the calamities which were to befall that land, and the advent was to follow, and if the one was to occur near the beginning of the Gentile age and the other at the close, we have no right to identify them or to speak of them as though they were not radically distinct.

It is consequently manifest that the spiritual hypothesis has no foundation in those passages which are frequently appealed to in its behalf, and it fades into empty nothingness before those which unmistakably imply personality. The text itself is one of these. "If I go," says Christ, "I will come again." The "I" that departs is the "I" that is to return. We know that he ascended personally, and personally must he descend. To evade this inference, it is suggested that, as he promises to come and receive his disciples unto himself, and as he did not appear visibly during their life, it must have been fulfilled in their death, and, therefore, that its meaning must be exhausted in his taking home the souls of his saints. This interpretation will not hold. In death the child of God is represented as departing to the Savior; never is it presented as the return of the Savior for the child of God. Said Paul: "I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better;" and said Stephen in his martyr agony, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Philip i. 23; Acts, vii. 59. To remove this objection and understand our Savior's words, we must remember that he regarded his immediate disciples as part of his church, and that what he says is applicable to the church as a whole. It is declared that the entire body of the redeemed shall be glorified together. Paul, testifying when he eulogizes the worthies who have ended their earthly warfare, that they had not received the promise, or what was promised. "God having provided some better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. xi. 39, 40; also see Rev. vi. 11. In harmony with this thought, Jesus speaks in our text to his followers: "I now leave my church, but I will come at last and receive her to myself," and John pictures that glowing consummation when he exclaims, "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife has made herself ready." Rev xix. 7. Furthermore, in confirmation of an exclusively personal advent, it is written, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven," "for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." In the same direction we read, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory;" and "we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Acts i. 11; 1 Thes. iv. 16; Col. iii. 4; and 1 John iii. 2. Then, as he is "to appear," "to be seen," "to descend himself," and in "like manner as he went," and as Paul recognizes only one advent—"who shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation"—we cannot resist the inference that the only coming known to Scripture is personal, and that he "who is with his people even unto the end of the world" is with them in spirit, and hence, when that end shall arrive, his manifestation must necessarily be bodily and visible. Heb. ix. 28.

Jesus is to come suddenly. "But of that day and hour knoweth no man;" "as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." "For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, and marrying," "so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." "It is not for you to know the times and the seasons;" "what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch!" for "as the lightning cometh out of the East and shineth even unto the West, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. xxiv; Acts i. Here have we a contrast between his first advent and his second. He came as a babe, feebly, unobtrusively, and gently; he entered on his public ministry unostentatiously and meekly; and he ended his career obscurely, unnoticed by the world, and unappreciated by the church. So far as earth is concerned, a company of shepherds, a few wise men, and several devout persons were the only ones who knew of his birth, a vague rumor of it merely reaching the ears of royal Herod, and he and they had almost forgotten it before the infant Jesus had grown to be a man. Outside of Judea he was hardly known at the time of his death, and the kingdom which he founded had to struggle slowly into prominence. But not thus shall be his second coming. Then shall he burst upon an apathetic and drowsy world with a grandeur surpassing the brightness of sun and with a footfall drowning the reverberation of thunders. He who once dawned on mankind as silently and gradually as the morning shall at last break forth as suddenly and swiftly as lightnings that gleam and flash from sky to sky. Hence the apostle writes: "Yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night; for when they shall say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." 1 Thess. v. 3–4.

These representations are irreconcilable with the expectations entertained by some disciples that the millennium must close prior to the second advent. If a thousand years of blessedness are to be enjoyed before that stupendous event occurs, surely the generation then living will be looking for it. It does not relieve the difficulty to say that, as this gracious period terminates, there will be a falling away, and to the people thus backslidden the appearing of Jesus will be unexpected, for it is inconceivable that they should not be aware of the golden era, then passing or past, and of the momentous sequel which it foretokens. Moreover, it should be remembered that Jesus and his followers speak of the gospel age, with its mixture of good and evil, as continuing without decisive results up to the hour of this supreme and final revelation. Christianity is to be propagated, to obtain marvelous and extensive conquests, to modify institutions and elevate communities, but sin is not to be entirely subdued, nor the enemies of truth be overthrown, until he shall come to rule whose right it is. The wheat and the tares are to grow together until the harvest, and the harvest is the end of the world, when the great separation shall take place. Matt. xiii. 30–43. An apostle writing of the "mystery of iniquity," whatever that may be, declares that it shall be destroyed with the brightness of the Lord's coming. 2 Thess. xi. 7, 8. John, who gives a history of the harlot Babylon, and assigns her origin and career to this present economy, connects with her ultimate ruin the descent of him "who hath on his thigh and vesture a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords." Rev. xix; and, doubtless referring to the same organized form of wickedness, Daniel says: "I beheld, and the horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High." Dan. vii. Thus this dispensation, and it is to this that these passages refer, will be characterized by apostate powers, corrupt parties, and manifold evils until it is violently ended. Consequently there is no place for a millennium during any part of its continuance, and one is only possibly at its close, and, as its close synchronizes with the second advent, the second advent must precede the millennium. The course of events will be substantially this: the gospel will be preached to all nations, many will be brought to the light, and entire communities shall be benefited; the idols shall be cut down and pagan temples closed; but side by side with evangelical progress there shall grow heresies, antagonisms, and unbeliefs; the love of many shall wax cold, and not a few, dazzled by material triumphs and the splendors of a selfish civilization, shall insist that the millennium has already dawned, that its blessings are being realized in an era when class is arrayed against class, when the poor are combining to resist the insolence of affluence, and the rich are plotting to grasp the earnings of the laborer, and when political assassination and political conception shall appall men's hearts and smite them with fear; and then, in the midst of these contentions, abuses, idle congratulations, and alarming recklessness, the sign of the Son of man shall be seen in the heavens, and his visible presence shall forever end those shallow illusions and this terrible conflict.

Jesus is to come gloriously; and here we have the climax. In the glory of his Father, in the glory of the angels, and in his own glory shall he appear "to be glorified in his saints

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. H. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
J. H. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER. WM. HAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. TALSTEAD. B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE. J. A. SIMONDS.
WILEY JONES. O. M. MYERS.
A. L. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 27, 1882. NO. 36.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE---ITS PROXIMITY. No. 121.

Witnesses. Where Slain! In what City were their dead bodies exposed! Negative concluded. Affirmative investigated. Papal Rome the Great City, shown by unanswerable proofs. The importance of the affirmative view. Witnesses' exposure.

J. P. WEETHEE.

We have, at considerable length, been tracing the history of the witnesses; followed them through their long and sackcloth state of giving testimony, have seen a wild beast, dwelling in his unextinguishable hate, rise up and make war on the witnesses, over come them and kill them. Their dead bodies lie exposed in the street of the great city. What great city? Not Jerusalem—

1. Because Jerusalem is not named.

2. Because "the great" is not an attribute of the Jerusalem of that period.

3. Because Sodom and Egypt do not properly represent the character of that Jerusalem.

4. Because the construction of the sentence does not justify such an interpretation.

5. Because Christ was not crucified in Jerusalem.

Other reasons might be urged against this view, but the reader would rather know what the name of the city is, than what it is not.

The name of the city. In mathematical investigations, to complete an equality of ratios, three terms are given to find a fourth term. Here seven terms or attributes are given; it is required to find the eighth term, or the name of the object to which these attributes properly belong. These seven attributes which we propose to consider are Street, City, The Great City, Sodom, Egypt, Crucifixion, Tenfold division.

1. Street.—By street (singular) must be understood the system of street communication; this system is composed of the vital channels of the corporate body, through which the people as life-giving fluids, are constantly circulating. The streets of cities are the places of public exposure, and are used for that object. When it is said of the witnesses that their corpses "shall lie" in the street, we are taught that they are exposed and insulted.

2. City.—They are not put to death privately, then thrown into a river, a pit, or secreted in some lonely ravine, where no mortal vision can ever bring to the light of day such a foul murder; they are publicly assassinated; their bodies are thrown into a road, a public road, a street, not of an obscure village, they are murdered and expose d in the crowded street of a city. "What is a city? Latin civitas—state; citizens united in a community; from civis, citizen; large corporate town. "In Great Britain a town corporate, which is or has been the seat of a bishop, or the capital of his see."—Webster. "What is the city but the people? True the people are the city."—Shak. The residence of a Papal Bishop would make a Papal city, the capital of a Papal see.

3. The Great City.—The city in whose street the witnesses were to be corpses and to lie exposed, is called in Rev. xi, 8, "the great city." John has recorded that expression in seven other passages. What thought do they convey? What city is named or indentified? Babylon (Babulon) e (ay) mega (megale), "Babylon, the great city." Rev. xiv. 8. Here "the great city" is called Babylon; by which is understood Mystic. "And the great city (e polis e megale) was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell, and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the fierceness of his wrath," Rev. xvi. 19. The same mystic Babylon is brought to view again. "And the woman which thou sawest is the great city (e polis e megale) which reigneth over the kings of the earth," Rev. xvii. 18. The woman is called in ver. 5, Mystery, Babylon the great. The woman, the great city, and Babylon are the same power.

"Standing afar off for fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas, the great city, (e polis e megale) that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls." Verses 16-18. "And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas, the great city (e polis e megale) wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate." Ver. 19. "And a mighty angel took up a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon (e megale polis Babulon) be thrown down, and shall be found no more." Verse 21.

In seven places it is my air Babylon, which is explained to be the woman (harlot) which is the great city that reigneth over the kings of the earth [illegible] to apply the expression "that great city," to a city called mystic Babylon, as those in Rev. xi. 8, to some other city, without any explanation, is unscriptural and highly improbable.

4. Spiritually called Sodom.—It is mystic, or literal Sodom, since it takes the name of that city which it distinctly resembles. Wherein does that city called mystic Babylon, resemble Sodom? We answer, in her moral pollutions. Mystic Babylon in her practices was like literal Babylon; literal Babylon was like Sodom; since mystic Babylon and Sodom were similar in their habits to literal Babylon, they must resemble each other. But the Bible gives us the moral characters of mystic and literal Babylon, and also that of Sodom. Let us look into their respective records.

a. Literal Sodom—its sins. What were the noted sins of Sodom, as given by inspiration? The first declaration is the following: "But the men of Sodom (were) wicked and sinners before the Lord exceedingly." Gen. xiii. 13. The cries of suffering ascended. God sent messengers that he might have personal witnesses. They came to the seat of Abraham and made known their mission. Abraham plead the cause of its righteous citizens; in which the startling truth came to light that ten righteous persons could not be found in the city. Their filthy conversation vexed Lot from day to day. Their treatment of the celestial messengers hastened their terrible doom. Lot went out of Sodom, and a sulphur and storm of fire from the Almighty consumed it. Their great sin, and one the practice of which went to Babylon and to the heathen nations, was a most unnatural lust; an abomination which God visited with the penalty of death. Ezekiel thus speaks, "Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, (luxury), and abundance of idleness was in her, and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy." Ezek. xvi. 49. According to the standard of Christ (Matt. xi. 24) Sodom will fare less severely than Capernaum, since she would have repented at the mighty works of Christ. Where then stands mystic Babylon on sin's graded scale? Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded." Luke xvii. 28. They spent their lives in luxurious dissipation. "And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned (them) with an overthrow, making (them) an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly; and delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked; (for that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with (their unlawful deeds.") 2 Pet. ii. 6-9. On those vexed Mediterranean had the following: Lot dwelled sixteen years in Sodom after he parted with Abraham; which was a long space of severe trial. Doubtless Lot, who was exceedingly grieved with the lewdness of the Sodomites from day to day, often earnestly desired to depart from the wicked city. But he was directed, it seems, by God to remain, that he might be an example of his goodness and power in delivering the ungodly both from temptation and punishment." "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities [illegible] in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange (other) flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering (having suffered) the vengeance of eternal fire." Jude 7.

The characteristics of Sodom, as given by inspiration, are now before the reader. "The great city" of Rev. xi. 7, so distinctly resembles this literal Sodom, that by Divine authority it assumes the name; spiritually or figuratively called Sodom.

The points are, Unnatural lusts, Pride, Luxury, Idleness especially among the women, Hard heartedness toward the poor. These were the chief sins of literal Sodom. Metaphorical Sodom resembles it in these five sins.

It was also spiritually (metaphorically) called Egypt. Wherein did "the great city" resemble literal Egypt?

1. Egypt was full of idols.

2. It was the land of cruel bondage for the people of God.

3. They were delivered from that slavery by the most noted judgment plagues.

Egypt well deserved to be called the land of idols. Their religion was "philosophical pantheism, the various attributes of the deity being divided amongst the different gods of the Pantheon." Osiris, Isis, and Horus, had their families of gods. Animated nature, in its infinitely varied organisms was included in the sphere of their idolatrous devotions. Their gods were of three orders. The first order had eight gods; the second was composed of twelve, and the third an unknown number.

Cambyses, son of Cyrus, took advantage of the superstition of Egypt in the following manner: "Having informed that the whole garrison (of Pelusium) consisted of Egyptians he placed in front of his army a great number of cats, dogs, sheep, and other animals, which were looked upon as sacred by that nation, and attacked the city by storm. The soldiers of the garrison, not daring either to fling a dart, or shoot an arrow that way, for fear of hitting some of those animals, Cambyses became master of the place without opposition."—Rollin.

"The great city" of the Apocalypse was also full of idols and idol worship, as will appear from its history. One proposition should always be kept in view while investigating the Apocalypse, that its divisions distinctly delineate a vast system of idolatry or idol worship, substituted as the true system of Divine worship; that this system contains within its precincts:

1. A capital city—the great city.

2. An idol temple.

3. A human god substituted as the city mayor and chief object of worship.

4. That the interpreting angel (Gabriel probably) uses various terms to designate that apostate hierarchy, such as "the great city," "woman on the scarlet wild beast," "mystic Babylon," "image to the wild beast," "the great city that reigneth over the kings of the earth,"

5. These all express one power.

Egypt had a second characteristic: it was a land of cruel bondage for the people of God. "And the Egyptians made the children of Israel serve with rigor. And they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field; all their service wherein they made them serve was with rigor." Ex. i. 13, 14. "The children of Israel sighed by reason of their bondage, and they cried, and their cry came up unto God, by reason of the bondage." Ex. ii. 23.

"The great city" is metaphorical Egypt in another point; in the deliverance of God's people from bondage by terrible judgments. The plagues of Egypt are familiar. Their origin is also known. Literal Babylon was a similar house of bondage. The captivity was short in its duration (70 years), but severe. Neh. v. 5; Ezra ix. 9. From that bondage they were delivered by Cyrus, God's typical shepherd. Isa. xliv. 28. So has Mystic Babylon been a city of bondage for the people of God; "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive of her plagues." Rev. xviii. 4. Among her merchandise were slaves and souls of men." Rev. xviii. 13. "The great city" was a chief mart, she exercised a spiritual bondage of the people of God more absolute and severe than that of Egypt: and abominations exceeding those of Sodom.

Another feature of "the great city" of Rev. ix, is its division into ten parts, as appears from verse 19. "And the tenth part (division) of the city fell." The division had been made previous to the earthquake. This is evident from the structure of the sentence. What city has Papal Rome, or Mystic Babylon? It is not said, nor is it intimated, that this division was made by the earthquake; the convulsion overthrew one of its ten divisions. The city of Rome has been the seat of two great hierarchies, to which it has given its name: the first was the pagan hierarchy, headed by the "Pontifex Maximus," the high priest: the second was the papal hierarchy controlled by a high priest, called Pope.

Hence we have had Pagan Rome and Papal Rome. A change of dynasty does not change the corporation (Rome) it was still Rome, whether Papal or Pagan, and still under the domination of a priesthood. Papal Rome dates back to the time of Constantine the Great, through the supremacy of the Papal hierarchy, extends back to about A. D. 538.

GOD ALWAYS WARNS.

1. The first of our race were warned in the garden; and at the enforcement of the warning, mercy interposed with the promise, and God's new provision, to be carried out, yet in the future. Gen. iii. 15.

2. He instructed and warned, in the days of Noah; and then supplemented the flood by the rainbow covenant; which holds good yet; and is made to encircle the bowed angel, and encircle "the throne" of the coming kingdom. Gen. ix.; Rev. iv. and x.

3. The Abrahamic covenant, confirmed by an oath, was attended with awful warnings, by "the horror of great darkness" that portrayed the prolonged captivities of his posterity, as dispersed in strange lands. Gen. xv.

The promise however supplements and supersedes and survives all the warnings so far fulfilled.

4. The law by Moses was replete with warnings at every stage; and yet the law, 430 years after the promise, "did not annul it, to render it of no effect." Its surety is "God in Christ, not imputing to them (who believe) their trespasses," because he has "found a ransom." Gal. iii.

5. Thus, the gospel with all its advanced amplitude of all the promises, gave out its tenderest and profoundest warnings against the apostacy—the rejection and fall of Christians; and the development of "anti-christ" (in the church) to antagonize his people, his cause and name, while yet the Jewish evangelical age will be closed: and crowned with the plentitude of all Divine promise in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

"He is able to save and to destroy," he knows how to deliver the godly out of temptation and reserve the unjust to the day of judgment, to be punished. 2 Peter ii. 9. "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous—his face is against them that do evil, to cut them off. Psa. xxxiv. 14-16.

The conclusion. God, having always warned his people, and having justified his warnings and promises in every age, will end up this age on the same line,

"Those oft reproved, and yet have hardened their neck, will be destroyed without remedy." But "the promise is yea and amen, to the glory of God." The first promise, Gen. iii. 15, with all that followed, remains yet to be realized (Heb. ii. 14; Rev. xx. and xxi.); and "he mercy rejoiceth against judgment" (Jas. ii. 13) there'll be no failure in promise.

The signs of Armageddon—of the end of the "fourth beast, and false prophet," (Roman and Mahomedan anti-christ), are as God's finger points, they are realities, like all parts of prophetic truth: and faith alone accepts the crisis.

The great mass rush on heedless alike of the warning of judgment; or the golden crown of life everlasting.

To my brethren of The Crisis who think they have the whole gospel while short of "the great and appointed day of the Lord" as a thousand years," I add that I am glad so far for all the faith there is in them and all the world. Nay more, I'm glad in God, that "the logos" that forewent the world, is still sounding out, "The first dominion" (as not now); Micah iv. 8; and the inheritance of the saints; and the reign with Christ, the thousand years; and the tree of life, and the unveiling and healing of the left of the nations—all as yet future. Eph. i. 18; Rev. xxii. 2; Isa. xxv. 6-8.

"Preach the word!" Proclaim the logos! But if you "will not hear," do you not take the precise position that the Jews did (John viii. 21-24) toward the same logos (word) made flesh?"

Can it be Christian to claim the full gospel promise, on that line? No, no.

All these crises, herein noted, are as so many stepping stones to aid our apprehension of the "age, and the kingdom to come." God has never once forgotten his promise, not even in executing the ungodly.

Can you presume to provoke his mercy, by rejecting this illustrated demonstration—more strikle than the world? Matt. v. 17, 18.

In Christian love and in earnest hope for good results.

J. B. COX.

Selections.

THE JEWS IN EASTERN EUROPE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 17.

The Eastern Question has so completely absorbed public attention during the last three months, that it has driven into the shade the solution of an important problem with which Europe unexpectedly found itself called upon to grapple at the beginning of the year, but which recent events have only had the effect of postponing.

Sooner or later the condition of the vast Jewish population of the east of Europe will again force itself upon the careful warnings, by "the horror of great darkness" that portrayed the prolonged captivities of his posterity, as dispersed in strange lands. Gen. xv.

The promise however supplements and supersedes and survives all the warnings so far fulfilled.

4. The law by Moses was replete with warnings at every stage; and yet the law, 430 years after the promise, "did not annul it, to render it of no effect." Its surety is "God in Christ, not imputing to them (who believe) their trespasses," because he has "found a ransom." Gal. iii.

5. Thus, the gospel with all its advanced amplitude of all the promises, gave out its tenderest and profoundest warnings against the apostacy—the rejection and fall of Christians; and the development of "anti-christ" (in the church) to antagonize his people, his cause and name, while yet the Jewish evangelical age will be closed: and crowned with the plentitude of all Divine promise in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

"He is able to save and to destroy," he knows how to deliver the godly out of temptation and reserve the unjust to the day of judgment, to be punished. 2 Peter ii. 9. "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous—his face is against them that do evil, to cut them off. Psa. xxxiv. 14-16.

The conclusion. God, having always warned his people, and having justified his warnings and promises in every age, will end up this age on the same line,

"Those oft reproved, and yet have hardened their neck, will be destroyed without remedy." But "the promise is yea and amen, to the glory of God." The first promise, Gen. iii. 15, with all that followed, remains yet to be realized (Heb. ii. 14; Rev. xx. and xxi.); and "he mercy rejoiceth against judgment" (Jas. ii. 13) there'll be no failure in promise.

The signs of Armageddon—of the end of the "fourth beast, and false prophet," (Roman and Mahomedan anti-christ), are as God's finger points, they are realities, like all parts of prophetic truth: and faith alone accepts the crisis.

The great mass rush on heedless alike of the warning of judgment; or the golden crown of life everlasting.

To my brethren of The Crisis who think they have the whole gospel while short of "the great and appointed day of the Lord" as a thousand years," I add that I am glad so far for all the faith there is in them and all the world. Nay more, I'm glad in God, that "the logos" that forewent the world, is still sounding out, "The first dominion" (as not now); Micah iv. 8; and the inheritance of the saints; and the reign with Christ, the thousand years; and the tree of life, and the unveiling and healing of the left of the nations—all as yet future. Eph. i. 18; Rev. xxii. 2; Isa. xxv. 6-8.

"Preach the word!" Proclaim the logos! But if you "will not hear," do you not take the precise position that the Jews did (John viii. 21-24) toward the same logos (word) made flesh?"

Can it be Christian to claim the full gospel promise, on that line? No, no.

All these crises, herein noted, are as so many stepping stones to aid our apprehension of the "age, and the kingdom to come." God has never once forgotten his promise, not even in executing the ungodly.

Can you presume to provoke his mercy, by rejecting this illustrated demonstration—more strikle than the world? Matt. v. 17, 18.

In Christian love and in earnest hope for good results.

J. B. COX.

Selections.

THE JEWS IN EASTERN EUROPE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 17.

The Eastern Question has so completely absorbed public attention during the last three months, that it has driven into the shade the solution of an important problem with which Europe unexpectedly found itself called upon to grapple at the beginning of the year, but which recent events have only had the effect of postponing.

Sooner or later the condition of the vast Jewish population of the east of Europe will again force itself upon the careful consideration of statesmen and philanthropists; and it is to be hoped, when that time comes, that the experiences of the last six months will not have been thrown away. It may be interesting if I should endeavor to sum, these up for the benefit of your readers, and explain how the Jewish matter now stands, the more especially as it is one in which the United States have played a considerable part.

When the Russian persecutions took place, and the frontier towns of Austria became crowded with thousands of refugees, their sufferings were such as to enlist the sympathies of England and of the wealthy Jewish communities of the continent. More than £100,000 were raised by the Mansion House Committee alone. Committees were formed at Frankfort, Berlin, Vienna, and other towns, containing a large Jewish population. The Alliance Israelite of Paris took the matter warmly in hand, and arrangements were made for the wholesale removal of the unfortunate population to Canada and the United States.

It is calculated that over 20,000 of these people have during this year landed upon your shores. You know better than I do with what result. Practically the emigration of Russian Jews to America has proved a failure. Partly because it was undertaken upon far too large a scale. This was unavoidable in view of the fearful suffering with which those who attempted to relieve it had to deal. Partly because the emigrants, owing to the conditions of their former life, were utterly unable to adapt themselves to the exigencies of American civilization or to compete successfully in its labor market; and partly because, being for the most part intensely orthodox and devoted to the observances of their religion, they found life impossible excepting at the sacrifice of their conscientious scruples. Moreover, being intensely sanguine and impulsive by temperament, and utterly ignorant of any other part of the world except that in which they lived, they formed an extravagant conception of the future which was in store for them. In comparison to Russia, any free country they felt would be a Paradise, in which the good things of this world would drop into their mouths if they opened them wide enough. They found charitable people prepared to send them to this new country, and they supposed that the same charity which transported them would continue to keep them after they got there. They were therefore wofully disappointed when they found the hard struggle in store for them, and the disadvantage at which they were placed by their ignorance of the language, their incapacity as agriculturists, and their religious scruples. Easily elated, they are no less easily discouraged and depressed. The weaker vessels soon abandoned the attempt to despair, and I fear the Russian Jews generally have earned the reputation of being the most useless, idle, and incapable class of emigrants who have ever visited your shores. Those familiar with Eastern Jews, as well as with the United States, knew from the first that it could not be otherwise, and this view was shared in by the most intelligent members of the race, both in Russia and Roumania, even though they knew nothing of the United States. The European committees, familiar neither with the characteristics of the emigrants nor with the country to which they proposed to send them, had to learn by experience the mistake they had made; and when the intolerable conditions under which these people live in Russia shall again necessitate public action it is not likely that the error will be repeated.

In the meantime these charitable committees have the disagreeable consciousness that almost every ship from the United States brings returning emigrants who have been sent out at their expense; that over 10,000 refugees still remain starving in the frontier towns of Austria, for whom the only resource is deportation to the country of their sufferings or dissolution among the already overcrowded centres of Jewish population in Europe. The solution most popular among the Russian and Roumanian Jews themselves is one against which the Western Jews have most steadily set their faces. It is not necessary to discuss why this should have been so. It is likely that when a similar crisis occurs again, the opposition of Western Jews to the colonization of Palestine by their Eastern co-religionists will be sensibly diminished, and a combined effort made, both by Jews and Christians, once more to people that land with the descendants of those to whom it originally belonged. The enthusiasm with which such a possibility was greeted by the whole Jewish nation both of Russia and Roumania has proved beyond question that it is the only solution which will satisfy popular aspiration. Indeed, so intense was it that the Turkish Government became alarmed at the national dimensions it was assuming, and issued a stringent prohibition against Jewish immigration to Palestine, which has since been extended to Syria. Notwithstanding this, the same blind, sanguine impulse which drove them like sheep into Austria with the word Amerikana on their lips, as if it was a panacea for all their troubles, began to take possession of them in their eagerness to find a refuge in Palestine. Committees and societies were formed all over Russia and Roumania; delegates were sent to Syria and Palestine; in some instances land was bought, all against the urgent remonstrances of those who felt that the movement was premature, and that, without the active cooperation of the Turkish Government, instead of its active opposition, nothing could be successfully achieved. Fortunately the emigration eastward was shocked before many hundreds had left their homes. These have since, for the most part, returned or been scattered among the Jewish communities of the larger towns in Turkey, but the result of the investigation of the deputations who have gone to examine the land in Palestine, has, in all cases, been satisfactory, and they have returned convinced that, should favorable political conditions arise, Jewish colonies might be successfully established in that country.

The reflection will naturally occur to you that Jews who have proved themselves unable to satisfy the labor requirements or to compete in agricultural pursuits in the United States, will not prove adapted to form agricultural colonies in Palestine; but the conditions of the two countries are so totally different that the same difficulties which have to be encountered in the one do not arise in the other. Besides, an emigration to be successful even in Palestine must be conducted upon totally different principles from those which governed the action of the Western committees in their recent emigration schemes to America. In the first place, emigration should not be commenced at a moment of intense persecution, when thousands of starving paupers are the subjects to be dealt with, but by means of properly organized colonization societies possessing sufficient capital, during a time of no special pressure, and these could be formed in Russia, not counting the pecuniary assistance they might rely upon from abroad. Emigrants should be carefully selected among persons possessing a certain limited capital, of which the minimum per head of a family should be $250. Hundreds of thousands of such could be found, and among them many who, though not sufficiently skilled agriculturists to compete with American labor, are conversant enough with farming to compete with local native labor. The sedentary Arab population of Palestine, who are a most harmless and docile race, and never work more hours a day than is necessary to enable them to cultivate just enough land to supply their daily wants, and who employ the most primitive farm implement, are very different rivals from the skilled American farmers, accustomed to the use of the most modern appliances, and who work their ten or twelve hours a day. Moreover, as Arab labor can be procured for about ten cents a day, the colonists themselves might employ it, and societies under whose auspices the colonies were formed might thus bring large tracts of rich land now lying waste into cultivation by means of combined Jewish and native labor, thus educating the former; and at the same time so favorable are the agricultural conditions of the country they might realize a profit. At all events, if this plan does not offer a solution, it is certain that none other does, and it is no less certain that the position of over three million of Jews in Russia and Roumania must every day grow more and more intolerable.

For the moment, owing to the fall of Ignatieff, and the accession of Count Tolstoi to office, there is a lull in the persecutions; but the Russian Jews themselves well know that it is only temporary, that the sentiments of the peasantry toward them are unchanged, that the combustible and revolutionary elements in the country, which can scarcely be restrained, must before long inevitably explode, and that when that day comes their doom is sealed if they cannot, before that catastrophe bursts upon the land, escape from it. Hence they are watching with a feverish anxiety the moment when Syria and Palestine will be open to them. Indeed, they are only beginning reluctantly to admit that they run no greater dangers by emigrating to them, than by remaining at home, so great is their alarm and impatience to find a place of refuge.

So long, however, as the Egyptian crisis lasts, the Jews in Jerusalem, Beyrout, and Damascus are even in a more unsafe position than those in Russia. At any moment there may be a fanatic outbreak at any of those places, both against Jews and Christians, such as took place at Alexandria; and, until we see whether the military operations in Egypt are going to produce a widespread holy war, no emigration of Jews to Moslem countries is desirable. Even then, so long as the Turkish Government maintains its present hostile attitude on the subject, no successful colonization of Jews in any part of the Ottoman dominions is possible. The Eastern Question must enter upon an entirely new phase before any change for the better can be effected in the condition of the oppressed and persecuted Jewish nation in Eastern Europe.—N. Y. Sun, of Sept. 11.

---

Buildings for the accommodation of Jews immigrating to Palestine have been commenced. A piece of land outside Jerusalem, purchased by the committee of the Sir Moses Montefiore Testimonial Fund, has been let to a society formed for the purpose of building thereon forty single and eighty double houses, toward the erection of which, and of suitable communal buildings, the committee has agreed to lend the sum of $125,000.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Sept. 27, 1882.

We shall soon try to find place for some contributions that have been deferred. We hope also to have something from Jerusalem for our next.

We give a chapter from a pamphlet written in 1878 by Robert Roberts, of Birmingham, England, on "Prophecy and the Eastern Question." He is regarded as one of the more able writers on these important themes. We will give one or more of his chapters in future numbers. It is his conclusion that both Britain and Russia will enact important parts in the closing scenes of Gentile history.

The Great Powers of earth are fast coming into the positions that were assigned to them more than two thousand years ago. The mystic toes on both feet of the Great Image, that magnificent symbol of world-empire, will soon be developed with marvelous distinctness. That horrible incubus of the Papacy no longer hinders the independency of the Western toes; and the Eastern foot will soon be completed with its toe extremities as the iron bands of Mohammedanism are dissolved. Our age is an age of wonders. Let us sacrifice for, hold up, and circulate the truth.

On such important themes as the divine nature and character of the Son of God, on the sufferings and death of the heaven-appointed victim, who was delivered for our offences, and raised up for our justification, on his priesthood and intercession, on his relations to the eternal God, his Father, and on the merits of his most precious blood, we feel to rest our own faith on the solemn declarations of Scripture. Our own hopes of pardon and acceptance, of the resurrection from the dead, and of the immortal life of the endless ages, are all centered in the Redeemer and Life-giver. When approaching these solemn subjects we always feel that we are treading on holy ground, and like speaking with the profoundest reverence. "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood," he offered the tribute of our heart's sincerest adoration as the Son of God, whom God himself has commanded us to honor. We hope to one day join in the glad anthem—"Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

News Items.

AUSTRIA—CONSPIRACY AGAINST THE EMPEROR'S LIFE.

VIENNA, Sept. 25.—Overdank confesses that he drew lots with his confederates to decide who should attempt to take the life of the Emperor, and that he intended to throw a bomb into the garden at Miramar Castle.

The High Court of Venice has given an opinion in the case of the recent arrests, that the extradition of assassins shall take place if they conspire against the life of the Emperor of Austria on Italian territory.

The Khedive and his subordinate officials of the Egyptian Government, left Alexandria today to resume their recently-abandoned quarters at Cairo, the capital of the country.

The trouble between Greece and Turkey in reference to the boundary line has been finally settled by Turkey surrendering to Greece the disputed frontier territory, in accordance with the decision of the international conference.

OFFERS THAT ARABI DECLINED.

CAIRO, Sept. 25.—Among Arabi Pasha's papers are written offers of service from French, German and Russian officers, which were all declined.

PRISONERS OF WAR.

DAMIETTA, Sept. 25. — Abdollal Pasha, Suleiman Bey, and a number of their associates, have been sent to Cairo as prisoners, under a military guard.

ARRIVED.

CAIRO, Sept. 25.—The Khedive has arrived.

Arabi Pasha says the best thing the English could do for Egypt would be to send all the Notables and other leading men connected with the rebellion out of the country. If they do not do so vengeance will surely be wreaked upon them after their departure.

Seeing the manner in which the British treat their prisoners and wounded, Arabi says they are a great people, and that he is heartily sorry he fought them. He asserts that he never thought the English would send a large army to assist the Khedive, and so was led into the war. He denies that he had any communication with the Sultan during the war.

The destruction and damage caused in Eastern Pennsylvania, in New Jersey, Eastern New York, and some portions of the New England States by recent heavy rains, are very great, and the report today is that, after one day's suspension, the rain resumed again this morning. Of the thirty-two bridges crossing the Rahway river, in New Jersey, sixteen have been destroyed, at a loss of over $100,000. The loss of property in that State is very great.

YELLOW-FEVER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 25.—Total cases of yellow fever at Brownsville thus far 1,870; deaths, 103. All communication is cut off with the infected districts in Mexico. Cases at Pensacola, 345; deaths, 81. Quarantine will be established around Pensacola if the Governor of Florida requests. Several cases at Isabel, one death.

Sententions.

A man may "come to himself" too late.

A wise man's day is worth a fool's life.—Arabic.

Life always takes on the character of its motive.—J. G. Holland.

Keep good company and you shall be of the number.—George Herbert.

The second childhood of a saint is the early infancy of a happy immortality.

What we charitably forgive will be recompensed as well as what we charitably give.

"Shame soon fade away, Truth endures for aye."

God has no place for a man in his kingdom who refuses to become "a partaker of his holiness."—R. T. Middleditch.

He that does a base thing in zeal to serve a friend, burns the golden thread that ties their hearts together.

I had fainted unless want and penury had chased me to the store house of all.—Rutherford.

God lives through all. His power, unwasted sweeps
The sounding scale of universal motion;
His patient love on star and violet sleeps,
And whispers in the evening pine's devotion.

The mind profits by the wreck of every passion, and we may measure our road to wisdom by the sorrows we have undergone.

There is something in favoring breezes; but a truly successful life, like a great ocean steamer, is independent of breezes.

The smallest flowret preacheth while it stays,
In that it crowns with fullness all its days,
And wasteth not to know, by any field,
If life may yet some fairer portion yield,
Nor plants that it was not born a rose:
But sweet by stubble or by greensward grows,
And unto places lying waste erewhile,
Gives all it hath a little flowret's smile.
—George H. Conner.

Moncure D. Conway writes: "I never knew why the nightingale's song was called sad until one sung near my house on the night of Emerson's death."

Some one has beautifully said: "Truth is immortal; the sword cannot pierce it, fire cannot consume it, prisons cannot incarcerate it, famine cannot starve it."

STAND FIRM.

Courage, brother, do not stumble,
Though thy path be dark as night;
There's a star to guide the humble—
Trust in God and do the right.
Some will love thee, some will hate thee,
Some will falter, some will fight;
Cease from man and look above thee!
Trust in God and do the right.

"Romanism."

Those who have read Dr. Newman's "Essay on Development," and his later writings, know on how different grounds he bases the legitimacy of the claims of the Roman Church from those on which they had been maintained in former days and in other circles. He does not contend that "Romanism" and papacy existed in full bloom in the first centuries of the church. He does not argue the Roman Catholic system is found in the New Testament or in the Apostolic age, all "cut and dried." It is there only in the germs; as it appears later, it is a development. This mode of defense involves the advantage of not being obliged to assert as facts what historical study has refuted and exploded. Whether there are not compensating dangers and disadvantages in this new line of defense may fairly be questioned. — Scribner's Monthly.

ROSCOE, Kan.

Editor Restitution:

I have been trying to get more subscribers, but times are so hard in this locality that I have not succeeded as yet. Crops are good in some parts of Kansas, but we seem to be unfortunate so far in farming. It has been settled only three or four years in this neighborhood and we may do better after a while. We have no preaching and were it not for the good old RESTITUTION we should be in the dark comparatively, but I thank God for the light which our paper brings weekly. We are greatly interested in the Eastern movements, and are in hopes that the morning of our redemption is near. We are also much interested in Mrs. Davis' letters. We hope to be able to do something for her before long.

RUSSELL J. RICHARDS.

Communications.

BIRDS OF A FEATHER, WILL FLOCK TOGETHER.

This is an old but true saying, one perhaps that we have been accustomed to hearing all our lives, and yet how few and how seldom is seen, and understood, its true signification. In the illustration found in nature, most all birds and animals of a kind will go in flocks, being the original design in the creation, as found in Gen. i. Take the duck, the crane, and the swallow, every one after his kind or feather, will flock together, and will very seldom do otherwise. Those beautiful songsters, that charm us with their sweet warblings, will not associate with the hateful crow or blackbird. Just so it is with man, the human kind, they go in pairs, and flock together. But the lesson taught by our caption pertains not to kind only in nature, but to character, or disposition of mind. For instance, men and women of rather doubtful characters are known to seek and enjoy that kind of company best, those who are full of fun and nonsense, seldom seek the associations of good pious Christians, while those radical politicians, whose brains are excited and muddled over politics, are often seen and heard chattering with birds of their own feather or kind. Take men and women of a worldly turn of mind, whose whole energies of both soul and body are bent on work and wealth (and they are many), and they very seldom have time or disposition to associate with those of a literary cast of mind, there seems to be but little or no affinity between the two. The disposition and conversation of the one seems dull and uninteresting to the other. One thinks and talks about his farm, his work, his stock and his money, while the other is heard blabbing away in a different direction. This is natural, and all well enough. In fact I can't see how it can be otherwise. For where a man's treasure is, there will his heart or mind be also. And out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks. Then if we have no treasure, nor disposition for any except on this sin-cursed earth, and that of a natural and worldly character, we only seek to gratify the flesh with its affections and lusts, and the height of our ambition is found in seeking to conform our lives to the vain customs of this evil world; while on the other hand, if our heart is fixed on things above, our conversation or citizenship enrolled in heaven, where we lay claim to rich treasure, we will be looking for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, he whom we profess to love and serve, our thoughts being brought into subjection to his holy will, and our conversation as becometh the gospel of peace. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks. And we will seek to please our God, instead of worldly-minded friends, and thus Judas-like betray our Lord. Many who have made the good confession, and started for the better land, have fell out by the way, turned back to the flesh-pots of Egypt, like the Israelites, and the sow that was washed to the mire, and thus deceive themselves most fatally. Just how it is that a Christian who loves God with all the heart, soul, strength, and mind, can love the world and the things in the world is more than I can understand. And how it is that men and women who profess to be followers of our dear Savior, can not find time or disposition to assemble with those of like faith, nor to read our dear Father's holy will, and meditate upon, and converse freely about his blessed cause, is a mystery to many. The line of demarkation between the few and the many must necessarily grow wider as the world grows worse and worse.

Birds of a feather will flock together. We are known by the company we keep.

T. P. ADAMS.

Report of Labors.

For several months past, "in journeyings often" to various portions of Virginia, I have been preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and, under the Lord's blessing, have had the privilege of baptising fourteen persons on a profession of their faith in "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," after the plain and memorable example recorded in Acts viii. 12. The disciples, returning from a preaching tour, were tenderly invited by the gracious Master to "rest awhile." Mark vi. 30, 31. This beautiful, touching, and consoling incident shows that our glorious Redeemer does not regard a proclaimer of his word as an idler, but rather as a "laborer" or "workman" (Luke x. 7; Matt. x. 10) who sometimes needs, as well as any other toiler, to "rest awhile." I would take this opportunity of giving notice that my postoffice has been changed to Oral Oaks, Lunenburg County, Va. Correspondents please take notice of this, and write to Wiley Jones, Oral Oaks, Lunenburg County, Virginia.

Conference Report.

The A. C. Conference of Northwestern Michigan convened with the church at Garfield, Aug. 19, at nine o'clock A. M. The secretary being absent L. Bower was chosen secretary pro tem. The usual committees were appointed by the chair.

Ministers present: J. Bower, Wm. Wheeler, T. J. Grundy, J. Crumb, G. W. English, L. J. Crawford, H. Burtenshaw, G. Deboice, M. J. Jones, S. R. Miller, L. Bower, and A. L. Fox.

Ruling Elders present: A. C. West, A. Amos.

The churches at Ashland, Bridgton, Big Prairie, Dayton, Freemont, Millbrook, and Garfield were represented by delegates. After reading of the minutes of the last meeting the unfinished business was first taken up, when the following resolution was introduced:

WHEREAS: At the quarterly meeting held at Dayton in April last, a motion was carried to reconsider a resolution passed at the annual meeting at Millbrook last January, approving the action of the Forreston convention of Adventists in their endeavors to notify our work and means to warn the world and prepare a people for the coming judgment, etc., and

WHEREAS: Such motion to reconsider has had no precedent in the annals of any assembly, and is contrary to parliamentary usage, therefore

Resolved, That said motion to reconsider be rescinded.

Carried unanimously.

The following resolution, introduced by O. R. L. Crozier at the quarterly meeting held at Dayton in April last, and laid on the table to be considered at the next quarterly meeting was brought up.

WHEREAS: Considerable dissatisfaction is expressed in regard to the action of the Forreston convention, and another similar convention is to be held the coming season, therefore

Resolved, That we request the convention at its next session to revise its action of last season, and remove all appearances of injustice and creed-making, and assumption of authority over local churches.

It was moved that the foregoing resolution be left on the table. Passed unanimously.

Bro. Fox presented himself to the conference for membership being previously recommended by Bro. Drew, whereupon the chair appointed the following ministerial committee, T. C. Grundy, L. Bower, G. W. English.

The time allotted for the reports of ministers was devoted to a social conference, in which all present took part, and indeed it was good to be there.

Conference adjourned to the call of the chair. Conference met again at 3:20 P. M. The committee reported favorably in behalf of Bro. Fox, the conference received the report and A. L. Fox was received into the conference.

Moved that J. Bower be appointed a delegate to the Advent Christian Association to be held at Amboy, Ill., Sept. 18, 1882, motion prevailed. It was moved that Bro. Crawford be appointed to receive donations to defray the expenses of delegates to Amboy meeting; motion prevailed.

Moved that the churches of this conference take up a monthly collection for a conference fund, and that said collection be sent to the conference by the delegate to the quarterly meeting; motion prevailed.

Moved that the next quarterly meeting be held with the church at Sylvester, in connection with the annual meeting of the Missionary Society of Michigan, in October; motion prevailed.

Moved that L. J. Crawford preach the opening sermon; motion prevailed. Conference adjourned to meet at Sylvester.

This was one of the very best meetings we have had; there were no side-issues, all were of one spirit and one mind. In the love feast there were sixty testimonies, in about fifty minutes. How blessed it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.

L. BOWER, Sec. pro. tem.

The Sixth Chapter of Romans.

By what method of interpretation is the sixth chapter of Romans made to teach a spiritual baptism? What does the apostle mean by "obeying from the heart that form of doctrine?" What is the form, or likeness, if it is not the death, burial and resurrection of immersion in water? We cannot picture Christ's death to the world by being baptised of the Spirit, Christ did not die, when the Spirit descended upon him. It lighted upon him in the form of a dove, after his baptism, and long before he suffered on the cross. We are not buried with him by the Spirit, into death.

All the figures used, point to an act that, like a painting, brings out to the eyes of the lookers-on, a solemn and wonderful scene, or rather a succession of solemn and wonderful scenes—the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ.

S. ROXANA WING.

Selections.

BETWEEN MOSLEM AND JEW.

If we use civilisation and Christendom as synonymous terms—and by Christendom I do not mean necessarily to imply that it is composed of Christians, but merely use the word as a generic theological expression—it is easy to perceive why it should be regarded by Moslem and Jew from very different points of view, and as destined to exercise a very opposite influence upon the future of the two religions. So far as the Moslem is concerned, instead of yielding to the influence of civilisation, they only tend to arouse his fanaticism. Totally unable to adapt himself to them socially or politically, he finds himself in the presence of a force, the insidious character of which he is unable to resist, and beneath which he instinctively feels he is destined to succumb, if he cannot successfully oppose its advance by the sword. Hence we have the idea of a jehad, or religious war, engrafted in his nature; he is trained from his earliest childhood to a hatred of the Giaour, and cherishes through life the hope that the day may come when an opportunity may arise for giving it forcible expression. The Jew, on the other hand, entertains no such hostile feeling for the Christian, though, God knows, he has much more reason to do so. His terrible struggle for existence has sharpened his faculties, until he has acquired a marvellous instinct for the exploitation of his Christian neighbors; but it has not developed any hatred for them. On the contrary, those who are not too "advanced" feel a proud sense of religious and intellectual superiority which, so far as the latter part of the sentiment is concerned, has been fully justified by experience. The orthodox Jew is sustained under all the adverse circumstances of his fate by the living hope that the real history of his race is still to come. The Moslem feels that his history lies in the past. Sullen and dogged, his highest consolation rests in the belief, for which he has prophetic indications, that, like Samson, his end will be to pull the temple of Christendom about his ears and bury himself in its ruins. The orthodox Jew believes, and is no less supported in that belief by the assurances of his sacred books, that those ruins are destined to prove the foundations of his future greatness and triumph; but in order to this consummation he feels that the tribal distinction and religious exclusiveness of his race must be preserved. Hence it is that the orthodox Jews of Russia and the east of Europe have manifested a strong opposition to the desire of their more advanced Western co-religionists to promote a mass emigration to America, and have inaugurated a counter movement in favor of a return to the East, which has seized upon the imagination of the masses, and produced a wave of enthusiasm in favor of emigration to Palestine, the force and extent of which only those who have come in contact with it, as I have done, can appreciate.—Laurence Oliphant, in the Nineteenth Century.

THE TOMB OF AMPLIAS.

The archæological researches in Rome of recent years have thrown much light upon the life of the early Christians in that city; but no discovery has produced such interest as that just announced of the tomb of Amplias. Says Paul in Rom. xvi. 8, "Greet Ampliss, my beloved in the Lord." Who was Ampliss? Who were his friends? Why was he buried in this particular place? The answer to these questions are all furnished by the discovery of his tomb; and a flood of light let in upon the times of the early Roman Christians. His tomb stands in one of the catacombs excavated in the time of Domitian, on the ground then belonging to Flavia Domitilla, his niece. Roman history preserves the fact that Flavia became a Christian. Ampliss, the friend of Paul, must have been a distinguished man. Because he was buried in Flavia's cemetery, we judge they were personally acquainted. By Paul's greeting, we imagine he was a minister of the New Word. Then the tomb is of such a character that only the possessor of great wealth could have constructed so remarkable a resting-place. Was this the work of Flavia, niece of the great Domitian? Was it erected at the cost of his family? or by the early Christians of Rome? These questions are not yet concluded. All that we know at present is that there is no tomb in the catacombs that equals it for the beauty of its adornments and the variety of pictorial illustrations. The frescos in the golden house of Nero, and the adornments of the house of Germanicus in the Palentine, are not to be compared, so it is reported, with the symbolic illustrations of the tomb of Ampliss, the teacher of Flavia, the beloved of Paul.—Christian Chronicle.

SELECTED MISCELLANY.

In Syria and Palestine, in 1881, there were thirty societies or individuals conducting 302 schools; of which 120 were of the American Presbyterian Mission, 45 of the Church Mission Society of London; 80 British Syrian schools; 10 under Friend Missions. These schools had 7,476 male and 7,149 female pupils. In Beirut alone there were, at non-Protestant schools, 8,183 pupils, of whom, 1,250 are in the Jesuit schools. Of Protestant missionaries there are 81 male, 110 female foreign laborers; 581 native laborers; preaching stations, 140; organized churches, 26.—National Baptist.

REFUGEES IN JERUSALEM.

A correspondent writing from Palestine says: "The streets of Jerusalem have during the last few weeks been thronged with refugees from Egypt and Jewish fugitives from Russia. Whole families have come as well as single individuals. Most of them are utterly destitute, and think themselves fortunate if they can but obtain sufficient food to keep body and soul together. The missionaries of the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews have an unusually large amount of work among Jewish emigrants, and sorely require help both as to means and men. At this crisis the aid afforded by the medical department and the hospital is invaluable. The schools are crowded with Jewish children, and many more desire admittance who cannot well be taken for want of space and means. The Hebrew and other services at Christ Church are largely attended by inquiring Jews. Last Sunday morning every available seat was occupied. There is a large harvest of souls to be gathered in. Inquirers come flocking in, singly and in households, by tens and by fifties, to hear the gospel."

The anti-Jewish agitation in Berlin, which appears to have somewhat subsided, has again broken out in view of the approaching general election for the Prussian Landtag. As a measure of prudence it is understood that the Progressists will not bring forward any Jew as candidate in Berlin. Dr. Henrici, whose popularity is very great, holds forth weekly amid the enthusiastic plaudits of a crowd numbering upward of 3,000, assembled in a public-house saloon, demonstrating that there can be neither national dignity nor economic, artistic, nor literary prosperity in Germany so long as the Jews are tolerated. The famous Pastor Stocker has also returned to the capital, and announces that he will immediately resume his sermons against the Jews. Within the last few weeks all the Jews in several parts of Bessarabia who have kept grog shops have been expelled from their homes by peasants acting on the orders of the police. Trade is reported to be at a complete standstill at Elizabethgrad.

Mr. George Muller, of the Bristol Orphanages, is reported convalescent. He is slowly regaining strength, and intends taking a tour in Southern Europe, where he hopes to make more rapid progress, and also to preach occasionally, as God gives him strength. In response to questions recently addressed to him on the subject of unfilled prophecy, he said: "I believe that the whole Roman Empire, including not only its Western division—Britain, France, Spain, Italy, Austria, etc., but also its Eastern division—Greece, Egypt, Servia, Thrace, and Turkey and Roumania, will eventually be formed into a confederacy of exactly ten kingdoms, that the Antichrist, or Man of Sin, who will be revealed in course of time, will reign as Imperial head over this Ten-kingdom Confederacy. Mr. Muller agrees in this with almost all of the most advanced students of prophecy.—Christian Herald.

Three boundary stones, of remarkable beauty and completely covered with inscriptions, hieroglyphic signs of the zodiac, and human figures, finely executed, have been quite lately received from Babylon by the British Museum. The first stone bears the name of Meli-sikhu, king of Babylon (a name contained in the list of kings discovered by Mr. T. G. Pinches), who ruled as early as B. C. 1175. The second carries the date of the fifth year of Nebu-kain-abli, king of Babylon, a name not yet elsewhere found, either in cuneiform documents or in classical histories. However, the style of writing borne upon it indicates a period at the beginning of the seventh century B. C. It exhibits two images, one that of the king and the other that of Ziria, to whom the estate it bounded was granted. The third stone possesses even greater interest, not only from the consideration that it is engraved with still more care, but from the fact made known by the inscription, that the stele was set up by order of Nebuchadnezzar as a memorial of the taking back of a piece of land from the Elamites and of its restoration to the country of Akkad. Another side is wholly taken up with the supposed zodiacal signs. No date is supplied. In all, thirteen cases of antiquities have arrived recently at the British Museum from Baghdad.—Independent.

The following sketch of the route from Tel-el-Kebir to Cairo from the London Times will give the reader an intelligent idea of the movements of the English army: "Tel-el-Kebir is situated in a luxuriantly fertile district called the El-Wady. This estate at one time belonged to the Suez Canal Company, but was sold in 1863 by them to the Government of Egypt for the sum of £400,000. At a distance of eight miles from Tel-el-Kebir the sweet-water canal divides at a place called El-Abassa-el-Sagra. One branch of it continues along the line of rail to Zagazig, the other travels in a south-westerly direction to Belbeis, which is about ten miles distant, and where the line, after it has made the detour by Zagazig, is met again. Following the line of railway, three miles from the division of the canal the station of Abdu-Hamed is reached, after which the country is extremely fertile. Passing over two low irrigation canals at a distance of ten miles, we come to Zagazig, an important town with a population of some 38,000 souls, among which were many Europeans. Seven miles from here is Burdeu, and six miles further on is Belbeis, where, as mentioned above, the new fresh-water canal from Cairo to Ismailia is met with again. The line now passes through a woody and fertile district. Branching off in a south-westerly direction it comes, at a distance of seventeen and one-half miles, to the town of Shibeen-el-Yahoodeh, or "The Mound of the Jews." After passing Shibeen-el-Kanater, at a distance of eleven and three-quarter miles comes Kalioob, and ten miles further on is Cairo."

"MAN HAS BUT ONE CHANCE."

"Gentlemen, this universe, up to the edge of the tomb, is not a joke. There are in this life serious differences between the right hand and the left. Nevertheless, in our present career, a man has but one chance. Even if you come weighted into the world, as Sindbad was with the Old Man of the Sea, you have but one chance. Time does not fly in a circle, but forth, and right on. The wandering, squandering, desiccated moral leper, is gifted with no second set of early years. There is no fountain in Florida that gives perpetual youth; and the universe might be searched, probably in vain, for such a spring. Waste your youth; in it you shall have but one chance. Waste your middle life; in it you shall have but one chance. Waste your old age; in it you shall have but one chance. It is an irreversible natural law that character attains final permanence, and in the nature of things final permanence can come but once. This world is fearfully and wonderfully made, and so are we, and we shall escape neither ourselves nor these stupendous laws. It is not to me a pleasant thing to exhibit these truths from the side of terror; but, on the other side, these are the truths of bliss; for, by this very law through which all character tends to become unchanging, a soul that attains a final permanence of good character runs but one risk and is delivered once for all from its torture and unrest. It has passed the bourn, from behind which no man is caught out of the fold. He who is the force behind all natural law is the keeper of his sheep, and no one is able to pluck them out of his hand. Himself, without variableness or shadow or turning, he maintains the irreversibleness of all natural forces, one of which is the inexorably majestic law by which character tends to assume final permanence, good, as well as bad."—Rev. Joseph Cook, D. D.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The next general meeting of the Church of God will be held at Adeline, Ogle Co. Ill., commencing Thursday, Sept. 28, and continue over Sunday, Oct. 1. A general attendance is desired. By order of the

COMMITTEE.

The Church in Michigan will hold its next Quarterly Conference (D. V.) in the school house at Coat's Grove, Barry County, commencing Friday evening, Sep. 29, at 7 o'clock, and continue over Sunday. Coat's Grove is in the s. w. corner of Woodland Tp., and seven miles n. e. of Hastings. Strangers coming with teams will ask for G. W. Coats. Those coming by rail will come on the Grand River Valley R. R. and leave the cars at Hastings. Trains will be met by teams to convey parties to the meeting on Friday as follows, going east at 1:40 p.m. going west at 2:52 p. m. Able speakers will be in attendance, and a cordial invitation is extended to all to be present and hear the truth.

HERBERT MILLER, Sec.

PROSPECTUS.

Without unnecessary delay, after three hundred copies shall have been subscribed for, I hope that, by the blessing of the Lord, I shall be able to publish a handsome cloth-bound book of about three hundred and twelve pages, to be entitled, "Family Topics, or Discourses on Subjects of World-wide Importance; by Wiley Jones." Price $1.00 per copy. Send orders now, but don't send the money until you receive the book. Will all the brethren and sisters please be as good as to aid, by their subscriptions, in bringing this work before the public? Fifty copies have already been subscribed for one brother alone has already ordered ten copies. Send orders to Wiley Jones, Oral Oaks, Lunenburg County, Va.

Poetry.

SEA OF GALILEE.

[The original, in the hand writing of the author, the Rev. Robert McCheyne, was given after his return from Palestine, and only a few days before his death, to Mr. J. C. Kuhn, who years ago gave it to a former pastor of a Presbyterian church as treasured in the heart and memory of Mr. Knox, it was as follows:—

With awe I scan thy deep blue wave,
Thou Sea of Galilee!
For Glory's King who came to save,
So often stood by thee.

Admire I must the lakes I love,
Where pine and heather grow,
But thou hast beauties far above,
What nature can bestow.

'Tis not because the shy gazelle,
Drinks daily of thy tide,
But Christ, of whom the gospels tell,
Oft wandered by thy side.

'Tis not because the fig-tree grows,
With palms in thy soft air,
But Sharon's fair and bleeding rose,
Once shed its fragrance there.

'Tis not that mountains round thee meet,
Thou calm reposing sea,
But that the sacred hallowed feet
Of Jesus walked o'er thee.

Those days are past,—Bethsaida, where?
Chorazin where art thou?
In tents, wild Arabs shelter there,
Rank wild reeds shade thy brow.

Tell me, ye smouldering fragments tell,
Was Christ's own city here?
Then, raised to heaven—now, sunk to hell,
With none to shed a tear.

O that my Sock from thee would learn,
How days of grace may flee,
That all the offered Christ who spurn,
Shall mourn at last like thee.

Was it beside this very sea
The risen Savior said,
To Simon thrice, dost thou love me?
My lambs and sheep then feed.

O Savior! Though at God's right hand,
Thou art a Savior still;
Graved on thine heart this sacred strand
And every fragrant hill.

Lord give me, by this sacred wave,
Threefold thy love divine;
That I may feed till in my grave,
The Sock that's thine and mine.

—Selected by M. E. Boulton.

Communications.

Words of Warning; or Ten Years with the Christadelphians. By Thomas C. Nichols, formerly Editor of "Zion's Herald." Nottingham, Eng., 1882.

This is a tract of sixteen pages in which the author states that "his object is not to set forth his 'ideas of truth,' but to warn his readers of the dangers incurred by embracing Christadelphianism." He says: "Some ten years ago I published a pamphlet entitled 'Why I Left the Particular Baptists and Became a Christadelphian,'" and he adds in a foot-note: "A departure from truth to speculative and unscriptural theories." He appeals to the reader "not to undermine the Protestant and gospel institutions founded by the most devoted piety and anxious solicitude of our fathers." It would be interesting to know which of the many conflicting sects of our Protestant fathers is here referred to; because "the traditions of the elders" are not by any means to be accepted without question. Mr. Nichols also enumerates twelve propositions which, he says, "form a very essential portion of the Christadelphian programme." Among these are the sinful flesh of Christ, mortal resurrection, non-salvation of infants—"no guidance of the Holy Spirit in these days," etc. These of course he condemns; but he fails to do a bare act of justice to his quandam co-religionists, in acknowledging what they consider as primary and vital doctrines, namely, "the gospel of the kingdom, and life eternal only in Christ." Mr. Nichols fails also to see that the error of the Christadelphians consists in failing to distinguish between fundamentals and secondaries in doctrine, and in consequently elevating certain opinions regarding the latter to a level with the "one faith." This is of necessity followed by denying the right of private judgment and free discussion on all such topics. The author also speaks very vaguely about baptism and its accessories. He uses only such terms as "Repent and be baptized"—"baptized into union with Christ"—"baptised believer in Christ;" while he throughout adheres to his resolution "not to set forth his 'ideas of truth'" even as regards the primary elements of saving faith. Well may the author exclaim against the exclusiveness of Christadelphians, when he can print sixteen pages of "warning" and content himself with the undefined terms "repent" and "believe" as the antecedents of being baptized.

But Mr. Nichols overlooks the vast multitudes of professing Christians who persistently ignore the necessity of obeying the apostolic command to "Repent and be baptized." If a line is to be drawn at all it must be drawn somewhere. And as Mr. Nichols is not a Universalist, it is to be presumed from his "warning" that he honestly draws it at baptism. If this be so, why should he be offended because Christadelphians honestly draw it elsewhere. It seems to be forgotten that no system of exclusiveness of human devising can interfere with the purpose of God—that the Judge of all the earth shall do right as regards infants, heathen, and every grade of professing Christians, from Christadelphian to Universalist, notwithstanding human theories or practice on the subject.

It seems quite evident to us that this pamphlet is only intelligible on the supposition that the author has gone back to Baptistism, and has renounced not only the speculative dogmas held by the Christadelphians, be they right or wrong, but also what are truly scriptural truths of the most fundamental character—the very elements of the one faith originally delivered to the saints.

It is rather singular that the author should profess "not to set forth his own views of truth" and yet make it so plain that he strongly holds the opposite view of the various Christadelphian propositions he sets forth. And the way in which he speaks of their effect upon those who hold them shows that he sets as high an estimate upon his views regarding them as the Christadelphians do upon theirs. While Christians are under strong obligations to "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints," they are under no such obligations to contend for their opinions on minor points. At the same time they are at liberty to maintain their opinions on suitable occasions consistently with decency and order in the assembly, and with a due regard, both in public and in private, to "keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

There is another important consideration also worthy of note here. If there is any foundation for the Israelitish sense of the "gospel of the kingdom," as we most certainly believe there is, the Christadelphian with all his redundancies of speculative opinion, believes gospel, and gives it the primary place in his faith and hope. On the other hand, the ordinary Baptist, with whatever of primary or secondary truth he possesses, denies that gospel, and so gives it no place in his faith and hope. The question arises—will this Scriptural faith of the Christadelphian save him in spite of his opinions even granting these to be erroneous? And again will any portion of truth possessed by the ordinary Baptist save him in spite of his ignorance, denial, or unbelief, of "the gospel of the kingdom of God"—that gospel of which Christ himself intimated that it "should be preached for a witness among all nations"—and that "he that believeth not shall be condemned?"

We take our leave of Mr. Nichols by expressing our conviction and our hope that before another ten years pass over his head, he will find that his former judgment respecting the primary elements of Christadelphian faith—the kingdom and the life—was sounder than his present judgment which has apparently led him to renounce the solid and the certain along with the unstable and the doubtful.

J. C.

For your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. Matt. vi. 32.

I was feeling a little gloomy the other day on account of the oppressive weather and my reduced bank account, "The path of life seemed to be overcast with shade," when all at once I opened the Book where the above verse is to be found. I can never tell you the joy I experienced in reading over this precious declaration. It was such a pillow to my head. "He knows"—then he will not let me stay longer in Gethsemane than will be for my good. When we can joy in the God of our salvation, we can understand Habakkuk when he spoke of his independence of earth's supplies. A friend suggested a walk as the best cure he had found for the "blues." I thought to myself that depends upon where you walk to. If to some secret spot where one can look out the noisy world and be alone a little while with the Father, then indeed I agree with my friend.

"Oh what peace we often forfeit,
O what needless pain we bear,
All because we do not carry
Every thing to God in prayer."

I think the consciousness that God cares for me, and will withhold no good thing from me so long as I reverence and obey him, is the highest experience one can reach in this world, in any church under any system of religious instruction. Faith unfeigned in God, and a correct conception of the Christ our Lord is the highest point one can reach—during our first instalment of life.

I sometimes wish the contributors to THE RESTITUTION would deal a little more with their daily trials—their every day fight of faith—their escapes and conflicts—their combats with Apolyon—the joy they experience in discovering the stepping stones—the King's finger posts, for the guidance of pilgrims from the city of destruction to the city that hath foundations.

Surely I am not the only one of your readers that has to combat adversaries, overcome difficulties, suffer at the hand of ——— by the tongue of false friends? Has the discovery of unconsciousness between death and the resurrection wrought an exemption of Christian pilgrims from cross bearing and other things disagreeable to flesh and blood which the Book points out as incidents to the road leading to the New Jerusalem? I sometimes fear that my dear friends who write such grand articles about things to be experienced hereafter may possibly forget the privilege and duty of the hour. A drowning man would much rather have a piece of plank or rope, than an essay on—The absence of all water in the new earth. "There will be no more sea."

Just now THE RESTITUTION of the Aug. 16th is handed me by one of my children, and I must tell you—take it altogether—it is the most interesting, entertaining and instructive paper I read. I see that J. F. G. insists that the sacred tragedy enacted on Calvary was a wicked—deliberate murder! "only this and nothing more." No mystery about it. He says "if the motives which prompted the Father to send his Son—his Christ on his mission, were properly appreciated we would be emancipated from the bondage of fear into the perfect liberty of love." A consummation most ardently to be sought for, looked for. Where, I would ask, are we to learn—get a better knowledge of the Divine motive? Has the Almighty been telling the secret of his purposes to only a few confidential friends? O hear it, and bind it to thy heart, ye trembling, and fearful ones—"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have eternal life." Love was the motive, "For God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." There is no meaning or sense in such sentences as this if Jesus' death was brought about involuntarily, in spite of himself.

There are several points in my friend's rejoinder I would like to notice, such as—"The Son of God" (so-called). Is he not the Son of God? At his baptism as well as at his transfiguration was he not so addressed? and in such a way as to forever settle his claim to this exalted title? Son, is one of the most familiar and best known titles of our Lord. "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God and they that hear shall live." "All men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father." "God hath spoken unto us by his Son." "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee;" who else is addressed as "The Son," "My Son," "The Son of God," "My well beloved Son," "My only begotten Son?" Hear what Peter says, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Did Peter make a mistake here? If he did, would not Jesus have suggested to Peter the two words my friend has bracketed? ("so-called"). But we are all familiar with what follows this declaration of Peter. The divinity of Christ is the rock upon which Christianity in all its varied forms rests upon—is built. Whatever else we may differ in, here we must agree.

If Jesus was removed as a common criminal, what meaning can be attached to the following expressions, viz., Father if it be possible let this cup pass, nevertheless not as I will but as thou wilt? Again hear him, "O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done," etc.

To illustrate, supposing a dozen or more four-year-old children were to prepare a cup of deadly poison before my eyes and then ask me to stoop down so they could press it to my lips, and supposing if you please that I a strong, muscular man, consented to this pigmy conspiracy, would my friend J. F. G. call that an outrage—a murder? Nay verily, I have too much respect for his general good sense to think of such an absurdity. He would speak of it and treat it as any other sensible man would—a wonder—mysterious, inexplicable. In eternity we may be able to know more of Jesus' obedience unto death, even the death of the cross. To me, the fact of its mysteriousness enhances the charm and the glory that surround and centre in it. A recent tourist in describing Mount Blanc spoke of being unable to see its entire enormous height because of a thick fog that had overlapped its upper stories. Instead of lessening the grandeur of the scene, this veiling process rather intensified and added to the dimensions of this wonder of nature. So it would seem God has thought proper to veil the topmost story of Calvary, so that the clearest heads and strongest visions must come down and join the little ones in the charms.

"The half was never told,
The half was never told,
Of grace Divine how wonderful,
The half was never told."

Peter's arraignment of the participants in the crucifixion would have been in better place, had he noted a different role under the cross questioning of the servant girl. Don't you say so? "Behold ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine and intend to bring this man's blood upon us." By this utterance we see that this man knew nothing of the Christ, "High Priest" though he was, he had a false conception of our Lord Jesus.

In conclusion I reiterate that the sin of sins, the crime of crimes is the rejection of Christ. "He that believeth not shall be damned." Father in heaven, help me to see my duty and do it. May we kiss the Son lest he be angry and we perish by the way.

I. McCURRY.

Youths' Column.

Drifting Away.

Drifting away, drifting away,
Are our childhood's sunny hours,
Drifting into the distant past,
Golden moments, too bright to last,
They are no longer ours.

Drifting away, drifting away,
Those joyful hours when we used to play,
Or gather at night by the mother's knee
To hear her stories with childish glee,
That mother's loved voice is now hushed for aye,
Those hours forever have drifted away.

Drifting away, drifting away,
Lengthening the distance day by day:
What joys have taken their place? I say.
Some have grown cold with life's rough wear,
Some are bowed down with a burden of care,
Eyes once sparkling have lost their light,
Hair once raven is silvery white,
Steps once buoyant are tired and slow,
Hopes once exultant are now laid low;
There are broken hearts, there are bitter tears,
And blasted hopes for the future years.
Christ is sad, sad indeed to say
That childhood forever has drifted away.

Drifting away, yes, drifting fast
Into the never-returning past;
Nothing that's earthly for long can last—
Youth and beauty must drift away,
All here is stamped with the word decay—
But oh, my friends, there is Christ our "Rock"
Standing firm though the world's foundations rock,
Standing the test of time and tide,
Safe 'neath the shelter may we abide,
So that in death we may smile and say,
"We are drifting out to eternal day."

—M. E. Hackett, in Christian Weekly.

Parental Influence.

Many Christian parents although aiming to train their children in principles of right, forget the wide-reaching and long-enduring character of their work. When one looks upon the multitude of youthful criminals in this land, the miseries and cruelties which grow out of parental thoughtlessness, carelessness and evil example, we cannot lightly think of the value of the work of those who train their children into habits of self-respect, integrity and consideration of others. The good citizenship of the country comes from well-regulated, Christian homes. "The more of moral meaning there is in any life or family the more powerful are they as facts and forces in the world." There is a need that home influence should be everything that is desirable. The father of a family who has an abhorrence of all that is mean, tricky and underhanded in business, and the mother who despises untruthfulness, gossip and slander, can no more help forming desirable characters in their children than the sun can help aiding the growth of the golden grain.

It has been said that work done for God "doth not." This is a truth which has not the influence on Christian people, in general, which it deserves. Men are often stimulated to endeavor by the thought that their work will live after them, but when it is work which especially honors God they forget its permanent character.—Baptist Weekly.

Hard to Be a Christian!

Hard to be a Christian! Of course it is. But, whether you believe it or not, it is a great deal harder not to be one. That is to say, you have a harder time than if you were one. You have at least as many cares and trials as if you were a Christian, and as many temptations. Every sad and trying element of human life is manifested in your experience as often and as signally as it would be if you were one of Christ's followers; you thrust yourself inevitably upon many sharp points of evil habits which you might in that case escape; and you look what a true Christian—however feeble and imperfect his success as yet may be—always possesses, the consciousness that his Creator and he are no longer working at cross purposes; that he is in harmony with God's will and plan for him; that omniscience, omnipotence and infinite love are occupied in shaping his circumstances so that, however painful they may be today, they are sure to prove full of blessing in the end. You may not think this consciousness a very solid advantage, but if you had it, in the sense that the Christian has it, you would.—Congregationalist.

Letters to a Son.—No. 4.

My Dear Son:

"What must I do to be saved?" is the most important question one can ask, and is only equalled in importance by the answer which is given it. And, thanks be to God, there is an answer to it from the mouth of an apostle,—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." But this answer suggests another question,—What is it to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ? For an answer to this, John says: "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples which are not written in this book; but these are written; that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." John xx. 30, 31. Here believing in Jesus is believing that he is "the Christ." On the day of Pentecost, Peter gave the Jews the same summary of the faith, in defining what they were to believe concerning Jesus: "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly that, that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ." Acts ii. 36.

But this only helps us so far, and another question arises,—What is involved in the designation "the Christ," for it is plain that, unless this be understood, no one can intelligently respond to the invitation, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

My dear son, I claim your especial attention while I endeavor, by the help of God, to work this faith in your heart, by directing you to the only source of the knowledge of the Christ which is open to us—namely, the Spirit's teaching in the Old Testament Scriptures. In the New we have the claims of Jesus established; but in the Old we have revealed to us in circumstantial definition what he claimed to be.

Following this plan, then, I make my starting-point the covenant made with David. I would like you to read carefully 2 Sam. vii., noticing especially verse 8: "Now, therefore, so shalt thou my unto my servant David, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I took thee from the sheep-cote, from following the sheep, to be ruler of my people Israel." Note here, that David was ruler over God's chosen people, the nation of Israel. Again, in verse 12, the Lord says to him regarding a certain successor to him in the kingdom: "And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom." Now, I will ask you to consider upon what principle could you come to the conclusion that the kingdom here promised to David's Son is a different kingdom from that of his father—namely, over the people or nation of Israel. But all doubt is dispelled by verse 16: "And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee; thy throne shall be established for ever." This clearly shows that it is the same kingdom—his house (or family), his kingdom, and his throne, are to be established for ever in the person of a descendant.

If the Lord intended that David's Son should have his kingdom established over another people than Israel, it would be found in subsequent prophecy. But it is impossible to get any intelligible idea of the Christ if we reject his relation to Israel and the throne of David. The Christ is inseparably interwoven with the whole prophetic history of Israel. We cannot study what the Scriptures teach concerning Christ, unless we strictly preserve the connection and integrity of the whole.

To give you a more selection from the prophets, I might take first the question of Isaiah: "Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" Isa. liii. 1. Why did the prophet ask this question? In the two preceding chapters he had described various calamities in which Zion and Jerusalem are to be involved. From these they were to be delivered, when the Lord should make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, when all the ends of the earth should see the salvation of Israel's God. From the glowing description there given of Israel's future deliverance, the prophet turns to the deliverer, Jehovah's servant. He was the cause of astonishment to many. Although high and exalted was the position he claimed, yet so marred was his appearance and his form, that such an anomaly gave rise to the question,—"Who hath believed our report?" and the answer in chapter liii. explains the anomaly, and gives the reason why he was marred. It also shows clearly that he was to be rejected by Israel—persecuted unto death. Although it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and to put him to grief, even to make his soul an offering for sin, yet he was to see his seed, and to prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord was to prosper in his hand. On this passage, I only remark further at present, that when the Christ's intercession for the transgressors has become effectual, and when Jerusalem is in the condition described in chapter ii. 18—"There is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth, neither is there any that taketh her by the hand of all the sons that she hath brought up"—then he shall offer her his hand, be accepted, and become her guide.

As the resurrection of Christ is only implied in Isa. liii., you will find express intimation of it in the Psalms—"I have set the Lord always before me; because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved. Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth; my flesh also shall rest in hope; for thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption." Psa. xvi 8–10. Then, in Psa. lxviii. 18 we have his ascension into heaven in these words: "Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive." Also in Psa. cx. 1: "The Lord said unto my lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool." If you will carefully read these psalms, you will find that they apply to one who is to be the deliverer of Israel and the destroyer of their enemies. But Psalm lxix. shows that this deliverance is not immediately after the sufferings of the deliverer. Here his sufferings are placed in connection with the pouring out of indignation upon Israel for their ill-treatment of him. But the dissolution thus caused comes to an end; for at the close of the psalm it is plainly intimated that Zion should be delivered, and the cities of Judah rebuilt and possessed by the descendants of Israel. The circumstances indicated in the psalms quoted are also referred to in another part of Isaiah—"Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your dread. And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. And many among them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken. Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples. And I will wait upon the Lord, that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him." Isa. viii. 13–17. This refers to the intercession spoken of in chapter liii. The calamities to befall Israel are predicted in clear terms by many of the prophets, and there is invariably a final deliverance from them all. Take as a specimen Amos ix. 14, 15: "And I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."

During the interval of Israel's rejection a great work has been going on. God has been worried spreading out his hands to his rebellious people, and has said, "Behold me, behold me," to a people not called by his name. Isa. lxv. 1, 2. In chapter xlix.—the whole of which I would like you to read carefully—the deliverer is represented as complaining that his work had not been successful, because Israel had not been gathered. Jehovah replied: "It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the ends of the earth." But the Messiah is reserved for Israel's restoration, as plainly declared in verse 8: "I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages."

To accomplish the deliverance of Israel from "the desolations of many generations," the Redeemer comes to Zion, Isa. lix. 20; but he comes from the heavens. "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him." Dan. vii. 13, 14. This vision embraces a time of great judgments upon the nations of the earth. In chapter xii. a time of trouble is mentioned, evidently that referred to in chapter vii. In connection with this is the deliverance of Israel and the resurrection of the dead. "At that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince who standeth for the children of thy people. There shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall shine as the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." Dan. xii 1–3. It is evidently to this period that Isaiah alludes: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." lx. 1. In this chapter we have the final restoration of the twelve tribes of Israel to their own land, and their re-establishment as the kingdom of God. This is the coming work of Christ. Among those resurrected ones—the Christ's co-laborers in his work—shall be David, who shall then see his house and his kingdom established for ever before him, or in his presence. His faith and hope shall then have become sight; for he anticipated personal enjoyment of God's promises; "As for me," he said, "I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." And this hope sustained him to the end, for his last words were these: "The spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was in my tongue. The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me, he that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God. And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even as a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain. Although my house be not so with God, yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, and sure; for this is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it not to grow."

I have thus placed before you, my dear son, a brief sketch of the Christ as described in the prophets, which may be summed up thus:

1. His coming in the flesh; his sufferings, death, resurrection, and ascension to the right hand of God.

2. His continuance in the heavens, the dispersion of the Jews, and calling of the Gentiles.

3. His coming again from heaven to raise the dead, deliver Israel, and re-establish the kingdom of God over Israel and the nations.

A careful reading of the prophets will enable you to confirm the substantial correctness of these things.

So far our inquiry has been—What is the Christ according to the Old Testament? In my next, I will endeavor to answer the question—How far has this been realized in Jesus? I remain your affectionate father.—Alex. D. Black, in Messenger of the Gospel.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana

BIBLE PRIMER. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 30,000 Replies, in 1880. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 5c., or assorted packages of 100, 30c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 30c; 50 for 50c; 100 for 85c.
Can You Believe? A series of 30 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in our list.
The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.
Age to Come not a Heresy. By H. V. Reed.
Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible use.
Human Government a Failure. By J. B. Magruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 25 for 60c.
Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Boase, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Nations, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 15 for 50c.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Christian Union. Joel A. Simcoe.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c. or 25 for $1.
The New Birth. Joseph Pelrce.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Simcoe.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Bates, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 8 for 25c. or $2 for $1.
Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.
Witness! Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simcoe.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 12 for $1.
The Restitution of the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its eternal condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidences upon the subject from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 4 pages, price 10c.
A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. Price 15 cents, or 75 cts. per dozen.
Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Dilworth. Price 10 cents.
Hymns of the Advent, in the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by Christ D. Barker. Mr. Barker contributes to this book the "Hymn of the Morning" and a fresh and new selection of music. As an appendix he adds a collection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is of a sprightly character." Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 65c. cloth 50c.
The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public and family worship, compiled by C. M. Myers and John Arnold. 35c. each.
The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson. Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.
The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built; any one with this work can readily judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.
New improved edition on larger paper, 800 pages, cloth $4.50, Library binding $5.00.

Poetry.

GOOD NIGHT.

Sleep on, beloved, sleep and take your rest
Lay down your head upon the Saviour's breast,
We love thee well, but Jesus loves thee best.
Good night.

Calm is the slumber of a babe on its mother's breast,
But that's not like unto the rest and peace
There is a perfect rest, secure and deep
Rest in the

Until the shadow from the earth is cast,
Until the watchers in the skies are hushed,
Until the twilight chasm is over past
Sweet, sweet

Until the Easter glory fills the skies,
Until the dead in Christ shall rise,
And he shall come for his own
To wake

I will not weep or wish for thee,
Thou in the likeness of thy Lord shalt be,
And he shall bring that golden morning to me,
Or me to-night.

Only "Good night," beloved, not "Farewell."
A little while and we shall meet again
In the sweet light where darkness never comes,
Dear night.

Until we meet once more, sweet sleep,
Christ's in thy sight to-night we leave our dear,
Until we know, and see, and are known,
Dear night.

Selections.

BRITAIN'S PART IN THE COMING CONFLICT.

The Particular Strength—Its Significance—Its Clouds and Portents—Its Overhanging the World—The Price that belongs to the Jews—Mr. Laird an Untrued Agricultural Colony in Palestine—The Jews Objected from Russian Aggression by Turkish—The Evidence that Modern Britain is Ancient Tarshish—A difficulty met.

Britain's part in the coming conflict is involved, though not expressed, in the symbolography of Rev. xvi. It is comprehended in the phrase which we have already had to look at: "the war of the great day of God Almighty." The events of the sixth vial period have to do with preparing the situation for that war. The first event—the decay and removal of the Turkish Empire—clears the country where it is to take place: viz. the Holy Land, as revealed by Joel, Ezekiel, and the other prophets already quoted. The second event—the operation and results of the Franco-political intrigues symbolized by the frogs—develops such a situation among the nations of the earth, as that they shall be ready to participate in such a mighty struggle. Both these things are far advanced in their accomplishment. The appointed sequel becomes now the natural object of expectancy.

The parties to the struggle in its preliminary form, are four in number, they are, as we have seen, 1. Russia; 2. the Jews; 3. power friendly to the Jews (to which as yet only allusion has been made); and 4. the Almighty, in the person of his glorified Son returned to earth a second time, to break in pieces the governments of men, and establish himself on the throne of David as universal King. Acts i. 11; iii. 20; Psa. ii. 8; Luke i. 32; Isa. ix. 6; Jer. xxiii. 5; Dan vii. 13. The prophecies already quoted show that war is in actual progress among the three first, when the divine element supervenes. "The war of the great day of God Almighty," begins in the diplomatic and military spheres, and is in its first stages, to all appearance, perfectly natural. Its clouds and portents are overhanging the world. Russia wanted to avert the Eastern Question, which all European statesmen regard with dread. England was still more strongly of the same mind; but the hands of both have been forced by the action of Sclavonic societies and the barbarities of the Turks. The question which they were laboring to keep dormant, has burst in terrific blaze before the world. That which they feared to allude to in their private dispatches, has become the subject of open and peremptory discussion at a public Conference of the assembled powers of Europe—a Conference which England a year ago emphatically refused; which she now takes the leading part in, and at which she is in agreement with Russia against Turkey in opposition to the cherished policy of forty years. And the Conference assembled to make peace has only made war more certain for Europe and more fatal to the doomed Ottoman.

We have already looked at the part prophetically assigned to Russia; it is, to overthrow Turkey in conjunction with other powers with which she is confederated as the leader and head. The part that belongs to the Jews is at first a subordinate one. In the estimation of politicians the Jews will be an absolutely insignificant element in the situation. Yet they are the kernel of the whole question from a divine point of view, as the sequel will prove; that is, the Jewish nationality, in a new form, will be the pivot around which all the subsequent evolutions will develop themselves and the [illegible] in which all political [illegible] unparalleled conquest will be effected, resulting in the subjection of all nations to the sceptre of the house of David, in the hands of the Son of David returned to reign where he was crucified.

In the beginning of the struggle, the Jews are a feeble and newly formed colony in the previously long desolate land of Israel. Any one may be convinced of this by reading Ezekiel's description (their condition at the time of the Russian invasion. Their exemption [illegible] was for another purpose and may be produced without difficulty.

"In future years the Jewish race will be brought back from the land of the north and from all countries of their dispersion against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste; but it [illegible] forth out of nations, and they shall dwell safely, all of them. They shall build houses and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them. Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, and they shall no more be a prey to the nations, neither shall the beasts of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely and none shall make them afraid. I will gather them that are at rest [illegible] safely dwelling all of them without walls, and having neither bars nor gates, to take a spoil and to take a prey; to turn their hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land." Concerning which statement it is expressly stated at verse 16: "It shall be in the latter days."

From this it is evident that it is the object of the invader to take possession of a flourishing but unarmed agricultural colony recently developed in the land of Israel, "which," says the prophecy, speaking retrospectively from the latter-day point of observation, "hath been always waste, but is now brought forth." "A desolate place now inhabited," is the description put into the mouth of Gog at the time of the invasion (verse 12), which shows the land of Israel to have been recently recovered from desolation, but not to have reached a self-protecting position.

This suggests a question to which we indirectly obtain an answer in the same chapter: How comes it, in the face of armed military nations, that Israel should re-establish themselves in their desolate mountains, without armament to protect their newly acquired prosperity? To what power do they trust in this "dwelling at rest," "having neither bars nor gates?" The answer is seen in the challenge thrown in the face of the invasion in order when he enters the land (verse 13): "Sheba and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish and all the young lions thereof shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? Hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey?" Here is a power that steps forth as the latter-day defender of Israel, under whose protection, the newly established settlement on the mountains of Israel, had been developed. Is it possible to identify this description with any modern power? A conclusive mode of reasoning identifies it with Britain. The evidence is collected in an anonymous work, entitled "The Kingdom of the West," and published in 1842. The evidence is not well digested in that work; we give the pith of it in our own way.

The first fact to be looked at is the one stated in Ezek. xxvii. 12, that Tarshish was a merchant of Tyre (ancient Phœnicia), supplying the Tyrian market with "silver, iron, tin and lead." If the source of the supply of these metals to the Tyrian market can be ascertained, the Scripture Tarshish is discovered.

It is a fact that tin was universally used by the ancients as the alloy for the hardening of copper, in the making of swords and other implements. It is another fact that none of the ancient civilized countries possessed tin mines. It is another fact that till the destruction of Tyre by Alexander, all countries were supplied by the market of Tyre, and that the source of the Tyrian supply was, till that time a secret. The secret was afterwards open to the Greeks and Romans, who went to the same source of supply. What source was that? The answer derivable from Strabo, Herodotus, and other ancient historians, is that the Greeks and Romans, like the Phœnicians before them, went for tin to the islands known as the "Cassiterides."

What does "Cassiterides" mean? The tin islands, from cassiteros—the name given by the Greeks to tin. Look on any ancient map, and Cassiterides will be found marked under the British Islands. But originally the Greeks did not know the name by which the Cassiterides were known to them. [illegible] out knowing where, or what geographical phrase they were known by. When they did know, they found they were known as the Britannic Isles. Why Britannic isles?

Britannia is a Celtic name. The Celtic language is Phœnician naturalized in these islands from the first settlers, the descendants of the Tarshish, sons of Javan, one of those by whom the isles of Gentiles were divided in their lands" (Gen. x. 5 in part of the Britannia signifies the land of tin, as we have seen from which it is clear, Brettanee means the land of tin. The Gaelic name of Britannia is precisely. The British Isles, literally [illegible] Britain as the Cassiterides (chiefly of the Isles) and the Tarshish of the Scriptures which supplied Tyre with silver, iron, tin, and lead."

In addition to the evidence of histories that Tyre drew her mineral supplies from certain northern islands beyond the pillars of Hercules (the Straits of Gibraltar), there is found at Falmouth in Cornwall and the south of Ireland, in the [illegible] of the existence of ancient mineral mines called the Phœnician enterprise. Not only are numerous relics of Phœnicians found in various localities, where they [illegible] traces of Phœnician workmanship are found abundantly. Messrs. Lysons, in their account of Cornwall (page 201), say: "Cornwall has been celebrated for its tin mines from very remote antiquity. We learn from Strabo, Diodorus, and other ancient writers that the Phœnicians and after them the Greeks and Romans, traded for tin to Cornwall, under the name of the Cassiterides, from a very early period. Diodorus Siculus, who wrote in the reign of Augustus, gives a particular description of the manner in which the valuable metal was dug and prepared by the Britons." Fragments of ancient weapons are frequently discovered in Cornwall, in streams and buried in the ground. Messrs. Lysons, in the book already quoted, say, "they are instruments of mixed metal, commonly called celts, apparently cast in imitation of the stone hatchets and chisels of the early inhabitants. They are found in greater abundance in Cornwall than in any other part of the kingdom . . . Several were found on the side of Carnbrea Hill in the year 1814. In the parish of Erbant, four miles north of St. Michael's Mount in the year 1822, a bronze was discovered, about two feet below the surface of the earth, a quarry of rocks, weighing about 11 to 12 pounds, with pieces of copper swords, and heavy lumps of fine copper. . . . Another large quantity of celts, with spear heads and broken pieces of copper swords, with several lumps of metal, weighing altogether about 80 pounds, was discovered in the parish of St. Hilary, about the year 1826." Other similar discoveries have been made, and a comparison of these ancient relics, with the armor described by Homer in the Iliad, as worn by the Greeks (who were supplied by Tyre), shows they are identical in metal and manufacture. As regards Ireland, a report on the metallic mines of Leinster was presented to the Royal Dublin Society in 1828, in which the following paragraph occurs: "If we may judge from the number of ancient mine excavations, which are still visible in almost every part of Ireland, it would appear that an ardent spirit for mining adventure must have prevailed this country at some very remote period. . . . Many of our mining excavations exhibit appearances similar to the surface workings of the most ancient mines of Cornwall, which are generally attributed to the Phœnicians." M. Moore, in his first volume of the "History of Ireland," says: "Numbers of swords made of brass have been found in different parts of the country. . . . It has been thought not improbable that all these weapons, the Irish as well as the others, were of the same Punic or Phœnician origin, and may be traced to those colonies on the coast of Spain which traded anciently with the British Isles." The Rev. Dr. Vincent, in his treatise on the commerce and navigation of the ancients in the Indian Ocean, says: "Tin is mentioned as an import from Africa, Arabia, Soindi and the coast of Malabar. It has continued an article of commerce, brought out of Britain in all ages, and conveyed to all the countries in the Mediterranean by the Phœnicians, Greeks and Romans, and carried into the Eastern Ocean from the origin of commerce."

There were two places called Tarshish—the one in the east, the other in the west. This is evident from the fact that the ships of Solomon, built at Ezion-geber, went to Tarshish, bringing, once in three years, "gold and silver, ivory, apes and peacocks," 1 Kings x. 22; which [illegible] in attempting to go to a place of the same name, Jonah i. 3. Now Joppa is in the Mediterranean, and Ezion-geber is in the Red Sea: and, as the passage around the Cape of Good Hope was unknown, it follows there was a Tarshish in the east and a Tarshish in the west—probably owing to their both springing from the same family of colonists—the descendants of Tarshish, the grandson of Japheth. The western Tarshish produced "silver, iron, tin and lead," the eastern, "gold and silver, ivory, apes and peacocks." The products of the first point to Britain, the undoubted Baratanee of the Phœnicians, and Cassiterides of the Greeks; and the products of the second (considered in connection with the length of time occupied by the voyage), point to India. It requires but to be mentioned that both realms are in our day united under British sovereignty, which also holds Gibraltar in Spain, a midway station corresponding to ancient Gadir, or Tartessus (Cadiz, which some, on insufficient grounds, think to be Tarshish. The position of Britain thus covers the whole of the area to which the name of Tarshish can be applied.

It may seem a difficulty that the name Tarshish should have been so entirely lost in connection with Britain. It must be remembered, however, that the names in Hebrew, by which the lands and nations are spoken of in the Scriptures, rarely recognize those by which they were known to the inhabitants of those countries themselves; and as it is by the latter names that they become known to profane writers, and perpetuated in history, it is no marvel that there should be a discrepancy between the nomenclature of the nations. The identification of them is more dependent upon facts than resemblance in sound.

The facts of the case are in a nutshell. It is testified that Tarshish supplied Tyre (the Phenice of profane writers with "silver, iron, lead, and tin." It is demonstrated that these supplies came from Baratanee (the isles of tin) softened in the course of ages into Britain. The conclusion follows that the Bible Tarshish is Britain.

The conclusion is made certain by the position of Britain. Tarshish is described as "the merchants of Tarshish and all the young lions thereof." Britain is the mercantile power of the world; she is to the modern world what Tyre, her ancestor, was to the ancient world. Again, Tarshish in the latter day is described as the possessor of ships: "the ships of Tarshish," Isa. ii. 16; and behold, Britain has more ships than all the other nations put together. "The young lions thereof" agrees with the heraldry of the British Power. "The ships of Tarshish" is another phrase by which she is characterized in Isaiah lx. 9, in connection with the time of Israel's restoration—a phrase applicable to Britain alone as a characteristic description; for she rules the seas, and her ships outnumber those of all other nations put together. Some have broached the idea that Tarshish was the ancient Tartessus in Spain (the modern Cadiz); but there is little to favor that idea beyond a superficial resemblance in the name, while there is the fact that Tartessus was made use of as a port of call by the ships trading between the tin islands and Tyre. The ancient Tartessus has disappeared from the historic arena, while the song of the tin islands ("Rule Britannia,") is heard throughout the world.

"Sheba and Dedan (districts in Southern Arabia, anciently so called, indirectly subject to the British Crown), and the merchants of Tarshish and the young lions thereof," is, without doubt, the prophetic description of the wide-shadowing power of Britain in the latter days, whence it follows that Britain is the latter-day protector of the Jews against the Russo-European attempt that will be made (for political reasons) to take possession of their flourishing colony to be established in the land of Israel.—R. Roberts.

THE CALIPH AND THE KHEDIVE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 21, '82.

The struggle which has just commenced in Egypt, and which promises to give the English very much trouble, naturally engrosses all public attention, and withdraws the view of the public from the more serious question which underlies it, and which is the upheaval of Islamism throughout the Moslem world. This upheaval of Islamism is one of grave danger for Christendom, and it would be well that the beginning of it should be looked to steadily and seriously by politicians. So long as the Sultans were prosperous, their rule, as I can prove historically, was not fanatical. They tolerated the Christian doctrines; they permitted Christian churches to exist; they permitted the imprint of translations of the Pentateuch, the Psalms, and the Gospels of which many copies exist in Turkish, in their libraries. In fact, they regarded those whom they call "the people of a book" as co-religionaries of their own. They said there were but three people who had "a book"—to-wit, the Jews, the Christians, and themselves; and it was probably owing to their both springing from the same family of colonists—the distinct direction of their great legislator, that they were always to show consideration for the people who had "a book." For very many years this injunction of Mahomet was observed. The Jews were, and still are, not merely tolerated, but protected. We had an instance the other day in which the Sultan showed marked favor to the hailing dew in Constantinople. To the Christians for many years a perfect toleration has been shown, but of late there has been a retrievement, and, unfortunately, it seems that currents of fanaticism are flowing in towards the centre. It will be well, therefore, to consider the real issue of the case between the Caliph and the Khedive, and to look a little more closely into this Islamistic sur-excitation which has risen up amongst us.

Probably not many people are aware that, in the real sense and meaning of the word, there has been no Caliph since the death of Ali, who was the son-in-law of the Prophet. There have been so-called Caliphs of Bagdad, and so-called Caliphs of Damascus, and so-called Caliphs of Egypt: but all these so-called Caliphs held the Caliphate by virtue of their possession of the sacred cities in the Hedjaz, and when, by right of that possession, they had come to be regarded as lawful holders of the Caliphate, they were exposed to attacks from any other Mahometan invader. The Ottoman Sultans did not obtain the Caliphate until the beginning of the sixteenth century, when Sultan Selim conquered Egypt and the holy cities: and since then they have not been able to hold it continuously. In fact, at the commencement of the present century the Caliphate was restored to the Sultans solely by the energetic vigor of Mehemet Ali, who was commissioned by Sultan Mahmoud to drive the Wahabees out of the holy cities of which they had taken possession. This exploit required some years for its completion, and it is on record that when it was completed Mehemet Ali conceived the bold idea of constituting himself Caliph, as possessor of the holy cities. The struggle lasted down to the year 1840, and might have lasted much longer, only that Lord Palmerston could not be persuaded that the Turks would ever be inclined to regard Mehemet Ali as a Caliph. It is probable, however, that if Mehemet Ali had been firmly planted in the possession of the sacred cities, he would have been regarded as Caliph throughout the Moslem world. It is known that Ismail Pasha, the late Khedive, was scheming for the same result, and that General Ignatieff encouraged him. Now the Sultan, Abdul Hamid the II., who, if he be not a very brilliant man, is a man of firm will and strong religious opinions, has put his foot down on the question of revival. He has had many inducements to this course. His Moslem subjects generally have become determined revivalists. They have no special hostility to the Christians, but they intend to defend their own interests, which they consider to have been seriously menaced by the events of the last few years. The gradual retrenchment of the confines of Turkey has greatly disgusted them, although they submitted to it gloomily for a while. But the action of France in Algeria and Tunis, the action of Russia in Turkestan, and the action of England in Afghanistan have led the ecclesiastic Moslems to suspect, Europeans of a settled plot against Islam.

Under these circumstances it is natural, and it is no secret, that the Sultan has planned to put himself at the head of a Pan-Islamistic confederation. This is natural, because he has to fight, not merely for his position as Sultan, but for his position as Commander of the Faithful, which would be seriously imperilled if he did not assert it. There is no doubt entertained here that he has all along encouraged Arabi Pasha, for three reasons—first, that the family of the Khedive have, from the first, usurped of their founder, been endeavoring to obtain possession of the Caliphate; secondly, because, thanks to the existence of European control in Egypt, that country has ceased to be a milch cow to the Porte, and nominally because the control which the Palace was supposed to have over Egypt has failed out of existence. It is not wonderful; it is not unnatural, that a despotic sovereign like the Sultan, hoarded in his own den like the Douglas in his hall," should take up arms in his own defence and lay stoutly about him. That he puts these arms into the hands of Arabi Pasha is merely a characteristic of Oriental duplicity. You may be sure that in all the protestations of the Sultan and in all the actions of Arabi the voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau. You may be certain, also, that there is a strong Moslem revival going on throughout the East. Even in Constantinople, which is by no means fanatical city, there is a considerable excitement amongst the Ulemas, which is encouraged by the Sultan, who attends to all his religious duties with regularity, and even with splendor shows himself in public in a manner which has been strange to him for several years; gives pours et cierges to the troops with a lavish hand, and invites the young military cadets to his evening meal, and tips them handsomely. It seems to me that no reasonable being can take exception to the action of the Sultan in thus carrying out the feeling of his Mahometan subjects. In fact it is with the Caliphate a matter of life and death, and England will have a very tough nut to crack before the Caliphate is conquered.

Of this there can be little doubt, that the boasted civilization of Egypt has been merely a thin veneer, which has been stripped off by the first blast of adversity. The English Government now talks of relieving the Egyptian people from oppression and tyranny. Probably Arabi Pasha would say that that is also his object, and that he desires to relieve the Egyptian people from the enormous pressure of taxation to which they are subjected. Egypt is very much like Turkey—both countries live upon their debts. But the people in both countries have begun to get rather tired of the distinction which their Governments have acquired at their expense. In Egypt the financial difficulty is really at the bottom of the whole question. European control has suspended backsheesh. The same control has prevented plunder in the customs, and in other departments of the state; and what is more, it has prevented the remittance of donations to the Porte and the Palaces in Constantinople. I do not mean to say that the authorities in Constantinople would desire to relax the burdens of the Egyptians, but they wish these burdens to be maintained for their own benefit. I was talking only the other day with three very leading Christians in Constantinople, and they were all indignant that the English should interfere in the affairs of Egypt. They said that such interference would upset every kind of business," by which they meant that the business of Galata would be damaged. Now, it is conceivable that Arabi Pasha and his adherents do not care much about the business of Galata, and on the whole I am inclined to concur with them.

But besides the financial difficulty there is, as I have said, the religious difficulty, which is likely to be very serious. Fanaticism in Africa has always been rampant. For instance, it enabled Abd-el-Kadi to hold his own against the French for nearly twenty years; and it still yet gives the French trouble in Tunis and on the outskirts of that province. The Sultan, therefore, has in his hand a very strong card to play, and apparently he means to play it. I will not hazard a prediction in this letter as to the result of the present struggle, but I feel certain that the Sultan will keep his hold diplomatically on the Caliphate as long as circumstances permit, and that when diplomacy fails him, his people will not allow him to relax his hold without a fight. Europe must be prepared for this result. With regard to the Khedivate, I should be disposed to hazard a stronger opinion. The founder of the family was merely a Macedonian adventurer of low lineage, and, after he once attained distinction, was just as much of a rebel as Arabi Pasha. He and his descendants, with the exception, perhaps, of the present Khedive, have plundered their Egyptian subjects from the foundation of the Khedivate until the present time, and I must confess that I shall not regard the downfall of the dynasty as a world-wide calamity. The dynasty is effete, and although the present Khedive is well meaning, he is evidently weak.

There has already been an omen of the downfall of the dynasty. On the day after the pillage of Alexandria, a party of Englishmen went out from one of the ships and traversed the town until they reached the Place Mehemet Ali. Here, in what had been the most brilliant quarter of the city, were strewn in hopeless confusion the tinsels and the gewgaws of the sham European civilization which Mehemet Ali and his successors had endeavored to create. The Arabs, like mere monkeys, had wasted and spoiled everything, and had not attempted to carry away one hundredth part of their plunder. And in the midst of the debris, surrounded by a lurid column of smoke, the equestrian statue of Mehemet Ali towered over the scene of desolation. I confess that, when I think of this relic, I seem to see the statue of the old warrior coming down from his horse, like the statue in Don Juan, and saying to his descendants, "Give me your hands, it is time for our race to finish." There can be no doubt whatever that the present Sultan has been endeavoring very naturally to bring about the destruction of the Khedivate and the instauration of a united Islamism. Some months ago he took a step to which no particular significance was attached at the time, but which, if it be read by the light of recent events, is full of importance. He procured the consent of the sheikhs of the holy cities to the displayal of the Ottoman flag on the mosques and citadels of Mecca and Medina, together with the banner of the Prophet. Very little European attention was called to this act at the time, and I myself did not then attach the importance to it that I do now; but the Turkish newspapers did attach particular importance to it, and were as good as to entitle Abdul Hamid "Ghazi"—that is, the Conqueror, as if he had achieved a great success. There is no doubt whatever, if we read events by the light of the present, that the Sultan was even then bent on his Pan-Islamistic scheme; and, with a man of his determined will, this is significant.

There are one or two other matters which, though not of great importance, still have some significance. For instance, there has been a determined assault on Greek publishers in Constantinople, who were supposed—probably with some truth—to be putting forth books opposed to the doctrines of Mahometanism. There has also been an equally determined assault upon the Armenian publishers, who had been putting forth photographs of the old Armenian Kings. Now, the Armenians are not by any means religiously fanatical, and would not, as regards religion give the Sultan any trouble; but they have their national ambitions, and they covet their political resurrection. The Greeks, on the other hand, are religious fanatics of the first class, and will unquestionably fight either against the Moslems or against their fellow-Christians for their own land. The Sultan's great chance is, as it always has been, that he may divide his foes. If he does not divide them, my impression is that the doom of Turkey is settled.—The Scotsman, Wednesday, Aug. 30, 1882.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M., (author of "Humiletical Index," "Theological Thesaurus," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now exciting such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 300 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Age to come not a 'heresy,'" "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. G. C. Woodruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Mosaic, the Newland the Davidic covenants; their duration and relationship to each other. By J. A. Meyer. 160 pages, bound in cloth, price 50c.

The Truth Set Free; or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Elder Evans. 48 pages, price 10cts.

Sunlight Dispersing the Clouds; Rhadamite or the doctrine of eternal torments shown by both reason and Scripture to be a fable. By Philalethes. 96 pages, price 30cts.

The Storied Bible, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Evans. 48 pages, price 10cts.

Material Immortality; or, Spirit to existing embodiment. A brief exposition of the theory of material immortality, and a compact defense and Bible view of material immortality, as held by Christ but by grace. By G. N. L. Crosier. 36 pages, price 10cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, who he was. By Dr. R. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1882, published in tract form.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of Hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By G. N. Lyon. Price 60cts.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS THEY WILL BE IN THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—BY A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a book bound book of 132 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee as to the merits of the work. Price only 50 cts. each. Sent to the other of them.

THE RESTITUTION
—is issued weekly by—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. A. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
M. E. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSTACK,
I. D. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HALSTEAD, B. WILSON,
J. P. WERTHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY SOPER, C. H. MYERS,
A. H. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCTOBER 4, 1882. NO. 37.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION of all things which God hath spoken, by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the Immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the universe, the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the bestowment of the rights to, and the final re-erection of the world to its eternal life-only Dominion, Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essentials for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE—ITS PROXIMITY. No. 122.

The Great City. Its Name. Marks of Identity with the Great Mystic Babylon Further Investigated. Are the Harlot, Mystic Babylon, and the Image, Identical with Papal Rome? Was Papal Rome (the Great City, which Reigneth Over the Kings of the Earth) a Literal City? Its Boundaries. Its Parts or Wards. When was Papal Rome Divided into Ten Wards?

J. P. WERTHEE.

To ascertain the name of "the great city" of Rev. xi. 8, is a very interesting problem, since it is one of the keys to a proper interpretation of the Apocalypse. For this reason we have not been willing to pass it without a full investigation of all the elements connected with the subject. Some say that the name of the city is Jerusalem of the 70th prophetic week of Daniel. Against that theory we have presented five objections. Concluding our negative argument, we entered upon the affirmative problem—what is the name of the city? Does the Apocalypse give data sufficient to solve the problem? We affirmed that it did; and that the interpreting angel has truly defined its name in Rev. xvii. 18—"The great city (ἡ μεγάλη ἡ ἔχουσα) which reigneth over the kings of the earth." That city is given in explanation of two symbols—the harlot, verse 3; and Mystic Babylon, verse 5. The woman had a sign upon her forehead, which read, "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." This woman's mystic, or symbolic name is Babylon; she is literally "the great city." The complex symbol, the woman upon the scarlet wild beast is one of the most distinctly outlined, clearly defined, and most expressive of the Bible symbols. The interpreting angel has explained each member of the complex symbol separately and in such language as to give no room to doubt his meaning. The wild beast is a symbol of a body of rulers, a family of nations, the fourth monarchy of Dan. vii., with its national group of ten horns (nations), and its little horn (central kingdom of Italy, the seventh head with the ten) and its ecclesiastical elements, viz., "eyes and mouth." The woman (says the angel) which thou sawest (verses 3–7) is the great city (ecclesiastical rulers—priesthood; first Pagan, then Papal), which reigneth over the kings (civil rulers, denoted by the beast with his heads and horns) of the earth, or Roman world.

Civil and ecclesiastical rulers symbolized by the beast with his heads and horns, and by a woman and Babylon, are kept distinct in the angel's interpretation; their relationship being expressed by "sitteth upon many waters;" "sit upon a scarlet colored beast;" and "reigneth over the kings of the earth." The great city is, therefore, an ecclesiastical corporation; one that did rule over a great family of nations. This is certain. Bagster says, "Doubtless the church of Rome, as she sits (did sit) upon, or rules over the beast, which is the Latin empire, or the temporal power by which she is (was) sustained." The angel's explanation of the beast and his family, and of its rider, can not be misinterpreted. The two classes of symbols: those that represent civil and ecclesiastical bodies are so distinct in the angel's mind that they should never be confounded. The symbolic woman is as distinct from the symbolic beast that she rides and controls, as a literal woman is distinct from the animal she rides; so is the harlot distinct from the waters on which she is seated; so, also, is the image distinct from the beast of which it is the image. The altar and the throne are distinct, though the altar may rule the throne. An hierarchy is distinct from civil dynasties. These terms are, in their nature, distinct. Let no man confound them, if he desires to be a reliable and accurate expounder of symbolic Scriptures.

In solving the problem relative to the name of the great city, we have considered all the given data except two: (1.) the division of the city into ten parts, or wards; (2.) the expression, "Where their Lord was crucified." To make these points clearly understood is a work of some magnitude, and quite essential to our subject. We have already defined the term city. Is Papal Rome, or the Roman church, a city? That a church is a city, is sustained by Divine authority. On this point we wrote when ascertaining the name of "the holy city" of Rev. xi. 2. Further illustrations will now be given. We propose to free the term city from its common errors. To every term there is a chief thought, and its accessories. To decide which is chief is the essential point. The visible inanimate structure is usually made the chief thought. The mind's eye sees and paints the picture of vision only, and calls it the master thought. What, then, is truly and properly, the city? The living corporation. Its space of ground is not the chief; nor are the buildings; nor yet is the system of government; these are accessories, but not the chief thought, though they take the same name. The name continues, yet the name is not the vital agent. Neither does it increase nor diminish. It is simply a term to designate the actor. The same may be said of government, location, buildings. Persons, associated for any object, require a place, a building, laws and a name; but not" or the name, nor the government, the place, nor yet the house, can be called the living acting agent—the chief thought, but each is an accessory, all may be included in the chief idea, or in its accessories. A few examples will better illustrate our meaning.

a. London—is a simple term, the name of a complex thought. The term has a chief, and a cabinet of subordinates. We see a living, moving mass of four millions of beings; an immense swarm, in all possible positions, and filling every sphere of human action: dwellers in huts, mansions, and palaces; located on a river (Thames), the seat of a municipal and national government. The corporate body, under its proper officiaries, is the chief thought; the others are its accessories.

b. Babylon (literal)—is another simple term, the name, also, of a complex thought. Here is a chief thought, and its group of subordinates. Our attention is directed to the chief; when perusing ancient history, such as Thucydides, or Herodotus, one chief thought demands attention, a mass of human beings, under a regal head, with a court of subordinates; a supreme despot in a splendid palace, surrounded with hanging gardens; buildings in the midst of smiling parks, its location on both sides of the Euphrates; holding in bondage many thousands of God's people: a corporate body, exercising civil and ecclesiastical domination. The name of this corporate body is great Babylon. It gave its name also to the empire—city and empire of Babylon.

(c) Babylon (symbolic).—In the Apocalypse the term Babylon suggests quite another class of associated thoughts. In the angel's description of symbolic Babylon, we have one chief thought, a living corporation, with its family of accessories; so intimately resembling literal Babylon and its family that it has the same name, only with such marked terms of distinction as this, "Mystery," by which John was given to understand that the great city which occupied his vision, was a symbolic city. That he was to understand what he saw to be an ecclesiastical corporation, is clear from such expressions as "woman on the beast," "woman, or city on the waters," and "Image to the beast." Since the symbols are distinct, the agents symbolized are distinct also. Let us, therefore, keep them distinct.

(d) Rome.—Here we have the name of another complex thought. Rome has always been the name of the chief seat of an ecclesiastical empire; a hierarchy, or corporation of priests; a priestly empire; it being under the Pagan priesthood about eleven centuries; and controlled by the Papal hierarchy 1260 years. This hierarchy, or corporation of priests, is the chief thought, which is the centre of a numerous family of accessory thoughts. In common language Rome is called Pagan and Papal according to the name of its governing priesthood.

The name at first included one corporation only, viz, that on the Tiber. Afterward it was given to the empire. Paul claimed to be a citizen of Rome before he had ever seen it. Paul asks "Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman?" Chief captain, "Tell me, art thou a Roman?" Paul answered, "Yea." In the Apocalypse, which hierarchy is intended, Pagan or Papal? The Papal hierarchy is chiefly intended, though the Pagan is not wholly excluded. On ancient medals the symbol of Pagan Rome is a woman sitting on a lion. Papal Rome, as seen in the Apocalypse is symbolized by a woman sitting on a scarlet beast. The civil power of each is evidently the same. The complex symbol represents civil and ecclesiastical corporation; the civil being subordinate. This Divine symbol of Rome (a mounted hierarchy) should be kept constantly before the reader in his investigation of the harlot city of the Apocalypse. Under Pagan Rome, the altar and the throne, the altar (through the gods) being supreme, the emperor being the "Pontifex-Maximus." Under Papal Rome, the altar (church) and the throne (state) were distinct, the altar commanding.

The complex symbol of the woman on the beast presents the woman as the governing power, the horns aiding the beast to carry the harlot: power to carry vested in the beast and his horns; power to control vested in the woman. Who can read the history of the Papacy without seeing the Divine origin of the symbol? It presents the true relationship of the civil and ecclesiastical powers of Papal Rome. Is Papal Rome the Apocalyptic Babylon? Such was the view of the Roman clergy. The word "Babylon" was on the Pope's mitre till noticed by the Protestants. In the Pagan church this persecution of Christians could have excited no wonder, but when the woman, drunken with the blood of saints, professes herself to be a corporate body of saints, it was necessary that the interpreting angel should explain to John this extraordinary "mystery," the mystery of the woman and the beast that carried her, and the horns that aided the beast to carry the apostate harlot.

Papal Rome as explained by the symbol woman on a scarlet wild beast, with seven heads and ten horns, since the woman is the symbol of a church, and the beast is the symbol of a state or empire, and the mounted or riding position represents control, the chief thought is a compound of the three elements, woman, beast and government; church and state, and the church controlling the state; altar ruling the throne; this triune thought can be very distinctly seen in the symbol. The elements of this complex vision will not suit any other power than Papal Rome.

It is said (Rev. xi. 13,) "The same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell." This division of "the city the great" into ten parts is peculiar to Papal Rome. The Western or Roman empire was divided into ten kingdoms denoted by the ten horns. These, with the beast, were under the control of the Papal hierarchy, or the great city; hence the Roman world under Papal supremacy is called a city from its dominating power, the Papal hierarchy, which, by the interpreting angel, is called a city. Rev. xvii. 18. This division conclusively fixes the name of the city. It is Rome, Papal, the harlot, the mystic Babylon, and not Jerusalem. In solving this problem as to the name of the great city, it now remains that we explain the expression, "Where also their Lord was crucified." The great city, spiritually (figuratively) is called Sodom and Egypt, and it is added, "Where also their Lord was crucified." If Christ had been literally crucified in Jerusalem, the interpretation that requires Jerusalem to be inserted after Egypt involves unanswerable objections; for then the sentence fully expressed would read as follows, "Which is spiritually called Sodom, and which is spiritually called Egypt, and which is spiritually called Jerusalem, (a which (spiritual Jerusalem) their Lord was crucified." Not in literal Jerusalem, for that is not the Jerusalem here to be substituted or supplied, and we have already shown that Christ was not crucified in Jerusalem.

We read the verse which is symbolically called Sodom and Egypt, and is the mystic city in which their Lord was (spiritually) crucified, for the act expressed by crucified must be understood in the same sense as the words Sodom and Egypt.

THE RUSSIAN HEBREWS.

Although there is a suspension in carrying into execution of the decree in Russia, some writers assert that it is only temporary, caused by the displacement of Ignatieff by Tolstoi in the Russian government and that the popular feeling in the country, as native and hostile to the Israelites as ever, will exhibit itself in a renewal of the persecutions the first time an occasion offers. The persecuted race themselves have no faith in the permanence of the present truce: they are in constant apprehension of a new outbreak, and are undecided only in what direction to seek an asylum. It is admitted that the Hebrew immigration to the United States was a mistake. The unhappy immigrants did not suit us, and our habits did not suit them. Even the American Hebrews were not found congenial to the new comers, for the American Hebrews are liberal and new-fashioned in their ideas, while the Russian Hebrews are of strict and unyielding orthodoxy—and between the two schools there is almost as wide a difference as between a liberal Hebrew and a Christian. For these reasons a great many of the Russian immigrants have returned to Europe, and others will follow. It is estimated that there are 3,000,000 Jews in Russia, Roumania and Turkey, who, exposed to popular outbreaks, are beginning to look towards Palestine, their ancient land, as the place where they must ultimately find a refuge. A movement in that direction was attempted a year ago, but was thwarted at the outset by the Turkish Government, which looked with alarm upon an immigration that threatened to place Jerusalem and Palestine in the hands of their ancient owners. Nevertheless letters from Constantinople assert that the orthodox Hebrews of Roumania, Russia and other parts of Eastern Europe continue to look in that direction and to hope that, through the efforts of England and France and the results of the Egyptian war, the policy of the Porte in its Asiatic possessions will be sufficiently liberalized to permit their settlement in Syria and Palestine. It is true there is little or no trade in these countries at present, and the Russian Hebrews are not accustomed to agriculture. But the East is becoming every day a centre of interest and it is not improbable that the war in Egypt will prove to be only the beginning of new and important events which will transform that quarter of the world and perhaps make it the home of an active and busy population."

The above extract from the St. Louis Republican, is significant. It is a hint of a great transaction now on the eve of commencement, and almost certain to be carried forward—in accordance with God's purpose from the ages. We have simply to know and understand that the time is arriving, the beginning of a fulness of time—when the land of Abraham and David, the land of Israel, is to be re-inhabited by the ancient race. "When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Grecia, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man; and the Lord shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning, and the Lord God shall blow the trumpet and shall go with whirlwinds of the south." There are times of great expectation. Such is the present. Still, let us maintain a becoming gravity and calmness. It is not likely to be the duty of every one who loves Jerusalem, and believes the prophets, to cross the ocean and go there. Great wisdom is necessary, as well as zeal and anticipation, and assurance of the magnitude and majesty of events. Let us wait on God, and do nothing rashly.

Jerusalem is yet to be made a "burdensome stone for all people." A grand gathering of envious and hostile powers is prophesied. They will be overthrown, and Zion will then arise and shine. Grand events are apparently imminent—but let no one move into a new and peculiar and responsible place before he is called. The wisdom of moderation and discretion, is as important as energy, helpfulness and enthusiasm.

I trust the Jews in America, who have somewhat departed from the faith of their own fathers, and who sink with unbelief in Christ, great numbers seeking the selfish and glorious promises of their own projects, will be led to see their error. There is at opportunity and necessity for a work of conversion and reconstruction and corrected understandings among the Americanized Jews. They will be compelled to recognize their own great misapprehension and declension from the grand forecasts which spirit and promise of the seers who so long ago prophesied of these days. What a darkness! But let us not despair of their recovery.

The times are new and portentous, but we may well be strongly stayed in God. The temptation may assail some, to unwise or precipitate action. We are not to go where duty does not call us, while again, we are to be ready to obey instantly the mandate of duty, and the manifested pleasure of our Captain. We are not to cease from our daily and necessary industries, neither are we to be so engrossed by them as to be careless, or helpless or useless in relation to the great possibilities and current evolutions of the weeks and months which have begun. England has conquered Egypt, it certainly does so appear. Will she not possess Palestine? Who can reasonably doubt it? And yet—it is a matter of some difficulty—hard for human—but easy for Divine management and achievement. With his unicorn horns, Joseph shall push the people together to the ends of the earth." "They of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man." Wonderful, wonderful opulence and grandeur of prophecies—which are as unconditional and impossible of failure as the sun's own rising and setting! Aye—they are like Diamonds in a kind of new ark of the covenant—treasures of plenty and power. Let the Lord do as he will—and call his own people, and order his own work, with great wisdom and infallible precision and assurance of operation and execution. He will do it, and may we joyfully realize and exclaim that his mercy endureth for ever.

C. COLCHESTER.

THE DELIVERANCE OF THE CREATION.

"For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope, because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, who have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." Rom. viii. 18–23.

A friend asks to be informed as to the meaning of verse 21, in the passage here quoted. I beg to submit the following for the consideration of him and others who may feel an interest in the subject. "Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage or corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. viii. 21.

The meaning is obscured by the defective translation of the phrase rendered "the glorious liberty," and also the ambiguity of another rendered "the whole creation." The first is, literally, the liberty of the glory; two nouns—not an adjective and a noun—being employed by the apostle. The construction is identical with, and in beautiful antithesis to the phrase "the bondage of the corruption," with which it stands connected in the sentence. The deliverance of the creature is therefore from "bondage" to "liberty;" not the liberty of the sons of God, however, but a liberty in some way related to the glory of the sons of God.

"The whole creation" or "creature," is an expression capable of wide application; so much so, that John Wesley extended it to the lower animals, and based upon this passage their resurrection of the dead. Others have embraced in it the inanimate creation; while others have sought to limit it to believers in Christ. Paul, however, uses this very phrase in Col. i. 23 to denote the human race: for he says, the gospel had been "preached to every creature under heaven." And there he strictly followed the Master who, in his commission to his apostles, sent them to preach the gospel to every "creature," Mark xvi. 15. The Greek words rendered "every creature" in these passages are the same as those in Rom. viii. 22 rendered "the whole creation." And if this application of it can be reconciled with the apostle's use of the phrase in Rom. viii., I think it should be preferred.

It cries, "the whole creation" can not refer to inanimate objects, because the apostle speaks of it as "groaning and travailing in pain," or to the brute creation, because he represents it as having earnest expectation.

Presuming that these reasons are sufficient warrant for restricting "the whole creation" to the human race, we shall now inquire how this application of it suits the bearing of the whole passage.

Observe, then, that the glory spoken of in vers. 21 is the exclusive privilege of "the sons of God." The privilege to be conferred on "the creature" is not "the glory," but "the liberty of the glory;" neither is the evil from which "the creature" is to be delivered "the corruption," but "the bondage of the corruption." If this is correct, it shows a clear distinction between "the creature" and "the sons of God," both as to present state and character, and as to future position and privilege. The one inherits glory; the other is delivered from bondage into liberty.

But does not Paul in verse 23 teach that "the whole creation" is destined to enjoy the identical privileges of the sons of God, when he says, "And not only they, but ourselves also, who have the first fruits of the Spirit.... groan within ourselves waiting for the adoption—the redemption of our body?" The word "they," however, is in italics, showing that it is not in the Greek. The proper supplement is the word so—and not only so; that is, And not only does the whole creation groan and travail for this liberty, which we know God has connected with the glory to be revealed in us: but we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for that which God has specially promised to us, namely, the redemption of our body. The similarity here predicated of both classes is that of desiring some prospective good, while the nature of that good is totally different in the two cases.

Again, it might be thought that identity of future privilege is indicated in verse 19—"The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." But here, again, the language is quite consistent with the distinction I am pointing out: because the liberty to be enjoyed by the creature is not only at the same time that the manifestation takes place, but is dependent upon it. Besides, they are not said to wait for their manifestation as the sons of God, but simply to wait for that manifestation. It is not even certain, from the language employed, that the creature has any thing beyond a vague (though earnest) expectation of a better condition; for it is highly probable, from the scope of the whole passage, that the apostle supplies from his own knowledge the event which shall terminate the waiting of the creature. That event he knew to be the manifestation of the sons of God. However ignorant the creature might be as to the means of its amelioration, the apostle was at no loss for a solution of the problem. He knew that the blessedness of the nations promised to Abraham should be realized through him and his one seed, the Christ. He knew that the sons of God, raised from the dead, incorruptible and glorified, shall be kings and priests to God, and shall reign with Christ over Israel and the nations of the earth. "The whole creation," then placed under those sons of God, shall be delivered from the oppression and misrule, that bondage of the corruption, to which corrupt human nature, in its individual and governmental relations has so long subjected it. The peoples shall enjoy the work of their hands. The proclamation of liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison doors to them that are bound, shall, in this "acceptable year of the Lord," have become the welcome reality, to earth's remotest bound. Ages of "earnest expectation" of what philanthropists and poets have styled "the good time coming" shall have reached fruition, and the glad tidings preached to Abraham, "in thee shall all nations of the earth be blessed" shall then be rejoiced. And not only so, but a deliverance from sin and death shall be attainable to countless which former ages never dreamed of, for as regards Israel, "they shall not teach every man his neighbor, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know him, from the least of them unto the greatest." And "all the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him." "For the kingdom is the Lord's: and he is the governor among the nations."

J. Cumming.

Selections.

Mohammed Sanoussi—The Long Armed and Invisible Prophet in Africa.

During the progress of the Egyptian struggle frequent references were made to the Long armed Prophet. The following narrative will explain those references.

Mohammedan writers say that the year 1200 of the Hegira is to be marked by events of transcendent importance to the future of Islam. It will commence on the 12th of November next, only six weeks hence, but its events follow each other now-a-days in rapid succession, we shall probably know much more than we do now of the issue of enterprises headed by the two Mahdis, each of who presents himself as the expected deliverer of faithful Mohammedans.

THE FATHER OF MOHAMMED SENOUSSI.

It is now half a century since El Senoussi, the Elder, an influential Marabout, or religious devotee, retired to Fez, and after a short residence there went on a pilgrimage to Mecca, travelling by way of Algeria, Tunis, Tripoli, and Egypt. In Mecca he received, if not fanatical inspiration, a wonderful increase of devotion to the cause of Islam. He brought it with him to Egypt, and demonstrated it by establishing in Alexandria a Zaouia, or Convent-Sanctuary, where enthusiasts, like himself, might gather and be prepared for work. Consecrated to a religious revival, Senoussi called for a return to the old faith of Mahomet, and denounced the present friendship for and contact with Christians. In his vehement condemnation he included the Sultan himself as having long displayed dangerous European sympathies.

Such success attended his labors as to draw upon him the notice and subsequently the restraining action of the Egyptian Government. Alarmed at the extension of his influence, they resolved to arrest him, but he evaded them and escaped to the Libyan desert. There he repeated the course pursued at Alexandria, establishing another and a large central Convent-Sanctuary. As men accepted him and his views he made them into missionaries, and they went forth teaching, making converts, and planting Zaouias.

SIX LIVES MIGHT AVAIL.

At his death in 1859 his son entered into his work and assumed his place. He has carried on the one and held the other to this day, claiming and using the title of El Mahdi. He has at least one physical peculiarity which Mohammedan prophecy declared should be possessed by the true deliverer. Mr. Rhind quotes the prediction, that on the first day of the month of Moharram, in the year 1300, and in the 40th year of his age, will appear the Messiah of Islam, whose father's name shall be Mohammed, one of whose arms shall be of extraordinary length." Mohammed Senoussi's right arm is so long that it will reach to his knee.

A Moslem prophecy affirms that the Messiah of Islam will be invisible for some time prior to his final showing of himself. Senoussi now refuses to see even his most trusted followers. When he goes abroad on horseback a canopy is carried over and around him, so as to prevent him from being seen. Of late years the Mahdi has become as influential in the political as he is in the religious world. His emissaries boast that he can command an Arab army of unprecedented numerical strength, and he has accumulated at his Zaouia vast stores of arms and ammunition. The plans and movements of the Mahdi are being anxiously observed by the Turkish Government. He has hitherto refused to recognize the Sultan as the Caliph, and it is reasonably concluded that he means to usurp the Arab power in his own person.—Toronto Globe.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Oct. 4, 1882.

Our contributors must be patient. To some deferred articles we give place this week. We propose to give others soon. Please not to overdo the matter on subjects of difference. Our subscribers are much better pleased with practical and prophetical articles than with controversy.

By the blessing of God, and the kind help of friends at home and abroad, who are now contributing to our columns, we have finally attained the position where we feel that we can make THE RESTITUTION a paper of interest and instruction to all its readers and patrons. With scarcely an exception, our old friends still stand by us and new helpers are filling up our ranks. Let all lovers of our paper pray for the editor.

FINANCIALLY we are still dependent upon some extra aid. We find this is the case with most papers heralding the coming of Messiah and the kingdom of God. If our friends will help swell the numbers on our list of subscribers, the paper would soon become self-sustaining with rigid economy in publication expenses, and very small pay for editorial services. We remember, however, that sacrifice to a greater or less extent, is God's order—and he has promised a rich reward.

IN our present number we insert a part of a communication sent by Mrs. Davis from Jerusalem to the Editor of the Age to Come Herald, by whom the proof columns were kindly forwarded to us to secure an early insertion in THE RESTITUTION. We also publish a letter direct from her, which will be in type within a month from its date at Jerusalem. From this our friends will be glad to learn that she intends to write more for our paper soon. We hope she will favor us with frequent communications, as we can use more in our weekly issue than appears in the monthly numbers of the Herald. We are glad indeed to learn that THE RESTITUTION interests readers in that city, that is associated with the history of God's wonderful doings in the past, and that is now the center round which the great events in our world's history are so magnificently revolving. In allusion to financial matters, we are glad to say that we have forwarded for Mrs. Davis from this office $55.05 and have on hand $8.20, which we will send soon. In addition to this, which is designed for her personal benefit, some of our kind brethren in Illinois have raised $125—to be used by her for the suffering Jews that persecution is driving home from the lands of their exile. So that our solicitation for a little help has so far resulted in gathering $188.25 for her and suffering Israel; for which we sincerely thank God. Inclosed in her letter to us was a sample of about twenty varieties of flowers, worked into an ornamental group, and placed in a cup most tastefully woven from the delicate grass-leaves of that sacred locality; and all pressed compactly on to a card. What is certainly remarkable, the flowers most surprisingly retain their lovely natural hues. To manipulate a bouquet so perfect from delicate blossoms, and place them so artistically in a vase braided from ribboned spires of nature's green that grew in Salem's fields, is sufficient to demonstrate that Sister Davis is a woman of extraordinary good taste. She is evidently an amateur artist. It is with emotions of delight that we look upon the floral picture that now lies before us—a picture that nature has colored with tintings of transcendent beauty, greeting our admiring gaze in its well-arranged loveliness. Beautiful blossoms, we exclaim; gathered from fields once trodden by the feet of our adorable Redeemer. This association alone makes them seem like flowers gathered from Paradise. Many thanks to Sister Davis for these blooms from Immanuel's land.

So far as the results of the war in Egypt are concerned, our own opinion is, that England has gone into the land of the Nile to stay. By the failure of the Great Powers to take any part in the conflict, or to arrange anything through diplomacy in a Conference of Nations, they have left the settlement of the whole matter to the Sultan, the Khedive, and England. and so long as the rights of nations are maintained in the neutrality of the Suez Canal, they have no grounds to interfere in the final settlement, nor to dictate upon what terms the Sublime Porte, his subordinate the Khedive and Great Britain shall conclude to re-arrange the government of Egypt. Of this we are quite certain, England is not going to let everything go adrift into the old channels of uncertainty and comparative anarchy; neither will she yield her present advantages without some remunerement for the costs of the war, and the damages that the most wanton barbarism inflicted upon the European population settled in Egypt's marts of trade. When the account of plunder and ruthless destruction is fully made out, and the price of blood so savagely shed without provocation, is added, the grand total will be a heavy bill. Payment either in real estate or in a first mortgage lien upon the rich lands of the country of the old Pharaohs, is the only way out for the Sultan and Khedive. In the race for supremacy in the Orient, England has now got the inside track, and she is shrewd enough to not recklessly surrender her advantages to any of her wily antagonists. The days of Islam's political supremacy are numbered, and the termination of her duration, assigned to her in prophecy as a world power, is just expiring. When her Crescent disappears behind the darkness of the night of destiny, Jacob's Morning Star will sparkle on the sweeter dawning of a brighter day. We are endeavoring to keep our readers fully informed on all the shifting phases of the Eastern Question. It is the theme of themes in our times.

Selections.

THE GREEK BOUNDARY SETTLED.

The controversy about the Greek frontier in Thessaly, which has caused the relations of the Governments interested to become extremely strained, and which, indeed, gave rise to some collisions between Greek and Turkish troops, has been abruptly settled by the unconditional surrender of the whole territory claimed by Greece. This action on the part of Abdul-Hamid is significant, when we recall the widely different attitude which he has heretofore maintained in regard to this matter, and when we remember that the Conference was about to reassemble for the nominal purpose of adjusting this very difficulty. It looks as if the Sultan, powerfully impressed with the results of the Egyptian campaign, had at last made up his mind to cast in his lot with England; for it is manifestly the interest of the latter power to deprive the Conference of any pretext for assembling at this time, when the Egyptian question would almost certainly be made a subject of discussion.

There is no doubt that legally the Greeks were right in this controversy, although it was natural enough that the Turks should interpose a good deal of passive resistence to the mutilation of their territory in favor of a State that had taken no part in the conflict whose outcome was determined by the treaty of Berlin. The stubborn opposition of the Porte was so far successful that the original cession recommended by the powers was materially curtailed by the Conference of 1881, both in Epirus and in Thessaly. The commission appointed for the purpose pushed the northern frontier of Greek Thessaly back from the Pierian plain on the north of Plantamanes, to the plain of the Peneios, which lies south of that point. It was stipulated however, that the new boundary should be only about two and a half miles south of Plantamanes, and that Karalik Dervend, a strategic position of considerable importance, should belong to Greece. In spite of the remonstrances of Turkey, which insisted that the line should be run at least a mile further to the southward, all the representatives of the powers ratified the limit which had been fixed by the commission. The Greeks accordingly proceeded to occupy the open country, but the Turkish garrison persisted in refusing to evacuate Karalik Dervend.

Such was the situation at the outbreak of the Egyptian troubles, and at that stage of the imbroglio, when it appeared certain that Turkey would intervene in the Nile land, and would thus find occupation for much of her military force, the Athens Government resolved to seize the opportunity of taking by main strength what the Conference had given them. The scheme was furthered by the fact that amid the changes caused by the contemplated expedition to Egypt, the Turkish garrison at Karalik Dervend had been temporarily withdrawn, and before it could be replaced some Greek troops took possession of the coveted position. Subsequently it was re-taken by the Turks, and a series of collisions occurred along the whole border, which at one time seemed certain to entail open war between the two countries. Such must have been the result had not the Athens Government been sharply reprimanded both by England and Germany, and given distinctly to understand that their attempt to aggravate the existing complications by an European war would not be tolerated. No doubt it was also intimated that patience on their part would be duly recompensed, and that the unanimous decision of the Conference in relation to the Thessalian boundary should ultimately be enforced.

But while it is plain that Germany and Great Britain were desirous of localising the Egyptian trouble, it is almost equally certain that Russia would have gladly witnessed a conflict between Greece and Turkey which would have led to commotions throughout the Balkan peninsula. There is reason to believe that the Athens Government was encouraged in its aggressive action by the Russian Foreign Office, and although Greece for the moment succumbed to the pressure of Germany and England, we observe that no sooner had Cairo been occupied, and the Egyptian question been thus brought nigh to solution, than the Russian ambassador at Constantinople, M. Nelidoff, demanded a new meeting of the Conference for the alleged purpose of arranging the Greek frontier controversy. It may be surmised, however, that M. Nelidoff had something else in contemplation besides the professed defence of Greek interests. From the beginning of the Conference the Russian representative has taken the lead in opposing the methods of dealing with the Egyptian problem suggested by Lord Dufferin and supported by the ambassadors of Germany and Austria. He it was who insisted that England should pledge herself to leave to the Conference the ultimate determinations of all questions relating to the government of Egypt—a pledge which Lord Dufferin evaded on the ground that the mandate of the Conference being given to the Porte, England was under no direct obligations to that body.

It is now manifest, probably, to M. Nelidoff that he overshot the mark when, in concert with the representatives of Italy, France, and Turkey, he refused to directly sanction the interposition of England in Egypt, but averred that Turkey alone was legally competent to act in the matter, and that the employment of British troops must be the subject of a private convention between the English Foreign Office and the Porte. England took him at his word, and proceeded to conquer Egypt without any direct authority from the powers; and if she also had the skill or the good fortune to perform the whole work before the Anglo-Turkish convention was concluded, there is nothing in that at which the Conference can take offence, provided Turkey is satisfied. Evidently the Porte has ratified the action of England after the fact, whereby it has been rendered just as legitimate as if it had been previously sanctioned. If a perfect understanding has not been privately reached between Abdul-Hamid and Lord Dufferin, it would have been the Sultan's cue to embarrass the English ambassador by favoring a reassembling of the Conference. But, as the latest telegrams from Constantinople inform us, he has ordered the immediate surrender of Karalik Dervend and of the whole disputed territory to Greece, thus anticipating the most unfavorable decision at which the Conference could possibly have arrived on the frontier question. The result was that the meeting of that body, called on Sunday, in compliance with M. Nelidoff's demand, found itself stripped of the pretext for its convocation, and was forthwith dissolved.

The final settlement of the Thessalian boundary has put an end for the present to the troubles between Greece and Turkey, and the action of the latter power throws light upon the policy she may henceforth be expected to follow in regard to Egypt. She will probably maintain that the adjustment of a scheme of government for the Nile land is a matter lying solely within the competence of the Sultan as suzerain, of his vassal the Khedive, and of England, their ally and agent—that it is, in other words, a matter with which the Continental powers have no concern. And if Lord Beaconsfield were Prime Minister instead of Mr. Gladstone, we should be disposed to give some credence to the rumor that Turkey, which is now in quite as bad financial straits as she was when she sold Cyprus, has offered to sell her rights of suzerainty over Egypt for a sum representing ten years' tribute capitalized. Such a transfer of feudal supremacy would furnish a neat solution of the Egyptian problem, for, while the Khedive would continue at the head of the civil administration, Great Britain would be able at any moment to intervene for his protection without owing any account of her proceedings to the other European powers. The Khedive, in short, would occupy precisely the same position as that now held by the vassal princes in India. But this would be virtually annexation, and it is extremely doubtful whether the Gladstone Ministry, trammelled as it is by old professions and protestations, will venture to take such a bold and conclusive step, no matter how much it may be commended by conveniences and simplicity.—N. Y. Sun.

Age to Come Herald.

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM, Aug. 8, 1882.

It is evening as I now commence my journal for today. I have had a very pleasant dinner party, and the friends have all gone. There were but six—Mr. and Mrs. Merrill; Mr. and Mrs. Floyd; Frank and Mrs. Brinton, his mother.

The little stove sent in one of the boxes did its part nobly. It bakes bread, puddings, and pies nicely. Plum puddings are a rarity here. How I wished the friends in Boston could have sat at my table with us, the same extension table I used for several years in Boston.

We seem to feel that our consul can, and will, protect our interests here. His salary, however, should be raised. I am sure his services will be appreciated. Will not our United States Government wake up to the importance of looking after the welfare of Americans in Palestine?

All is quiet now. The Egyptian war does not seem to make much impression upon the people. War will probably reach us some time. Well, let it come. "Peace on earth" will only be found on the other side of it. We welcome war for the sake of peace.

Aug. 9. I have had a good old-fashioned visit today from our dear friends, the Illinois colony. We had a real Yankee supper cooked with the little stove. Nice sweet biscuits are a rarity here. Also two Jews ate with us.

So here we are, some believing Jesus the carpenter, and son of a carpenter, to be the true Messiah; and others, with the veil still over their faces, disbelieving. Some of the two tribes, and some from the ten tribes—Judah and Israel—the two sticks of Ezek. xxxvii. coming together to make one stick, one nation, upon the mountains of Israel, when one King will be king to them all. They will not be united under one king believing differently, as religionists endeavor to patch up a union now with different views; but as they come into the unity of the faith in Christ, the two sticks become one in him. No one can for a moment believe the two houses of Israel will ever become one nation upon the mountains of Israel, only as they both embrace the true faith in Christ.

If our friends in America could realize how much they could do towards bringing about this great union, they would hasten to the field of labor. Here we do realize it; but I suppose there, judging from my own experience before I came here, they do not realize it. But let them come here and they will soon find themselves engaged in a work of which they never had, and never can have, any conception in America—the work of removing the veil from the Jew, and uniting the two houses of Israel in Christ.

[Mrs. Davis has struck the key-note here. There is no work which any portion of the human family can perform equal to laboring for the union of the two sticks of Ezek. xxxvii. When the nation was divided into two kingdoms, it was a dreadful inflictive punishment to Israel. "A house divided against itself cannot stand," and when the house of Israel was divided into two kingdoms they were both doomed to fall. There was no salvation for either house, except by their becoming united again. Nothing else could restore them; nothing else can save them now. There can be no millennium; there can be no Age-to-Come; there can be no second advent of Christ; there can be no kingdom of God set up; there can be no resurrection from the grave; there can be no pure Christianity; there can be no salvation of God's elect, unless the two houses of Israel, represented by these two sticks, become one nation, united in Christ, a pure, Christian nation, in the land of Palestine, upon the mountains of Israel. We despair of ever seeing anything better than we now have, if this union can not be effected. Everything hinges upon it. The sins of Solomon and of the whole nation caused the divison of the kingdom of Israel, which must be united again. Hence the Lord said to Jeroboam: "I will for this (for their sins) afflict the house of David, (by dividing the kingdom) but not for ever." 1 Kings xi. 39. This promise is the anchor; the affliction shall not be forever. But what will be the remedy? Christ. By cleansing them from all sinful propensities and writing the New Covenant in their hearts, they will become one in Christ. The affliction of the house of David, to which Christ belongs, by a division of the kingdom over which he is to reign, will not be for ever. The breach will be healed, but only as they become new creatures in Christ. The two kingdoms into which the nation was divided after the death of Solomon will be united again, not in the same sinful condition as when divided, but only as they become pure Christians of the house of Jacob, over which Christ is to reign for ever. The union of the two sticks by the circumcision of Christ, which is the putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, making the tribes of Israel of one heart and mind, perfectly united in Christ and purity, will be the setting up of the Kingdom of God, which is the kingdom of Israel, in the days of the present existing kingdoms into which the ancient Roman empire was divided. The declaration of Almighty God concerning the union of these two kingdoms of Israel illustrated by the two sticks, is irrevocable and immutable, as follows: "Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side and bring them into their own land, and will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all; neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of all their dwelling places wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God." Ezek. xxxvii. 21–23. If this will not satisfy the skeptic and theorist, let them remain in unbelief. It is too late, however, to call it in question, for the work has already commenced.]

I must still pray God to send people here of the right class from America. With their liberal advanced views they are better fitted to labor in Palestine perhaps than any others. A few thousand would soon find themselves in a growing Paradise; not only in respect to improvement in the land and buildings, but by the amalgamation and cohesion of different nationalities, and as a sequence, the growth of new ideas, both governmental and religious, and perhaps scientific likewise. This is the place, and the door is now opening for the birth of new ideas, a new regime and a new age.

We hear that the people are still being massacred in Egypt. Well, we do not seem to have any fears here, although we are in constant expectation that something dreadful may take place at any time. Perhaps one reason why we do not borrow trouble is that something new is attracting our attention all the time, which gives us an assurance that God is beginning to show favor to this land. The clouds are the wonder of the present time. They indicate the return of fruitful seasons. But husbandmen are needed as well as rain. May God send them too.

We fear that the war in Egypt will prevent some from coming from America. But it does not have the tendency to make us desirous of returning. If our friends could see as we see and feel as we feel, it seems as though nothing could discourage them. As I have before said, the longer we live here, even under great trials, the more we love the country. It is really astonishing that we so soon became so greatly attached to the place; and if we love Jerusalem so much in her gloom and desolation, will not our hearts be filled with ecstatic joy when she rises from dust, darkness and sin, and, putting on her beautiful garments and strength, appears in righteousness and glory? Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time, and bring the welcome view. I am satisfied that no heart has yet conceived the greatness of the glory of the New Jerusalem, nor the rapturous joy of its inhabitants. "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee. Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces." "Because of the house of the Lord our God (which must be transcendently glorious) I will seek thy good." Psa. cxxii. This last clause—"I will seek thy good"—contains the sentiment that should be in the heart of every lover of Jesus. Who would not seek the good and pray for the peace of Jerusalem, for here the "house of the God of Jacob" is to be established, "and all nations shall flow unto it!"

An interesting telephonic experiment was tried at Malta, during the bombardment of the forts at Alexandria. A telephone was attached at Malta to the Alexandria cable, and connection was made with the other end of the cable on board the Chiltern, off Alexandria. It was found that, owing either to the distance, or to the vibration caused by the firing, it was impracticable to send a verbal message, but the firing at Alexandria was distinctly heard at Malta, a distance of more than a thousand miles.

Prebities.

The recent experiments by Belgian electricians in extending telephony promise to be of great practical value. Talking was carried on very successfully between Brussels and Dover, a distance of sixty miles of sub-marine wire, as well as over three times that length of air line. It is clear that the old obstacles to ocean telephony have been altogether or in large part overcome. The result can hardly fail to be important to light-houses and other isolated seaboard stations, as well as islands which rely on ocean wires for rapid communication of intelligence.

Anti-Jewish riots have been renewed in different parts of Hungary, chiefly at Janoshaza, where a report was spread that through the efforts of the Jews, the military would be quartered in the town for several months at the expense of the residents. In their fury the peasants determined to kill all the Jews and in the first place to raze the synagogue to the ground. Nine Jews were frightfully beaten, and one dangerously wounded. At Suwalk, in Russian Poland, frightful outrages have again been committed. An attack was made on the Jews, the aggressors consisting chiefly of retired soldiers. The rioters, beside destroying several houses belonging to Jews, leaving the inhabitants nothing but the clothing in which they were attired, ill-treated a number of Jews, about thirty of whom were seriously injured, some having their heads, others their arms, broken.

The city of Cairo was saved from destruction and the European inhabitants from massacre by the promptitude with which the British cavalry proceeded there after the battle at Tel-el-Kebir. The city would probably have been burned by the mob had they not arrived. The news of the defeat at Tel-el-Kebir excited the greatest grief and consternation among the population, but before they had time to come to any conclusion as to what action should be taken, the arrival of General Drury Lowe and the cavalry at once put a stop to the plans of the violent portion of the mob. When they reached the city Arabi and Toulba had a long conversation with some friends as to whether they should fly to the desert, but on the advice of Ninet, the Swiss gentleman who had remained with the Egyptian ambulance throughout the war, they determined to give themselves up to the English and not to Towfik Pacha.

The greatest breadth of the Delta, or cultivated plain of Lower Egypt, is about eighty miles from east to west; its length, from the bifurcation of the river to the sea, is estimated at ninety miles. The interior of the country is covered with fields, orchards, and plantations, chiefly of cotton. The rise of the Nile, occasioned by the periodical rains of Central Africa, begins in June, about the summer solstice, and continues to increase until September, overflowing the lowlands along its course. The Delta then looks like an immense marsh, interspersed with numerous islands, with villages, towns, and trees, just above the water. Should the Nile rise a few feet above the customary elevation, the inundation sweeps away the mud-built cottages of the fellaheen, drowns the cattle, and involves the whole population in ruin. Again, should it fall short of the ordinary height, bad crops and dearth are the consequences. The inundations, having remained stationary for a few days, begin to subside, and about the end of November most of the fields are left dry and covered with a fresh layer of brown slime. This is the time the lands are put under cultivation.

JEWISH LONGING FOR HOME.

Mr. H. Guedalla (Jew) writes: "It is utterly useless to endeavor to stem the tide of emigration to Syria and Palestine. The emigrants will be powerfully assisted with money locally; and if many who take out money should, through unforeseen circumstances, not succeed, then money will be annually sent them, which will enable a lot of stupid nonsense to be talked about Chalookas, without rhyme or reason. The Russian Jews look at emigration to America with loathing abhorrence. From Odessa I hear that early this month 800 educated and well-to-do people left for the Holy Land. All the inns are full of emigrants to Palestine. Forty thousand from the above town alone wish to go these are facts. Those who have been to the Holy Land expressly to report, have returned with favorable accounts. Mr. Oliphant can confirm this. Mr. Rosenfeld, of Odessa, went last week to Jerusalem to establish a bank there, with a capital of 500,000 roubles. A university at Jaffa is also projected. One hundred and fifty men have just left Odessa, by steamer, with plenty of money, to establish a colony in the Holy Land, most of them being country people—quite distinct from the specimens of the lower orders seen at Lumbery, not being mean, ignorant, and uncivilised. One thousand young men, who have finished their university course, are preparing to leave Odessa for Palestine. It is unfair to the inhabitants of the Holy Land that even a score of beggars should come there from foreign countries, as they have not a penny to spare for them."—Christadelphian.

News Items.

DISASTROUS FLOODS IN THE TYROL.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—The floods in the Tyrol have reduced hundreds of wealthy land-owners to poverty. The laboring class is in terrible distress. The approach of winter greatly aggravates the situation.

CHOLERA IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—An official telegram received at Madrid says that cholera has ceased in Japan, but at Manila, in the Philippine Islands, on Thursday, there were twenty deaths from that epidemic.

ANTI-JEWISH RIOTS.

VIENNA, Sept. 29.—Advices from Pressburg report the occurrence of anti-Jewish riots at that place. The mob broke the windows of many houses occupied by Jews. The military finally restored order.

THE GREAT COMET SEEN AT VIENNA.

VIENNA, Sept. 29.—A great comet was observed here at 5:30 this morning, in right ascension 10 hours 46 minutes, and declination 6 degrees 15 minutes south.

ODESSA, Oct. 1.—An explosion in the torpedo magazine on the Russian ironclad Admiral Popoff killed two officers and thirty seamen.

DUBLIN, Oct. 1.—There was a hurricane in Ireland today. At Cork more damage was done on land than by any previous storm for twenty years past. The American ship Harvey Mills, from Liverpool for New York, lying at Queenstown, was driven ashore, and several yachts sunk in the harbor. At Newry a large number of houses were greatly damaged and the town flooded. At Limerick the spire of the Catholic church was blown down during the service, causing a panic, which was, however, quickly allayed.

GREECE — SENDING TROOPS TO THE FRONTIER.

ATHENS, Oct. 2.—The Government, in anticipation of the possible renewal of complications with Turkey, in regard to the frontier, has ordered the Greek troops on the Thessalian border to be reinforced.

AUSTRIA—THE WAR ON THE JEWS IN HUNGARY.

PRESBURG, Oct. 2.—Six hundred Jewish families have left the city on account of the riots.

The house of A. T. Stewart & Co., in New York, closed its doors finally Saturday night. By the closing 13,000 people are thrown out of employment.

It is reported that there are 500 cases of yellow fever at Mier, Mexico, and that there have been 135 deaths to date.

A Line of Encouragement.

OKOLONA, Miss.

Editor Restitution:

Inclosed find $2.00, my subscription; I assure you that I am very grateful to you for the continuance of the paper, for I consider it the best paper I have ever read. It will bear reading and re-reading. I distribute among my friends. Would that every one could and would read it.

Yours in hope of the soon coming Savior.

MRS. J. C. FITZGERALD.

MILLFIELD, O.

Editor Restitution:

Having returned from a discussion on the state of the dead and future punishment, between Elder J. B. Taylor of the Christian order, and Elder W. H. McBroom, a Second Adventist, allow me to say, that though the usual Scriptures were ably presented by each disputant, yet the spirit in which their arguments were urged, and the results of the debate are worthy of special note. During the four days of discussion not an unkind word dropped from the lips of either. The audiences (always full) and the community, partook of the same spirit. If contestants would urge the loveliness of truth, rather than their own smartness, the results of religious disputations would be creditable to the cause of Christianity.

The debate took place in Jackson county, Ohio, at the Freedom church, a congregation composed of live, generous-hearted members.

J. P. WENTZEL.

An evil speaker differs from an evil doer only in the want of opportunity.

Poetry.

The (London) Christian.

WAITING.

I am waiting for the coming of my dear Redeemer Lord;
I am resting in his promises, in his precious, priceless words;
And although he seems to tarry, yet I know he'll surely come,
And take his own, his ransomed, to his bright and blissful home.

When I awaken in the morning, ere the dawning of the day,
I lift my soul to his dear side, and watch, and praise, and pray,
For it may be in the morning I shall hear his blessed voice,
Triumphant o'er the waves of time, bid all his own rejoice.

Then in the noontide splendor of the sun's meridian light,
When the busy world's surroundings need our armor should be bright,
'Tis sweet to turn aside our thoughts from the carking cares of life,
And think, perhaps, ere now he'll come 'mid the battle and the strife.

Then when the shadows wing of night spreads darkness on the land,
Ere soft slumbers close my senses, I yiel l all into his hand,
My body, soul, and spirit—self—all I ask him safe to keep,
And, thinking on his precious blood, I fain would fall asleep;

For it may be while I'm sleeping the arch-angel's trump will sound—
Then, oh what a glorious waking, to be all in Jesus found!
Yes, but whether in the morning, or the noontide, or in the night,
It seeks little to the Christian soul, whose light is in his light;
For no matter when he cometh—oh, what praise for truth like this!
When he comes we shall be like him, "we shall see him as he is."

Communications.

A LETTER FROM MRS. DAVIS.

JERUSALEM, Sept. 5, 1882.

Dear Brother Cheplin:

Please accept my warmest thanks for your kind efforts in my behalf; I assure you that I appreciate all that you have done or may do for me.

THE RESTITUTION has been very welcome to me and also many others, both Jews and Christians, who have read it with pleasure; I trust it has been the means of awakening some to the important truths which are so ably advocated in it.

I have received many letters from readers of your paper, containing expressions of the kindest feelings of sympathy for me in my loneliness and bereavement, many of which I have answered. Some have written for information about this country, expressing a desire to come here to live, in anticipation of the fulfilment of prophecy.

There is a strong feeling here that the present is the most sublime epoch in the history of the world. The gathering of the Jews, and re-establishment of the kingdom of Israel is the topic of the day. The Jews believe fully that the day of Messiah is approaching, and say so without reserve.

I will try to write something of interest for THE RESTITUTION if the Lord will in a few days. You will, dear brother, please excuse all blunders, as I find that my last years' suffering has affected my mental condition, and I cannot write as I used to, therefore you are at liberty to correct where you please, I shall simply write about facts as I learn them, and hope to interest your readers in this glorious land. So excuse this hasty note, as I have but a few moments before the mail closes.

I enclose a card specimen of our wild flowers. I picked them from the wheat fields in Jerusalem. You will observe that they have retained their color perfectly; I learn that no other flowers can be dried without losing their color. I am preparing many of those for sale and if any one in your city would like a few I will send by mail, also some sketches of places of interest here, which I have made and painted.

I hope this will find you in good health, and pray God to keep you in peace, and bring you to his kingdom.

Your Sister in Christ.

A. E. DAVIS.

All Things that are Discovered are Made Manifest by the Light; for Whatsoever Doth Make Manifest is Light. Eph. v. 13.

1. There is an order in all things; according to which our language is framed; our wisdom is made up; and according to which the system of nature and grace proceeds. We may be often too blind, feeble or dull, to trace this order; yet, the proposition is so obviously true, that we accept it, even where we do not trace it.

2. From the Creator we have creation. From the Revealer we have Revelation. From the speaker comes the word spoken. On this line of order we read that, "by the word of the Lord (Jehovah) were the heavens made .... For he spake, and it was done. He commanded, and it stood fast." Psa. xxxiii. 6–9; John i. 1–4. "O God, how manifold are thy works; in wisdom hast thou made them all. Psa. civ. 24–31.

3. From "the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth," we have "the only begotten Son; the Son of the Father, in truth and love." 2 John iii. "Whoso shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him and he in God." 1 John iv. 15. Hence, "who is he that overcometh the world; but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God." 1 John v. 5. This apostle notes this word Father, and so the order of Father and Son, over twenty times in one chapter. John xiv. "Jesus saith .... the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

On this principle, perhaps, of Divine descent into our humanity, we read of St. Paul; "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. .... I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." Gal. ii. 20. "Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." Eph. iii. 14–21.

These Scriptures are the testimony of the Holy Ghost. The wisdom or will of man has no right to presume to assert itself as to any such order of Divine Revelation. Rev. xxii. 18–19. It is forever settled in heaven. Psa. lxxxix. 3–7.

4. "The word of God" forewent the world. "As it is written, he spake, and it was." Psa. xxxiii.

He spake of death, (in case of disobedience by Adam)—death came. Rom. v. 12; Gen. ii.

He spake of the flood. Gen. vi. The flood came. Gen. vii.

He spake of Abraham's seed, through 430 years, and of their wondrous deliverance. It came.

He spake of their kingdom, and also of their captivity and dispersion through "seven times." Both have come. The Jews are a living memorial of God's truth.

Above all, "He spake of the seed of the woman," all through from Eden to Simeon and Mary—over 4,000 years. "The seed came in the fulness of time, made of a woman....under law." Gal. iv. 4; Matt. i.; Luke i.; John i. 14. "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us; and we behold his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father; full of grace and truth."

He spoke also of his death, resurrection and ascension. All came (and are the substratum of the gospel age, and of "our high calling," in grace).

"He spake" also by his prophets, of the world's political history—"the times of the Gentiles," through Babylon, Persia, Greece and Rome, with the chief changes in Rome, (and Mahomedanism in the "third part").

Now, all this has become the sum of history. God would do nothing but as he spake by the prophets," (Amos iii. 7) through the ages and dispensations past.

"Abraham believed God who quickeneth the dead and calleth things that be not as though they were (Rom. iv. 17) —literally, things not being as being.

The Hebrew, Greek, Latin and English agree, "He spake the word"—the logos—with creative, life-giving power, productive of the object, event, or reality required. Logos is from lego, I speak, and is the word spoken.

Often we have the very words so spoken. Exod. xxiv. 3; Num. xi. 24. "The logos"—the word spoken, was the mind of the living, everlasting God. The words were the sum and centre of all the Mosaic revelation to Israel. "The logos" is also the matter of the gospel ministry. St. Paul charged Timothy under the awful sanctions of the second coming of Judgment, to "preach the word—herald the logos."

To crown this testimony, we read the language of the Lord Jesus—who was the concentral subject of Divine Revelation—"Now ye are clean through the word—logos—which I have spoken unto you." John xv. 3; Acts x. 43; Rev. xix. 10.

This doctrine comes out in the ancient exemplar of the faithful; "Abraham believed God (his spoken word) and it was (logos-ed, worded) counted to him for righteousness." Rom. iv. 3. Over ten times logizomai the verbal form of logos, is so used in that one chapter; and rendered "reckoned, counted and imputed."

5. Theophanies—Divine appearances —are recorded through successive ages, they signify what was distinctly foretold; they were varied in form and adapted to each occasion.

To Abraham, it was as men journeying, to accept of his hospitality. Gen. xviii.

To Moses, in the burning bush—not burned, (Israel suffering but not destroyed) and in "the Pattern in the mount," the type, or form for the anti-type under the new covenant, in Christ and yet future. Heb. viii. 5–12.

To Joshua, it was as "the captain of the Lord's host," to secure their conquest. John v. 12–16.

To Daniel, he was "the wonderful numberer" (Dan. viii.), to show "how long."

To Simeon, Zacharish and Mary, it was to make known the birth, the character, and the glorious achievements of the promised "seed of the woman" — the Messiah — the Lord Jesus, and yet to be realized in the kingdom. Amen. Luke i. and ii.

Observe, "God has been his own interpreter," he has not left his revelation to be argued out and altered by uninspired men. No, no.

"The angel of the Lord" in these relations has been taken somehow, for the blessed Savior; as if God was not there; yet these very words occur in the New Testament, in utter contrariety to such a view. Luke i. 11, 19; xxii. 43; Rev. i. 1.

Reverence requires that we bow to God at his will as manifested in Christ, the impersonation of the word.

In conclusion. Are we not held by all reason and all "light" from above, to take all these things as given us from the one Divine source? These things are manifested, according to our text only by "the light—the word and wisdom of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

This word, this light, discloses "the times and reign of the Lord Christ," over Israel and the nations (remnant) that Satan shall not deceive till the thousand years are fulfilled. Rev. xx. 3–7; Luke i. 32, 33, 69–73; ii. 27–32. A light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of thy people Israel. God is supreme over all and blessed forever. Amen.

His word will be as surely realized in the facts of the future; as in those of the past. "The word of God" is as good as his bond. It is his bond that binds our faith "to wait only, only on him," till his word shall crystalize and unfold into the final fulfilments.

"Of the things spoken this is the sum: Hear O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord (Mark xii. 29) .... Him only shalt thou serve." Matt. iv. 10. This is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. John xvii. 3. "There be that are called gods—but to us there is but one God, the Father; .... and one Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. viii. 5, 6); one God and Father of all (Eph. iv. 6); for there is one God and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus. 1 Tim. ii. 5. But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father—the spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." John xv. 26; xvi. 7–14.

In these primary portions we find "the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. They seem ultimate, and adapted to close, consummate and crown our conception of the Divine Revealer. They are not "in the words which man's wisdom teacheth; but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual." 1 Cor. ii. 12, 13. "God in Christ reconciling the world to himself." 2 Cor. v. 19.

J. B. COOK.

A FEW PROPOSITIONS, PROOFS, AND CONCLUSIONS.

Proposition 1. The resurrection of Christ was the sample of the resurrection which is promised in the gospel.

Proof. He is the sample of "the resurrection and the life," of the gospel scheme. "He is the vine, his people are the branches." "He is the head of the body—the church." He is the first fruits of the harvest of the dead, the first sheaf of that harvest. He is the first born from the dead, the first born among the brethren. He was declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead.

Conclusion. If he is the sample, all those who will be raised from the dead, must be raised for the reason he was raised, and as he was raised, and for the purpose for which he was raised, their resurrection and life must be like his. The vine and the branches must fare alike. The members of Christ's body must be raised as the head was raised. All the sheaves of the harvest must be like the first sheaf. If the first sheaf was wheat, the rest of the sheaves must be wheat. If he was the first born from the dead, all who are born from the dead must be born as he was. They must all be brethren of Christ, they must all become the children of God with power, being the children of the resurrection. Then, Christ is the sample, or the first fruits of those who are like him, and of no others.

Proposition 2. Christ was raised from the dead literally.

Proof. "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, and he was buried, and rose again the third day according to the Scriptures."

Conclusion. The resurrection of Christ was just as literal as his death and burial were. Then those who will be raised from the dead must be raised literally as he was.

Proposition 3. Christ was raised from the dead because he was worthy to be raised up.

Proof. "He was raised from the dead to sit on David's throne, because he was the holy one, and the just," and because "he loved righteousness and hated iniquity," and because "he was faithful to God," and because "he overcame." Christ was raised up because he was the seed of Abraham and the seed of David, and an heir of the kingdom.

Conclusion. As Christ is the sample of the resurrection, and as he was raised up because he was worthy to be raised, so those who will be raised from the dead, will be raised on the same conditions. They must make the Lord their God, they must become the seed of Abraham, and heirs according to the promise. They must become Christ's, and be in Christ, and believe in him. The spirit of Christ must dwell in them. They must have the first fruits of the spirit, and their conversation must be in heaven, they must strive to attain unto the resurrection as Paul did, they must overcome as Christ did, and they must all belong to the harvest of which Christ is the first fruits, and be members of his body, and be worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead. These are the conditions of the resurrection. If these conditions are not complied with the dead will not be raised.

Proposition 4. Christ complied with these conditions in this life.

Proof. This proposition is self-evident. All he did, he did in this life. He had no other. The becoming worthy of the resurrection must be in this life, if at all. This life is the sowing time—the resurrection is the harvest. As well might we talk of a harvest before the seed is sown, as to talk of the resurrection before men are worthy of it.

Conclusion. If the conditions of the resurrection are not complied with in this life, they will not be complied with at all, and there will be no resurrection. If there is no sowing to the spirit in this life there will be no reaping of life in the world to come. The word of the kingdom is the only seed that will produce a resurrection. The being begotten through the gospel, is the only begetting that will assure being born from the dead.

Proposition 5. The conditions of salvation, and the conditions of the resurrection are not exactly the same.

Proof. It is required of men that they believe the gospel in order to be saved. It is also required of them to believe the same gospel in order to be raised up at the last day. If men must sow to the spirit in order to reap life everlasting, the spirit that raised up Christ from the dead must dwell in them in order to have their mortal bodies quickened. If they must strive to enter in at the straight gate, in order to secure eternal life, they must strive by all means to attain unto the resurrection of the dead. If our conversation must be as becometh the gospel of Christ in order to be saved, our conversation must be in heaven in order that our vile bodies be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. If men must overcome in order to be saved, they must overcome in order to be raised from the dead to sit down with him in his throne. If men must be worthy of the kingdom in order to inherit it, they must also be worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead in order to attain unto it. Thus in all respects the conditions of salvation and of the resurrection are the same.

Conclusion. That as those only who comply with the conditions of salvation will be saved, so those only who comply with the conditions of the resurrection will be raised from the dead.

The resurrection is sometimes used as a figure to represent that which is not a literal resurrection. But the literal resurrection of those who have become worthy of it in this life, is the only resurrection provided for in the gospel, as shown by the resurrection of Christ as the sample.

Are not the propositions in this article wholly true? Was not Christ the sample of the resurrection? Was he not raised from the dead literally? Was he not raised conditionally? Did he not comply with the conditions of the resurrection in this life? Are not the conditions of salvation and of the resurrection the same? Are not the proofs of these propositions conclusive, and are not the conclusions unavoidable?

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

There is no trait more valuable than a determination to persevere when the right thing is to be accomplished.

When death, the great reconciler, has come, it is never our tenderness that we regret, but our severity.

Youths' Column.

Angry Words.

Angry words are lightly spoken
In a rash and thoughtless hour,
Brightest links of life are broken
By their deep, insidious power;
Hearts inspired by warmest feeling
Ne'er before by anger stirred,
Oft are rent past human healing,
By a single angry word.

Poison drops of care and sorrow
Bitter poison drops are they;
Weaving for the coming morrow
Saddest memories of today.
Angry words, oh let them never
From the tongue unbridled slip,
May the heart's best impulse ever
Check them ere they soil the lip.

Love is much too pure and holy,
Friendship is too sacred far;
For a moment's reckless folly
Thus to desolate and mar.
Angry words are lightly spoken,
Bitter thoughts are rashly said,
Brightest links in life are broken
By a single angry word.

A Short Sermon on Manliness.

Learn from your earliest days to ensure your principles against the perils of ridicule; you can no more exercise your reason if you live in constant dread of laughter than you can enjoy your life if you are in constant terror of death. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a point of morals, do it, however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear; do it, not for insolence, but seriously and gradually, as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom, and did not wait until it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion.—Sidney Smith.

Between smoking and the increased prevalence of heart disease there is undoubtedly a close connection. A distinguished physician, Dr. Deschamps, in an English magazine, in an article warning the public against the evil results of smoking, says: "Degeneration of the cardiac muscle is often caused by tobacco." He adds: "So long as the rest of his organism remains in good working order the smoker only experiences intermittent palpitation, and the grave injury done the heart remains unperceived until some trifling cause brings into relief the irremediable disorders produced by the prolonged use of tobacco." This is an added timely admonition which tobacco-users, old and young, will do well to heed.—National Temperance Advocate.

"Save My Boys."

Seven drunkards recently walked into our office and bid us God speed in our battle with the saloons. There was not one of them who did not show the seal of whisky's work. The features were sculptured by dissipation into carricature and sorrow. They were temperance sermons in the concrete, mere wrecks of men, but with manhood enough left to be conscious that they were wrecked, and to wish that their relatives and children might shun the rocks on which they split. Said one of these callers:

"I drink, have drank for years, and feel that I can never stop. But from this very fact I know better than those who do not drink the danger to young men and boys. I have three boys. One of them is old enough to drink, and is drinking. He learned it in the saloon. My prayer is, and my vote shall be cast, to close the saloons before my other boys get into them and get to drinking, and I know scores and scores of other drinking men who are as anxious as I am to close the saloons before the little boys reach them. I am hopeless, and many of us who drink are hopeless. Closing the saloons will not save me; it will not save many others who drink—God grant, though, it may save some—but it will keep many boys from learning to drink, and from being drunkards, and, God help me, if I live to see the 27th of June I shall go to the polls and vote for the amendment, and vote to shut the saloons—the school for drinking, the nursery for drunkards—and vote before all men, even though it be in part a vote of shame, the open ballot of temperance. And," he added, with the water of remorse falling from his sad eyes on his reddened and dropsied cheeks, "I know such a vote will give joy to the heart of my poor wife."—Des Moines Register.

A Father in Heaven.

How many souls are in constant anxiety and unsettledness as to their whole path on earth, because they do not believe that they have a Father in heaven who cares for them, and for every little detail in their daily walk! Oh, if they only believed in the love of God—the real love of God to them—a love which spared not his beloved Son when the sacrifice was needful for their good; if they only believed that they, in all the special circumstances of their lot on earth, were the objects of his love in heaven, what a load of anxiety and care it would remove; and what brightness it would give to their faces and to their path too! For then they would expect the guidance of a Father and their eyes would be up to him, who would never disappoint their trust. And what would be far better than the guidance even, they would have the peace of his presence and the consciousness of his love every step of the way. This is the portion of every Christian. For we are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ. Oh, what a Father we have in heaven! He is such an one as to concern himself with my little mind, and little ways, and little trials and exercises, and that too to be my helper in them all and my refuge. He is such an one as to associate his glory with all these things, so that whether I eat or drink I may do it to his glory in the name of the Lord Jesus and in the grace which he supplies.—Girdle of Truth.

Boys, Go Home.

Ah, boys! you who have gone out from the homesteads into the rush and bustle of life, do you ever think of the patient mothers who are stretching out to you arms that are powerless to draw you back to the old home nest? arms that were strong to carry you once, pressed to hearts that love you now as then.

No matter, though your hair is silver-streaked, and Dot in the cradle calls you grandpa, you are "the boy" so long as mother lives. You are the children of the old home. Nothing can crowd you out of a mother's heart. You may have failed in the battle of life, and your manhood may have been crushed out against the wall of circumstances; you may have been prosperous, gained wealth and fame; but mother's love has followed you always. Many a "boy" has not been home for five or ten or twenty years. And all this time mother has been waiting. Ah, who does not know the agony expressed by that word? She may be even now saying, "I dreamed of my John last night. May be he will come today. He may drop in for dinner;" and the poor, trembling hands prepare some favorite dish for him. Dinner comes and goes, but John comes not with it. Thus day after day, month after month, year after year, passes, till at last, "hope deferred maketh the heart sick," ay, sick unto death; the feeble arms are stretched out no longer.

The dim eyes are closed, the gray hairs smoothed for the last time, and the tired hands are folded for everlasting rest, and the mother waits no more on earth for one who comes not. God grant that she may not, in vain, wait for his coming in the heavenly home. Once more I say unto you, boys, go home if only for a day. Let mother know you have not forgotten her. Her days may be numbered. Next winter may cover her grave with snow.—Watch-Tower.

The Bible.

The book of books. It has outlived the degeneracy of all the preceding ages, and still reigns triumphantly supreme. Coeval with time, it shall endure to eternity. Its pages sweeter than the honey-dew, contain the bread of life for weary, faint humanity. The sin-sick may be healed there, and the thirsty spirit may drink to fulness of joy. The lords and mighty men may obey it with honor, and the humblest dweller in tent may likewise sip from the full brimming fountain with gladness. Its contents are indescribable, surpassing by far all the productions of ages. While its teachings may confound the wisdom of sages and philosophers, yet the commonest mind can learn wholesome precepts from its pages. The highest order of intellect can find food therein, and those not above the point of mediocrity can learn of it. The aged man can grow young, as it were, while the child can gain the wisdom of mature years. Sweet innocence breathes in every page, and every syllable beams with the brightness of the Sun of Righteousness. It is all aglow with the freshness and beauty of its own truth. Every word is clearly stamped with the impress of God. He breathes and lives in every line. The Holy Bible, yes, it shines with his smile and is dark with the frowns of his wrath. It speaks in thundering tones from Sinai, and the earth trembles with its power. From Mount Calvary it speaks in the soft tones of gentleness and love.

It is the source of the world's wisdom, the repository of its knowledge, and the unfailing guide of its holiness. The most ancient and authentic history is found on its pages.....It is a natural field where one may always find the choicest fruits and fairest flowers. Yet it contains the pure gold, the sapphire, and the onyx stone. Every blessing accessible can be had there, and the entire list of goodness is there.

Men may boast of the mines of wealth, treasures of earth, crowns of gold, diadems of pearl, sceptres of power; but none are comparable to the Holy Book. It is general in its applications and universal in its teachings. What a sublime spectacle to see its works. Not confined to the perusal of the wise, and the halls of grandeur, it is a much loved inmate of the humblest cottage.

Oh, could we but read the history of its course. Many a heart, sore and weary, has it healed and refreshed. Ah! it has calmed many a throbbing breast. Many sighs has it quenched, and dried many a tear. It has bound up the heart, torn and bruised, of mothers weeping for their children. It has turned the dimness of despair into the full-orbed hope, and the weakness of faith into the strength of love.

It has led grief-stricken friends from the little mound that marked the last resting-place of the one they held dear, to the house of prayer and praise. It has turned the streaming eyes of the orphan to a kind Father in heaven, who will wipe away all his tears. It has led men from the cold and barren waste to the warm, rich valleys of God. Yes, it has called them from the abodes of misery, haunts of woe, sinks of vice, forums of sin and haunts of iniquity, to the temples of righteousness, adorned with the beauty of piety. Not unfrequently has the foot-sore, sin-sick pilgrim sought refuge under its sheltering wing, and found rest from his journeying. When the decree of the ruler would forbid the reading of its precious pages, the eyes of faith, kindled by love, will seek the secluded nook, the remote and dismal cave, the cleft of the barren rock, and in silence and profound solitude read its glorious truths, while tears of joy fall thick and fast down the careworn visage; and there, with emotion swelled too big for utterance, the heart finds a balm for all its woe. Again has many a humble child of God, perhaps a bereaved mother, by the dim light of her lowly cottage hearth, read her Bible in smothered tones lest the sharp ear of the prosecutor overhear her words.

What a striking picture, yea, reality of faith that will remove mountains, and lead its possessor up to the beauties and realities of the highest heaven. What good and eternal truths to be followed by blessing indescribable and unfading. Precious, precious refuge! Are you weary, faint and sore? It will rest, restore and cure you. Have friends departed—loved ones been cut down in death? or adversity been hard upon you? It is the only medium of refuge. If persecution has borne you down to the earth, and friends have failed, foes triumphed, disaster wrought sad havoc with you, and utter anguish taken hold on you; if you have despaired, and laid down to breathe your last, will you not look dimly but trustfully through the clouds of thick darkness that surround you, and view the sweet promises contained in the Blessed Volume? Let hope spring anew within you and gladly take up again the burden of life, and carry it till the Author of the Blessed Word calls you like a wanderer home.

Glorious hopes of immortality does the blessed Book inspire. Hail, heavenly treasure! Thou stainless word of God, live and abide forever. Go forth conquering and to conquer, leading captivity captive and giving gifts unto men. Mighty, oh, mighty to save! Eternal be the praise of the Author, and everlasting the rest of his followers.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

There will be a conference meeting of the brethren of the one faith at the Union Star school house, Cloud Co., Kansas, commencing October 13, and continuing over Sunday. The Union Star school house is eleven miles southwest of Concordia, and twelve miles north of Delphos, on Wolf Creek. Those coming by rail will please drop a card to A. Kasinger, Graves post office.

SAMUEL NOE.

The Lord willing the Church of God will meet in conference at Severance, Kan., Oct. 21, and continue to Oct. 30. O. M. Myers, T. E. Adams, and J. B. Pierson are expected, and we extend a cordial invitation to preaching brethren to be with us, and all others of like faith. Come one and all, let us have one more feast of fat things in the name of the Lord, and encourage each other. Severance is 95 miles west of St. Joseph, Mo., on the Union Pacific R. R. and passenger trains reach here at 11 o'clock A. M.

LOYD CLOVER.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Age to come not a heresy," "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

Poetry.

THE DAWN AT HAND.

Awake, awake! the night is past,
The morning comes! arise!
Star after star is fading fast;
How long the day will break.

E'en now the mountain-tops are bright
With the advancing rays!
Oh! sleep not through the hours of light;
Awake to life and praise.

Cast off the robes of sloth, and gird
Your heavenly arm on!
Soon will the trumpet voice be heard
Of God's returning Son.

Ye would not that your Lord should find
His people slumbering still!
Arise! let body, soul, and mind
Unite to do His will.

Short is the time—oh! spend it not
For earth and sense alone;
Nor let the warning be forgot
That "ye are not your own."

Walk ever where the daylight beams
Falls clearest on your way,
Nor'er wandering from the sacred gleam
Of that celestial ray.

So, when he comes whose blest return
Each advent hails more near,
Your hearts with holy joy shall burn
His welcome voice to hear.

And ye who bore the cross of shame,
Shall wear the crown of light;
Shall triumph through his worthy name,
And share his glory bright.

Selections.

BRITAIN'S LATTER-DAY FRIENDSHIP FOR THE JEWS.

The Scripture testimony on the subject—The human cause of that friendship, and of England's antagonism to Russia—The British Empire in India — Britain's communications through Asiatic Turkey—Purchase of the Suez Canal, and coming British occupation of Egypt and Syria—Current schemes for Jewish settlement in Palestine—The Montefiore Testimonial—Jewish views on the subject—A Jew at the head of the British Government.

The evidence of Britain's latter-day friendship for the Jews is not confined to the passage quoted from Ezekiel. Isaiah plainly speaks of it. Referring to the day when "The Redeemer shall come to Zion," which Paul quotes as an unaccomplished prophecy in his day, and which therefore relates to the second coming of Christ (Acts i. 11; Heb. ix. 28; 1 Peter v. 4), Jehovah, by the prophet, thus addresses Israel: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people. But the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee, and the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising....Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far and thy daughters from the ends of the earth." Isa. lx. 1-3, 9. Again, in Isa. xviii. we meet with the following address to a land in the latter days "shadowing with wings," or exercising a widely-extended imperial jurisdiction, which is the case with Britain only. The land is described as one that "sendeth her ambassadors by sea," which shows that it is in an insular situation as Britain, and no other country is. Other nations send ambassadors by land, but England is obliged to use the sea. Her ambassadors are said, in the English version to go "in vessels of bulrushes," but this, it is agreed by several eminent Hebraists, ought to be "vessels of burning things," or whirling things—a distinct allusion to the invention of steamships. "Vessels of bulrushes" would be useless on the ocean, though they may suit the smooth water of the Nile. The next sentence in the passage settles the point. "Go, ye swift messengers:" this is a suitable description of Britain's steam vessels, and not of Egyptian boats of papyrus. Well, on what errand are "the swift messengers" to be sent? "Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto: a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers (military powers) have spoiled." The scattered nation whose land has been destroyed, is the Jewish nation. What is the object of this mission of the steamships of Tarshish to the scattered nation? The answer is in verse 7 of the chapter: "In that time shall the present be brought unto the Lord of hosts, of a people scattered and peeled....to the place of the Lord of hosts, the Mount Zion." Isa. xviii. 1-7. In short, Britain's ships are destined to be employed in the work of gathering the Jews from all parts of the world. But this not until the divine interference that follows the Russian attempt to wrest the infant "Judaic" colony from the hands of Britain.

What is it, as regards the human exegencies of the case, that leads England to be friendly to the Jews, and antagonistic to Russia? The answer has been displayed in a thousand newspapers, and resounded from a thousand public platforms during the past twelve months. The possession of India by England, and the determination of all classes of Englishmen that India shall remain in English possession, is the soul and marrow of England's policy on the Eastern Question. If England did not possess India, the fate of Turkey would be as immaterial to England as the session of Nice and Savoy to France. But she possesses India; and her communications with India lie through the Turkish empire. These communications are safe so long as the Sultan of Constantinople is lord of the empire, but let Turkey fall, and there is nothing to interpose a barrier between these communications and the might of the Russian colossus which presses southward both in Europe and Asia with irresistible gravitation. It is the fear that Russia would, in such a case, ultimately become strong for aggression in India, that inspires English statesmen of all parties with such a supreme interest in the fate of the Turks and the countries in Turkish possession. It is this which has originated what is known as "the traditional policy of the foreign office," in favor of the maintenance of the independence and integrity of the Ottomen empire. This policy has been abandoned under the pressure of events, and Turkey is likely to be left to her fate at the hand of Russia. But nothing can destroy the necessity for England preserving her Indian communications. Hence, if the worst befall Turkey, England is bound in the interests of self-preservations, to secure ascendancy in the Asiatic part of the Turkish empire. The purchase of the Suez Canal is a step in this direction. Prophecy reveals another in her coming patronage of the Jewish colonisation of Palestine.

Four hundred years ago, there was nothing to give England that connection with Bible lands which she was destined to sustain in the time of the end. The conquest of India was the great event in Providence that has brought her into this connection, and will yet develop it more distinctly. So long as Turkey was quiet and safe from aggression, there was no need for overt steps on the part of Britain to establish herself in Egypt and Syria. Turkey was a sufficient barrier between Russia and her Indian communications; but now that the existence of Turkey is imperiled, England is roused to definite action, and in the event of the dismemberment of the Ottoman empire, must add the occupation of Egypt and Syria to the purchase of the Suez Canal. The tendency of events is therefore visibly in the direction foreshown in the sure word of prophecy.

That England will occupy Egypt, and that Egypt will be wrested from her hands by Russian armies, results from several indications in this "sure word of prophecy." We have already seen that Britain is the power mentioned in Ezek. xxxviii. 13, as the antagonist of the Russo-German invader of Palestine, in the latter days, under the name of "the merchants of Tarshish and all the young lions thereof." According to Dan. xi., in the words already quoted, this northern invader prevails against all opposition, and therefore, against the opposition of the Anglo-Tarshish merchant-power, up to a certain point. The countries, "Edom and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon," remain in the hand of Gog's Tarshish opponents (Dan. xi. 41); but "the land of Egypt shall not escape" (verse 42), implying that the land of Egypt is, in the first instance, in the hands of the possessor of Edom and Moab, namely, Tarshish or Britain. This view is confirmed by a peculiar expression in Isa. xliii. 3. Referring to the future deliverance of Israel, when it will be said to the south, "Give up," and to the north, "Keep not back," Jehovah says, "I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee." Isa. xliii. 3. This implies that the transferring of Egypt to some power, brings about or is connected with the ransom of Israel in its preliminary stage. Egypt was given as "wages" to Nebuchadnezzar twenty-five centuries ago, for his service as Jehovah's instrument against Tyrus (Ezek. xxix. 18, 19), without Nebuchadnezzar knowing either that he served God in the matter of Tyrus, or that he got Egypt for a recompense. So Britain will receive Egypt as the price of Israel's deliverance, without either the deliverance or the payment of the ransom appearing in any other light than as a natural transaction, except to those who look at the affairs of nations from a divine stand-point. The possession of Egypt has become a political necessity to England, for the reasons already mentioned; and the preservation of her footing in Egypt, particularly in defence of the Suez Canal, by the interposition of a territorial buffer between that canal and Russian advances from the Caucasus, leads, in the arrangement of the Eastern Question, to her occupation of the Holy Land and the settlement of Israel there.

"Already, numerous schemes exist for the re-settlement of Palestine by Jews; and one of them has assumed practical and organic shape, in the form of a testimonial to Sir Moses Montefiore, who requested that the testimonial should take the form of a plan for improving the condition of the Jews of Palestine. A gentlemen has been appointed as the committee's agent in the execution of the scheme; but, for the present, during the uncertainties of the Eastern Question, the scheme is in abeyance. If the upshot of the present crisis should be, as is more than probable, the overthrow of the Turkish Empire, the way will be open for the development of this scheme to an indefinite extent. The one great barrier in the way of all such schemes, hitherto, has been the uncertainty of life and property in Syria under the Turkish Government. Under British protection, this state of uncertainty would soon vanish, and the formation of a Jewish settlement on the scale required by prophecy, would be a matter of a very few years. The agitation of the Montefiore scheme has disposed the minds of thousands of the race of Israel throughout the world, to return to their land as soon as a scheme for that purpose is sufficiently matured. In Roumania, the Jews are being expelled from whole districts, and would gladly avail themselves of such an opportunity.

The minds of the superior class of Jews are also exercised in the same direction, but from another point of view. This is signally illustrated in George Eliot's new work, "Deronda," in which a Jew is made to express himself in the following manner:

"What wonder that multitudes of our people are ignorant, narrow, superstitious? What wonder? What wonder? The night is unto them, they have no vision; in their darkness they are unable to divine; the sun is gone down over the prophets, and the day is dark above them; their observances are as nameless relics .... Revive the organic centre: let the unity of Israel which has made the growth and form of its religion, be an outward reality. Looking towards a land and a polity, our dispersed people in all the ends of the earth may share the dignity of a national life, which has a voice among the peoples of the East and the West—which will plant the wisdom and skill of our race so that it may be, as of old, a medium of transmission and understanding. Let that come to pass, and the living warmth will spread to the weak extremities of Israel, and superstition will vanish, not in the lawlessness of the renegade, but in the illumination of great facts which widen feeling, and make all knowledge alive as the young offspring of beloved memories ....

"I say that the effect of our separateness will not be completed and have its highest transformation, unless our race takes on again the character of a nationality. That is the fulfilment of the religious trust that moulded them into a people, whose life has made half the inspiration of the world. What is it to me that the ten tribes are lost untraceably, or that multitudes of the children of Judah have mixed themselves with the Gentile populations as a river with rivers? Behold our people still! Their skirts spread afar; they are torn and soiled and trodden on; but there is a jewelled breast-plate. Let the wealthy men, the monarchs of commerce, the learned in all knowledge, the skilful in all arts, the speakers, the political councilors, who carry in their veins the Hebrew blood which has maintained its vigor in all climates, and the pliancy of the Hebrew genius for which difficulty means new device—let them say, 'We will lift up a standard, we will unite in a labor hard but glorious, like that of Moses and Ezra, a labor which shall be a worthy fruit of the long anguish whereby our fathers maintained their separateness, refusing the ease of falsehood.' They have wealth enough to redeem the soil from debauched and pauperd conquerors; they have the skill of the statesman to devise, the tongue of the orator to persuade."

The Hebrew Observer has also delivered itself on the same subject as follows:

"Is there no destiny for Palestine but to remain a desert, or to become the appendage of an ambitious foreign power? Syria will ere long be the entrepot between the East and the West. On the Euphrates and along the coast, old cities will revive and new ones will be built; the old times will come back on a scale of greater vastness and splendor; and bridging the level districts, the steam car will run in the track of the caravan. Syria, then, will be a place of trade—pre-eminently. And who are pre-eminently the traders of the world? Will there, when the coming change takes place, be any more congenial field for the energies of the Jew? The country wants capital and population. The Jews can give it both. And has not England a special interest in promoting such a restoration? Russia covets Syria, and desires to have a Greek patriarch supreme at Jerusalem. It would be a blow to England if either of her great rivals got hold of Syria. Her empire, reaching from Canada in the West to Calcutta and Australia in the Southeast, would be cut in two. England does not covet new territories, but she must see they do not get into the hands of her rival Powers. She must preserve Syria to herself through the Syrians. Does not policy, then—if that were all—exhort England to foster the nationality of the Jews, and aid them, as opportunity may offer, to return as a heavening power to their old country? Rome has persecuted the Jews. Nowhere has oppression and contempt attended the Jews so much as in Rome, in the despised Ghetto quarter of the Eternal City. Russia, too, in her Greek orthodoxy, condemns the Jew. But in England he is unfrowned on by the Church, and endowed with the fullest rights of a citizen. England, also, is the great maritime power of the world. To England, then, naturally belongs the role favoring the settlement of the Jews in Syria. Do not the dictates of policy exhort her to the same course? The nationality of the Jews exists: the spirit is there and has been for three thousand years; but the external form, the crowning bond of union, is still wanting. A nation must have a country. And is not Syria open to them? They seized it of yore, as a wave of armed and enthusiastic warriors; will they not, ere long, return to it as pioneers of civilization to re-clothe the land with fertility, and as the busy agents of a commerce which will bring together both East and West on the neck of land between the Euphrates and the Levant? The old land and the old people, and commerce flowing again in its old channels. We see ... ago things now-a-days; may not this also be one of the notable signs of this epoch of resurrection?"

All those circumstances indicate a preparation for the work of Jewish revival as soon as the way is open. Nor can it be forgotten that Lord Beaconsfield, the disposer of British power at the present moment, is a Jew, who in his works before the world, has given strong evidence of his "Judaic sympathies" in general, and his predisposition to Jewish restoration in particular. That such a man, at such a time, should hold the reins of government in the nation to which is prophetically assigned the work of befriending the Jews in the time of the end, cannot but be looked upon as something more than an interesting circumstance.—R. Roberts.

Communications.

MELCHISEDEK AS A TYPE.

We have in this personage with the few and meagre facts given in the Scriptures in regard to him, perhaps the clearest instance in all the Scriptures of the typical form of teaching, which undoubtedly underlies as upon a palimpsest all the narrative portion, both biographical and historical, of the Old Covenant Scriptures; and it is the reading of this typical language which is wholly invisible to the eye of the natural man, but made visible to the newly quickened spiritual perceptions of the regenerate, by the alchemy of God's ability, that is frequently spoken of in the Scriptures of the New Covenant, as the "opening up," or interpretation, of those old sacred writings. There is no little said of this person, Melchisedek, biographically, and the prophetic allusions to him are so significant and startling, that the fact of some typical teaching being intended by his introduction is almost instantly impressed upon the mind of the most careless spiritual truth-seeker.

Not so quickly the typical teaching of the lives of the patriarchs. Now I have no doubt that the meagre details given in regard to the personal history of this man, Melchisedek, are in inverse proportion to the importance of the truth which they typically teach.

We will suppose then that this person is purposely introduced only as a type. This supposition we should not want to advocate in regard to any other personage in the sacred writings. If this supposition be true then every detail in regard to him must be studied in the light of typical interpretation. And first, upon which all interpreters are agreed, he is a type of Christ in his priestly office.

Now the author of Hebrews says that "the word" in regard to this personage, is much to them (the Hebrews) and the interpretation of it hard to speak, and it is with this sort of a preface and much more that is profitable for all truth-seekers to read carefully, that he approaches the fullest interpretation we have of this typical personage, and we find him saying that this Melchisedek as he gives the order of his offices and the interpretation of them is "first King of Righteousness, and after that King of Salem," which means king of peace, a person who is without father, without mother, when genealogically considered (not in reality), that is, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, (not in reality again, but genealogically speaking, for there being no record we do not know when he was born and died), the word translated "when genealogically considered" modifying both the words that go before, and the appositive explanatory clause "and thereby caused to resemble the Son of God, he abideth a priest ... forever as to the old and revised, but "continuously, literally in continuity." Let us review now the inspired writer's order of offices:

1. King of Righteousness, after that King of Salem, that is of peace. Then a priest of the Most High God in continuity. From verse 5 of this chapter on to verse 18, he tells us what is meant by the phraseology a priest in continuity, but more particularly when he recurs to it by using the same phraseology as above and explaining it in verses 23 a24, more exactly so to express is the expression in verse 3, which translated literally means "he abideth a priest in continuity," or continuously not continually. Do you see the difference? One expression has reference to all time; the other to the whole of a period, be it long or short.

In verse 23, speaking of the Levitical order of priesthood, he says, "these who have become priests are many, because of death preventing their abiding," using παραμενειν the same verb as above compounded with the preposition παρα to express the relation of the abiding, that is their abiding with something or somebody, meaning their office and those to whom they ministered, and teaching that while their office was an office "in continuity," or a continuous office for a certain period, because of death intervening it took many incumbents to fill it.

In verse 24, speaking of another period and of a priest after another order, namely, "after the order of Melchisedek," (and bear in mind that the contrast is between the incumbent of the respective offices only in respect to continuity) he says that this incumbent, Christ, because of his abiding εις τον αιωνα that is for the lifetime which is in this case immortal lifetime, hath a priesthood that is not transitory that is does not pass over as in the Levitical order from one incumbent to another because of death. We are not told as in our version that his priesthood lasts forever, and it is not reasonable to suppose that it will last any longer than sin lasts, because the necessity for a priest lies in the fact of the existance of sin. Continuity for the whole period then is what is taught and what the type teaches. The period in the typical Melchisedek appears to be from the time of his appointment to office by God until death or the end of his natural lifetime, and this would teach that the period of which it is a type does not last forever, but that the incumbency of the office is an unbroken or continuous one, and since Melchisedek will live again as a Son of God his life is longer than the unbroken continuity of his office, and this would teach again that Christ's office in its continuity is not coincident with his immortality, but limited, and as the Melchisedek typical office was limited in its continuity by death, we should say, that the death of death or the doing away with death, in the economy of God's government, would do away with the necessity for the office of the priest.

The penalty of sin is death. The office of the priest is to make an atonement for sin which shall restore life is it not? Life having been restored forever and the penalty thus having become abrogated because of no necessity does not the office arising from this necessity cease with that necessity? and is not this what is taught in 1 Cor. xv. 28, where Paul speaks of the Son becoming subject to the Father? Remember the typical order of his offices:

1. King of Righteousness,
2. King of Salem (peace),
3. Son of God, or a Lifepriest in continuity, that is for the whole of some period.

These are all a part of his αρχη (authority) which he surrenders to the Father when he becomes subject; and why does he surrender this authority? Because the work for which he was given this authority has been completed and his commission has expired. The restoration which he was to bring about is complete. A lesson has been learned in heaven and on earth, and that particular book of God's instruction has been closed to the glory of God and the eternal felicity of men and angels.

Again to revert to the type and its teachings. We have learned who Melchisedek was and what offices he filled, and what the different provinces of his authority were, namely, righteousness, peace, sanctification, holiness. The first two belonging to his office as king; the last two to his office as highpriest. For being the only one mentioned of his class and being spoken of as "a priest of the Most High God," and a type of Christ who is elsewhere clearly shown to be a highpriest, he in the type must be presumed to be a highpriest also.

Now what belonged to the office of a highpriest as we learn from the Scriptures?

1. Sanctification.
2. Holiness.
3. Prophecy.
4. Power over life and death, to atone or not to atone for sin.

Were any of these absolute or complete? No. We are told that since they were conferred by "the law of a carnal commandment," meaning a law that found its fulfilment according to the flesh, they must necessarily be finite and comparatively "weak and unprofitable." For "this law perfected (completed) nothing." Then we would not expect to find in the Melchisedek type complete sanctification, nor complete holiness, nor complete powers of prophecy, nor complete power over life and death; for we are told that a type is also a "shadow," and a shadow however complete in itself as a shadow, is not the reality of which it is the type or image. But we do expect to find the resemblance of the shadow sufficient to thereby identify the reality of which it is a shadow.

In this case, Melchisedek being the shadow and Christ the reality, let us compare them as respects those prerequisites of office. Melchisedek was sanctified (set apart) to minister as a highpriest in a life of flesh; Christ was sanctified to minister in a life of spirit. Melchisedek was "accounted" holy in a life of flesh; Christ is really holy in a life of spirit. Melchisedek received the gift or power of prophecy "in measure" because in a measurable or finite life of flesh; Christ "without measure" because in an immeasurable or infinite life of spirit, or as the writer of this epistle to the Hebrews puts it "became a priest not according to the law of a carnal commandment, but according to the ability which belongs to an indissoluble life."

Melchisedek's ability in other words is, as a priest, to offer a finite atonement; Christ's to offer an infinite atonement. The one becomes "a cause," (not "an author" as in the old and revised) of a present but finite salvation; the other "a cause" of a present but infinite salvation. The one atones for an ενιαυτος called a year; the other atones for τον αιωνα which is the whole period requiring atonement. The one thus "enters the sacred of sacred places once every year;" the other "once for all." The one with the sacrificial blood of the slain lamb; the other with his own sacrificial blood. The one enters with his own sin, the other without sin of his own. The one offers many votive gifts and sacrifices; the other offers but one, himself. The one returns to his expectant royal people when his work of atonement is done; so does the other. The one is a mediator of an old covenant; the other of a new covenant. The first a covenant of "dead works;" the last a covenant of a living faith. The one ineffectual to render the worshipper unconscious of sin; the other effectual to the final doing of God's will on the worshiper, in which doing there can be no sin nor consciousness of sin.

Again the one for God and himself receives tithes from "Abraham the Father of the Faithful;" the other receives tithes for God and himself from all the faithful. The tithes received are spoils of redemption in the one case; so also in the other. The one invokes God's blessing on the Father of the Faithful; the other upon all the faithful. The one reminds the Father of the Faithful to give God the glory for his victory; the other reminds all the faithful to do the same for all their victories. The one gives real bread and wine to the Father of the Faithful; the other brought forth and gave the symbolic bread and wine to all the faithful. The one (thus ministers to the carnal life of the Father of the Faithful; the other to the spiritual life of all the faithful. The one no doubt said take, eat this bread and drink this wine; the other did said take, eat, this is my body, drink, this is my blood. The one offered his bread and wine as tokens of a covenant of good will for the Father of the Faithful; the other himself in these symbolic tokens of another and better covenant of good will for all the faithful. Both are taken from the reader's vision while invoking God's blessing upon the faithful.

CHAS. GARDNER.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingall, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Trilemma," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now existing such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 800 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

PROSPECTUS.

Without unnecessary delay, after three hundred copies shall have been subscribed for, I hope that, by the blessing of the Lord, I shall be able to publish a handsome cloth-bound book of about three hundred and twelve pages, to be entitled, "Timely Topics, or Discourses on Subjects of World-wide Importance: by Wiley Vance." Price $1.00 per copy. Send orders now, but don't send the money until you receive the book. Will all the brethren and sisters please be so good as to aid by their subscriptions in bringing this work before the public? Fifty copies have already been subscribed for, one brother alone having ordered ten copies. Send orders to Wiley Jones, Good Shaw, Lunenburg County, Va.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—By A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a plain Bible book in its terms, possibly patient. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee as to the worth of the work. Price only 25 cts. each. Send to this office for them.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Mosaic, the New and the Davidian covenants; their duration and conformability to each other. By Ch. H. Myers. 288 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth For Free; or a concise view of the Scriptures doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Silas Mann. 80 pages, price 20cts.

Sunlight Dispersing the Dismal Shadows; or the doctrine of eternal torments shown to lack reason and Scripture. By Silas Mann. 70 pages, price 25cts.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Silas Mann. 48 pages, price 15cts.

Material immortality an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact defence and Bible view of material immortality, not by birth but by grace. By O. R. L. Crozier. 16 pages, price 5cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, what he is? By Dr. J. H. Thomas. Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 4cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1876, put into tract form.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By C. H. Myers. Price 25cts.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PAMPHLETS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ. by John Baptist, in 1600. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Prospects for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies &c., or assorted packages of 100, &c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 30c; 50 for 55c; 100 for 90c.

Can You Believe? A series of 50 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in our list.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

The Age to Come not a literary. By H. V. Reed. Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two eras of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. R. Magruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 25 for 40c.

Is It Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? D. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 15 for 50c.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c, or 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Jonah Foltz.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 8 for 30c, or 25 for $1.

Das Evangelium der Reiche Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

Will the Saints be Borned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the saints will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 1$ for $1.

The Restitution of the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Myers. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures. A work peculiar with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 96 pages, price 25c.

A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Liturgity of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. Price 15 cents, or $1 six per dozen.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Durh. Recently the book for the times. 300 pages, stiff cloth.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future conquests and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work intimately interwoven with the literal prophecy and of unusual power and interest. 128 pages, cloth 75c, paper 50c.

God's Plan of Salvation. E. M. Bickersteth. A plain, comprehensive and able statement of the leading features of Bible theology. Any brother will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the conditions of faith, are very well and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Dilworth. Price 10 cents.

Hymns, Ancient and Modern, for the use of New Church Worship, compiled by Charles D. Barney. Mr. Barney combines in this book the "Hymns of the Ages" and "Hymns and Songs of Praise" in a manner that will be appreciated by every lover of sacred song. As a specimen of book making it is perfect. "Hymns of the Ages" alone would be worth the price of the book. Those having the Celestial Psalmodist can see what such a book will be and get this work. Price 60c, cloth $1.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public and family worship, compiled by C. H. Myers and John Arnold. 288 pages, cloth.

The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson. Containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of the most ancient MSS., and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with a literal and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper. 864 pages, cloth $2.50, Library binding $3.00.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCTOBER 11, 1882. NO. 38.

The Restitution

Is published weekly at

Its Creation Publishing Association

Officers of Board of Directors:

A. DEWOODY.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
P. E. HASKELL.....Secretary.
E. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

Executive Committee:

CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSBACK,
I. C. ROBERTS.

E. A. CHAPLIN.....Editor.

Special Contributors:

D. T. HALSTEAD. D. WILSON
J. F. WETHERE. J. A. SIMONDS.
WM. T. JONES. G. M. MYERS.
A. B. MAGRUDER.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three new subscribers at $1 each.

Address all letters and Communications to The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

The Restitution advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortalized saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 2.

In our former number we gave an outline of our subject. It will be readily seen by the readers of the "Coming Age," that the present series will be supplementary to that extended topic. These numbers will afford abundant evidence of its nature and proximity. Though the future brings to view two ages, the reign of subjugation, (for, "He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet," during which Christ is performing the work of his regal office); the joint reign, where the Father and the Son reign together, as on the new earth; yet, we have called it one age, since it is the age of Messiah, he being personally present under each reign, and their Maker.

We have attempted to define the "Eastern Question." We shall keep that problem before our readers, since it is the absorbing theme of the present and near future. We shall clothe it with a variety of costumes to suit its various phases.

In its broadest signification it is the following: How can the West secure an extended intercourse with the East, without any hindrance from the North? In its common acceptation, and in a more restricted sense, we define it as follows: "How shall the nations of Western Europe, especially England and France, and, more particularly, England, deal with, control, and dispose of, the Turkish empire and its territory, so as best to promote its interests, political, social, and religious, and make the most effectual barrier against the advances and aggressions of Russia with her great Northern Confederacy of kings? How can she best keep her Eastern channels of communication open and free?

England and Russia, with equal territories (3,000,000 square miles each), head two great national confederacies, the latter holds Northeastern Europe and Northern Asia, while the former controls the larger portion of Southern and Southeastern Asia. Between these northern and southern empires is located the Ottoman, or Turkish empire, or in a prophetic sense, the empire of the False Prophet. The Southern, and the Turkish empires, are situated in the zone of empires; the Russian confederacy lies north of that belt, yet with her face and her cannon turned southward. The Russian bear is not content with his winter home. He dreams of, and longs for the sunny south. He anticipates the day when his banners shall wave over the proud capital of the old Greek empire; when the golden horn shall be his, and the Dardanelles shall be guarded by his own cannon; when, having annihilated the Turkish empire, or driven it beyond its ancient boundary, the Euphrates shall stand face to face before the northern lion, the lion and the bear [illegible] Babe of Bethlehem shall [illegible] event, to the Christian, [illegible] with exceeding joy.

The northern, southern, and middle empires, are the noted powers of approaching national conflicts. Their interests are diverse, socially, religiously, and politically. The national interests of the Ottoman empire look, rather, towards England than to Russia. It is the policy of England to sustain the Turkish empire; that of the northern confederacy to pull it down. England has no mission at Constantinople, nor in the north. Russia desires to locate her seat of empire in that ancient capital of the Cæsars, and hold the territory of the Greek empire, while England desires to hold the Ottoman power as a rampart against the king of the north.

The British mission lies south and east of her northern rival. The circle and the zone are the fields of her enterprises. Northern Asia is too icy for the British lion. He will find it to his national interest, therefore, to protect the Sultan till he fully restores his southern and eastern subjects of imperial grandeur.

The Eastern problem has its solution in the policy and movements of this triple empire. Its policy and acts we design to follow. Whatever, therefore, has a bearing upon the relative operations of England, Russia and Turkey, will form a step in the solution of the Eastern Question, which is our specialty.

Have we symbols for these three powers? Let us examine the Apocalypse. In Rev. xvi. 13, 14, we have the following: "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs (come) out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils (demons), working miracles, (which) go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

This triple empire is an embodiment of all the nationalities arrayed against the Messiah and his kingdom. The dragon, the beast (fourth beast of Dan. vii.), and the false prophet, are Satan's field-marshals, having control of his grand army in the battle of Armageddon. In that host are mustered all the votaries of false gods and false religions: the dragon being a symbol of the pagan family under the king of the north, the beast and his family, including the Western Romano-German nations, and the false prophet, the Mohammedan world. Under these three banners will be gathered all the enemies of the cross.

The unity and perspecuity of our subject (the Eastern Question), and the clear understanding of the Divine word demand that we present this triple empire under all its phases and bearings. To do this satisfactorily to the reader, the motives which inspire the movements of these three anti-christian powers, as well as the plans of Jehovah, in thus opening the way for the beginning of the triumphant reign of Christ, his beloved Son, must be fully developed and critically explained.

Egypt, is simply a subordinate element of the Turkish empire, though prophecy requires in her great changes. Prime motive powers of the triple empire. Brave Japan, China, and the East Indies from Eastern and Southern Asia, and the kings of the north and of the south might drink their wines quietly at the same table; the objects of their jealousies being removed. The boundless wealth of the Orient excites the cupidity of England and Russia. The king of the north, as the sovereign of Northern Asia, aims to divert the immense resources of those eastern nations into more northern channels: and thus rob the southern empire of its eastern wealth. The king of the south, penetrating his designs, forecasts devices to defeat the grasping plots of the northern foe. He handles Turkey as the Chinese wall of Western Asia.

In consequence of the mutual jealousies of the northern and southern confederacies, guided by Russia and England, the Turkish empire has been, and still continues to be, the custodian of the channels of communication between the East and the West. Through that empire the products of the East must pass of necessity.

Questions here arise whose answers are complicated:

1. Is the Sultan an intelligent, and a safe custodian?

2. Could these channels be safely used without a custodian?

3. If not, what nation can supply its place?

4. Is God educating a nation to fill that office?

In forecasting the future, let us investigate the three parts (Turkey, Russia and England) of this triple empire. 1. The Ottoman empire, its past, present, and future. In doing this we shall outline her history, sacred and profane. (1.) What has God said of this empire? (2.) What has been accomplished? (3.) What part of her prophetic history is still future?

The Turkish, or Ottoman empire, in its relation to prophecy may not be fully understood. We have come to such a conclusion from the terms applied to it by expositors. It is called, very generally, "The great river Euphrates." This we shall examine in our outline history of that empire. Writers follow the reigning dynasty rather than the empire. This view leads to an erroneous construction of the prophecies. The prophetic symbols of the four Gentile monarchies point to the monarchies themselves and not to their various dynasties, or ruling families. Each kingdom had many dynasties. Families become extinct, while the government is perpetuated. In this triple empire of the great day what a vast variety of dynasties are included in the fourth kingdom. The same is equally true of its dragonic element. Why, then, should the empire of the false prophet, the third of the triple empire, be limited to the Turkish dynasty?

We must keep in view the history of each of the four monarchies, as they existed under various ruling families. With the Babylonian and Persian empires we are not now to write. Still we may say that the Persian empire was composed of two very distinct people—the Medes and the Persians; each being composed of many dynasties. This is true of the fourth monarchy. It had its pure iron, and its iron and clay mixture. The fourth beast had the Grecian brass. Since the empire had its origin in Mahomet, the prophet, we should call his empire after his name rather than after either of his dynasties, Saracenic, or Turkish. It is properly the empire of the false prophet; still in prophetic language, it is the perpetuation of the Macedonian empire—the third kingdom of Daniel. On a certain territory a kingdom was erected. The first is called Babylon. On another distinct territory a second was erected; this we call Medo-Persia. On a third location a third kingdom grew up, called Grecia, or Macedonia. This had its former and latter times. The Mohammedan empire has occupied this territory for the last four centuries. It is not a fifth universal monarchy, but the perpetuation of the third monarchy. We use the term Turkish, or Ottoman dynasty of the Mohammedan empire, the perpetuation of the Greek empire, or empire of the false prophet—the religious element predominating, and, therefore, carrying the name. Christ said, My kingdom is not of this world [illegible] Mahomet's is of this world [illegible] —a royal high priesthood; it is proper, therefore that his should constitute a part of the triple empire. The lesson taught us in what we have here stated, is simply this: the overthrow, or driving back of the Turkish dynasty is not of necessity, the annihilation of the domination of the false prophet, since another dynasty (Arabian, or Saracenic) might arise to sustain the crescent.

With these as introductory, before us, we are prepared to sketch the history of the empire itself. Mahomet, early in life, formed the design of giving to his nation (the Arabian), and through it to the world, a new religion. He was soon led to see that this could not be accomplished by moral suasion. He saw that the national government must first be removed. His motto was, The Koran, tribute, or the sword.

His own country fell before his fanatical arm; Syria was then added to his dominion. Conquests now followed with great rapidity. The caliphs, his successors, extended his empire over nearly all the east, south, north, and into the more distant west.

For the benefit of those readers who have not seen the history of the empire of the false prophet in the "Coming Age," we subjoin the following sketch of Mahomet and his empire, since a clear understanding of this element of the triple empire of Rev. xvi. 13 is necessary to a proper comprehension of our subject.

Selections.

From the Christian Herald.

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

I cannot tell how much I thank God that he sent those kind people from Illinois to Jerusalem. They have done a noble work and suffered much in doing it. No mission sent out by societies and boards of officers has ever done as they have. The reason is obvious. They have not been laboring in the interest of some sectarian church, nor under certain man-made rules; but they have trusted in God to direct them, and have prayed and labored for a new organization, a new kingdom; just such an one as the God of heaven may be pleased to set up among other kingdoms, and such an one as he will be pleased to perpetuate for ever; a kingdom in which the inhabitants will not say, "I am sick,' and where the real heirs will never die; consequently there will be no change of its subjects from one generation to another; neither will it be left by those who first came in possession of it to other people, but they who take it will remain its inheritors forever. This is scriptural.

The angel said to Daniel, in explaining his vision of four beasts: "These great beasts, which are four, are four kings (representing four kingdoms) which shall arise out of the earth." As though each in its turn should have dominion over the kingdom of God, which they did. "But," says the angel, "the saints of the most high shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever." Dan. vii. 17, 18. There is certainly encouragement to seek and labor for such a kingdom as this, where the subjects will possess the prize they seek and suffer for eternally. They will never die and the kingdom will never be taken from them.

The same great inspiring truth is recorded in Dan. ii. 44. "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." If anything can stimulate people to work and endure through suffering, such assurances as these will do it. Think of it. This kingdom "shall never be destroyed." The four great kingdoms which precede it, pass away, but this shall never pass away. "The kingdom shall not be left to other people." Babylon was left to the Medo-Persians. Persia was left to the Grecians, and their possessions in turn fell to the Romans. The kingdoms into which the Roman Empire has been divided must likewise be broken and fall under the power of the kingdom of God which is to be set up in their day.

How important to stimulate us to right action that we should correctly understand the kingdom of God! We have the history of all its past changes, sorrows, and captivities; and we literally behold its desolations. But its future—how great, how magnificent and how glorious will be its future! Set up by the highest authority in the universe, it will by him be protected and sustained. The saints it seems are to take this kingdom, but there must be a preparation on their part for this great event. After the work of taking it is accomplished, then will come the breaking of the nations and ruling them with a rod of iron, until all kingdoms shall serve and obey Christ. In bringing about all these great purposes of the Almighty God, Christ will use men as agents in the work, as well as angels and spirits.

The kingdom will be a kingdom of men. The work of setting it up must pass through its progressive stages, and why has it not already commenced? It has. If a colony should come now they will find enough to do, work that is just as important at this stage of the proceedings as it will be at any future time, though to many, who do not regard the day of small things as of much consequence, it may seem to be of little account. If the seed is never sown, the harvest will never be gathered. If the foundation is never laid, the building will never go up. If the work of setting up the kingdom of God is never begun, the kingdom will never rise up among other kingdoms. But it is begun, and every lover of Jesus will now find plenty of work in Palestine that will really advance the cause of Christ's kingdom.

Mr. Durgin, the stone mason, could go to work at once; and he would command fair wages too. There are many buildings going up; and although native labor is cheap, the improvement in building requires a better class of workmen, and skilled labor is in demand.

The Jews still continue to come; but prices of provisions go no rise. Where are all those people who have written to me? They need not fear to come. This is certainly the place of deliverance.

Our mails are very irregular now. There is a rumor here that Russia is preparing for war. If this is true it will give those who are watching the signs of the times further encouragement.

Aug. 11. I suppose the friends in America are feeling anxious about us here in Jerusalem. Well, there are some grounds for their fears, but they must leave us in the hands of God, in whom we trust. All will be well. The late reports from Egypt arouse the fears of the people here, and well they may. As the facts become known there seems to be an expectation and dread of something terrible to take place. The present rumors and condition of things in and around Jerusalem are perplexing. This, however, is only the fulfillment of prophecy—"distress of nations with perplexity." But I expected all this, and much more than this, when I came here, and why should I be afraid now? Under these circumstances there is a significance in the motto, "In God we trust," that cannot be realized when there is no danger.

There has been a riot at Beyrout this week, which will bring ships of war to that important city, where there is an efficient missionary station, under the supervision, I believe, of the Presbyterian denomination of America. An English man-of-war is now at Jaffa. The captain was in Jerusalem yesterday. But these great ships, with their huge guns, would be of little service to us in these mountains, forty miles away, in case of an uprising; and therefore our hope and trust must be in God, instead of these mighty men-of-war. The spirit of rapine and murder seems to be prevalent, and we all very well know that it cannot be stopped until a kingdom shall arise here—a kingdom of justice, righteousness, power and wisdom. This will be a Christian kingdom to set an example to the world of what Christianity really is. It will possess a power to carry out all its purposes, enforce all its demands, and subdue the world. As fast as its influence, truth, and power shall spread, the spirit of injustice, massacre, and war will cease. "All hail, happy day." "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

Notwithstanding I was smitten with grief at the event, I can realize now more than then the kindness of my Heavenly Father in removing my darling Bertie from the strife of nations, and these fearfully troublous times. I have no more sorrow for her, dear child. We shall meet when the violence of the storm has passed by.

People are excited. All kinds of reports are afloat; many of them, no doubt are untrue; and probably many are true, or nearly so. But in this condition of things, one does not know what to believe. You get reliable news before we possibly can. We have plenty of news, but not reliable.

I understand that it rained three hours in Jaffa yesterday, an event never before known, at this season. It is said to have been a furious storm. The elements are troubled. Only think of it; three hours' rain in Palestine on the 10th of August! There rains are coming at the very time, to be in harmony with other events connected with the restitution. They will strengthen the faith of many. They will also give us abundant harvests as well as to strengthen our faith. They will likewise shut the mouths of the skeptics.

[In speaking of these rains, Mrs. Davis often says that nothing of the kind was ever known before, at the same season of the year. We have thought best to mention an event that took place in Samuel's day, which supports her statement. Israel desired a king like the other nations. God granted their request; but to convince them that they had sinned in making this request he sent a thunder storm in answer to Samuel's prayer, at a time when rain was never known to fall in Palestine, and which was so miraculous that the people were greatly alarmed; and yet, it was not far from the commencement of the dry season; while the rains have fallen this year, we believe, every month through the dry, hot summer months. We will here give the passage of Scripture relating to this occurrence: "Now therefore stand and see this great thing which the Lord will do before your eyes. Is it not wheat harvest today? I will call unto the Lord and he shall send thunder and rain; that you may perceive and see that your wickedness is great which ye have done in the sight of the Lord, in asking you a king. So Samuel called unto the Lord, and the Lord sent thunder and rain that day; and all the people greatly feared the Lord and Samuel. And all the people said unto Samuel, Pray for thy servants unto the Lord thy God, that we die not, for we have added unto all our sins this evil to ask us a king." 1 Sam. xii. 16–19. Their wheat harvest was in Sivan, the latter part of May, or June. If rain falling at that time of the year was so alarming to Israel in Samuel's day, what must it be still later in the season—the last of June, July, and August, as it has fallen this year? Shall we not look soon for the floors to be full of wheat, and the vats to overflow with wine and oil?" when Israel "shall eat in plenty and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord their God, who hath dealt wondrously with them;" in which state of prosperity the Lord declares "And my people shall never be ashamed!" See Joel ii.]

I am glad to see these rains. The poor roofed houses are hardly in a condition to shelter the people through great storms; nevertheless, let them come. The new spirit of enterprise here will build better dwellings. And so it will be; improvement will follow improvement, until perfection will at last be reached in everything.

We know that the war powers will yet be gathered to Jerusalem to battle. I am glad we know this. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. This time of trouble must come, and of course I shall be glad when it is over. Jerusalem cannot be burned, for there is nothing to burn. It will be taken by some power, but not destroyed. Who shall survive that dreadful day? Where shall we go if ordered to leave Jerusalem? Mr. Floyd thinks we shall flee to the mountains. What do you think?

Youths' Column.

Broken Toys.

I found my baby girl to-day
Asleep upon the floor,
The space around her little form
With playthings scattered o'er.

Her hands were nestled 'neath her chin,
And one still firmly held
A broken toy, whose motel charm
As yet was unspelled.

There lingered still about the mouth
And on the brow a trace
Of thought, half grieved and half perplexed,
As if the day face

Already had begun to learn
The look it was to wear
In years to come. I stooped to kiss
Away the mimic care.

And as I laid her, still asleep,
Within her nestlike bed,
And smoothed the curls to pillow for
The little weary head,

I thought how we of larger growth,
When tired of pains and joys,
With that same look, fall fast asleep
Amid our broken toys:

And then the Father, stooping, takes
The tired head to his breast;
And smooths the furrow from the brow,
And hears us to our rest.

—Howard Glyndon.

What sunshine is to flowers, smiles are to humanity. They are but trifles, to be sure; but scattered along life's pathway, the good they do is inconceivable.

Mother's Turn.

"It is mother's turn to be taken care of now."

The speaker was a winsome young girl, whose bright eyes, fresh color, and eager looks, told of light-hearted happiness. Just out of school, she had the air of culture, which is an added attraction to a lifelike young face. It was mother's turn now. Did she know how my heart went out to her for her unselfish words?

Too many mothers, in their love of their daughters, entirely overlook the idea that they themselves need recreation. They do without all the easy, pretty, and charming things, and say nothing about it; and the daughters do not think there is any self-denial involved. Jennie gets the new dress, and mother wears the old one, turned spside down and wrong side out. Lucy goes on the mountain trip, and mother stays home and keeps house. Emily is tired of study, and must lie down in the afternoon; but mother, though her back aches, has no time for such an indulgence.

Dear girls, take good care of your mothers. Coax them to let you relieve them of some of the harder duties, which, for years, they have patiently borne.

The Human Hand.

The human hand is so beautifully formed, it has so fine a sensibility, that sensibility governs its motions so correctly, every effort of the will is answered so instantly, as if the hand itself were the seat of that will; its actions are so free, so powerful, and yet so delicate, that it seems to possess a quality instinct in itself, and we use it as we draw our breath, unconsciously, and have lost all recollection of the feeble and ill-directed efforts of its first exercise, by which it has been perfected.

In the hand are twenty-nine bones from the mechanism of which result strength, mobility and elasticity. On the length, strength, free lateral motion and perfect mobility of the thumb depends the power of the hand, its strength being equal to that of all the fingers. Without the fleshy ball of the thumb, the power of the fingers would avail nothing; and accordingly, the large ball formed by the muscles of the thumb is the distinguished character of the hand.

The Young Admonished.

The wise man in giving much good, wholesome instruction to both old and young, gives the following to the latter: "Remember now thy creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them."

The author of this language had been young and fair, but had grown old and feeble. He also had tried most all sorts of mirth and pleasure, he had uttered many wise sayings and taught much by parable. In his youth he had sought the Lord, and followed close to his instructions, but in the decline of life, having heaped up much riches and attained to great honor, his ambitious spirit having excelled all others, he gives way like thousands of other poor frail mortals, and commits a heinous sin, in cleaving in love to many strange women—outlandish women, who caused the king to sin. Just think of it! seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines; and his wives turned away his heart, for it came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods, and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of David his father.

Here is a fearful lesson, one which some of the wise scribes of our age could study to profit, and thus shun the great transgression of the divine law. On the other hand the youth of both sexes are hereby admonished by one who was every way qualified, to first remember their Creator in the days of their youth, before the evil days come. Before they grow old and feeble, when the power to resist temptation is running low.

Boys and girls who grow up to man and womanhood in disregard of the wise man's good advice, having the many pernicious habits of this sinful world, stand a slim chance for anything better in a better land. It is a very easy matter to form bad habits, for it is natural and fashionable, but to get entirely rid of them is hard. Think of this, my young friend; the Lord is a pure, just, and holy being, and cannot suffer bad characters to come into his presence.

Then if you would live in the great future, with your friends, you must choose the good part, break away from and turn your back to this world with its sin-cursed ways which lead down to death; learn to love the Lord thy God with all thy power of body and mind, serve him now, ere the body and mind are enfeebled and dissolution sets in, the silver cord being loosed and the wheel broken at the cistern, and man goeth to his long home, and mourners about the streets.

The best friend we ever had would admonish us to be wise now. Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, then food and raiment. Procrastination is the thief of time. Charm leads on his millions into irretrievable woe.

Then in conclusion let me say, Remember thy Creator now. He who has done so much for you. Just think how he loves you! Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us. Turn your feet Heavenward, seek the Lord while he may be found. Call upon him while he is near. Live for him who died for you, then in that great day all will be well.

T. P. Adams.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CRAFTS, EDITOR.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCT. 11, 1882.

WILL write another article on "Death by Sin" when we have more time. Will explain some texts suggested for notice then.

SPECIMEN copies of papers of late date have come to hand; but so near our time for going to press that we have not had leisure to peruse them. A more formal notice in the future.

To explain some allusions contained in the lectures of R. Roberts, which appear in successive numbers of THE RESTITUTION, we are to bear in mind that these lectures were written in 1878. Beaconsfield was then living and some events then transpiring are now things of the past. The subsequent march of events has been to confirm his conclusions.

THE subject of prayer is one worthy of serious consideration in the present crisis of human history. It is a duty most solemnly enjoined upon the "elect over" part of the church whose position is that of constant expectancy for the return of the Lord Jesus Christ a second time. After enumerating the very signs that mark our own times he says: "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." Luke xxi. 36. Burst about, as we are, with all the perils of the last days, it behooves us not only to take the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand in the evil day, but to pray always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit. When faith becomes almost extinct it is a mark of God's elect that they cry unto him day and night.

THE Scriptures plainly inform us that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God, and, as such, the Savior of the world. But as to his inherent nature, and upon what principle our salvation is accomplished through his sufferings and death, they propound no metaphysical explanations. Indeed they expressly affirm the incomprehensibility of these subjects. No one knoweth who the Son is but the Father. Luke x. 22. This emphatic declaration of our Lord is sufficient to teach us the importance of resting our faith upon the simple plain statements of revealed truth. Had this always been done, an endless amount of controversy would have been spared, and wasted time and energy would have been better employed in teaching men, as did the apostles, what they must do to be saved. While the effort to explain some of the more obscure terms and expressions is perfectly laudable, and even desirable, still our counsel is, to avoid all personal allusions, and all harsh criticisms on the honest expressions contained in articles written by brethren from whose conclusions we dissent. "See that ye fall not out by the way" is good advice now, while awaiting the coming and kingdom of our Lord.

News Items.

FRANCE—ASIATIC CHOLERA IN SAVOY.

PARIS, October 5.—Several cases of Asiatic cholera are reported at Modane, on the French side of the Mont Cenis tunnel.

The Suez Canal is to be improved and enlarged.

TUNIS—FRENCH ATTACKED BY ARABS.

TUNIS, October 5.—Insurgent Arabs yesterday attacked the French outpost on the Algerine border.

EGYPT—TYPHOID FEVER.

ALEXANDRIA, October 6.—There are eighty cases of typhoid fever in Ramleh hospital.

GREECE—THE WITHDRAWAL OF THE TURKS.

ATHENS, October 6.—The Porte has promised Greece that it will order the Turks to evacuate the ceded points on the frontier, including Gomilza, next Thursday.

Hungary is becoming as uncomfortable as Russia for the Jews. Outrages upon their persons and property by fanatical mobs continue.

Those Arabs who resorted to plunder and murder in Alexandria during the recent troubles in Egypt are being summarily tried and hanged.

RUSSIA — JEW-BAITERS SENTENCED.

ODESSA, October 9.—The military tribunal in session at Balta trying the cases of the anti-Jewish rioters, condemned one of the leaders to two years, and five others from sixteen to eighteen months' imprisonment.

EGYPT—JOINT CONTROL.

PARIS, October 9.—The Republique Francaise refuses to believe that Lord Granville will set aside Egyptian control without consulting France.

MURDERERS HANGED.

ALEXANDRIA, October 9.—Two natives, convicted of murdering Messrs. Palmer, Gauvain and Charrington, were hanged this morning.

FRANCE—LICENSE TAX.

CONSTANTINOPLE, October 9.—All the Powers, except England, Russia and France, have agreed upon a principle of license tax which the Porte proposes to levy upon foreigners doing business in Turkey.

The German steamer Border, en route from New York for Hamburg, having 288 passengers, was lost on the Newfoundland coast last night, but all those on board were saved.

The comet has brought thousands of North Carolina negro sinners to repentance. They regard it as a forerunner of the world's end, and are making their preparations accordingly.

YELLOW FEVER.

BROWNSVILLE, Tex. Oct. 9.—But few cases of fever here; no deaths. Some quarantine guards have been ordered 30 miles back. Dr. Murry is still out on the line. No change for better in Camargo or Mier; the weather is hot.

PENSACOLA, Oct. 9.— Forty eight new cases and five deaths today. Yesterday there were seventy-seven new cases and two deaths. Total cases to date 1300, deaths 112. Physicians kept actively on the move on account of the large number of cases now under treatment; nearly 200 having been hallabined here since Saturday morning.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—A dispatch from Manila says the fatal cases of cholera average 30 to 40 daily, and in the vicinity of the town they average twelve daily.

ENGLAND AND THE SUEZ CANAL.

PARIS, Oct. 8.—The Paris says it is understood that England is negotiating for the purchase of 200,000 Suez Canal deligation shares.

Sententious.

That is the best part of beauty that a picture cannot express.

To God man owes allegiance, to Christ love, and to his fellowmen sympathy and help.

The logic of words may or may not be convincing, but the logic of deeds is irresistible.

Faithfulness in the use of what we have, however little, is what Christ requires at our hands.

All ills of God! If he but wave his hand,
The mists collect, the rain falls thick and loud,
Till, wife's smile of hope on sea and land,
Lo! he looks back from the departing cloud.
—Longfellow.

The success of sainthood is the success attained by struggle and suffering and achieved by faith; a success of honor, of clean hands and pure heart, of service to man and glory to God.—Bishop Donne.

When comes the King in royal might,
To crush the wrong and crown the right;
When all the saints in glory meet,
No more to die, no more to weep;
When thrones are set and crowns are given,
With all the rich reward of heaven—
Oh, for that glorious by and by,
What's done for God can never die!

Whoso are the infidels of such uncontaminated morals that we should be in no danger of being seduced into impiety by their example? Into what obscure recesses of misery, into what dungeons have their philanthropists penetrated, to lighten the fetters and relieve the sorrows of the helpless captive? What barbarous tribes have their apostles visited? What distant climes have they explored, encompassed with cold, nakedness and want, to diffuse the principles of virtue and the blessings of civilization?—Robert Hall.

The doubts that clouded all my heart's devotion
Have spread their clam wings, and flown away;
And as my eyes look up in glad emotion,
I greet the glorious sunshine of today.
I see broad fields in purple clusters swelling
On distant heights; I see the shadows fall
In flowery glades; I see the fountains welling—
A brother hand has made and fashioned all.

No one likes the thought of being put into a casket, having the lid screwed down over their face, and being put into the cold ground. We shudder at the thought of it. But the thought of translation is blessed. Enoch and Elijah were favored thus; and those saints who live till Jesus comes will enjoy the same privilege.

From every land, from every clime,
From every shore and sea,
The weary pilgrims of all time
Safe gathered there shall be.

Duty is an angel, reverently beloved, that walks beside the man, with solemn steps, and common life is a path shining before him more and more; and the future is a mist which he will pass through, and so be nigher God; and if today the world fools round him like a temple for worship in, then tomorrow there will be a further world for him to pass on into, and it will be the holy of holies.

Notice.

My post-office will be Tunnel City, Monroe Co., Wis., for the coming year.
MRS. A. C. SEDGWICK.

Any of the preaching brethren passing through Detroit City, Becker Co., Minn., will confer a favor by calling on the undersigned.

GEO. P. NEWTON.

Communications.

The Life-Processes of Generation and Specimens of Mistranslation and Perversion.

Specimen I. Matt. xi. 30: Ο γαρ ζυγος μου χρηστος, και το φορτιον μου ελαφρον εστιν. Rendered in the old and revised, For my yoke is easy and my burden is light. Should be, For my yoke is useful, etc., the idea contained in the word χρηστος being that of the good that inheres in true utility.

Specimen II. Matt. i. 1, 18: The word γενεσις occurs in the first verse, and means origin, or in a general and broad sense sometimes, birth; but not generation, in the sense of begottal, translated generation in the old and revised. The word γενεσις occurs in verse 18, and means a begetting, having special reference to the life process according to the law of the life to which it relates whether natural or spiritual and must never be confounded with another process called bringing forth or birth. The one relates to the agency of the male in producing life, the other to the female; translated however, in the old and revised birth, a term used distinctively in the English language to express the idea of bringing forth.

Specimen III. In the latter clause of this 18th verse the result of the begetting, which is conception, is spoken of in this way: ευρεθη εν γαστρι εχουσα εν πνευματι αγιω, translated, Was found with child of the Holy Ghost; should read, Was found to have in womb from Holy Spirit: meaning strictly the source of the generating. If you think of the source as a person meaning God himself, if you think of the process or means employed meaning the power of God manifested according to the law of spiritual or supernatural life in contradistinction to this power manifested according to the law of natural life in the process of generation, a very important distinction to understand in our pursuit of a true apprehension of the word of God in regard to the life processes natural and spiritual.

Specimen IV. John iii. 3, reads as follows: Απεκριθη Ιησους και ειπεν αυτω, Αμην, αμην λεγω σοι, εαν μη τις γεννηθη ανωθεν, ου δυναται ιδειν την βασιλειαν του θεου. Translated. Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. Should read, Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily I say unto thee, unless one shall have been begotten from above, he cannot see (in the sense of perceive or understand) the kingdom of God. The word γενναω has been confounded by the translators with the word γενεσις which from its primitive meaning of becoming, or coming to pass, frequently comes to mean and be used in the sense of birth or parturition. This word γενεσις however, is never properly so used, and is not so used here, and is the verb from which the verbal noun γενεσις upon which we commented in the third specimen is derived.

The Scriptures nowhere teach that a person while in the flesh can be born into a spiritual state. The resurrection is clearly taught to be the birth into this spiritual state or condition. Another very important fact to be understood if we would apprehend aright the teaching of God's word, and Jesus well asked Nicodemus in the way of reproof, "Art thou a teacher of Israel, and comprehendest not these things?" Do you ask why? Because the two different life processes, and the necessity of regeneration, are clearly taught even in the Old Covenant Scriptures, as clearly as language can teach them. They are not only stated specifically and the importance of understanding them dwelt upon continually, but, they are illustrated and continually kept before the eye and mind in the various rites and ceremonies of the Levitical law.

Again from John viii. 33, through the chapter, the fact of this spiritual begotting and its necessity are both stated and dwelt upon at some length, and in verse 41 this same term γενεσις is used and modified by the adverbial element εκ πορνειας and translated in the old version, We be not born of fornication.

Now observe, reader and scholar, that we have exactly the same grammatical construction in these two passages. Let us put them side by side and see. This reads, Ημεις εκ πορνειας ουκ γεγεννημεθα. The other reads, last clause of Matt. i. 20, το γαρ εν αυτη γεννηθεν εκ πνευματος εστιν αγιου.

The first correctly translated reads, We have not been begotten from fornication.

The second reads, For that which hath been begotten in her is from Holy (lit. sanctified) Spirit.

Now as we have already said, the proposition from, strictly speaking, indicates the source of an action, not the agency. In the first instance here the word fornication or adultery never begotten personally or in the agency of person there is no danger of misapprehension in regard to the relation in which it stands as expressed by the preposition εκ or from. In the second instance, however, we have a word πνευμα or spirit, that is used all through the Scriptures to express both the person spiritual and the life spiritual when spoken of in the abstract. Now to any one who understands the Greek language in its structure and grammatical laws, it is perfectly evident that the writer of this passage did not intend to use πνευμα here, in the personal sense, but does use it and intends to use it in the same way that πνευμα is used in the other passage. If he had intended to use it in the personal sense, by a law of the language he would have used the preposition προ with πνευματος instead of εκ as this proposition is the one to use with the genitive to express the direct agent or efficient cause.—See Crosby, Hadley, or any other standard grammar on this subject.

Interpreting the first passage it would read, for that which hath been begotten in her is in accordance with the reproductive laws of adultery.

Interpreting the latter passage it would read, for that which hath been begotten in her is in accordance with the working of God's sanctified supernatural or spiritual laws.

The teaching of Scripture is plain that God is One in his personality, and in this sense is above all and over all, the source and spring of all life and action; and that man's accountability begins and ends in his use of the ability God has given him. Moreover the working of this ability is always and invariably in accordance with some law of God's, viewed either as natural or supernatural. The only difference recognized, however, in the Scriptures between the so-called natural and supernatural is that the one is in accordance with man's ability, or something that man can do, while the other is above man's ability, but in accordance with God's ability and the spiritual agencies which he employs.

So we find all through the Scriptures the word used to express the concept called "a miracle," is merely the word δυναμις meaning ability; that is, strictly speaking, intelligent power in contradistinction to unintelligent or machine power.

Now when we begin to realize that God is working in and around us through all these manifold spiritual intelligences, and that too in accordance with law, that this natural world and what we recognize as natural laws working in and about us, and seeming to hold us in an inexorable grasp of infinite power, is nevertheless really a cosmos within a cosmos, a cosmos of natural law, as it were, subject to a cosmos of supernatural or spiritual law, which is slowly, perhaps, but surely molding the rough material of the natural to its finer spiritual purposes, and all this going on under the supervising intelligence of this one God. I say when we begin to realize these facts and conditions in some degree, we are prepared to begin our search for the deep things which God has revealed in his word.

As a test of you, my reader, I will point out another perversion in this same chapter and passage, and see if you understand the difference of meaning between the translation as it stands in the old and revised and the one I shall give you.

"Η μαρκη μου πλοιος εστι βρωσις, και το αιμα μου αληθως εστι ποσις.

Translated, For my flesh is meat indeed and my blood is drink indeed. Literally translated reads, For eating truthfully is my flesh and drinking truthfully is my blood.

I would say in the way of comment first that the Tischendorff text gives the adjective αληθης instead of the adverb αληθως, but the thought would be the same in either case, as in the one case the adverb modifies the verbal noun, and in the other the adjective qualifies it.

Reader, do you perceive the outcome of these two different renderings. The logical outcome of the one is the Catholic doctrine of transubstantiation. The logical outcome of the other is that moral responsibility inheres in intelligent action.

The 53nd and 54th verses of the 6th chapter of this gospel explain this verse very clearly and to the scholar teach the difference, if he has not already apprehended it, between the words βρωσις food, and βρωσει eating. In the 53nd verse Christ says, "I have an eating process of which ye are not aware." βρωσιν here. In the 54th he says, "My food is, that I may do the will of the One who sent me, and that I may complete his work." βρωσις here. Again in the 63d verse of the 6th chapter in this passage we have been considering, we have a still further explanation, namely, "The spirit is that which maketh alive, the flesh profiteth to no purpose. The words which I am speaking unto you, are spirit and are life." The word of God then is the instrumentality by which God begets or causes life. And as John says elsewhere, "in it was life and the life was the light of mankind." Applying the thought to a person, you have this person begotten by the hearing and acceptance of the word into an active state of faith, and this active state of faith implies an active pursuit after a hope that has sprung up in this new state of faith, and this active pursuit after this new hope is the new life and the exemplification of this new life is the light of mankind, because men see and thus learn by the results or fruits of such an example or life what must be the attributes and character of the One who imparts it by his enlightening word. This undoubtedly is as far as we can go and all that we can apprehend in our finite condition of God's infinite life process of begottal according to spirit. But while we cannot apprehend the rest we know that there is something more and infinitely more than this in the life process spiritual. Just as we know that the good husbandman may prepare the ground well and sow the seed well and do everything that belongs to the office of a good husbandman, who is aiming to bring about some natural germination and growth. As he must wait for God to quicken and perfect the growth by all his agencies seen and unseen, so man can but do his part in the way of preparation and the use of means to an end. Paul may plant and Apollos water, but God giveth the increase. How and what the life-processes spiritual are, beyond the phenomena manifest in the growth, we know as little of as of the life-processes natural.

All we can do in either case is to mark the phenomena and learn the laws in accordance with which these phenomena are manifested, and like the husbandman perform the plain and simple duties which become evident to one's every day individual walk of faith, remembering that as the old "manna" with which God fed his people was the type the verity, viz. his verity according to his word of the Old Covenant, so now when Christ tells us that he is the "true manna" or the τυπος the actual verity of which the other was a type, the living verity of God's word, "the true bread," the eating of which giveth life spiritual, we are to understand that the eating of this truth signified the assimilation and appropriation in faith of the vital principal which is contained in the veritable word according to the promises and conditions of the New Covenant as well as according to the to us incomprehensible, but effectual inworking power of God's spiritual ability in us to will and to do of his good pleasure, now in this germinal period and finally as with the little seed that the husbandman has planted and duly cared for, to perfect the growth into a new organic immortal individuality that will bear fruits to his, God's glory, first in a character which will be the efflorescence of man's sanctified and spiritualized heart and mind, and finally, in the new organic investiture of this character at the end of this age in a harvest that will be God's vintage of all the noble purposes which he hath wrapt up in the germinal verity of his word according to the New Covenant in Christ. And as he hath clothed all his products natural according to the laws which control their germinal life from the lily of the valley to the first Adamic man with bodies or organic forms, so in the new generation spiritual he promises in the verity of his everlasting word to clothe the new products spiritual from the creation itself which groaneth, awaiting its deliverance, even the redemption of the sons of God, to each individual one of these sons of God with its appropriate body, spiritual according to the inworking germinal vital ability which he hath wrapt up in each several individuality to be made manifest in due season according to the law of his spiritual begottal through Christ, the new organic head.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Selections.

ASLEEP IN JESUS.

No scriptural description of death is so suggestive and so consoling as that which is conveyed by the familiar word sleep. It occurs often. Stephen the martyr breathes his sublime prayer, and then "he fell asleep." Our Lord said to his disciples: "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep." Paul, in that transcendently sublime chapter on the resurrection, treats death as but the transient slumber, to be followed by a glorious awakening at the sound of the last trumpet. And when he crowns it with that voice of the Divine Spirit, that has been sounded and sung in so many a house of bereavement: "I would not have you to be ignorant concerning them which are asleep; for, if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." No three words are inscribed on more tombs or on more hearts than these "Asleep in Jesus."

A dying-bed is only the spot where the material frame falls asleep. Then we take up the slumbering form and gently bear it to its narrow bed in Mother Earth. Our very word "cemetery" describes this thought. It is derived from the Greek word κοιμητηριον (koimeterion), which signifies a sleeping-place. Greenwood is really a vast dormitory, in which tens of thousands are laid to their last repose—some in their gorgeous environments of rosewood and marble and others in the poor little trundle-beds of the pauper's plot. It is a mingled and promiscuous sleeping-place; but the Master knoweth them that are his." They who sleep in him shall awake to be forever with their Lord.

On this tremendous question of the resurrection of our loved ones and our reunion with them our yearning hearts are satisfied with nothing less than certainty. Poetic fancies are gossamer; analogies from the sprouting of seeds and bulbs, probabilities, intuitions, and all philosophizings are too shadowy to rear a solid faith on. We demand absolute certainty, and there are just two truths that can give it. The first one is the actual fact of Christ's own resurrection from the death-slumber; the second is his omnipotent assurance that all they who sleep in him shall be raised up and be where he is forevermore. Those early Christians were wise in their generation when they carved on the tomb of the martyrs "In Jesu Christo obdormivit"—In Jesus Christ he fell asleep.

The fragrance of this heavenly line perfumes the very air around the believer's resting-place. Giving to the Latin word its true pronunciation, there is sweet melody, as well as Heaven-sent truth, in this song of the sleepers:

"Oh! precious pair of triumph this!
And vastly-blessed deal to achieve it,
Of suffering part—of peaceful life—
"In Jesu Christo obdormivit."

"Our eyelid-bed dread be none the least,
Thrice-blessed solace to it does it,
That I can utter o'er their dust,
In Jesu Christo obdormivit."

"Now to my lovest one's grave I bring
My flowers—the and interweave it
With God's own golden lettering,
"In Jesu Christo obdormivit."

ASIATIC CHOLERA.

The recent scare in England about cholera has been appeased by the discovery that the sole ground for the rumor of its outbreak in the Red Sea was a solitary case which appeared on a ship which arrived at Aden with some four hundred pilgrims for Mecca. The case is supposed to have been sporadic, which is probable enough considering the usual condition of ships laden with pilgrims on the road to Mecca. The quarantine imposed upon all vessels coming through the Suez Canal was relaxed through English influence in favor of the British transports. This produced a violent outbreak of indignation in the French press, which recalled the fact that in the work of the international Sanitary Commission, fourteen powers, including the United States, join in to defend Europe from the cholera, and that, until now, its edicts have been obeyed. Perfidious Albion, according to the Paris journals, "is about to inflict a plague upon the world rather than hamper her commercial interests for a day." "She would poison Europe for a few pounds sterling!" screams M. Rochefort. In the meantime the disease has broken out at Tangiers. In Manila at the first of this month the deaths reached 300 daily, while in one of the Philippine islands there were 4,550 deaths in two weeks.

A curious theory has just been advanced in England by a scientific physician which has not tended to quiet the alarm. It is that the great outbreaks of this plague in Europe and this country have occurred at intervals of sixteen or seventeen years; as in 1817, 1833, 1850 and 1866. Between these great attacks of the epidemic there were minor returns of it, occurring at intervals of six years after the more fatal visitations, namely, 1837 and 1848. According to this prophet, a most destructive prevalence of this pestilence is due in England and the States in 1882–83. The prediction seems plausible enough, though it reminds us too forcibly of the old superstition concerning this plague, that, if passed through a country at precisely the rate of speed with which a man could travel, and was in fact carried from land to land by the scourged Wandering Jew, who, thinking death the greatest boon, bestowed it as a souvenir of himself.—N. Y. Tribune.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At Rowlo, Wyoming, Sept. 9, 1882, Sophia M., wife of James Averell, and daughter of J. F. and Mary Jaeger, of Eureka, Wis., aged 22 years, 6 months, 18 days.

We are often called to the house of mourning, but seldom under circumstances so sad as were those connected with Sister Averell's death. Last February she and Mr Averell were joined in matrimony, and in May they bid adieu to father and mother, brothers, sisters, and friends, and started for their new home in Wyoming, happy in each other and with bright prospects for their future. They knew no sorrow only the separation from the loved ones at home, until the beloved wife was stricken. Her illness was short and severe, all that love and money could do was done for the dear one, but death had marked her for his victim, and all the agonized husband could do did not save her from his grasp. She died peacefully at 8:30 p. m., leaving a message of love for the dear parents so far away, which the loving husband brought with her dear remains to the afflicted family, where he arrived Sept. 14. But where is the pen that can portray the anguish of those hearts as they embraced the husband of the daughter and sister first lay in the casket before them, and upon whom they could not look until he who had the keys of death and hades shall open the prison house and let the captives free! The funeral was held at the M. E. church in Eureka. Words of comfort were spoken from Job xiv. 14, and John xi. 25, after which we laid our sister to rest until Jesus comes. After the funeral, Brother Jaeger gathered his family around the hearthstone and desired a discourse on baptism, and although it was after nine o'clock at night and all were weary and depressed, yet we had a blessed meeting, and three more of Brother Jaeger's noble sons came out on the Lord's side and put on Christ by a belief and obedience of the faith. The next morning as Brother Jaeger stood upon the bank of the Fox river and welcomed his sons as they came forth from their watery graves to the household of faith, he exclaimed, "God has bestowed me three more children to eternal life." These three make nine out of his twelve children that have obeyed the gospel, and we hope to see the three younger ones gathered into the fold in due time.

MRS. A. C. SEDGWICK.

DIED—Junius Thorpe, of Bath, Summit county, Ohio, on Sept. 29, 1882, aged 61 years.

He leaves a widow and two sons to mourn for him, besides a great many friends, all of whom will miss him. He was very highly esteemed by all as a good husband and kind father, and as an honest and upright man and neighbor. Just how his attention was first called to the truth I am not able to state just now, but I remember some twelve years ago or so, he, with Brother Mead, came all the way from Bath to Collinwood to obey the truth, and they were both buried with Christ in baptism in the waters of Lake Erie. Brother Mead I believe is in Kansas and will be pained to learn of Brother Thorpe's death. By request Brother Mitchell and I attended the funeral which was held in a hall well filled with friends and neighbors, who were addressed on the subject of death, what it is and why it is. It was shown that death kills and so far has killed the whole race except two, Enoch and Elijah—and still holds it with one exception—Jesus—who himself was killed by it—but could not be held by it for he afterward conquered death and led captivity captive—who will also bring all his saints from the dead and save those living at his coming from its grasp. Brother Thorpe was well posted in the truth and was always ready to improve any opportunity that offered. May those left behind follow Brother Thorpe as he followed Christ and meet him with all the saints in the kingdom of God.

GEORGE ELTON.

DIED—At Toronto, Ont., July 28, 1882, Mrs. Dorothy Chapman, aged 74 years, 11 days.

E. W.

An anti-Jewish movement has broken out in Austria. A cable dispatch says: "Advices from Pressburg report the occurrence of anti-Jewish riots at that place. The mob broke the windows of many houses occupied by Jews. The military finally restored order after making forty arrests. The military are confined to their barracks. The Hungarian Ministry have placed the Pressburg district under martial law. The rioters in Pressburg declared that what they had done was merely a prelude to what was coming. The shops and warehouses of the Jews were forced open and plundered. The rioters offered the military an obstinate resistance, some of them seizing the soldiers' bayonets with their hands. Similar excesses were committed in the neighboring town of Blumenthal, where thirty persons were arrested. Several hundred Jews have fled to Vienna.

Poetry.

HARVEST TIME.

"The harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels."

In his wide fields walks the Master,
In his fair fields, ripe for harvest,
Where the evening sun shines slantwise
On the rich ears heavy bending;
Still the Master: "It is time."
Though no leaf shows brown, decadence
And September's sadly frost-like
Don't appear on the horizon.
"It is full time," saith the Master,
The Lord Master, "It is time."

Lo, he looks. That look compelling
Brings his labor to its harvest.
Looked they gather, as in autumn
Parents frisk in chubby riddles
Drop from the reaper's hands;
While whisper to the wind while talks not,
While feet close with earth the furrow
Each lays down his golden palm-branch,
And upon each sickle shining
"Speak, O Master, now 'tis time!"

Where the field shows ears deep-drooping,
Where the stalk is weighed down heavy,
Where the empty ears are upward,
And the grain is scant or rotten;
But the sickles flash not there.
Flash new dawns of the reapings,
Sickles are to be used where harvests
Of the earth are the most
And the most golden.

Is there God's eye, as the field is Given unto the reapers?
Are there souls ripe for the sickle?
All these waiting in the wheat-field?
Are the sheaves ready prepared
Gathering in for Christ all?
Ah! thy eyes shroud, thy gloating
Of our distant sky, blood-reddened—
Of the near field's trouble, blighted,
Covered by rank Tares-intruder—
Sown, it must be harvest time!

Who shall know the Master's conduct?
Whether it be dawn or sunset,
When a light dew wets both the wheat ears
Or while noon their gold is heaven,
Shedding like the yellow field?
Only, may the voice, loud Master,
Peal before the reapers choose,
And deft reaping sheaves show falling—
Gather all into my garner,
For it is my harvest time."

—Southern World.

Communications.

"MY USEFULNESS."

There are not a few in all quarters where conditional immortality, and its affiliated doctrines have been unfolded, who remain silent after conviction of their truth has dethroned prejudice and doubt in their hearts. They persist in keeping the light to themselves, and, for aught we know, enjoy it in solitude. Confidential friends become acquainted with their secret; perhaps in return for an unbecoming of experiences similar to their own. But why this reserve? why this timidity to acknowledge in open day truth which is surely transcendent and vital? The convert to a better theology may occupy a private or public position in the church, or, to speak more accurately, in some section of the great Christian fraternity; he may be an energetic laborer in the evangelizing field on behalf of the young or the old; but he hesitates to commit himself to the side where reproach and contradiction may perplex his life and limit his opportunities of doing good. He might, we shall suppose, willingly bear the opposition not unlikely to result from a public confession of his new faith. He is aware that a Christian's path is in no circumstances a smooth journey, and he wisely anticipates thorny anxieties and troubles in the pilgrimage before him. Trials he expects from the world; trials also from the haste and suspicion and illiberality of brethren, who profess to be actuated by a gentler spirit.

This view of the matter may not greatly distress our brother visited with the beams of a purer illumination; and yet somehow a nervous fear puts a padlock on his tongue. That fear suggests that his influence would be impaired were he openly to renounce dogmas still looked upon as awful verities by those with whom he has long co-operated. Now this is a serious thought, and one that well seems to justify patient reflection. It is the difficulty of a man whose heart is set on doing substantial service in the world, which any violent prejudice against him would probably curtail, somewhat, at the least. Such a prejudice, with voice like a serpent's, is unfortunately sure to be created, for those who stand by the old dogmas will inevitably take offense at his espousal of what cannot but be reckoned unsound and perilous notions. If popular before, he can be so no longer with his former friends; if, as a preacher, for example, he had easy access to many whom he wished to benefit, they are most probably restless under his voice, and perhaps refuse him audience entirely, afraid of his novel teaching, though he may be girt with fresh power, though he may burn with intenser anxiety for their highest welfare. It requires no prophetic gift to foresee these results, and so "my usefulness" hinders many from witnessing, whose testimony might be exceedingly valuable.

Far be it from us to underestimate the love of, the sanctified pride in, usefulness to man. It soars far above the mercenary, and the empty phantom of mere popularity. It is alien from the breathless quietude of comfortable ease; from the pleasant retreats of official respectability. It is not content with soulless forms, and ritualistic drill; with choir performances and respect for ecclesiastical trappings and diguities. Beyond and above all these, and kindred trivialities, of mighty moment to those who are but actors in a sort of pious drama, this spirit has discerned the deep meaning of reality—longs to reclaim the volatile to sobriety of mind—strives to draw men to the Savior, who stills the heart, and breathes into it pure and heavenly aspirations. One so exercised claims our sympathy; claims also our prayers that he may escape the entanglements in which he is confined. Though mistaken, we credit him with sincerity. We have fellowship with him in his new-born convictions, and would like to aid him in mastering his fears.

C. C. MONTGOMERY.

(To be Continued.)

PRAYER.

Before really let me approach the subject of prayer, for it is surely one of the high and first duties of a Christian. But perhaps no subject treated in the Bible is less understood than this. But a little while ago the world witnessed the strange spectacle of a nation praying for the life of the chief executive, that was slowly ebbing away. But the assassin's deadly work prevailed.

Prayers are offered daily that sin may cease and righteousness fill the earth, yet the tide of sin rolls on increasing as it goes. Some special subject forms the basis of the united prayers of a multitude and the object is not accomplished. And now comes a demand from one who is certainly strong in faith, "for a new era in prayer." Are we to regard this as a "new departure" in prayer? or does the writer mean more intensified prayer? As one object to be accomplished through this "new era of prayer" is the silencing the cavils of infidels, the test ought to be a strong one. Let it be one that will settle the vexed question beyond a doubt. Ingersoll submitted a test some time ago to the religious world that he said would remove his skepticism, it was to produce a Christian who could drink deadly poison, that he (Ingersoll) should prescribe or to cast out a devil, now it is something of this kind that the infidel demands, not a simple compliance with the divine law of life, that the Savior declared should be to the world a proof of the divine origin of the religion he taught his followers, for he declared that. By this shall the world know that ye are my disciples if ye love one another," not that the world would be convinced by a miracle. The gospel was to be "preached in all the world for a witness to all nations." Now I decline offering stronger testimony to either skeptical individuals or nations to convince them, than that which God has given. I could not unite with brethren in praying for the resurrection of a dead prophet to astonish the infidel world by prayers miraculously answered. But am anxious to bow reverently before God and ask in faith for just what God has promised. Holy men of God in all ages have prayed and their prayers were answered. And the grand truth that underlies the success of these men in prayer is they prayed in faith.

Here is the key-note that rings in harmony with the divine plan of prayer. "What things soever ye desire when ye pray believe that ye shall receive them and ye shall have them." "And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing ye shall receive." Now here is a rule that is so plain that if followed will effectually guard us against fanaticism. Faith or belief is based upon testimony. Now before praying for any thing let us be sure that God has promised it, then we can pray in faith for it and the prayer will be answered. Remember that prayer gives God no information, neither does it change his purposes, it simply brings us in harmony with God's will and purposes. To think of informing a mind infinitely wise or of changing a purpose eternally fixed is simply blasphemy. The glorious kingdom of God will come even if I do not pray for it. But if I do not desire it to come I can have no share in it. When the kind mother says to her child, "I have a beautiful present for you, but before I give it to you, you must say, please mother, let me have it," she is not changing her purpose but brings the child in harmony with the purpose. Then let us put ourselves in harmony with God's plan and ask in strong faith not wavering or doubting.

Yours in faith in all God's promises.

J. F. WAGONER.

Your whole life will be better or worse by your conduct today. Which shall it be?

EXPLANATION.

Editor Restitution:

I was surprised in reading the letter of our genial neighbor, Mr. McCurry, which was published in THE RESTITUTION of Sept. 27, to see several misstatements concerning my last communication to you, and although they may have been unintentional on his part, still I would beg the insertion of a brief correction.

1. Mr. McC. states that I made use of the phrase "the Son of God" and inserted in brackets immediately after it the remark, "so-called," thus indicating doubt as to the Sonship of the Christ.

This observation comes from careless reading with a spice perhaps of prejudice, as I never used those words in that manner or connection. I did, however, in the article referred to, insert (so-called) immediately after the phrase "God the Son," which every Bible student knows is one unwarranted by the Holy Scriptures and is a fruitful source of theological error.

2. I would say that my understanding of the Scriptures requires that I assert that Jesus was slain "like a common malefactor" by the hands of "wicked men," but that I stated "only this and nothing more," as remarked by Mr. McC., is a misstatement that although does seem a little tiny bit willful, and which I will not occupy space to refute, but refer to the article in question for refutation.

J. P. GELLETLY.

DETROIT, Mich.

Editor Restitution:

I saw an editorial in your issue of of July 26, headed "Death to Sin," which you introduce by saying that the rendering in both the old and new versions is contrary to one of the plainest rules of Greek syntax. You wonder how the translators could have so rendered the passage, viz., "in that he died he died unto sin .... in that he liveth he liveth unto God."

I would just take the liberty to call your attention to a few points which you seem to have overlooked.

I admit, with you, that the malignity of sin was such as to produce death, but we must all admit that when Adam became dead to God "by" sin, he was not dead to sin, but fully alive to it. But let us proceed to examine the Greek in other passages where the same phrases occur. Let us take the same chapter in which the above quotation occurs, viz., Rom. v. In the 10th verse we read, "For if while we were enemies we were reconciled to God" (Greek, tou—Theou), v. 12, "Nor present your members to sin, (tee, hamartee) but present yourselves to God.... (tou, Theou) and your members to God" (same word). Now, 17th verse. But thanks to God (tou), 18th verse, and having been emancipated from sin, you became subservient to (tee) righteousness.

The foregoing not only proves that the words "tou" and "tee" mean "to" or "unto" in these passages but some of the passages prove that when a man is dead "by" sin he is dead "to" righteousness, or in other words dead to God, and that it becomes necessary for him to become dead to sin, as a master and owner of a slave, before he can be alive to righteousness, or in other words "alive to God." If I owned a slave (which is the figure brought to view in the passages in question) he would be alive to me so long as I owned him, but if I should sell him to you, he would then, to all intents and purposes, be dead to me and alive to you. Sin is here represented under the figure of a slaveholder, not so much by its power to make men commit sin (though that is included) as that men were enslaved and held in bondage through Adam's transgression, which had made the race carnal minded, which is death, "because the carnal mind is enmity against God." Now God freed the slaves by buying them himself. They thus became slaves of God. Now as soon as a person becomes alive to his new Master by hearing the "voice of the Son of God," he is then dead to the old one (sin). Paul does not say that after we have died the physical death that we should be made alive by God at the literal (?) resurrection. He is talking about a change of relation which had been brought about ("having become free from sin you become servants of God") by a death and resurrection having taken place.

Christ died to the old relation which he had come into by Adam's sin, and thus became alive to God, by the power of God who was in him, "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." Can you conceive of any way that God could reconcile the world unto himself by being in Christ, except by representatively killing the world's enmity in its representative? When God had killed the enmity in Christ, he had accomplished that which the High Priest had accomplished typically, when he had killed the beast. The taking in of the blood, which was the evidence or death, followed the killing, and then the judgment took place on the blood, to make sure that the alleged death was real.

Water baptism symbolizes this death. In that act we virtually say that we will die to sin and live to God; then comes the judgment, to ascertain if the alleged death to sin is a real one or not. Jesus was led into the wilderness to be tried after he had signified his death to sin. Oh, my soul such a trial was his!!!

"Christ in us the hope of glory" will do the same thing for us. "He suffered being tried in all points like as we are, yet without giving way to sin" (when he was tried).

Does any one imagine that the physical death of the beast typified the physical death of some other physical thing? Does literal blood typify literal blood? If so then the Roman soldiers are the antitype of the High Priest.

The literal heavens, or more properly, the edifice of the "heavens" were cleansed by the literal blood. Then the better sacrifices were necessary to cleanse the heavens themselves. What are these "heavens themselves?" "John says the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

But the blood which cleansed the copies was shed in the copies of the heavens which were cleansed by it. Let us be true to the type. The blood which cleanses the "heavens themselves" must be shed in the "heavens themselves."

Is Calvary the "heavens themselves?" That is where the physical blood of Jesus was "shed," and where it was "sprinkled."

Nay, my brother, the blood which must be shed, without which there is no remission of sins, is that which is the evidence of the death of the enmity within us—death to sin. If this death has not taken place in us we are still dead to God—"dead in trespasses." "He that hath the Son hath life."

If "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself," will the object for which he was in him be accomplished before all the world is reconciled to God?

I should very much like replies to some of the foregoing questions.

I am truly your brother for the truth.

JOHN HUDSON.

ALGONA, Iowa.

Editor Restitution:

The article I contributed to your columns a few weeks since in relation to the workings of prohibition in Iowa, etc., and in which I volunteered to give any information desired about this section of Iowa, has elicited a correspondence of so numerous a nature as to render it impracticable to answer each personally.

Presuming it may be of interest to many in your section I will endeavor to give as general and concise a view as possible of the country, lands, advantages, etc.

This section of Iowa consists of rolling swells of prairie land covered with a very heavy and luxuriant growth of blue-joint grass. The soil is a rich black loam varying in depth from two to four feet, with a loamy subsoil containing just enough of sand to make the rapid development and heavy production of corn, cereals, and vegetables that we have. Our water is pure and abundant. While this region is equal to any part of the West for grain growing, our farmers find their best interests in stock growing and dairying. Our pastures are free and the best of hay can be put in the stack at fifty to seventy-five cents per ton. The butter made in Kossuth county this year will bring five hundred thousand dollars, which is more than $250 for each family in the county.

This county, in proportion to its population, produces more butter than any county in the world! And it sells in the market at as high a figure as any made in the United States.

Our butter is taken from the factories here to Boston and New York in refrigerator cars. The freight from Algona to Boston is about one cent per pound. Good lands near schools, churches, railroads, etc., range at from $5 to $12 per acre, and are sold on such easy terms that they are practically within the reach of all.

The crops in this section of Iowa with the exception of corn are very fine, and corn, notwithstanding the heavy rains which kept it back, promises to be a heavy yield if the autumn is favorable. Respectfully,

T. G. LEGGETT.

There is many a thing which the world calls disappointment; but there is no such word in the dictionary of faith. What to others are disappointments, are to believers intimations of the will of God.

Selections.

THE RELIGIOUS OUTCOME OF THE EGYPTIAN TROUBLES.

It has for some time seemed probable that the political schemes of Arabi Pasha and the so-called National party in Egypt were complicated with a wide-reaching religious intrigue, whose object was the suppression of the Ottoman Caliph by a member of the Sheriffal family of Mecca. The impression is confirmed by the news which has lately reached us from Arabi. The Grand Sherif has been deposed by the Turkish troops stationed in the Hejaz, and his place has been filled by a brother of his predecessor, who, it will be remembered, was assassinated at Jeddah in March, 1880. The reason assigned by the Porte for its action is the alleged complicity of the late Sherif in the designs of the Egyptian rebels. But although it is incumbent upon Abdul Hamid to punish such defection, it is doubtful whether he will gain much in the end by the change he has brought about. The real significance of the revolution at Mecca will be found in the displacement of the fanatical by the liberal party, which has shown itself extremely friendly to the English. The elevation of an avowed partisan to the Sherifate and the effect of such a step upon her Mohammedan subjects in India are among the substantial benefits which England has reaped from her rapid conquest of Egypt.

To elicit the full meaning of the meagre telegrams which have been received from Mecca, we should look back over the recent history of the Hejaz. We must bear in mind that the Grand Sherif or official representative of the Sherifal family is, in Arabia, a much more important personage than the Ottoman Sultan, and that through his intercourse with pilgrims, multitudes of whom visit Mecca every year, he exerts a great moral influence over the Moslem world. Even at Constantinople the Sultan rises to receive members of the Sherifal family, and it is said that should he make the pilgrimage in person, he would be received by the Grand Sherif as an inferior. It is certain that no officer of the Turkish Government is permitted to reside in Mecca, and the sole revenue which it derives from the Hejaz comes from custom duties at the seaports of Jeddah and Yenbo. The number of Turkish troops stationed at the points just named, and at Medina and Taif in the interior, is usually about 8,000 men, but only half of these are regulars, and all of them are unpaid and unarmed. It is not surprising, therefore, that a re-enforcement of five battalions should have been thought requisite to avert an outbreak on the part of the partisans of the deposed Sherif.

The extraordinary prestige of the Sherifal family, due to their undisputed descent from the prophet Mohammed, has always excited the jealousy of the Ottoman Government, which has sought to weaken the influence of the house by fomenting feuds between its branches. By a skilful use of such rivalries the Sultan has been able to frequently interfere with the order of succession. During the present century the Porte has sometimes favored one and sometimes the other of the two branches, respectively known as Zoyd and Aoun, into which the Sherifal family is divided. The Grand Sherif, Abdul Mutalleb, who has just lost his place on account of his relations to Arabi Pasha, has had a long and eventful life. He first obtained the office in 1827, and although he was soon expelled by the Aoun faction, he was reinstalled in 1848. He held power, however, but for five years, at the end of which time he was deposed for alleged disloyalty to the Caliph, and thenceforward the Aouns were supreme in Hejaz. They represent the more liberal and progressive party among the Mohammedans of Arabia, and have always shown a tolerant spirit toward the Shiites and other heretics with whom they are yearly brought in contact at the season of the pilgrimage. So long as they remained in power, the relations between India and Mecca were of a friendly character, and it is only within the last two years that the holy city has become a focus of Indian discontent. Indeed, the latest representative of the Aoun branch, El Hussein, who became Grand Sherif in 1877, made himself obnoxious to the reactionary faction at Stamboul by persisting in keeping up cordial relations with the British Government on all occasions when the interests of its Indian subjects came in question at Mecca. According to Mr. W. S. Blunt, it was mainly on this ground that the Turkish Government, which feared not appose him on account of his great popularity, determined to move him by other means. It is certain that his assassination was resented at Constantinople, for his successor sent orders to Mecca for his reception months before the crime was committed.

The man who succeeded the murdered El Hussein in 1880 was, as we have said, the aged and already twice deposed Abdul Mutalleb, the representative of the fanatic and reactionary party in Arabia. It was of course expected that the Zeyd faction, by way of return for their restoration to power, would vigorously support the policy of Abdul Hamid, which from his accession has been directed to the enforcement of the Caliphal authority of the Ottoman Sultans. But Abdul Hamid had chosen the wrong party for his purpose, for while the Aouns are indisposed to dispute the grounds of his title, the Zeyds are, of all Arabs, the most bigoted upholders of the doctrine that a Caliph must be of the blood of the Koreysh. Then, accordingly, Arabi Pasha, in order to intimidate the Sultan, began to talk of the idea of an Arabian Caliphate. He seems to have had no difficulty in persuading Abdul Mutalleb that he would be elected for the office. But the capture of Tel-el-Kebir put an end to all such plans, and the ambitious head of the Zeyd faction has now been relegated for a third time to private life.

His successor is the hereditary head of the Aoun family, a brother of El Hussein, who, since his assassination, has been regarded as a saint. Some collisions will probably enough occur between the ousted and the reinstated parties; but inasmuch as the Aouns are not only supported by Turkish bayonets, but command much the larger following in the Hejaz, their ascendancy at Mecca is not likely to be shaken. Henceforth a party which owes its triumph to England's success in Egypt will be dominant at the religious centre of Islam, and its friendship may be expected to have an important bearing on the influence of Great Britain in the East.—N. Y. Sun.

SELECTED MISCELLANY.

The newly revised French Bible has been adopted in France by Protestants, and its universal acceptance is admitted. Yet it is the work of one man. Germany also feels the "revision" influence, and now we are told that the committee appointed in 1863, at Eisenach, for the revision of Luther's translation of the Bible, has held its last meeting at Halle, and there is every prospect that the revised version will soon appear. Out of the thirty revisers fourteen only remain, sixteen having died since the work began. No alteration of Luther's translation has been admitted, unless sanctioned by two-thirds of the committee. The next step will be the publication of the text, as now revised, in order to submit it to the judgment of the theological faculties in the Universities, and to the criticism of scholars, as well as to the public at large. After their remarks have been received and considered, which may take two or three years more, the New Version will be published and recommended for adoption to all Protestant Churches in Germany. With every appreciation for the work of our English revisers, we cannot but feel it a matter of regret that they, too, had not submitted their work to critical judgment on both sides of the Atlantic. The failure to do this may render a second revision necessary.

SACRED SOIL.

Not the least interesting feature of the British advance in Egypt lies in the historical associations of the ground traversed. The march of General Wolseley is through the old land of Goshen, where for four centuries the Israelites served the task-masters of Egypt. Mahsamch, twelve miles east of Ismailia, on the fresh-water canal, the scene of the British victory last week, is believed to be the ancient Rameses, and Tel-el-Kebir, Pithom—the two treasure cities built for Pharaoh by the children of Israel mentioned in Ex. i. 11. The sites of Piboseth, and Aven, mentioned by the prophet Ezekiel, are now known, the first as Zagazig and the second a Heliopolis, near Cairo. Of the latter, once a great city, nothing now remains but mounds and a solitary obelisk. It witnessed the final overthrow of the Mamelukes by Napoleon. Between Zagazig and Heliopolis is Tel-el-Yehoodee, or the mound of the Jews, where once stood a temple built by Onias, son of the high priest of the temple at Jerusalem, which had priests and the Mosaic service, and was visited by the captive Jews. Onias obtained permission to build the temple from Ptolemy and Cleopatra. In this part of the delta stood Succoth, Etham, Pihahiroth, Baal-Zephon, and Migdol; while in its western part were the cities of the Hyksos, or Shepherd Kings, who ruled over the delta for 500 years. All over the delta are scattered tumuli and the massive ruins of cities where many Israel wrought, at a time when the ancestors of the present conquering hosts were savages in the woods of Britain.—Interior.

The conquest of Egypt is another long turn in the great wheel of world-destiny. We say "conquest," for it is virtually such, though done in the name of the lawful rulers, the Khedive and the Sultan. Henceforth, whatever may be the formal aspect of its government, Egypt will be to all effects an English province. The British Empire has now completed its chain of inter-communication, and thrown up its military road from Vancouver's Island to Calcutta. Being undisputed mistress of the seas, England has hedged the half of Europe with the path that leads from the back-door of Parliament house to the marble stairways of the viceregal palace. The Mediterranean has long been English lake. Gibraltar, Malta, and Cyprus are her stepping stones. The Suez Canal is now the little wicket, with its latch under her finger, which opens into her great Indian farm. She stands today on a prouder eminence of world-power than ever before, or than any empire of modern times. France hastens to congratulate her. Russia wants her to know that "there need be no quarrel" about their interests in Central Asia, and "if there should be serious trouble it would not be the fault of Russia." The Sultan throws up his turban in a compelled outburst of applause. Bismark's Germany has, with its usual sagacity, foreseen the result and taken pains to come out of the affair as England's ally. It is a new and graver responsibility, which now devolves on the British Government and people, to whom so much power and sway has been committed. Much will be required of England as the light and leader of the world in political and social stability, in liberty and intelligence, and above all in the gospel of salvation. If she shall so fulfil her trust to poor Egypt, the world will readily forget the more questionable phases of her past relations with that unhappy country. And it is fortunate for both peoples, and for the world, that this problem and process of reorganization are to be solved and shaped by the Christian statesmanship of Gladstone.—Christian Intelligencer.

According to Lieutenant Condor, four hundred and thirty-four of the six hundred and twenty-two Biblical names in Western Palestine have been identified. According to Selah Merrill, archæologist of the American Palestine Exploration Society, nearly one hundred of the two hundred and forty Biblical names in Eastern Palestine have been identified. A very great amount of time and money has been expended in this work of identifying the sites mentioned in the Bible. The difficulty of the work is undoubtedly as little appreciated as its importance. No work has connected with it greater hardships or more risk. He who enters upon it does so with his life in his hands. The lives of many have been sacrificed in their labor thus to throw some light upon the pages of the Sacred Record. Surely Christian men and women owe it to themselves to sympathize with such efforts and to render all possible encouragement and assistance. No more convincing argument for the authenticity of the Scriptures can be produced than that which is based upon the identification of the places which are named in them. It is, indeed, surprising that in a country which has suffered so severely not only from the devastation of war, but also from the destructive policy of its rulers, so large a proportion of places mentioned thousands of years ago can be identified. Let this work go on. Christians can well afford to sustain it. Like all work of a similar nature, it needs but to be known to be appreciated and supported.—Hebrew Student.

There is no danger of your spending too much time in prayer in your closet, but there is great danger of your being too prolonged in your prayer-meeting devotions.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

If the Lord wills, the Churches of God in Montague and Wise Counties, Texas, will convene in annual Conference at Stony Point school house, in Montague Co., commencing on Friday before the fourth Sunday in October, 1882, and continuing three days. The special object of the Conference will be the examination of all questions of difference, whether personal or doctrinal, within the church; and the promoting of fraternal fellowship and harmony. To this end, every brother and sister within reach is requested to be present. A cordial invitation is extended to all others. Stony Point is three miles west of Gainsville, ten miles south-east of Montague, ten miles south-west of Saint Joe, five miles north-east of Forestburg, on the Gainsville and Forestburg road. The meeting will open the 20th of October, two o'clock p. m.

CHARLES RUSSELL.

Poetry.

National Baptist.

GOD OMNIPOTENT.*

Lo, God is here! From clouds above
And from the stage on which they move
From plaid unending robes of love,
Unfurled in the crimson west;
And from the river, o'er whose banks
Mysterious shapes of dew appear;
From elms which stand in stately ranks,
Our souls in swelling, voices hear:

I hear it in the insect's wing;
I hear it in the thunder peal ring;
I hear it where the wild birds sing;
I hear it where the breeze is moving,
From pathless forests, thick o'ershade,
And from the cone-fields northward spread,
From every tree, from every glade,
The voice is uttered: "God is here!"

Whilst evening lingers fair heaps above,
And dewy fragrance dews around,
The voice still speaks in tones of love.
And every spot seems holy ground,
The writings on the moon's pale face,
Recumbent in her native sphere,
And countless stars the Almighty's grace
In fiery letters: "God is here!"

When midnight hushes the world in sleep,
Soothes weary hearts and seals the eyes,
The voice is heard in accents deep.
Wakes infant souls to calm repose;
While round us cherubim's bright forms
The fears and troubles shake for fear
The awful voice rose and warns
Amidst the darkness: "God is here!"

Here, when the heart with joy runs over
And fancy her wild pastimes takes;
Here, when the world delights to cover,
And the bowed heart with grief is broken;
Here, when round the circle gay,
Of friends long tried, beloved, cheerful,
Here, in the solitary way,
God must be here: say, "God is here!"

O Christians! let thy faith arise
In every time, in every place;
The Maker of the earth and skies
In His entreating love to you he sees.
Bid tears depart; banish thy griefs;
Washed be the sighs, and wiped the tears.
Thy God is nigh to your relief,
And speaks in mercy: "God is here!"

* Published anonymously about thirty years ago.

Communications.

THE CHURCH—THE BODY OF CHRIST.

A favorite figure for the Church with the apostle Paul is, "the body of Christ." He makes use of this figure in four of his epistles—those to the Romans, 1 Corinthians, Ephesians, and Colossians. One great lesson taught by this beautiful figure is sympathy. Thus, "whether one member suffer all the members suffer with it, or one member be honored all the members rejoice with it." But as this arises from the fact that all the members of the body are closely related to, and mutually dependent on, each other, I propose on the present occasion to treat of the Church as a unit, and yet as made up of many parts, with the necessity of each duly performing its part in order to the perfect unity of the whole: just as in an animal body all the parts in healthy and active exercise are necessary to the integrity of the body which they unitedly constitute.

THE UNITY OF THE BODY.

"As the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, so also is (The) Christ."....Now are there many members, yet but one body." 1 Cor. xii. 12, 20. "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we being many are one body in Christ." Rom. xii. 4, 5. The truth of this is so self-evident, that the absurdity of any other arrangement is seen from the mere supposition of it. Thus the apostle asks, "If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing, where were the smelling?" But now hath God set the members, every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they were all one member (all eye or all ear), where were the body? "An animal with only an organ of vision, and no stomach or digestible apparatus, could not sustain its existence. And even those animals which are of the simplest structure, little else than assimilative organs, must of necessity have some sense of appreheuding the food which sustains them, as well as the power of digestion. A certain degree of complication is necessary in all organized beings, however apparently simple; and yet each creature is in itself a unit, distinct from all other of the same species. This leads us to say something as to there being "many members in one body."

The various functions necessary to be performed by a being such as man, or even the higher classes of the lower animals, require a corresponding variety of organs. Nutrition, locomotion, respiration, perspiration, manipulation, thought, feeling, speech, the five senses, etc., require stomach, feet, lungs, skin, hands, brain, and tongue. Then, again, subsidiary to these there are nerves, muscles, bones, etc. Some of these members are of such importance in the animal economy that life itself is dependent on the proper discharge of their functions. And they are all indispensible to the healthy action of the being, and to the enjoyment of that life to which they minister. And we all know how much pain and discomfort are often caused by a very slight disorder of some very insignificant member—in toothache, for example, or even in a small corn on the foot. Such ailments will even impair the appetite for food, and spoil the relish for every enjoyment, and thus tend to destroy the integrity of the body as a whole. Thus "the eye cannot say to the head, I have no need of thee; nor, again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more, those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary." The Psalmist says: "I am fearfully and wonderfully made;" the wonderfulness is very manifest in the dependence of the whole upon each several part of the body.

"INCREASE OF THE BODY."

In his letter to the Ephesians, the apostle uses the illustration of a body to teach the service which every member of the body of Christ renders to the "increase of the body." He says:

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the body, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: for whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body into the edifying of itself in love." Eph. iv. 11-16

The increase here spoken of is growth from infancy to manhood. This is indicated by several expressions. In verse 13: "Till we all come....unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the fulness of the stature of Christ." In verse 16: "That we be no more children....but may grow up into (or unto) him in all things, even Christ." In verse 16. "The whole body....maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love." There may be some doubt as to whether mere numerical increase is intended in this passage. The sixteenth verse looks very much in this direction—"the whole body maketh increase of itself." But there can be no doubt that individual growth is intended by the apostle—growth in character; assimilation to the image of the Son of God; adding to faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, and charity, growing in grace (or favor), and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. When this is realized in a measure in every individual, the whole body "maketh increase of itself," if not in numbers, at least as to character.

GROWTH IN MORAL EXCELLENCE.

The improvement in character would be of little account if moral excellence were left out of view. The apostle says, "Maketh increase of the body to the edifying of itself in love,"—and again—"But speaking the truth in love may grow up into (or towards) him in all things, who is the head even Christ." He hath left us an example that we should follow in his steps. He is the standard of that perfection, the attainment of which should be the aim of every true disciple, not in one thing, but "in all things." And love is the mainspring of all the virtues. It is the first in the list of the fruits of the Spirit. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, etc." It surpasses even faith and hope, and without it eloquence, knowledge (even of mysteries), and even zeal for the good of others to self-sacrifice in person and goods, are but as nothing." If any man hath not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. His faith, knowledge, and baptism are of no avail, for unless his "faith works by love," and his knowledge is subordinate to both, he cannot have the justification which Abraham had; for the apostle says—"faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect." "Knowledge puffeth up, but charity (or love) edifieth." The one is like the air in a child's toy balloon, which the slightest puncture reduces to a wreck; while the other builds up a solid edifice, built on a rock, against which not even the floods and winds shall prevail. "A little knowledge is a dangerous thing," when uncombined with moral excellence to use it aright, and keep it from ministering to the vanity of its possessor. He that knows most, is most sensible of his ignorance, as even a Sir Isaac Newton could well illustrate. "If any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know."—J. Cameron, in Christian Lamp.

† To be continued.

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born (begotten) of the flesh, is flesh; and that which is born (begotten) of the spirit, is Spirit.—John iii. 3, 6.

Since the same word in the Greek is translated both born and begotten, its proper meaning in any place must be determined by its application. We cannot conceive of a birth without the agency of two parties, and also two acts the father (the begetter); the mother (who brings forth). In nature we cannot say the child is born of his father, nor begotten of his mother. Hence it is always incorrect to say a child is born of his father.

The phrase "born of God," is not a proper translation into our language; it should be "begotten of God." It is very clear that Nicodemus understood there must be two acts, from the question he put to the Savior. No father, no birth; no mother, no birth; therefore we say with propriety, the child was born of certain parents, when we wish to tell his full parentage. We object to the rendering "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit." for the idea is "like begets like," therefore begotten and not born, should be used.

Birth by no means produces any radical change in the thing born, it only develops what already exists or changes its state, has never ceases to exist. The flesh does not exist until it is begotten, and the new spirit does not exist until it is begotten. If the birth produced we might say with some mockers, who wish to ridicule baptism, That which is born of water, is water. Since the Spirit generates or begets the new relationship by sowing the good seed or gospel of the kingdom in the heart, thus preparing the begotten to be born of water, or to obey from the heart the form of doctrine delivered, we may say the man is born of water and the Spirit. So is every one that is born of the Spirit, should read begotten of the Spirit. To be born of water is to come forth out of it, and to be born from the dead is to come out of the grave. But there is no coming forth out of the Spirit. Coming forth out of the grave alone does not or will not constitute any one the son of God, for no man can be born to a relationship to which he has not been begotten.

In Luke xx. 36, we read "Are the children of God, being (by being) the children of the resurrection." But it must be borne in mind that Jesus was speaking of the resurrection of those who should be counted worty to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead, like Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, who before they died were the children of God, and were only restored to a relationship previously existing. There can be no birth without the birth act. Hence no man can be born again until he be born of the water. The new birth act of water develops our renewed spirit, shows our son spirit, since we obey as he did, and characteristically put him on by being buried with him in baptism, Gal. iii. 26, 27, changing our relationship from darkness to light.

The birth from the grave fully develops the "incorruptible inheritance," to which we are begotten, and makes the adopted son shine forth as the real and only begotten Son of God in his heavenly image and glory.

We are now born again of water and the Spirit, and are now the sons of God. We cannot agree with some that we are not yet born again or anew, and that the Savior meant when he said except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God, he must be raised from the dead, in order to be born of the Spirit, for we are now begotten of the Spirit, and born of the water; born again, made heirs of the kingdom, and should the blessed Lord come today, would be permitted to enter in, without being killed and raised from the dead; and the Jews, God's ancient people, "beloved for the Father's sake" will not have to die and be raised again, but will be begotten by the Spirit and born of the water, and enter in, and also many of the nations will be permitted to enter into the kingdom without seeing death.

If any be inclined to use the phrase "born of the Spirit," instead of begotten of the Spirit, and contend that we must be raised from the dead to be born again, we hope they will not fail to tell us what is to be done with all the living saints when the Lord comes that will not be born again, and therefore cannot enter the kingdom. We are not prepared to receive a doctrine that teaches we are not "now" the sons of God," and will never be unless we die.

The apostle Paul said to his Galatian brethren, 'Because you are sons God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.' Gal. iv. 6.

The idea that we shall be like the wind when we are begotten of the Spirit, we do not think much of, especially when it is made to mean, we can go anywhere and through anything, as some say Christ did after he rose from the dead. He had flesh and bones and we are not able to see how they could pass through solid matter. The new man in mind or spirit might be invisible like the wind, and only known to be present by voice and deeds, but how unlike the wind in many particulars—cannot go where the wind can, and can go where the wind cannot. Better give us spirit in the translation, as many do, instead of wind.

J. J. WARNER.

Selections.

DISMEMBERMENT OF THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

A peaceful interest—Russian attack upon Syria in British competition—Defeat of the British forces and seizure of South Palestine and Egypt—Christ's arrival on the scene—Total overthrow of the invaders, and the destruction of the British fleet—The object of their mighty cruise and their speed.

The break up of the Turkish empire, as before stated, will compel England to secure her footing in Asiatic Turkey, for the protection of India; and all things seem to be working together to lead her to favor the Jewish re-settlement of Palestine, with a view to that end Turkey overthrown and dismembered, then will probably ensue a brief respite in the march of events, during which this work of re-settlement goes forward. This peaceful interval is closed by a renewal of the jealousies belonging inherently to the incompatible interests of Russia and England. The fermentation ends in war. Russia and the many people with her come "like a storm" upon Syria, hoping to replenish an exhausted exchequer by the riches of a thriving Jewish colony, and at the same time, intent upon advancing on British communications with India, with a view to the overthrow of the British supremacy which is such an offence to the ambitions of military Europe. The invasion is successful. Syria is occupied and Egypt overrun; Jerusalem taken after a siege, and the remnant of the broken forces of Britain brought to bay in Edom and Moab, the south-eastern corner of the Holy Land.

Russia and her confederates are on the point of achieving the dominion of the world, when a power appears on the scene, alike unexpected by Russia and England. Christ arrives on the scene, invisibly to the enemies' forces. The crash of heaven's artillery startles the assembled nations of the world: panic throws them into confusion; the rage of the elements decimates the struggling thousands. Fire from heaven, the hot thunderbolt, bituminous burning rain, make short work of the multitudinous and embattled foe, and drive a miserable remnant, amounting to a sixth, out of the country, pursued by a handful of Jewish soldiers, acting under the order of a new and unknown leadership. These facts are stated in the following prophetic testimonies:

"And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, said the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face. For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel: so that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the air, and the beasts of the field, and the creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down and the steep places shall fall; and every wall shall fall to the ground. And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God; every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain and great hailstones, fire and brimstone." Ezek. xxxviii. 18-22.

"And I will turn thee back and will leave but the sixth part of thee, and will cause thee to come out of the north parts, and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel. And I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand, and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand. Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou and all thy bands and the people that is with thee; I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field to be devoured. Thou shalt fall upon the open fields, for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God." Ezek. xxxix. 2-5.

"Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations as he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand on that day on the Mount of Olives which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof, toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north and half toward the south. And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal; yea, ye shall flee like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah; and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee .... And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord shall smite the people that have fought against Jerusalem. Their flesh shall consume away whilst they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth. And it shall come to pass in that day that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them; and they shall lay hold everyone on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor." Zech. xiv. 3-5; 12, 13.

"Let the nations be awakened and come up the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. Put ye in the sickle: for the harvest is ripe; come, get you down, for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision; for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. The sun and moon shall be darkened and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord shall roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord shall be the hope of his people and the strength of the children of Israel." Joel iii. 12-16.

"Come near, all ye nations to hear, and hearken, ye people; let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies; he hath utterly destroyed them; he hath delivered them to the slaughter. Their slain also shall be cast out and their stink shall come up out of their carcasses, and the mountains shall melt with their blood .... For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion." Isa. xxxiv. 1-3, 8.

"And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the Great God: that ye may eat the flesh of kings and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses and them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the white horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh." Rev. xix. 17-21.

The object of the cataclysm is similar to that of the plagues of Egypt. The object of these is thus stated: "That thou mightest know that the Lord he is God; there is none else beside him." Deut. iv. 35. The object of the Armageddon overthrow is thus defined: "I will bring thee, O Gog, against my land, that the heathen (goyim, nations) may know me when I shall be sanctified in thee before their eyes .... Thus will I magnify myself and sanctify myself, and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am Jehovah." Ezek. xxxviii. 16, 23. "All the nations shall see the judgment that I have executed and the hand that I have laid upon them." Ezek. xxxix. 21. It is a long time since God made the visible interposition which wrote his name in the nation of Israel. In the lapse of time, the impression has almost faded, and it is to be renewed with terrible deeds of judgment; as he saith by Isaiah: "For a long time I have holden my peace; I have been still and refrained myself. Now will I cry like a travailing woman. I will destroy and devour at once." Isa. xlii. 14.

Will British power escape the blow that is intended to level all human pride in the dust? Not so. "The day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty and upon every one that is lifted up, and he shall be brought low.... and upon all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant pictures. And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day." Isa. ii. 12, 17. This specific allusion to the ships of Tarshish—the navy of Great Britain, which is the pride and power of the country—would indicate that it shares in the disaster that shatters the northern league. The form of the disaster seems to be hinted at in another prophecy, which is couched in the language of accomplished fact—a common peculiarity in Bible prophecy.

"Lo, the kings were assembled; they passed by together. They saw so they marvelled; they were troubled, so they hasted away. Fear took hold upon them there and pain as of a woman in travail. Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind." Psa. xlviii. 4-7. From this it would appear that the outburst of elemental power that scatters the hosts of Gog, extends also to the neighboring Mediterranean, and involves the British fleet in the common destruction.

This is but the commencement of "the great day of the Lord." What follows? The subsequent re-establishment of the kingdom of Israel in the hands of the long-rejected but newly-arrived King of the Jews, who retains in his hands the marks of crucifixion, which he exhibits to the Jews in proof of his identity, with the result of inducing a great and national mourning for their past crimes (Zech. xii. 10-14); and Christ's subsequent call to the governments of the world to surrender to him, which will engage our attention in an another chapter.—H. Roberts.

THE RIVER NILE.

"Without the water of the river Nile, there would not be a green spot in Lower Egypt." Such is the declaration of Mr. John Fowler, who was for seven years, the Consulting Engineer of the Egyptian Government. In an average year, the river Nile conveys no less than one hundred thousand millions of tons of water, and sixty-five millions of tons of silica, alumina, lime, and other fertilizing solids down to the Mediterranean Sea. The Nile begins to rise about the middle of June, at which time the discharge averages about 350 tons of water per second, and attains in September, a height of from nineteen to twenty-eight feet, and a discharge of from 7,000 to 10,000 tons per second. Napoleon the Great said that every drop of Nile water should be thrown on the land. The cultivated lands in Lower Egypt have an area of three millions of acres, and to irrigate this effectually, at least thirty millions of tons of water per day would be required. At present the irrigation canals are totally inadequate to convey this quantity; and consequent loss of crops is the result. In many instances, a couple of men labor for a hundred days in watering, by shadoof, a single acre of ground; and all this labor could be dispensed with, if the barrage of the Nile were completed, and a few other works carried out, the whole of which would be paid for handsomely by a water-rate of two shillings an acre. Except for the work of man, Lower Egypt, for four months in the year, would be simply the bed of a river; and for the remaining months, a mudbank. Should the works be neglected, successive floods would quickly destroy the embankments, and the whole surface of the country would again be leveled.—National Baptist.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

There will be a conference meeting of the brethren of the one faith at the Union Star school house, Cloud Co., Kansas, commencing October 18, and continuing over Sunday. The Union Star school house is eleven miles southwest of Concordia, and twelve miles north of Delphos, on Wolf Creek. Those coming by rail will please drop a card to A. Kasinger, Graves post office. SAMUEL NOE.

The Lord willing the Church of God will meet in conference at Severance, Kan., Oct. 21, and continue to Oct. 30. G. M. Myers, T. E. Adams, and J. F. Pierson are expected, and we extend a cordial invitation to preaching brethren to be with us, and all others of like faith. Come one and all, let us have one more feast of fat things in the name of the Lord, and encourage each other. Severance is 25 miles west of St. Joseph, Mo., on the Union Pacific R. R. and passenger trains reach here at 11 o'clock A. M.

LOTT CLOVEN.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Age to come not a heresy," "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. O. C. Woodruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Triformia," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now exciting such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 800 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

PROSPECTUS.

Without unnecessary delay, after three hundred copies shall have been subscribed for, I hope that, by the blessing of the Lord, I shall be able to publish a handsome cloth-bound book of about three hundred and twelve pages, to be entitled, "Timely Topics, or Discourses on Subjects of World-wide Importance: by Miles Jones." Price $1.00 per copy. Send order now, but don't send the money until you receive the book. Will all ten brethren and sisters please to be good as to send, by their subscriptions, in bringing this work before the public? Fifty copies have already been subscribed for, and one brother alone having ordered ten copies. Send orders to Miles Jones, Oak Oake, Lancaster County, Pa.

THE AGE TO COME

—EXCLUSIVE SIGN OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—BY A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a Cloth Bound book of 144 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee to the merits of the work. Price only 50 cts. each. Send to this office for them.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Sinaitic, the New and the Davidian covenants; their relation and relationship to each other. By C. O. Myers. 320 page, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth Set Free; or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Silas Bean. 80 pages, price 20cts.

Sunlight Dispersing the Monet Shadows; or the false doctrine of eternal torture shown to lack reason and Scripture. By Silas Bean. 70 pages, price 20cts.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Silas Bean. 48 pages, price 15cts.

Material Immortality; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact defense and Bible view of material immortality, not by birth but by grace. By O. B. L. Crozier. 16 pages, price 5cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, what is he? By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 2, but pamphlet form.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By O. B. Myers. Price 25cts.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published prices. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE READY. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 2,000 Baptists, in 1866. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 60c., or assorted packages of 100, 25c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c.; 100 for 60c.
Can You Believe? A series of 30 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in our list.
The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.
The Age to Come not a Heresy. By H. V. Reed.
Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, to-wit the Theological and Bible use.
Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Macgruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or $1 for 60c.
Is it Rational to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? H. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Boner, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or 12 for 20c.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each; 12 for 20c, or 25 for $1.
The New Birth. Josiah Peirce.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Beiss, D.D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each; 8 for 10c, or 20 for $1.
Das Evangelium der Reiche in Deitze. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.
Witchcraft Unveiled, or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 16 for $1.
The Restitution of the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. K. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 10c.
A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. Price 15 cents, or 75 cts. per dozen.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of York. Exactly the book for the times. 250 pages, cloth $1.00.
The Destiny of Nations, as foretold by God's Holy Prophets, together with an outline of the future personality and destiny of England, Germany, Russia, Assyria and the Jews. Containing a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of infinite present interest. 350 pages, cloth $1.50; paper $1.00.
God's Plan of Salvation. C. M. Wakefield. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Only brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate, because of its clear, concise, Bible statement of truth, and the obedience of faith, set forth so clearly and forcibly. Over 60 pages, cloth $1.
Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Dilworth. Price 10 cents.
Hymns of the Advent, is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by Charles C. Burleigh, Mr. Burleigh compiled the book the "Hymns of the Heavenly Land" and it bears every mark of merit. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns," whose music is in a household way. Those having the "Christian Psalmist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth $1.
The Celestial Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and tunes adapted to public and family worship, compiled by C. M. Myers and John Arbogast. $1.00; cloth $1.50.
The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson, Canada. The Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation; based on the readings of eighteen critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.
The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament by the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated can be arranged in the common version so as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.
No. 1 improved edition on larger paper, 864 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED WEEKLY AT
The Christian Publishing Association;

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. E. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. R. HARSHELL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER. W. HAILSBACK.
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. TAYLOR. B. WILSON.
J. P. WESTBEE. J. A. SIMONDS.
WILEY JONES. G. M. MYERS.
A. D. MARTINDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCTOBER 18, 1882. NO. 39.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION Advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations, the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE--ITS PROXIMITY. No. 12d.

City is Papal Rome. Was Christ Crucified in Papal Rome? Scriptural View. The Word "Crucified," How it Must be Interpreted. The Term Fully Investigated. Closing Remarks on "The Great City."

J. P. WESTBEE.

Whoever designs to master the contents of Daniel's visions with John's Apocalyptic Supplement, must submit to the labor of taking lessons in the Scripture symbols. Without a thorough understanding of the Divine laws of symbolization his expositions will be often contradictory and worthless. We say Divine, because God (somewhere in his book) explains his own symbols. With man, knowledge is not inborn. It is the result of intense application. This is admitted to be true of natural science. Why not, then, act as if it were the law of Divine science? Christ said, "Search the Scriptures." John is told, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear, and keep." Many desire to be able to read, intelligently, the book of Revelations, but are not willing to devote the time to acquire the necessary knowledge. Those that decline the labor, will be denied the blessing.

Let all the pupils of the Apocalypse draw out a list of its principal symbols; and, with the aid of a good Concordance (such as Young), trace each symbol through the Bible, noting its Divine uses; where literal, and where figurative. By this course, though laborious, a correct knowledge of the symbols will be the result.

Let them select out of the list such terms as these: "Lamp-Stand," "Star," "Mountain," "Waters," "City," "Olive Tree," "Woman" (sun-clad, and harlot), "Beast," "Heads," "Horns," "Image." Let them investigate all the Bible says about each term, and note such information in a book, and then study the meaning. This is all the inspired knowledge we now obtain, and the way by which it is acquired. We are required to pray that our understandings may be opened that we may understand what we read; but we must read.

"The city the great," (η πολις η μεγαλη) We have identified it with Papal Rome, by many proofs: one especially, by the division into ten parts, or wards. The Roman hierarchy extended over, and ruled the ten kingdoms. That hierarchy being the church (officially) and the church being the city, the city ruled over these kingdoms. When the church hierarchy in one of these ten kingdoms fell, the tenth part of the city was overthrown, in its organization and in its citizenship.

We shall now consider the question, Was Christ crucified in Papal Rome? The literal expression is, "And (also) where their Lord was crucified." In the literal crucifixion Christ's blood was shed. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission," (Heb. ix. 22); but may there not be a crucifixion of our Lord without bloodshed? One, in which its chief element is murder? Such a crucifixion would be figurative. The intent contains the essence of the act and is punishable. The intent to kill makes the crime. What is done to Christ's disciples is said to be done to him. Matt. xviii. 6, 8; x. 42; xxv. 34-40.

The term crucified, when applied to Christ, has two meanings, (1) literal, in which his blood was shed for the remission of sins; (2) figurative, where the act is simply cruelty, or murder, done to his followers, or him in a figurative sense. We have examples of its figurative meaning in the following:

"I (Paul) am crucified with Christ." Gal. ii. 20. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh." Gal. v. 24. "By whom the world is crucified to me, and I to the world." Gal. vi. 14. "Of how much sorer punishment (think ye) shall he be (counted) worthy, who hath trampled under foot the Son of God, (and reckoned) the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unclean thing." Heb. x. 29. The one that demands special notice is the following: "And yet have fallen away, crucifying a second time, in their own mind, and making a public example of the Son of God."—Macknight, on Heb. vi. 6. Was there any stoning blood shed in this crucifixion of an apostate? Nor is there necessarily any blood in the crucifixion by the apostasy. There was certainly no atoning blood.

But, as we have already shown (Matt. xxv. 34-40), the acts done to Christ's children, Christ's witnesses, are done to him. The papacy was, for more than twelve centuries, the crucifier of the Son of God; for, "In her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth." Rev. xviii. 24. "And I saw the woman (the great city—Papal Rome) drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs (witnesses) of Jesus." Rev. xvii. 6. "For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink." Rev. xvi. 6.

From these passages, the sense to be applied to it in Rev. xi, 8, would seem to be readily understood; especially, when it is there coupled with spiritual (figurative) Sodom, and figurative Egypt. The terms, Sodom, Egypt, and Crucified, are to be interpreted alike; the first two are figurative; Crucified is figurative also. If we place Jerusalem after Egypt, the idea does not seem to be changed; for it would simply give a third figurative name to the great city. It would then read as follows:—the great city is called, spiritually (figuratively), Sodom, Egypt, and Jerusalem; Sodom, since it is like it in its pollutions; Egypt, because it is like it in its idolatry and bondage; Jerusalem, because it is like it in its treatment of the Son of God. The city is not literally Sodom, nor Egypt nor Jerusalem, but resembles them so distinctly, that, by a metaphor it takes their names.

The solution relative to the name of the great city, in whose street were to lie the dead bodies of the witnesses, is now complete. It is called the harlot woman on the scarlet wild beast; Babylon the great, Image to the wild beast; the city, the great, (η πολις η μεγαλη) which reigneth over the kings of the earth; Rome Papal—a literal city—great corporate body, the seat of the pope, the universal bishop; a city of ten wards; one ward falling in the great earthquake. The problem of the name of the city being solved, we can progress in our exposition of Rev. xi.

Verse 9. "And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves."

Their exposure—three days and a half. They lie in state three and a half days. These days must be symbolic to suit the scale of the vision—the city, the witnesses and the nations. Three literal days in the midst of such noted symbols, would violate the laws of all correct interpretation. We apply God's own scale, a day for a year. This period gives all people, kindreds, tongues, and nations sufficient time to see their dead bodies, and to satiate their blood-thirsty desires; also to use their authority in protracting the cruel insult. These witnesses had more savage enemies than their Lord; for the Jews allowed Christ's body to enter a tomb; but these infidels had other ends to serve, as appears in the following:

Verse 10. "And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth."

Here we have the causes of their exposure. It was for the purpose of revenge. When alive, the witnesses were too powerful for them; they must insult their corpses; they rejoice over them; send gifts and make merry. This scene of rejoicing and merriment continues three years and a half. Three days and a half:—symbolic time—three years and a half. What eventful years!! Was there ever a period of superior interest? But one only: the three days from the cross to the Savior's resurrection. Have we sufficient data in these two verses to enable us to delineate, geographically, the character of this remarkable period? We will attempt it, even at the risk of a failure.

1. The exposure of the witnesses—They lie exposed, in mock state! not secreted as is the practice of private assassins; they are publicly exposed, indicating a popular act; cast out to the view of the masses. They were exposed by the ruling popular power; the war power. Their carcasses lie in the street; not in some lone dark alley of some small town or village; in the street, principal street, or thoroughfare, of a city; not a fifth-class city, but a city of the first magnitude; in a crowded street of a densely populated city; in the street of "the city the great (τ πολεως της μεγαλης)—not of a moral city, but one of blood: the "Mystic Babylon," a city like Sodom in its pollutions; like Egypt in its idols and Christian (God's people) slaves; and like Jerusalem, when Messiah suffered upon the cross; a city full of pollution, idolatry, slavery, and the blood of martyrs. To be exposed in the street of an honorable city would have been humiliation; but to be thus exposed in the street of a city like Sodom, like Egypt, like Jerusalem in the days of the crucifixion; in a city "The habitation of demons, and a prison of every unclean spirit, and a prison of every unclean and hateful bird." "In which was found the blood of prophets and saints, and of all that have been slain upon the earth," adds very greatly to their public humiliation. Even when their long exposure has become exceedingly offensive, their carcasses are not allowed to be removed. What deep humiliation!! But if such things were done in the "Green Tree" (Christ) what else could be expected in the "Dry?"

2. Its effects upon the people.—They did not allow their dead bodies to be put in graves, they wanted the whole world to be eye witnesses of these their victorious trophies. They desired all to have the testimony that they were truly dead. How were the multitudes affected by the sight of these carcasses? No tear dims the eye. Not a friend mourns publicly their cruel death. All the Peters disown them; and there is no "Joseph" to crave their dead bodies for burial. They lie to rot under the scoffs, the taunting, and the jeerings of their infidel murderers. How, then, were the multitudes affected? What emotions heaved their guilty bosoms as they beheld these lifeless prophets? "And they that dwell on the earth rejoice over them, and make merry." "Rejoice," and "make merry," over whom? Over men of their own blood, who had lived godly like their Divine Master; had suffered reproach for the doctrines which Jesus had commanded them to teach all nations; had devoted their lives to purity and holiness; had reproved the world of "sin, of righteousness, and of a judgment to come." For such lives, for such conduct, their blood has been shed and their bodies lie exposed in the street of the great city. They have fallen in battle (combat of truth) waged by a wild beast (an infidel government) from the abyss. As their enemy is a symbolic power, the whole scenery must be understood in the same manner. As the beast symbolizes a body of civil rulers, so the witnesses stand for a body of Christian teachers.

3. The people make these days like Christmas holidays, "They send gifts one to another." It is a time of general rejoicing. They had besought those prophets to depart from their coasts; not succeeding, they make war on them, and put them to death; and now they fill the streets of the city with their howlings of delight. Street of the city—the public part, the most exposed; a ward of the city, called street, because the medium of communication with all the other divisions of the city—France, occupying that position, is called street of the great city. "These two prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth." Fear hath torment; and, as the prophets excited a slavish fear, they tormented.

What power but that of the Deity can hold God's servants under the bondage of corruption, when their Master calls them into life? "And after three days and a half (three and a half years) the breath of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them that beheld them."

Their resurrection is here described, and must be understood as city, beast, war, death, and exposure. Such an event was calculated to strike with terror their enemies. "And great fear fell upon them which beheld them!" Their ascension soon follows—"And they heard a great voice from heaven, saying, Come up hither. And they went up into heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them."

The ascension of the witnesses is also to be interpreted figuratively, as have been the other terms. Their exaltation likewise. Christ uses similar language relative to Capernaum. Matt. xi. 23.

THE CHURCH--INCREASE IN UNDERSTANDING.

But knowledge has its value. The apostle evidently has this in his mind when he counsels the Ephesians—"That ye henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine." In another place he says—"Brethren, be not children in understanding; howbeit, in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men." And Peter—"Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, etc. . . . He that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off." There is an evident distinction between knowledge and understanding. Knowledge properly is acquired information. Understanding is rather the capacity of knowing. But both are valuable in conducing to stability in the midst of distracting influences, such as what the apostle terms "every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Much of this may have been experienced from the unbelieving contempories of the Ephesians, such as the heathen philosophers of Greece and Rome. But even in the church there was danger from "winds of doctrine," as may be seen from the letters of Peter, John and Jude, as well as those of Paul. The strongest safeguard against all such is the cultivation of the power of discrimination, and the attainment of true knowledge on all subjects, especially those treated of in the Scriptures. A more general culture in these respects would tend to modify the influence of such as take the lead (properly enough) in the church; for now, as of old, "it is the leaders cause to err" intellectually as well as morally. I say "true knowledge," for we must not forget that nothing of the nature of conjecture and opinion can be regarded as knowledge. It lacks the element of certainty, which alone can raise it to the rank of knowledge. If this were borne in mind we should all show a larger measure of modesty in our utterances one to another, regarding our progress in knowledge, and should "be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine."

"THE WHOLE BODY MAKETH INCREASE."

The increase of the body of Christ, both morally and intellectually, is, in a greater or less degree, contributed to by every member. "The whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." In the animal body, which is the figure here employed, this mutual contribution to the growth of the body is well known. By means of the stomach and other digestive organs, the food is assimilated to the substance of the various parts of the body. The nutritive portion of the food is carried into the blood, and by means of the blood-vessels is carried to every tissue, for the purpose of repairing the waste which is constantly going on. But the blood would be quite unfit for this purpose if it depended for its renewal upon the food alone. By means of the lungs, a particular ingredient of the inhaled breath is received by the blood, which gives it an additional quality required for nourishment. The figure employed is an animal body, growing up from infancy to manhood; but not only are the digestive and respiratory organs necessary to the growth, but the healthy action or exercise of all the parts of the body, is indispensable to the proper development of the entire being. So also is the church. The perfecting or fitting of the saints for the work of the ministry is for the edifying of the body of Christ." And this, "till we all come (in fact to) the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God) into a perfect man, into the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." "The fitting of the saints for the work of the ministry" was for this grand end. The saints embrace the aggregate of the disciples, male and female, each and all of whom have something to do. "The work of the ministry" has been too long monopolized by public speakers. Ministry, however, is simply service, and that of any kind, whether that of the great apostle of the Gentiles, or of "Phebe, our sister, who is a servant of the church at Cenchrea." Every disciple whom Christ has received, male or female, young or old, learned or ignorant, rich or poor, has a work to do. And whatever obstacles to the free working of the whole body of the disciples may be risen by sectarian divisions arising from creeds of human device, or by any other means, lacking the express authority of the Master, are just so many hinderances to the growth in holiness and intelligence of the church of the living God, the real source of all growth.

In the animal body the various organs by which nutrition is carried on, would be utterly powerless for that end, if there was not an adequate motive power to urge them on in their appointed tasks. This is found in the brain and nervous system. If a nerve leading from the brain to the stomach or lungs be severed, the functions of the organ cease at once, so also is Christ. The apostle Paul writes on this subject more like a modern physiologist of the nineteenth than an apostle of the first century. He says, "The head, even Christ; from whom the whole body . . . . maketh increase." And he had said before, (verse 8), "When he ascended upon high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men . . . . And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; for the fitting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." What the brain is to the body as a source of nervous influence, that Christ is to the church as a source of motive power. "The love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge, that if one died for all then were all dead; and that he died for all that they who live should not henceforth live unto (or for) themselves, but unto (or for) him who died for them and rose again." "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live: yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave himself for me." Not the past only, but the future, furnishes a strong motive. "Christ in you the hope of glory." "If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." "If ye do these things (add to faith virtue, etc.) ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." "Wherefore we receiving (not having received) a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear." Thus it is that from the head, even Christ, the whole body of the disciples grow up to a perfect man, to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

THE WHOLE BODY FITLY JOINED TOGETHER.

All the members of the animal body are more or less necessary to the integrity of the whole. "The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body which seem to be more feeble, are necessary." "None of us liveth to himself." "Iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." God's plan is "one body," "the whole body . . . . edifying itself in love." Man's plan is too often division; selecting on some principles of his own, a group of kindred spirits with whom to cultivate mutual improvement, and within whose circle to confine his religious sympathies. God has clearly prescribed the qualifications of those who shall compose his church. These are so simple that three thousand were added on one day at Jerusalem by the preaching of the apostles, into whose fellowship they were welcomed. This fellowship the apostle terms "fellowship in the gospel," the "unity of the spirit," the "communion of the Holy Spirit," etc., the spirit being the agency whereby the faith was demonstrated, and the fellowship established. But man is not content to work out God's plan. He is prone to say to his brother, "I have no need of thee." He soon devises a Shibboleth by which to describe a circle within which he and his chosen ones withdraw from all who cannot pronounce the sacred password. The pattern of this plan was set at an early period of the church's history. "Certain men who came down from Judea (to Antioch) taught the brethren, and said, "Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved." These are the "false brethren" who "would pervert the gospel of Christ," mentioned by Paul in writing to the Galatians (i. 7; ii. 4). Happily for this church those men were resisted, and their additions to the one faith repudiated by the apostles.

AN APOLOGY FOR SCHISM IN THE BODY.

But, say some, the body of Christ in the present age is fragmentary. It shall not be complete till Christ comes. We are, therefore, not to expect unity in this fragmentary dispensation. The premises are true in a sense, but not in a sense to warrant the conclusion that unity is not to be looked for and cultivated. The fact is that those who use such an argument as this are most zealous for unity in the little sphere they have chalked out for themselves: they will compass sea and land to promote this little measure of unity. But Paul said to the Corinthians, even when there were divisions among them of a certain kind though not to the extent of separation—"Ye are the body of Christ;" and they were expected to act towards each other as if their local brotherhood was the complete body of Christ. I have in my mind's eye a large city where at one time there were no fewer than seven different meetings of baptized believers of the gospel of the kingdom of God, many of whom refused to recognize the others as brethren in Christ; and have not even seen each other in the flesh. In a smaller, yet considerable town, there are about a dozen disciples, who have two separate meetings. And it is well known that there are few places free from the same spirit of division. Is this state of matters to go on till the Lord comes? Or shall a vigorous effort be made by all sections of the brotherhood to put an end to it. "'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished."

LESSONS TO BE LEARNT.

All the organs of the body co-operate towards a common end—the healthy action and integrity of its possessor. "Those which seem to be more feeble" are not to be hindered in their free action towards the desired end. Their seeming feebleness may be only apparent, and the body would lose by their want of action. This has a close parallel in the body of Christ. No member may say to another, "I have no need of thee," for the whole body has need of even the feeblest member. The free action of each member must not be interfered with, except by the equally free action of the others in working towards the common result. This suggests another lesson—freedom of inter-communication, which is indispensable to full co-operation. But both of these necessitate the hearty recognition of all who profess to have intelligently complied with the terms prescribed by Christ, as for example summarized in Acts viii. 12. "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptised, both men and women." This may require a re-examination of terms of fellowship on the part of many, but if such terms are honestly dissented from by some who make the above-named profession, and who have never been furnished with reasons for complying with such terms, is it too much to ask that such reasons be immediately adduced? Why should any true member of the body of Christ be excluded against his will from the fellowship of his brethren? Does not the whole brotherhood lose, both morally and intellectually, by the forced isolation of those who are thus excluded? True, there might be considerable need for forbearance, but is not this one of the best means of cultivating that character required in those who are "the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty?"—J. Cameron, in Christian Lamp, Edinburgh, Scotland.

Sententious.

A hundred years of wrong do not make an hour of right.

He that pelts every barking dog must pick up a great many stones.

The written gospel is a river of knowledge, but the Holy Spirit is its fountain head.

God's angels round us constantly
To guard us if we faint or fall,
But human love and sympathy
Are needful to us after all.

Christianity is love in action, having its center in Jesus and its field humanity.

If you would avoid sin, cleave to Jesus; and if this is not your desire, you have no business to profess Christ.

The heart is not satisfied,
Nor more than the world can give it pleases;
It has infinite wants and infinite needs;
And its every beat is an earnest cry
For love that can never change nor die.
—Phebe Cary.

The sweetest home upon earth, is where Christ has taken up his abode in the hearts of both parents and children.

The Scriptures are wonderful with respect to the matter which they contain, the manner in which they are written, and the effect which they produce.

True honor does not attach to position or place, but to character, and a man may possess a good character in a very humble position, or a bad character in an exalted place.

Persons who are trying to see how little they can do for God and what sacrifices they can avoid, and yet hope to be saved will in the final reckoning hear the denunciation, "One thing thou lackest."

TRUST IN GOD.

He who hath led, will lead
All through the wilderness;
He who hath fed, will feed;
He who hath blessed, will bless:
He who hath heard thy cry,
Will never close his ear;
He who hath marked thy faintest sigh,
Will not forget thy tear.
He loveth always; faileth never;
So rest on him today, forever.

It was amid the darkness of the night, at the brook Jabbok, that Jacob of old wrestled with the angel and prevailed. It is in the soul's dark, lonely, and most solitary seasons still that the church's moral and spiritual wrestlers are crowned with victory, and, like princes, have power with God. And always, through life, if they put their trust in God, will this power be given unto them, and aid them to the end of life's journey.

We cannot lecture men into the love of Christ; we can but win them to it by showing Christ's love to them; and not the least important element in that process is the exhibition of our own love. We have a gospel to speak, of which the very heart is, that the Son of God stooped to become one with the lowliest and most sinful; and how can that gospel be spoken with power, unless we, too, stoop like him.—Alex. Maclaren.

The outbreak of Cholera at Manila, the capital of Luzon Island, has resulted in a large number of deaths. The island is one of the Philippine group which lie east of Siam and south of China. The population numbers about six millions, of whom only 350 are Europeans and Americans. The deaths at the last report numbered three hundred a day, and the descriptions of the scenes in the city of Manila are of the ghastliest description. "Whole families are grouped together dead in houses or by the roadside, and bodies are taken away in cart-loads. Contrary to the rule in most tropical cities where cholera finds in defective drainage and the personal uncleanliness of the people a stimulus in its work, in the present instance no predisposing cause appears. The natives are represented as a very cleanly, observful race. Owing to the fertility and fruitfulness of the soil, little labor is necessary to gain a livelihood, and poverty and pauperism are comparatively unknown.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CRAPLO, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Oct. 18, 1882.

Stockholder's Meeting.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association will be held in Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 11, 1882, for the purpose of hearing the reports of the Officers, and electing a Board of Directors.

E. K. BARNHILL, Sec.

A LETTER from Jerusalem of very late date from the pen of MR. A. E. Davis, will be found in the present number of THE RESTITUTION. We have sent her today, Oct. 17, another installment of money, amounting to $15.—all we had on hand. Her letters so direct from Palestine, that our readers got them about a month after date, will add much to the interest of our paper. We also intend to copy what she writes for the Age-to-Come Herald. We are glad to learn that Rolla Floyd is so kind to her. He is a well-known dragoman—or interpreting conductor for traveling tourists in Syria. He writes occasionally for Messiah's Herald, from which we have copied one or two letters for THE RESTITUTION. May God bless Sister Davis, and sustain her in that distant land.

AN able article from Prof. Gardner, on aion and aionios, will appear next week. Also one from Brother Wilcox on a wonderful discovery of the tribe of Dan in Southern Arabia, as related by a Jew recently from that country. It is one of the most intensely interesting narratives that has come to hand. We are also trying to work in some deferred articles. In managing the paper no doubt we err many times, but we are trying to do according to the best of our ability. Advent papers, as they are termed, will teem with interest now if they only keep up with the times as the God of prophecy unfolds events. To sustain papers of this character requires money, and THE RESTITUTION is dependent on the prompt patronage and some additional aid from its friends. And we add—from year to year the Lord has helped, and blessed be his name.

THE following papers have been sent for notice:

The World's Hope. This a new monthly published at Almont, Mich., by J. H. Patop. The editor says:—"The name of our paper is suggestive of the broad view of the plan of salvation which will be maintained in its pages. Most emphatically, Christ is 'the Savior of the World.' Terms 50 cts. a year.

American Agriculturist. The October number with large supplement of this popular and well-known journal has been received. Its publishers say: "From this time forward the American Agriculturist is determined to avail itself of the best brain power in the country. The proprietors have but to point to its past record as a guarantee of our promises in the future." We commend this journal to our subscribers as well worthy of their patronage. Terms $1.50 a year. Address the Journal 751 Broadway, New York.

Wilford's Microcosm. This is announced as "A Religio-Scientific Monthly, devoted to the Discoveries, Theories, and Investigations of Modern Science, in their bearing on the Religious Thought of the Age; with other matters of general interest." As a scientific journal its claims to this distinction are quite well sustained by the number for October—the only one we have ever seen. The editor has become renowned for his book entitled "The Problem of Human Life." This is also a work we have not read as yet. The Microcosm's address is 23 Park Row, New York. Terms $1 a year.

News Items.

ENGLAND'S POLICY IN EGYPT.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—Mr. Leonard H. Courtney, M. P., Joint Secretary to the Treasury, in opening a Liberal club at Torpoint, denied that the Government arrogated to themselves the credit for the victories in Egypt. That country, he said, must eventually become independent of foreign control. The cost of the war should be defrayed by Egypt. No doubt bondholders would have to forego something. It would be necessary to consult the powers in regard to a resettlement. Mr. Courtney concluded by saying that the policy of the Government was to detach Egypt from the Sultan, to look after the Suez Canal, and to allow the Egyptians to stew in their own juice, and in so acting were the Khedive that his future position depended upon his management of affairs.

Viscountess Stringford established a hospital for the Egyptian wounded, and the Khedive gave her eighty beds from Arabi's house.

It has been decided by the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society of New York to notify the authorities in London, Paris, and Berlin not to ship any more refugees to this country.

The hay crop in Iceland has been nearly destroyed, rendering the wholesale slaughter of cattle unavoidable. Some fear is wanting in many districts. The population are unprepared to meet the winter.

THE RAVAGES OF DIPHTHERIA.

LYNCHBURG, Va., Oct. 12.—Reports from Pittsylvania county say that the ravages of diphtheria in certain localities are alarming, nearly 200 deaths having occurred within the last sixty days. Not a family has escaped the great scourge. Twenty pupils of one school district have died. Last Sunday three children were lying dead in one house.

PENSACOLA, Fla., Oct. 12.—An imperfect report gives 33 new cases of yellow-fever today and 6 deaths; total number of cases to date, 1,439; total deaths, 128. Among the deaths have been those of the Rev. Mr. Bubose, pastor of the Methodist church, and of young Hawkins, mentioned in yesterday's dispatch. Among the new cases are those of Dr. White, of the United States Marine Hospital Service, and Dr. Renshaw, who had already recovered from an attack of the fever. The illness of these two practicioners, with another already sick, causes a serious lack of medical attention to the sufferers and renders the report of new cases imperfect. The recent cases have been marked by aggravated malignancy.

DIPHTHERIA AND YELLOW-FEVER.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 12.—A dispatch from Chatham, Pittsylvania county, states that the ravages of diphtheria in that section are fearful, and becoming more alarming every day. There are hundreds of cases. It is estimated that the disease has caused the death of 200 persons in two months' time. Every family has lost from one to five children. One school has lost twenty pupils. Most of those who die have the black vomit, and some are covered with running sores. Some doctors think that scarlet fever and diphtheria are combined. The systems of those who have recovered are badly shattered.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 12.—Yellow fever has swept off 128 citizens of Pensacola. The report for today includes thirty-three new cases and six deaths. Dr. White, of the Marine Hospital Service, has been prostrated. Lieutenant Thomas Winne died at Fort Brown today, and a Mexican perished at Brownsville. Fifteen deaths occurred today at Mier, Mex., and the epidemic is still spreading among the ranches on that side of the Rio Grando.

MALIGNANT DIPHTHERIA.

CHATHAM, Va., October 14.—Diphtheria has been raging in a most malignant form in certain sections of Pittsylvania county for the last two months. Your reporter spent today in traveling through the affected district, seeing the doctors, and ascertaining the exact number of cases, the extent and the type of the disease in a radius of six miles. Six physicians report 380 cases, out of which sixty-eight died who were treated by them; and there were fifty-nine others who either died before the physician came, or were too far gone to receive treatment after his arrival. The disease appears in different forms. In some cases the patient is attacked with vomiting, emitting in the last stages a greenish or bluish fluid; in others high fevers, and others congestion of different parts.—New York Herald.

HOLY MEN WANTED.

A recent letter writer says we have too few firm and fearless Christians. He cites for example the work of a number of the prophets, and boldness of many of the apostles and evangelists in their work of promulgating the gospel. There is certainly a great need of uncompromising workers for Christ. There is a noticeable tendency to popularize religion, to conform it a little more to the tastes of the world—a kind of blurring the line of demarkation between Christianity, and worldliness. A kind of compromise with the world, so that it can assume the respectability of Christianity, without the whole-hearted sacrifice necessary to salvation. Oh! how true that more dedicated, honest and faithful laborers are needed. Men and women who will receive the Divine truth, and unflinchingly live every day and every hour, so as to fill our proper place in the church. There is a responsibility not only on the minister, but on the layman. Merely listening to the ministry, and paying "quarterage" does not relieve from the responsibilities of a holy life, and power for God. The wickedness that surrounds us and has crept into the church needs real, true, and unswerving Christians to rebuke it. Do you ask who shall live this holy life? we answer, "Thou art the man." It is personal salvation that is wanted. Let us not excuse ourselves by depending on our religious neighbors to carry on the work of the church. They can only do their own work. We must do ours, or it will be forever undone.—Morning Star.

Communications.

A VISIT TO BETHLEHEM.

JERUSALEM, Sept. 16, 1882.

Last week I was invited by my kind friends Mr. and Mrs. Floyd to join them in a morning drive to Bethlehem. We started at 9 a. m., our way leading from the Jaffa gate immediately above the lower pool of Gihon. Crossing the ravine of that name, we crossed a level piece of land leaving on our right the beautiful plain of Rephaim, where "the host of the Philistines encamped." 1 Chron. xi. 15. How vividly the sight of this plain brought to my mind the scenes of the past, I could trace the path of the messengers sent by David to bring water from the well "that he longed for," and many other scenes of which we read in the history of this wonderful land.

About forty minutes' ride from Jerusalem we passed the Greek convent of St. Elias, a small monestary and not of much note. Further on to the right we reach the tomb of Rachel in the identity of which all travelers agree, and it is in all probability the true place of her interment. We alighted and entered the tomb, as fortunately it was open to visitors on that day. The tomb in its present form was erected in 1841 by Sir Moses Montefiore, of London, I have made a hasty sketch of this tomb which I hope to transfer to canvas and mail to you. This to me is a spot of singular interest and I lingered after the rest had departed to pray for the resurrection of Rachel.

The traveler now comes in sight of Bethlehem. It is beautifully situated on the brow of a hill overlooking the plain where 1800 years ago the shepherds watched their flocks by night; and where the angel of the Lord appeared unto them with the joyful tidings that Christ was born in Bethlehem.

"Peace on earth, and mercy mild,
God and sinners reconciled."

And yonder is Bethlehem—David's town—where on that day was born of David's line, the Savior who is Christ the Lord. As we approach Bethlehem we pass vineyards and fig plantations with crowning terraces on either side. A special object of attraction was pointed out by Mr. Floyd as the plain where Ruth gleaned the field of Boaz. On our left we had a fine view of the Frank Mountain, said to be the tomb of Herod the Great.

We entered Bethlehem by its principal street at the end of which is the convent of the Nativity, it is called the Latin convent. This convent does not however belong exclusively to the Latins, it is shared by the Greeks and Armenians who have their chapels and cells in it. On entering through its wicket gate we found ourselves in a spacious and handsome hall supported by forty-four columns. These columns are said to have been removed from Solomon's temple to this spot. The Greek church is in the centre. We descended a spiral stair-case to the grotto of the Nativity. It is small and dimly lighted and filled with the odor of incense. Many costly lamps were suspended everywhere. Here we were furnished with small tapers by the light of which we perceived that this grotto was a succession of caves. In one of them we were shown a star inlaid in the floor, and this we were told was the place where the star alighted, on one side of it was an altar, over which hung costly lamps, this we were told was the spot where the manger lay, and where the infant Jesus first saw the light of day. I inquired for the manger and was told that Pope Sixtus V. had carried it to Rome. Another spot was shown where the wise men offered frankincense to the Virgin Mary. In an inner chamber is an altar said to have been the place where the innocents, after having been killed by order of Herod, had been thrown; a picture representing the scene is suspended over it. We pushed on into another chamber where we were told Joseph lodged while at the inn. Further in we were shown the graves of Eusebius and Jerome, and still further what is called the school of Jerome. I must confess that a sense of awe and a feeling of reverence possessed me as I crept from before one altar to another. I did not think so much of the reputed altar as of the fact of the Savior's birth, the King of glory born in a manger.

There has been much controversy respecting the claims of the spot to the nativity. The convent stands where I should suppose a village (on night ones have existed, viz., on one side of the village.

Adrain, to desecrate the spot, raised here a statue to Adonis, which the Empress Helena destroyed, and on its ruins erected a chapel. Eusebius and Jerome lived here believing that this was the true site of the Nativity. But this is Bethlehem, in this unpretending village the Savior of mankind was born. What a night that must have been when the glory of the Lord shone around, when the heavens rejoiced, and the angelic host gave utterance to the good tidings of great joy that this day was born in the city of David a Savior.

Our little party returned to the dining room of the convent where refreshments were served, after which we were invited to accompany our guide to the shops where we were shown many beautiful specimens of bracelets, beads, and relics manufactured by the inhabitants of the town, the sale of these goods forms the chief trade of the place. It requires a residence in Palestine to make the Bible a life-like book, and to invest it with an interest it could never otherwise have.

We were told that Bethlehem was well fortified against an attack, and that every family had in their possession at least one gun and six pounds of powder. Many of the Bethlehem women are very beautiful, the style of dress worn by them is not unbecoming to their caste of features, I think the dress worn by Ruth when she gleaned in the field below was similar to that now worn by the Bethlehem ladies.

Here allow me to say a few words about our kind friend and guide. Mr. Rolla Floyd is an American, who has resided in Joppa for sixteen years, has a thorough knowledge of all localities of Biblical intetest in Palestine and Syria, and of the customs and habits of the people. Speaks the Arabic language fluently. As a manager and conductor of Palestine and desert travel he has had much experience and greater success than any other man living. He has the respect of the Government officials, and is held in high esteem by all the natives, also by the Bedouin tribes. Mr. Floyd has at his command a large stock of tent equipments, horses, mules, and servants, he is therefore able to offer greater facilities for visitors to the Holy Land than any other party now in the business. Enclosed is one of his cards.

The past few weeks has been a season of great anxiety and trial for the people here. However the victory gained by the English in Egypt has brought relief for the present. We are now looking forward to the next act in the world's great drama.

It is believed here that France is watching for a favorable opportunity to invade Syria, and it is asked, What interest has France in Syria? Let Napoleon I. answer. This was his reason for besieging Acre, then the "Key of the East," on which "depended the fate of Constantinople and India." He said, "If we succeed in taking Acre I will raise and arm the whole of Syria .... I advance upon Damascus and Aleppo; I recruit my army, by marching into every country where discontent prevails; I announce to the people the abolition of slavery, and of the tyrannical government of the Pashas; I arrive at Constantinople with armed masses; I overturn the dominion of the Mussulman; I found in the East a new and mighty empire, which shall fix my position with posterity; and perhaps, I return to Paris by Adrianople, and Vienna, having annihilated the house of Austria." As it was then, so still is this country the key to the East, which all nations desire to possess.

I have been working at dressmaking during the past two months, I have been able to earn my food by this means, but as my profession is painting I hope to be able to make and sell my sketches to the travelers who may visit here this winter. God bless you for the sum sent through Mr. Cummings, this will secure my house rent for the next eight months, and make a home for those who may come. I have shared all the means I have with the poor refugee Jews, and it has been a real pleasure to me to be able to share with them, and had I millions it would go for the same purpose. Many poor souls have been sent back to Europe nearly distracted after reaching Jaffa, the scenes are described as something awful. These scenes cause us to cry out, "Oh that thou wouldst rend the heavens and come down."

Yours in hope of the kingdom.

A. E. DAVIS.

"MY USEFULNESS." No. 2.

Near the close of our former article, we could not help remarking that he who shuns to make known his discoveries in the field of inspiration from dread of having his influence impaired, is "mistaken," though his heart may be free from guile. Mistaken not as to the value of usefulness, nor the propriety of shielding it from harm, nor in his expectation that advancing new ideas, such as were then specified, may perchance be attended with unwelcome results; among these, in all probability, a modification of profitable service in the gospel, compared with what had hitherto been the rule. From let it be admitted that conversions, as under a preacher's ministry, will become less numerous; which to a godly man would be a very painful circumstance. Possibly that may not occur, but let us here assume it to be a probable consequence, inasmuch as we desire to present the case in hand under its most perplexing and gloomy aspect. From observation we have seen this consequence, with its attending depression, painfully realized; while on the other hand we have known a sudden and valorous manifestation of the truth bring about conversions in greater number than before, yielding much joy to the faithful servant of the Lord in his hallowed sphere of activity. But let us take the most discouraging and deplorable result as the one most likely to be discovered immediately following an avowal which brings some leading doctrine, hitherto approved, into disrepute, and excites opposition that mars or defeats most loving endeavors in beckoning men to safety and holiness.

Ought such a possible result to glue together the lips of one who is expected to witness for God and truth? We have liberty to answer only thus,—it should not. We judge it is duty to preach, or confess, the truth, irrespective of all consequences of the kind. As duty, the service is imperative; for consequences no man is responsible. The law, as we see it is, seek earnestly for truth, and then announce it, whoever may submit, whoever may forbear. To hide the light under a bushel, to conceal what is in mercy disclosed to our inquiries, is a step perilous beyond all conception. Making it known is the first act of usefulness, one not to be escaped on any plea. Good resulting from its announcement is in every case secondary usefulness, however vast in its magnitude and endurance. The absence of the secondary order of usefulness can never exempt from the first obligatory act, one of pure submission to the divine will. The value of that act is not, thank God, determined by the fruit it may bring forth. It is valuable, it is acceptable to the supreme mind, simply on account of its being duty done. To every intellect illumined as to high spiritual and saving knowledge, the voice from the throne in heaven says, "Ye are a light of the world;" and if the world shuts its eyes—rejects the blessed communication—the teacher has done his part, and may rest in peace.

"Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven: but whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." Awful words these; words that were intended to ring loud their warning in the most secret chamber of the human conscience. To confess Christ is to make him known exactly as the Spirit of God has fully exhibited him in the gospel record. One cannot—may we not use this strong language?—escape the final loss, involved in Christ's public disownment, by apologetically saying, "I announced him as the Son of God who died for men; as the mighty Friend who longs to welcome back the very chief of sinners." If the man we suppose to be gifted with a more perfect apprehension of the truth only does that, he is not confessing Christ as he himself regards him now, for instance, as literally the Life—the Immortalizer. To hide that, his sublimest prerogative, in an age when it is unknown or denied, is on the witness's part, and the real fact must be stated, to hide Christ from the perishing. He confesses not Christ as he is, and as he ought to be presented to those who are grievously in error concerning his glorious possessions and functions.

Then, once more, at this hour a fatal delusion is creeping in its darkness over the minds of multitudes regarding their prospects in that dear future towards which, with its unceasing progression, they are hastening, as the common style of theological discourse leads them to believe. Finding the hell of the creeds utterly incredible, and actually a slander on the infinite goodness that presides over the universe, they calculate that at some time in the invisible abodes all things will turn out blissful in their history. The long life hereafter will have a turning upward from anguish, should it be their portion on entering the dismal confines, to realms of perennial joy. As a result, they continue without the fear of God, and concern not their thoughts with the conditions of mercy, while the day of salvation lasts, so fully detailed in the gospel page. How great will be their mistake in the end! Is it not cruel to hide from these wanderers the solemn fact and unbending ordinance that "the wages of sin is death?"—that they are now held to be judging themselves unworthy of eternal life and so in effect piling up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath? By dem[on]strating these things, however the demonstration may be treated, is not one entrusted with the true divine warning, at least delivering his own soul? Can a servant of Christ cover over the threatening, or so act and speak that it will be misunderstood by the dying, and feel that he is blameless? Is the undeceiving of those who have been mistaught, not a new mode of usefulness that any man might be eager instantly to undertake?

On these and kindred questions of unspeakable moment, about which misunderstanding is far spread, who would affirm it is better to allow the ignorant to remain as they are? Concealing the truth, for any reason, will never lift the clouds of night from the public mind. If all would shun the task of expounding the sacred truth, when would the perversions of ages be forced to disappear? My timid brother, you have a part to perform, and the best moment for the testimony to be delivered to guilty men is not tomorrow, or next year, but just at the hour when precious insight has been granted to yourself; for who can tell what a day may bring forth to a frail being whose breath is in his nostrils? Bigots may frown, the disheartened run from their post, but

"Heed not their caucus halls,
Ask not the reason's or fails:
Grasp the sword
Of the Lord,
And—Forward!"

Forward! and, trusting in your infinite, invisible Friend, open up the treasures he commissions you, as one whom he called into his employment, to distribute, while still it is day-time with you; in other language utter your convictions at once with sympathetic tones yet with heroic heart, and God grant that it may be your privilege to "shake the world with passage of the truth."

W. C. MONCRIEFF.

(Concluded.)

Conference Report.

The church in Michigan met for Quarterly Conference according to appointment at Coats' Grove, Barry county, Friday evening, Sept. 29, 1882. President D. F. Spencer called the meeting to order, and appointed G. W. Coats, C. H. Richardson and W. McCredue, as committee of arrangements. Brother Hoyt delivered a discourse on the subject of the salvation of Christ. Text: Heb. ii. 3, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation." Salvation is deliverance from some calamity. Our salvation is great because it is to save us from a great evil, eternal death, and because it cost a great price, the blood of Christ. It will be obtained at the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the just, and not at conversion, or death.

Saturday, Sept. 30. Met at 8 o'clock a. m. for social meeting, which Brother Hoyt opened with prayer. About one hour and a half was spent in interesting social meeting. At 10:30 Brother Chase spoke from James i. 25, "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." The sermon took the form of an exhortation and we trust that all who heard it were benefited.

At noon, Brother Hoyt spoke, in continuation of his discourse of the previous evening. To neglect the salvation of Christ is to neglect the conditions of that salvation. The speaker showed from the Word what those conditions were.

In the evening Brother Chase gave an interesting discourse from Rev. xxii. 12, "And behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

Sunday, Oct. 1. At 9:30 a. m. Brother Hoyt offered prayer, after which Brother Chase spoke of the promises made to the fathers. Text: Acts xxvi. 6, "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers." The speaker showed conclusively that the promise referred to in the same that was made to Abraham and confirmed unto Isaac and Jacob: that it has not been fulfilled, and that if we are Christ's then we are of the seed of Abraham and heirs according to the promise.

After a short intermission, Brother McCredue read the last chapter of Galatians, and gave a brief exhortation. About one hour was spent in social meeting, nearly all the brethren and sisters taking part, either reading a selection from the Scripture or giving a word of exhortation or encouragement.

Brother Hoyt spoke, after the social meeting, from Mark x. 6, "What therefore God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." The speaker did not apply these words especially to the matter of divorce, but to other things which God had joined together. Among other things mentioned as being joined together were the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of the just, and the reward of the righteous.

In the evening, Brother Chase presented to us the commission of the apostles. Mark xvi. 15, 16, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." The gospel they were commanded to preach was the good tidings concerning the kingdom of God. The kingdom of God is to be located on the earth, and will be the throne of David restored. Christ is the heir to that throne or kingdom. The kingdom of David is to be restored that "the residue of men might seek after the Lord." Acts xv. 16, 17. The conditions of the gospel are belief, repentance, and baptism.

The Conference closed by partaking of the Lord's supper. The preaching brethren present were E. Hoyt and L. C. Chase. It was decided to hold the next Quarterly Conference at Hesperia, Oceana county. The attendance was not as large as hoped for, but perfect harmony prevailed, and all who were present felt that they had enjoyed a profitable meeting.

HERBERT MILLER, Sec'y.

It takes two to make a quarrel, and two to keep it going; it only needs one to end it.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

As per arrangement the Northern Indiana Conference of the Church of God will (D. V.) be held at Plymouth, Marshall county, commencing Friday, Nov. 10, 1882, and hold over the following Sunday. The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association will be held at this time. Brethren, this Conference meeting does not belong entirely to the friends at Plymouth—it is your own. Let all make an effort, make a sacrifice if need be, to attend, and a good meeting is assured.

By order of the Conference,

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

If the Lord wills, the Churches of God in Montague and Wise Counties, Texas, will convene in annual Conference at Stony Point school house, in Montague Co., commencing on Friday before the fourth Sunday in October, 1882, and continuing three days. The special object of the Conference will be the examination of all questions of difference, whether personal or doctrinal, within the church; and the promoting of fraternal fellowship and harmony. To this end, every brother and sister within reach is requested to be present. Also a cordial invitation is extended to all others. Stony Point is thirty miles west of Gainsville, ten miles south-east of Montague, ten miles south-west of Saint Joe, five miles north-west of Forestburg, on the Montague and Forestburg road. The day appointed is the 20th of October, two o'clock p. m.

CHALKS RUDOLPH.

The Lord willing the Church of God will meet in conference at Severance, Kan., Oct. 21, and continue to Oct. 30. G. M. Myers, T. E. Adams, and J. F. Pierson are expected, and we extend a cordial invitation to preaching brethren to be with us, and all others of like faith. Come one and all, let us have one more feast of fat things in the name of the Lord, and encourage each other. Severance is 25 miles west of St. Joseph, Mo., on the Union Pacific R. R. and passenger trains reach here at 11 o'clock A. M.

LOTT CLOVER.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Trilemma," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now exciting such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press, 800 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

PROSPECTUS.

Without unnecessary delay, fifty thousand copies shall have been subscribed for. I hope that, by the blessing of the Lord, I shall be able to publish a handsome cloth-bound book of about three hundred and twelve pages, to be entitled, "Tidings, Tokens, or Discoveries on behalf of World-wide Importance" by "Riley Jones." Price $1.00 per copy. Send and get a copy but don't send the money until you receive the book. Will all the brethren and sisters please to be so good as to aid, by their subscriptions, in bringing this work before the public? Fifty copies have already been subscribed for, one brother alone having ordered ten copies. Send orders to Riley Jones, Otis Dale, Jeffersonburg County, Va.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—BY A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a Cloth Bound book of 124 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is sufficient guarantee to the worth of the work. Price only 50 cts. each. Send to the office for them.

Poetry.

LET US GO FORTH. Heb. xiii. 13.

HORATIUS BONAR.

Silent, like men in solemn haste,
Girded wayfarers of the waste,
We pass out at the world's wide gate,
Turning our back on all its state;
We pass along the narrow road
That leads to life, to Christ, to God.

We cannot, and we would not stay;
We dread the snares that throng the way,
We fling aside the weight and sin,
Resolved the victory to win;
We know the peril, but our eyes
Rest on the splendor of the prize.

No idling now, no wasteful sleep,
From Christian toil our limbs to keep:
No shrinking from the desperate fight,
No thought of yielding or of flight;
No love of present gain or ease;
No seeking man or self to please.

No sorrow for the loss of fame;
No dread of scorn [illegible] name;
No terror [illegible] harp or pen;
No wish that [illegible] return;
No hatred can our hatred move,
And gently but kindles love.

No sigh for [illegible] left behind,
Or pleasures scattered to the wind;
No looking back on Sodom's plains;
No hankering still to Babel's chains;
No tears for Egypt's song and smile;
No thirsting for its flowing Nile.

No vanity nor folly now;
No fading garland round our brow;
No moody musings in the grave;
No pang of disappointed love;
With the brave heart and steady eye,
We onward march to victory.

What, though with weariness oppressed—
'Tis but a little, and we rest.
This throbbing heart and burning brain
Will soon be calm and cool again.
Night is for space, and morn is near,—
Morn of the cloudless and the clear.

'Tis but a little, and we come
To our reward, our crown, our home;
A little space—yet more or less.
And we have crossed the wilderness,
Finished the toil, the rest begun,
The battle fought, the triumph won!

Selections.

THE ATTACK FROM THE NORTH.

What a wonderful thing is a thought! How little, and yet how powerful! It takes no time. It comes, no man can say from whence, and it goes, no man can tell you whither. But during those few moments of its presence it may prove sufficient to revolutionize a world. No one sees a thought, and our most intimate friends may be ignorant of its existence; but that little, quick, unseen thought is as naked and open before the eyes of him with whom we have to do as the movement of an army, or the roll of the ocean. We have a remarkable illustration of the acquaintance of our God with thoughts in this prophecy.

We have in the 38th chapter of Ezekiel the account of a thought—a thought not merely seen, but foreseen; a thought which, though it has not yet been thought, was foreseen and foretold 2,400 years ago. This prophecy was written nearly 600 years before the birth of our blessed Savior. It is addressed to a mighty prince, who will attack Jerusalem in the latter days, and it says to him: "Things shall come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought." These things have not yet come into his mind, but yet the thought was predicted in the days of Ezekiel. Verily God seeth not as we see, for we only see that which is close at hand; but he sees that which is within, as well as that which is outside, and to him time makes no difference, so that twenty-four centuries have no effect on his vision.

If you study this chapter, you will see clearly that the result of this evil thought will be an invasion of Palestine; and there will be three subjects deserving our careful study—the condition of the people when they are thus invaded; the great prince invading them; and the result of the invasion. May the Lord help us really to understand his word, and may he so prepare us by the power of that word, that whenever the Lord comes we may be able to meet him with joy, and not with grief.

1. The condition of the people at the time of the invasion.

I need not waste time by proving that the land is Palestine, and the people Israel. I have heard some people say that the passage refers to England, because ours is a land of unwalled villages; but such an idea is not worth a thought for any one who is content to abide by the plain language of the word of God. There cannot be a doubt that it refers to the mountains of Israel (verse 14). What, then, will be the condition of those mountains, and that of the people at the time predicted?

As for the mountains, they will have been recovered from their waste and desolate condition. In verse 8 the attack is said to be made on "the land brought back from the sword, gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste, but it is brought forth out of the nations." So in verse 12 the enemy is said to turn his hand "upon the desolate places that are now inhabited," making it perfectly clear that the invasion will be after the restoration, and after the recovery of the land now desolate through the misrule of the oppressor.

So with reference to the people, it is perfectly clear that they are Israel after their restoration. In verse 12 they are described as the people "gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land."

It is so clear that in their own land they will be living under a sense of security. They are described in verse 11 as being undisturbed by anxiety. The enemy will say, "I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates."

So also they will be prosperous. Security is essential to prosperity. The great reason for the present desolation of Palestine is that there is no such thing as security. Turkish misrule has destroyed all confidence, and the sense of distrust has blighted the land; but with the return of confidence there will be a return of prosperity, so they are described in verse 12 as having "gotten cattle and goods;" and the enemy is tempted to this invasion by the desire to carry away "silver and gold, to take a great spoil" (verse 13). But I do not see before the invasion any evidence either of their conversion, or of the reign of their most blessed Savior. I see no sign either of the everlasting covenant of peace, or of the rule of the Son of God. On the contrary, it appears from chapter xxxix. 7 that the display of his power in the overthrow of the invader will be the great outward means of the conversion of Israel, for there we read: "So will I make my holy name known in the midst of my people Israel; and I will not let them pollute my holy name any more; and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, the Holy One in Israel." So in verse 26 it appears that they will go on trespassing even after their restoration, for there we read of the "trespasses, whereby they have trespassed against me, when they dwelt safely in the land, and none made them afraid;" and it does not appear that till after this terrible crisis they will be really and finally converted to God. Thus you read, verse 22: "So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward," and, verse 29, "Neither will I hide my face any more from them; for I have poured out my spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God."

If this be the case there is something very melancholy in the lesson taught us, for it confirms the truth already stated that the heart of stone will be not softened even by the mercies of restoration, but will retain its hardness until, when it is finally crushed by a tremendous trial, the Lord appears for the deliverance of his people. Then it is that Israel will listen to the loving voice of mercy, and by the power of the Holy Ghost the broken heart will find the balm of Gilead in a simple look on the pierced One.

2. And now for the Invader, the mighty prince into whose mind the thought shall enter: Who is he? and where is he to be found?

One thing is perfectly clear, viz., that he will come with immense force. Several nations, such as Persia and Ethiopia, will be in alliance with him, and the invasion will be with overwhelming power, xxxvii. 9, "Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou and all thy bands, and many people with thee." And this force will consist to a great extent of cavalry, verse 15: "And thou shalt come from thy place out of the northern parts, thou and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army."

Another thing is perfectly clear, viz., that he will come from the north, verse 15: "And thou shalt come from thy place out of the northern parts, thou and many people with thee." The same is taught us, chapter xxxix. 2: "And I will turn thee back, and leave but the sixth part of thee, and will cause thee to come up from the north parts, and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel."

Now what are we to understand by the north? Of course we must take our standpoint from Jerusalem. We must not consider what is north of England, but what is north of Jerusalem. Now if you look at the map you will see that the chief power of Turkey lies north of Jerusalem. If there were to be a renewed Turkish invasion, it would come against Jerusalem from the north. So far, therefore, as the north is concerned, the prophecy might be fulfilled by an invasion by the Turks.

But there is one great peculiarity in this prophecy, viz., that the prince is described as being the head of three races, and that of those races the names are given. According to the rendering in the margin of our Bibles, he is said in verse 2 to be "the prince of the chief of Meshech and Tubal." Now I never like to suggest an alteration in our dear old English version, to which we are indebted for such infinite blessings; but it seems to be admitted by the best Hebrew scholars that the word in Hebrew here rendered "the chief," should not have been translated at all, but have been left as a proper name. The word is "Rosh," so that the sentence stands thus: "The prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal." I trust I may not speak rashly, or foist human theories on the prophetic word. But there is something very remarkable in the mention by name of these three northern tribes, for they all three still exist with the actual names here mentioned in the prophecy, and are at this present day united under the government of one prince. First, there is "Rosh," an ancient tribe to the north of the Taurus, from which the great empire of the north has derived its modern name of "Russia." The second is "Mesec," the home of those who in former times were called the Moschi, and are now called Muscovites, the people who have given its name to the city of Moscow. The two names Moscow and Meshech would be written in ancient Hebrew with exactly the same letters. And then there is Tubal, acknowledged by all who have investigated its history to be a northern or Scythian tribe, and now incorporated with the Russian and the Muscovite in the great Russian province of Tobolsk. I will not say more than that the coincidence of names is most extraordinary. It was a wonderful thing that Isaiah should predict Cyrus by name 150 years before he rose to power. But it is still more wonderful if it shall prove that 2,400 years ago Ezekiel was employed to predict by name the present power of the Russian empire; nay, more, should even predict a thought that should at some future day come into the mind of the Russian Emperor. Such a prophecy could never have come from any private interpretation or calculation, but the holy man of old must have spoken as he was moved by the Holy Ghost.

3. But we must hasten to the result.

The vast army will spread like a flood over the land. All hearts will tremble before it. No one apparently will resist except "Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof" (verse 13). They appear to challenge the invader, though there is no sign of their showing fight. They try the power of diplomacy, and say, "Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?" Now why do these merchants of Tarshish take so much interest in the safety of Israel? I think the reason is explained in Isa. lx. 9; for we read that the ships of Tarshish will have had the honor of being the first to convey the returning nation to Jerusalem, so that now they are very naturally standing by them after their return. But who are these merchants and young lions of Tarshish? and to whom belong these ships? I have no time to work out the subject, and can do no more than express the conviction that the ships of Tarshish are the ships of western Europe, trading outside the Straits of Gibraltar; and to add the fervent hope that the ships may prove to be the navy of England, and the young lions the bravest sons of her merchant princes.

Tarteesus, or Tarshish, was a town at the mouth of the Guadalquiver. The ships of Tarshish carried "silver, iron, tin, and lead," Ezek. xxxvii. 12, with other produce from the western shores of Europe and Africa to Tarteesus; from whence the Phœnicians conveyed them in their ships to Tyre. Thus the ships of Tarshish were the ocean-going ships of Western Europe.

But this I leave; for, according to the prophecy, their remonstrance is in vain. On comes the invader, sweeping over the land, spreading death and ruin in every direction, till at length he reaches Jerusalem itself, and, according to the corresponding prophecy in Zechariah, actually takes the city. Who can attempt to picture the terror, the agony, the despair, and the bitter disappointment of such a time of unlooked-for calamity? Were we not returned? might Israel say. Were we not once more a thriving people? Was not the country once more fertile and beautiful? And now it is again destroyed, so that, after all our bright hopes, we are worse off than ever.

But no. The old proverb that "Man's extremity is God's opportunity" is true still. And though the merchants of Tarshish and the young lions thereof fail in beating back the foe, the Son of David can do it, and as the Son of God he will. So when all is despair, and when all hope is lost, there is a change, a mighty, marvelous change, and the Lord himself appears, he takes the kingdom, and they are safe. Look at the description given in verses 18, 20. There we see the conquering power, "My presence." Before his presence the whole earth shakes and the very mountains tremble. But what are we to understand by his presence? Does it mean his abiding presence with his people, the presence which we this day are enjoying? Surely it is something more than that. Let us turn to Zech. xiv. 3, 4, and there we shall see the explanation: "Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east."

He ascended from the Mount of Olives, and to the Mount of Olives he will return, and there, in his divine omnipotence, he will assert his sovereignty and save his people, and fulfil his promise. "The sun shall be ashamed, and the moon confounded when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mt. Zion and before his ancients gloriously."—Canon Hoare.

Communications.

NEVADA, Mo.

Editor Restitution:

In my first article, May 16th, I gave the "Bible fact," by Moses, that the first, or "old covenant," was declared by the Testator, to the children of Israel, from Mt. Sinai—and was the "ten words" written by him "upon the two tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant."

Elder U. Smith, page 13, says: "The words testament, and covenant, means the same thing—from the same word"—and also admits that God declared his covenant, his testament—from the top of Mt. Sinai to the children of Israel—and they did promise to "keep the covenant."

Webster defines "testament"—"a will." Hence covenant in the Scriptures, and especially the one under consideration, is the will, the testament, his covenant, God's "will" declared. Remember the Sabbath day, cannot be "a contract between two or more parties," but declarations of God the testator to the children of Israel the covenantees "to keep the covenant" declared to them. And after it was declared of God by his angel from the top of Sinai, on a certain day, he wrote the covenant on the two tables of the covenant, and he placed the covenant on the Ark of the covenant to be safe.

Smith says, "Now to settle the fact once and forever that the first covenant was not the ten commandments, we have only to remark that neither Moses nor the people, had a copy of the ten commandments of any kind in their hands at that time!"

How convincing the above remark must be, to prove that the Elder is trying to deceive his readers to the fact patent to all men, that the ten commandments is the first covenant, and the only one left on record that God has made to the children of Israel, and if he has actually made the second the Elder has failed so far to give the chapter or book that it is recorded in. And was it necessary that Moses and the children of Israel as the covenantees, should have a copy of the covenant? I say no, not at all, "at that time." No one that is conversant with the Bible, would assume it was at all necessary for Moses to have anything "in his hands" only at such times as he says he does, in Deut. ix. 15, "And the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands." So the Elder's "remark" shows prosos his ignorance as to that, that Moses calls "the covenant" not "a contract between two or more parties," but "declaring his covenant."

Did Moses write "in the book of the covenant" all the words of the Lord, or not? And if he left out one word, where is that on record, if not in the book of the law, which is the book of the covenant? so is "the law of God," and "the law of Moses," all one. And "what God has joined together let no man (or elder) put asunder."

I sum it up thus:—Moses told the people all the words (commands) of the Lord, and he (Moses) wrote all the words of the Lord in a book. And he took the book of the covenant and read (all the words of the Lord) in the audience of the people. Exod. xxiv. and Heb. ix., and in the book of the law of the Lord, the first covenant recorded in Exod. xx.; Deut. v. Now I ask the reader who has carefully examined our remarks thus far, who is trying to deceive the people, Moses or U. Smith?

Moses commanded the Levites who had the charge of the ark of the covenant of the Lord, wherein was the two tables of the covenant written and engraved with the finger of God, "the ten words" even called his covenant to Israel, they solemnly promised "to keep," etc. Moses says, "Take this book of the law and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it (the book of the law) may be there for a witness." See Deut. xxxi. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount and .... I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written that you mayest teach them." Exod. xxiv. 1, 2, 9, 12, 13. What was said? "I will give thee tables of stone." What was written on those two tables of stone? "Commandments which I have written." Was those two tables and commands the "law" promised of God to Moses? No. But every commandment, every statute, and judgment, (outside of the ten words, already declared) that God gave to Moses while with him in ——— for forty days. And he (Moses) wrote everything spoken of God to him, in the book of the covenant. And then read all the words to the people. And they pledged themselves to be "obedient" to "all" that "the Lord hath said" first "on the mount in the day," and all he had said in the second place to Moses for forty days, first it was public, second privately face to face.

But Smith admits on page 10, "that the book—book of the law—and the book of the covenant are the same." Refers to 2 Kings xxii. 8; xxiii. 2. So it appears that the Elder admits what I claim, that is one book, one law (not two laws), one covenant (not two), so far in the history of Israel.

But to those who adhere to the law, the apostle says, "Tell me ye that desire to be under the law, for these are the two covenants, the one from Sinai which gendereth to bondage which is Agar (Hagar)." Gal. iv. 23–26.

Smith affirms that God has made two covenants with Israel. Refers to Deu. ix. 27, "And he shall confirm the covenant," etc. And says "there can be no question but that this refers to the new covenant." What covenant was confirmed? Paul says that "the covenant that was confirmed in Christ, God made to Abraham 430 years before" the first covenant or "giving of the law" to the children of Israel, and Moses the mediator, etc. And the covenant or promise of God was "in thee and thy seed should." Hence the angel's language to Daniel (ix. 27) does not allude to the old or first made 430 years after "the promise," but to the one made to Abraham. Yet the Elder referred to that passage to prove his position. The Elder says "that the Aaronic priesthood was typical of the priesthood of Christ." Then I ask why was it necessary that "God should raise up Christ" and make him "a Priest, and after the order of Melchisedec and not after the order of Aaron." See Heb. vii. 11–28. Here it is plain that "the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change of the law." What law? The law or statute pertaining to the priesthood, to be sure, what else?

To illustrate, here in Missouri there is a law, or statute, pertaining to "the killing of game," as to the time of the year. Yet the power that made that law, may see the necessity of a change of that particular law, and yet after that statute was changed would it invalidate any other law, or statute? And would not the others be as binding upon the citizens of Missouri after the change in that statute as before? Why not?

Now I must notice Smith's remark on 1 Kings viii. 21 (page 10), "The key to the explanation of this passage lies in the antecedent of the word 'wherein.' Solomon speaking of the temple, says, 'And I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the Lord.' Does the word 'wherein' mean as to that, that Moses calls "the covenant" not "a contract between two or more parties," but "declaring his covenant."

Now we proceed to show his mistake as to the antecedent of the word 'wherein.' "For there was a tabernacle made the first wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread which is called the sanctuary" (here the "wherein" includes the shew-bread, the table, and the candlestick in the first tabernacle). "And after the second veil the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all, which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot 1, that had manna, 2; and Aaron's rod that budded, 3; and the (two) tables of the covenant," 5. Here Paul testifies that the tables of the covenant (two things) and Aaron's rod (three) and the golden pot (four) and the manna (five things) were all in the ark of the covenant, and the ark of the covenant and the contents as above, and the golden censer were in the second tabernacle the holiest of all. Now with Paul's definition we can find out the antecedent of the word "wherein" that Solomon uses in the passage before us.

"And I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the Lord," etc. Let us turn to the 6th verse, "And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place into the oracle of the house to the most holy place even under the wings of the cherubims."

I paraphrase thus: Solomon says, "When the God of our fathers, by his angel and servant Moses, brought them out of Egypt, he made a covenant at Horeb, or Sinai, called the covenant of the Lord your God, and that covenant God wrote upon two tables of stone even the tables of the covenant, and Moses placed them in the ark while at Horeb, and the ark is now in the place, in the oracle of the house or temple we are dedicating. And his name is in the covenant on the two tables of stone, and in the ark, and under the mercy seat."

Smith's assertion as to the covenant of the Lord being in "the place" but "not in the ark."

In answer to the above I would say, if the covenant of the Lord which he wrote on the two tables of stone even the tables of the covenant was "not in the ark" when the priests were commanded by Solomon to put the ark in the most holy place behind the second veil, and we know there was no change during Solomon's lifetime, and then Solomon's language is false when he declares there publicly that the covenant of the Lord was "in the ark," hence his "name" was not in the ark, not in the place, not in the oracle, not under the mercy seat, and must I say it, not in his "house," and the covenant that contained his name—lost! I dare not believe the Elder's remarks as to the word "not," yet it corresponds with a "not" in Gen. iii. 4. But I believe the Elder will agree with me when I state that "the covenant of the Lord" should have been in the ark under the mercy seat under the wings of the cherubims, in the place, in the oracle, in the house that Solomon did or was dedicating to his name. And his name signed with his own hand was in the covenant that he declared from Sinai to Israel. Hence was his way of placing his "name," but the Gentiles have a different way, generally placing the name, their name on the outside as I can see one from my office window, "Moore's Opera House."

In conclusion, I would ask the Elder that if the covenant of the Lord was "not in the ark when Solomon and all the congregation, were with him before the ark, and the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, into the oracle of the house, and they drew out the staves, that they were seen without, and there they are unto this day, and the two tables of stone yet in the ark which Moses put in there," can any one doubt the ark of the covenant did "not" contain "the tables of stone even the tables of the covenant?"

I leave the matter with the careful reader to judge between Solomon and Smith—Moses and Smith—for that is the way to decide in your own minds as to what the first covenant or testament that God declared to Israel, whether it is simply "a contract" or "commands" declared by the Testator to the children of Israel as the covenantees and Moses to enforce the will of God among them.

Yours for the truth,

BIBLE READER.

PALESTINE, Ill.

Editor Restitution:

Please let me address a few words to the brethren and sisters at Good Hope, near Paris, Ill., as perhaps my last to them. Very recently I visited them, and the trip and the labor of speaking at my age very materially injured my physical system, and I am thereby warned that my labor so far from home is about done. For about fourteen years I have been visiting them from two to four times yearly—always at my own expense when I could go in my own buggy, and since by rail, would have nothing but railroad fare, and not always that. I say this in leaving them, that they may know that it was not for their money, but for their growth in grace and in knowledge of the truth, that I visited them. And now let me say, brethren and sisters, always be united in the faith, meet regularly every first day "to show forth the Lord's death until he come;" "let no root of bitterness spring up among you;" but be prayerful, watchful, kind to one another, obedient to all the commandments; so that in the end you "may have right to the tree of life and enter in through the gates into the city" of our God. You, I think, pretty thoroughly understand the faith theoretically; now let practical obedience unto all the commandments be taught and enforced. And may the Lord God of the prophets and apostles, the God of Abraham, keep you and preserve you unto his heavenly kingdom. I say the same to the brethren and sisters meeting at Wall's school house, only I hope to visit them once more to commend unto them practical Bible Christianity.

In the blessed hope,

A. MALONE.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Ago to come not a heresy," "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Sinaitic, the New and the Davidic covenants; their duration and relationship to each other. By C. M. Myers. 350 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth Set Free; or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Miss Hens. 30 pages, price 10cts.

Sunlight Dispersing the Dismal Shadows; or the doctrine of eternal torments shown to lack reason and Scripture. By Miss Hens. 70 pages, price 25cts.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Miss Hens. 48 pages, price 15cts.

Material Immortality; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact defense and Bible view of material immortality, not by birth but by grace. By O. R. L. Crozier. 16 pages, price 10cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, who is he? By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1882, put into tract form.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By C. M. Myers. Price 25cts.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PRIMER. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by MORE Baptists, in two. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 5c., or assorted packages of 100, 35c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

Can You Believe? A series of 32 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in our list.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

The Age to Come not a Heresy. By H. V. Reed. Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, together with the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Magruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 75 for one.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 40 for $1.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 10 for 40c. or $3 for $1.

The New Birth. Josiah Pelree.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Yates, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teacher on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

[illegible] Read Jesus, the Living Logos [illegible]

TWENTY [illegible]
10c. each; 5 for 40c.

One Evangelizer; or, Reformation [illegible] Teacher, the true author of Christ's Kingdom.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or $3 for $1.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. S. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of articles upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 96 pages, price 25c.

A Letter to a Skeptic Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. Price 15 cents, or 12 cts. per dozen.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of York. Actually the book for the times. 200 pages, cloth $1.00.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 128 pages, cloth 75c, paper 50c.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Every reader will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the plan of salvation are ably and clearly set forth. Over 200 pages, cloth $1.

Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Pilmath. Price [illegible]

Hymns of the Advent, in the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by Charles C. Barker. Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of carols. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is a household word. These include the "Christian's Good-night" and he says his book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 60c.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public and family worship, compiled by C. M. Myers and John Arnold. [illegible] cents.

The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson. Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so strangely in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 364 pages, cloth $2.00, Library binding $3.00.

Poetry.

ROWING AGAINST THE TIDE.

It is easy to glide with the ripples
Adown the stream of time,
To flow with the course of the river
Like the music of some old rhyme:
But it takes courage and patience
Against its currents to ride,
And we must have strength from heaven
When rowing against the tide.

We may float on the river's surface
While our oars scarce touch the stream,
And visions of earthly glory
On our dazzled sight may gleam:
We forget what lies before us
The dashing torrent near,
And while we sit idly dreaming
It's waters will carry us o'er.

But a few miles would there were many,
Row up the "Stream of Life,"
They struggle against its surges
And mind neither toil nor strife.
Though weary and faint with labor,
Singing triumphant the while,
For Christ is the helm's captain
When rowing against the tide.

For on through the Pearly Gateway
Like a mist on the distant shore,
They see the walls of the city
With its bow'rs of floating ore;
Soon through the fair portals gladly
They almost anticipate their stay,
But faithfulness fight on your labor
When darkness of night's o'ertake you.

And who a shrill we be one of that number
Who mind no toil or pain?
Shall we storm the fort of earthly joys
Who to us have a crown to gain?
Or sail all we glide on with the river,
With sloth as the pal of our side,
While our brother, may be seen before him
Is rowing against the tide?

Selections.

JEWISH FORTUNES THE PECULIAR FEATURE OF THE LATTER DAYS.

Popular repugnance to the fact—Gentile views and God's purpose in opposition—Jewish bearing of the Armageddon catastrophe and the Jewish nation as a divine instrument after it—Who the Jews are, their present position and coming restoration—First as a colony, then as a nation—Consternation of the kings at Christ—The war they wage against him—His victory—The subsequent raising of the fallen tabernacle of David—Reign of Christ as the imperial and absolute Lord of mankind—The saints reign with him—Palestine turned into a Paradise.

It has been sufficiently apparent that the events of "the latter days" involve peculiarly the fortunes of the Jewish nation. This is so essential a feature of the latter-day situation, that the angel who came to reveal the whole course of events to Daniel, said to him, "I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days." Dan. x. 14. The political occurrences of former days had to do with God's nation, when the nation having to do with them knew nothing about it. Thus we read in Isa. xliii. 14: "For your sakes I have sent to Babylon and brought down all their nobles." That the affairs of men should be divinely manipulated with Jewish objects is a view repugnant to the common run of men: they look upon the Jews as a contemptible and effete race, whose part in history is played. Apart from revelation, no doubt this is a natural view; but in view of the purpose of God as revealed by the prophets, it is one that will be rejected by those who believe what Paul states in Heb i. 1: "God at sundry times and in divers manners, spake unto the fathers by the prophets." The Gentile view of the case and the purpose of God are brought into juxtaposition in Micah iv. 11: "Many nations are gathered against thee (Israel), saying, Let her be defiled; let our eyes look upon Zion. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understood they his counsel: for he shall gather them (the nations) as the sheaves unto the floor. Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion, for I will make thy horn iron and thy hoofs brass, and thou shalt beat in pieces many people."

One of the very objects of the gathering of the nations to Armageddon, is thus expressed in Joel iii.: "I will gather all nations and bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage, Israel, whom they have scattered amongst the nations and parted my land." The nations have a responsibility to discharge for their treatment of the Jews, and the discharging of it will involve a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation upon earth. Dan. xii. 1. A feature of this time of trouble will be that the Jews will be made use of to follow up the divine stroke of Armageddon, in the process of subjugating the whole earth to the sceptre of the king of the Jews. Thus it is testified: "Thou art my battle-axe and weapons of war; with thee (Israel) will I break in pieces the nations: with thee will I destroy kingdoms" (Jer. li. 20); and also, "The remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a lion among the beasts of the forest, and as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who, if he go through, both treadeth down and breaketh in pieces." Micah v. 8.

Who are these Jews, who occupy such a prominent position in the latter-day work of God, even as they did in the work of old? The answer is to be read in the words addressed by Moses to the children of Israel after the exodus from Egypt: "The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself above all people that are on the earth." Deut. vii. 6. The Jews are therefore God's nation on the earth. Ay, but say some, they are cast off. But why? Hearken to the word of God by Amos: "You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will punish you for all your iniquity." Israel's cast-off state is punishment of her sins, is therefore evidence that they are the people of divine choice and destiny. Are they to remain cast off for ever? Let the same word answer the question. "I will gather her that is driven out and her that is afflicted, and I will make her that halted a preserved people, and her that was cast far off a strong nation. Micah iv. 6. "I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy upon them, and they shall be as though I had not cast them off." Zech. x. 6. But you say, they are a bad and disobedient race: never mind: God has chosen them; and this is a sufficient reason for our recognition of them in their true character. Remember David's treatment of an evil Saul, because he was the Lord's anointed. 1 Sam. xxvi. 11. Ponder also this solemn reproof of a contrary mind: "Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off. Thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. Thus saith the Lord, If my covenant be not with that day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob." Jer. xxxiii. 24; also xxxi 36. Anyone desiring further evidence of God's purpose to restore Israel to their land may consult the following Scriptures: Isa. xi. 11, 12; xlix. 18 to the end; Ezek. xxxvii. 21 to the end; xxxix. 21 to the end; and on a reading of the prophets, the earnest and attentive reader will find many other such like declarations, throwing light upon the expectation of the disciples of Christ, as expressed in their parting question: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Acts i. 6.

The Jews in their restoration are to be purified from the evil in their midst: "He shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord as in the days of old, and as in former years." Mal. iii. 3. "I will take away out of thee them that rejoice in thy pride; thou shalt no more be haughty because of mine holy mountain. I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." Zeph. iii. 11. "I will purge out from among you the rebels and them that transgress against me. I will bring them forth out of the countries where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel." Ezek. xx. 38. In view of these testimonies, there is no room for the objection which many feel to the idea of Israel's restoration on the score of their national insubordination to the ways of God. But even if there were not the explanation which there is on this point the evidence would be conclusive to such as regard the Bible as the Word of God, that the Jews are destined to play an important part in the terrible period that marks the transition from the present constitution of things to the "world to come," or new order of things when "the kingdoms of this world shall have become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever." Rev. xi. 15.

Previous chapters have shown them planted in a partial restoration, on the mountains of Israel, as an agricultural and commercial colony under British auspices, when the Turkish empire shall have passed away. We have seen Russian armies descend upon the prospering infant colony, and wrest the country from British hands. We have seen the assembled armies smitten with a divine stroke which drives them out of the country, and leaves but a sixth part. We have seen Britain prostrate by the same power, and Israel abased in the uttermost depths of national remorse, at the discovery that their deliverer is the Nazarene whom they have with bitterness rejected in all their generations. What is the next item in the stupendous programme? Has the work to be done attained at that stage, the point of completion? The answer is in harmony with the fitness of things. The staggering blow inflicted on human power in Palestine, is but the beginning of a process which is to grind the universal fabric of human government to pieces. "I will send those that escape of them unto the nations .... to the isles afar off that have not heard of my fame, neither have seen my glory, and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles." Isa. lxvi. 19. "I will send a fire on Magog, and among them that dwell carelessly in the isles, and they shall know that I am the Lord." Ezek. xxxix. 6. A message goes forth from the Holy Land, "Fear God and give him glory, for the hour of his judgment is come." Rev. xiv. 7. "Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth; .... Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little." Psa. ii. 10 12. "Kings shall shut their mouths at him for that which had not been told them shall they see, and that which they had not heard shall they consider." Isa. lii. 15.

The shutting of their mouths, on the part of the kings is the combined result of consternation at the message which they receive, and determination to have no parley with the insolent successor of Mahomet, as they will conceive him to be. With the exception of Britain, they raise armies against him and assemble to attempt his overthrow. Rev. xix. 19. The war that ensues is the most terrible experience of the era. War might be considered impossible in such a situation of things. That the nations should fight against Christ may seem incredible, but so was his crucifixion. It is testified they will fight against him and that is enough. They are qualified for the part they have to perform, by the utter misconception that prevails concerning his future work—a misconception due to a false theology and ignorance of the Scriptures. They are permitted to fight that scope may be afforded by those terrible judgments glanced at in an earlier part of the pamphlet, which are to teach them righteousness and fit the world for the government of the kingdom of God. Christ could overthrow the most formidable league of nations in a moment, with a word of his mouth: but the object in view precludes this summary exercise of power, as in the case of Pharaoh, who was allowed to put forth all his power in a series of acts of resistance, before he was finally submerged in the perdition of the Red Sea. The result, though delayed, is not for a moment doubtful. "The Lamb shall overcome them, for he is King of kings and the Lord of lords, and they that are with him are called and chosen and faithful." Rev. xvi. 14.

The power of the Gentile governments vanquished, what follows? "In that day, I will raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof, and I will raise up his ruins and build it as in the days of old." Amos ix. 11. "Of the increase of his (the son of David's) government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to order it and to establish it with justice and with judgment from henceforth, even for ever." Isa. ix. 8, 9. "A king (the son of David; see context) shall reign and prosper and execute justice and judgment in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely." Jer. xxiii. 5. That this is Jesus, is made certain by its New Testament application. Luke i. 32; Acts ii. 30. That it will be fulfilled only when Christ has returned, is also certain from his own statements: e. g. "When the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also (my twelve apostles) shall sit with me on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 30. When does the Son of Man sit on the throne of his glory? He answers, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory." Matt. xxv. 31. Hence it is that the appearing and kingdom of Christ are apostolically associated as in the following instance: "The Lord Jesus Christ shall judge the living and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. iv. 1. Not only the apostles, but all who, with them, believe on Christ and obey his commandments will share in "the glory to be revealed." "If we suffer with him, we shall reign with him"—no empty words. 2 Tim. ii. 12. Of the crown laid up for Paul to be given "at that day," Paul says it will be "not to him only but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 8. Hence, where this class is dramatically exhibited in the Apocalypse, in their collective completeness, they sing "Thou hast made us unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." Rev. v. 10. This fact enables us to apprehend the force of Paul's question in impressing on the Corinthian believers the meetness of their settling their own affairs, instead of having resource to worldly tribunals: "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?" 1. Cor. vi. 2.

The prospect opened out in all these testimonies, (which are only a few of very many) is that when the present political system is abolished by violence in the impending crisis, it will be replaced by the imperial and absolute authority of David's son and Lord in Jerusalem, and administered in all the earth through his accepted and glorified friends (and who they are may be learnt from John xv. 14). The governing race and nation will be the nation of Israel restored to their land—the first and favored realm of the empire (Zech. viii. 23; Isa. lx. 12, 15; Micah iv. 8; Jer. iii. 17; Ezek. xxxvi. 19-38); but all the nations of mankind will rejoice with them in the glories of a reign which will diffuse peace, justice and enlightenment to the end of the earth, and secure that right distribution of earth's abundance, which all human systems of government have failed and must ever fail to accomplish. Isa. ii. 3; Zech. ii. 10-12; Psa. lxxii. At this time only will be realized in its fulness the promise to Abraham, that in him should all the families of the earth be blessed. At this time, also, will the promise of the personal possession of the land be realized, when they shall say "This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden" (Ezek. xxxvi. 35); and when Jehovah has fulfilled the word he has spoken: "Whereas thou (the land of Israel) hast been forsaken and hated so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, the joy of many generations." Isa. lx. 15.—R. Roberts.

Youths' Column.

Who Made Them All!

"I saw the glorious sun arise,
Like a bridegroom coming forth,
And he traveled through the skies
The darkness went away;
And all around me seem'd so bright,
I wished it would be always light."

"But when the shining course was done,
The gentle moon drew nigh,
And stars came twinkling one by one
Upon the shady sky.
Who made the sun to shine so far,
The moon and every twinkling star?"

"'Twas God, my child, who made them all,
By his almighty skill:
He keeps them that they do not fall,
And guides them as he will—
That glorious God who lives so far
In heaven, beyond the highest star."

A beautiful answer was once given by a little girl in one of the London Homes for the Destitute. The question was asked why Jesus was called an "unspeakable gift." There was a silence for awhile, and then, with trembling voice, the dear child said, "Because he is so precious that no one can tell all his preciousness."

The Counterfeit Quarter.

Four boys were standing under a tree, looking at a bad quarter which the father of one of the boys had taken the day before. "Father thinks it came from the apple-woman; he bought apples yesterday, but he cannot be sure, for he had several others in his pocket-book. It is good for nothing anyway, so he gave it to me to play with."

"You wouldn't catch my father losing money that way. He would shove it off on some one. You could spend that in half a dozen different ways if you liked. Give it to me, Freddy, and I will go down to Aleck and get a half-full of chestnuts for it. You might as well; its of no use to you. If Aleck finds it out, I will take it back and say 'tis it bad?' If Aleck finds it out after he gets it he will pass it on to some body, so there'll not be any harm done anyway."

"What of the next one who gets it?" said Freddy.

"Oh, he must pass it off as we do," laughed Philip; "come, let us try it, anyway."

"Not I, Phil," said the other, stoutly; "my father says it is stealing to pass counterfeit money when you know it, and a very high crime. I don't mean to begin that business, even in a small way. Come to think of it, guess the best thing I can do with it is to pitch it into the mill-pond. I might lose it and somebody find and pass it. Get some pebbles, boys, and let's see who can pitch the farthest."

The old counterfeit was buried in the deep mill-pond, where it was never likely to tempt any one to dishonesty, or to make any one suffer loss by its means.

Thorns and Thistles.

The common reader, we think, will understand the declaration of God to Adam while yet in Paradise,—"Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee," etc., as meaning that, if he had not sinned, thorns and thistles would have been unknown on earth. In corroboration of this, Dr. McMillan, who has given much attention to subjects of this kind, writes in one of the magazines:

"There is one peculiarity about weeds which is very remarkable, viz.: that they only appear on ground which, either by cultivation or for some other purpose has been disturbed by man. They are never found truly wild in woods or hills, or uncultivated wastes far away from human dwellings. They never grow on virgin soil, where human beings have never been. No weeds exist in those parts of the earth that are uninhabited, or where man is only a passing visitant. The Arctic and Antarctic regions are destitute of them; and above certain limits on mountain ranges they have no representatives. There were no traces of them in New Zealand, Australia and America when these countries were discovered, though they now abound in them. We never see the familiar weeds of our gardens and fields anywhere else except in association with our cultivated plants. The dandelion illumines our waysides with its miniature suns; and far and wide as its downy seeds may float in the air, they alight and germinate only around the dwellings of man. The chickweed and the groundsel have no home except in the garden-beds; the thistle belongs to the corn field, the sheep's-sorrel to the potato-plot, and the dock to the meadow."

Yet a Little While.

There is a wondrous healing power in "a little while." A little while, and the tears of childhood give place to smiles of joy; a little while, and the weariness of the toiler is exchanged for repose and refreshment; a little while, and the hour of temptation is past, and he who was sore oppressed by the adversary, raises his thanksgiving to God who giveth the victory; a little while, and the power of the oppressor is broken, and deliverance comes to the loyal, trusting soul; a little while, and the bitter days of tribulation are done, and the heart, tossed, troubled, and discouraged, finds repose in the providence and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ; a little while, and the anguish of bereavement is assuaged, the broken heart bound up, the sorrowing soul made glad, and the discouraged one goes forward in the strength of God; a little while, and the weary pilgrimage is ended, the fight is won, and the victory is gained.

"A little while and ye shall see me," said the Savior to his sorrowing disciples. "Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry," is the testimony of faith to the struggling, trusting church.

Let us rejoice in him who thus gives us everlasting consolation; and, though the time to us seems long, and the years seem weary, yet our gracious Lord ever whispers in our ears, "Yet a little while." Blessed are they who can trust his precious word, and can believe that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."
—The Christian.

Where's the Harm.

"Alfred, please don't give Charlie that wine: I shudder to see him drink with such evident satisfaction and pleasure. I am afraid it is wrong, and that we are creating in our child a love for intoxicating liquors that may some time come back upon us with terrible force."

"Oh! pooh, pooh, you silly little wife, where is the harm of pure wine like this? Is my son going to be a drunkard? Don't be so foolish."

"Come here, my brave boy. Want some more of papa's good drink?"

And the little fellow, clinging to his father's chair as they sat over the dessert, lisped, smacking his lips:

"Yes, Tarlie love it. When Tarlie big man, Tarlie drink, drink, drink all day."

The mother shuddered, and a pallor spread over her features, but the father threw himself back in his chair and tossed off another glass of wine, leaving a little for the child, to reward him, he said, for his cunning little speech.

Years have gone. The scene has changed. In a dark and dreary tenement house, harsh words and fearful oaths from one of the upper rooms startle the remaining inmates and bring hither a policeman, who proceeds to the apartment from which the noise issues. What a sight meets their gaze! There, on a bed of rags, a woman lay dead, the body warm; and in the centre of the room, in a pool of blood, gasping for breath, lay a man dying by the hand of his son, who now stood before them, brandishing his weapon over his head, and shouting:

"My mother has died of a broken heart, and I have stabbed my father. What led me to this crime? It was rum, rum, rum! When I was a child that man gave it to me, fed me with it, and called me brave because I swallowed it greedily. When I became a man I could not live without it. I would have bartered anything for liquor. Now hang me, hang me, and end this horrible life; and when you hear a man say, 'Where is the harm of giving a child wine?' point to the gallows on which I swung, and say, 'There's the harm!'"

Letters to a Son.—No. 5. Part 1.

My Dear Son:

I now briefly direct your attention to the claims of Jesus to be the Christ predicted by the prophets. If you turn to the New Testament, you will find that these claims were presented to the Jews at two distinct periods, under very different circumstances. First, during his own personal ministry, before his crucifixion; and second, after his ascension, by the preaching of the apostles. I wish to call your attention chiefly to the latter, as being more directly suited to my purpose, which involves the study of both. You must also keep in mind that, in order to appreciate the reasoning of the apostles in their preaching, we require to place ourselves as nearly as possible in the position of their Jewish audiences, as regards their knowledge of the history of Jesus.

We have a sample of the apostolic preaching in Acts ii. 22–36. Peter says (verse 22): "Ye men of Israel, hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles, and wonders, and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves know." We have here a brief outline of the history of Jesus, which we can verify for ourselves. The apostle appeals to their own knowledge of what he affirmed concerning Jesus—"as ye yourselves also know"—which they could not gainsay. No sane man can deny the existence of Jesus of Nazareth as a real person, any more than the existence of Julius Cæsar could be denied. And yet, if stripped of those things that are miraculous, he seems to be simply Jesus of Nazareth. The Jesus that Peter preached was a man approved of God by mighty deeds done by God through him among the Jews, which they themselves also know, yet they rejected and crucified him. But, as the apostle declares, God raised him up from the dead. He then proceeds to quote a psalm of David affirming that it referred to the Christ. You will find this quotation at verses 25–29, which you can compare with Psa. xvi. 7. You will observe that there is an apparent difficulty here which Peter clears up. The Psalmist speaks in the first person, as if referring to himself. But Peter says: "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his (the Christ's) soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear." Acts ii. 29–33. He then shows that this was in accordance with another psalm—"For David is not ascended into the heavens, but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool. Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." The apostle's reasoning upon these facts was so conclusive as to produce faith in the minds of his audience which they could not help expressing. This so far interrupted his discourse and caused him to give a direct reply to their question, "What shall we do?" after which the historian sums it up by informing us that "with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation."

That this was a fair sample of the apostle's teaching, you may see from his next speech at Jerusalem, recorded in Acts iii. The same facts concerning the glorification, by the God of their fathers, of that Jesus whom they had rejected. The immediate manifestation of his power was the cure of the impotent man by the name of Jesus; but the reasoning of Peter is to the same effect, with the additional information that "God should send Jesus Christ, who before was preached to them, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things which God had spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began." This "restitution of all things" would require much time to go over, as detailed in the prophets; but it may be briefly summed up as a restoration of the land of Israel to that nation, and a restoration of that scattered people to the land of their fathers, to whom it is plainly promised.

The phrase, "restitution of all things," is a very comprehensive one, but not vaguely so. There is no ground for building on it the dream of a universal restoration of the human race to the favor of God. It is a "restitution of things which God has spoken by the prophets." That restitution is not a mere restoration of things in exactly the same condition as they had formerly existed; for while there will be a substantial restoration of the same things, it will be on a scale far exceeding the former in glory and power. And besides the restitution of all things predicted, there will be the establishment of much that had no previous existence. This restitution is to take place at certain "times"—"the times of restitution;" and when those times arrive, God shall send Jesus Christ, who shall come as the restorer of all things. He shall not only restore scattered Israel to their own land, but shall restore again the kingdom to Israel," restore to life and immortality those patriarchs to whom the promise of a glorious inheritance in the Holy Land was originally made, but who, during their lifetime, were pilgrims and strangers in it, and in which their dust has so long rested in hope of being one day put in possession. And not only them, but all the faithful of all past ages, who "shall come from the east and the west, and from the north and the south, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God."

Having thus called your attention to these two discourses of Peter, and endeavored to point out some of the things which he preached, I shall, before proceeding to a more particular inquiry, give you a sample of the preaching of the apostle to the Gentiles. At Thessalonica, a city of Greece, there was a synagogue of the Jews. "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ." Acts xvii. 2, 3. This is a very brief account of what Paul made known, and may convey but a vague idea to those who are ignorant of the prophets, and it conveys much to those who place themselves in the same relation to Paul as those Jews occupied. They had a knowledge of the prophets, and a hope founded on that knowledge; and Paul knew well what that hope was, for he was "brought up in Jerusalem, at the feet of Gamaliel." Yet with his intimate knowledge of the national hope, he did not scruple to tell in a public synagogue of the Jews that Jesus, who had been crucified, was the Christ. And no definite was this proposition to the minds of those Jews, that a number of them believed at once. Is it not clear, that before we can give an intelligent response to such preaching as Paul's, we must have, as a groundwork, the same knowledge as they for the same intelligent faith? And I have no hesitation in saying, that if Paul were in the present day to preach in the generality of our churches, he would for three Sabbath days reason with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging that Christ must needs "sit upon the throne of his father David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever."

So much, then, my dear son, for the broad outlines presented by Peter and Paul in their proclamation of the truth to the unbelieving. I must now ask your attention to a feature connected with that preaching in relation to what is generally preached in the present day. You are well aware that the coming of Christ to establish a kingdom on the earth, though believed by many as an important Bible truth, is denied a place in the gospel which God has appointed to be made known for the salvation of men. It is maintained by such objectors, that we do not find such prominence given to it in the preaching of the apostles. Now, granting this objection to be valid, I could very easily make a like objection to their position. They contend for preaching the atonement, or the death of Christ as a sacrifice for sin, as the only and sole gospel to be preached for salvation. Now, if they search all the preachings recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, they will not find a single reference to the death of Christ as a sin-offering. But while I state this as a fact, I will endeavor to prove to you that both the death of Christ for our sins, and his coming again to bring salvation to his people, and to give them a share in that kingdom he is to establish upon the earth, constitute the gospel which was preached by all the apostles. To do this, I do not need to go farther than the discourses already commented on.
—Alex. D. Black, in Messenger of the Gospel.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DWIGGINS, .....
CHARLES PALMER, .....Vice President.
F. E. HARSHILL, .....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN, .....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN, .....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HAILSTEAD, B. WILSON,
J. F. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
AILEY JONES, G. M. MYERS,
A. R. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCTOBER 25, 1882. NO. 40.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS:—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. And as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. Also a respectful hearing of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

The Terms ... and ...

When we consider for a moment the ... doctrines that have been drawn as ... the ... of the misapprehension and ... of this one word, ... that ... ... ...

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Oct. 25, 1882.

Stockholders' Meeting.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association will be held in Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 14, 1882, for the purpose of hearing the reports of the Officers, and electing a Board of Directors.

E. K. BARNHILL, Sec.

---

DR. William Leask, London, Eng.: The missing numbers of the Rainbow, concerning which we wrote you, have now all come to hand. Many thanks.

---

WE had a letter from Brother B. Wilson, editor of the Diagiott yesterday. He encourages us that he will ere long write some for THE RESTITUTION. We assure him that his old friends would be glad to read something from his pen once more. Accept our most grateful acknowledgements for kindly aiding the paper financially.

---

ON Monday of this week the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railway Company commenced running regular trains over their line between Buffalo and Chicago. This is a matter of much interest to churches of brethren we have along this line, as well as to the public generally along the rout. From their agent at Argos we learned that everything was in a state of complete readiness to facilitate the transportation of both passengers and freight.

---

DEATH BY SIN.

In a former article we took the position that certain expressions translated dying to sin, dead to sin, etc., should, according to a well-defined principle of Greek syntax, be understood, and translated dying by sin, and dead by sin. In explanation we endeavored to show that the death by sin, alluded to in expressions of this kind, is the mortality entailed upon the entire human family by the one sin of the one representative parent sinner—Adam. He became mortal by sin, and transmitted this mortality, as inherent in his human nature, to all his posterity. It is human nature that is under the sentence of death, and all that participate in this human nature must share its mortality as the doom of an inexorable law. The child in the thousandth generation, that inherits Adam's nature, inherits Adam's death-doom.

This death-doom of the nature, and of the race sharing this nature, is by sin; and the judgment sentence to this dire destiny was for the one sin of the one man. Rom. v. 12, 18. Innocent infants die, not to sin, but are mortal by Adam's sin, and hence die for sin, or by sin. The divine Son of God, who has holy, harmless, and separate from sinners—who did no sin neither was guile found in his mouth—died, not to sin—an idea little short of blasphemy—but in consequence of participating in our flesh and blood nature that had been made mortal by sin—Adam's sin.

Our main object at present is to place before our readers an exposition of some passages involving the idea that death is by sin, written by a scholar of distinction, and which has come to our notice since writing our first article. As we wish to place this ably written exegesis before our readers, and as it will occupy all the space we can spare this week, we defer our own comments on certain passages to some future number.

---

THE WORD "DEATH" AS USED IN THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

We simply maintain that the word death, when occurring in the Bible, ought to be understood in its ordinary sense; which is, as dictionaries will tell us, the extinction of life, the cessation of all activity and feeling."

Our opponents quote the words of Paul to the Colossians: "You being dead in your sins, hath he quickened." Col. ii. 13; Eph. ii. 1, 5; cf. John v. 24, 1 John iii. 14. They argue from this expression, that a certain sort of life which may last forever is compatible with a state of perpetual rebellion against God; and hence they conclude that death here means the cessation of one kind of existence, the passage from one state or world to another, viz: from the communion with God into separation from him. In the phraseology of traditional theology, the death of the soul, or spiritual death, is unregenerate life. Eternal death would thus be eternal life in sin and torture.

We believe, on the contrary, that the apostle's statement means, "Ye are (virtually) dead," on your way to death. Death was there, though only in its germ; death had begun its work, but was prevented from completing it. By prolepsis. Paul anticipates the fatal result of total destruction, moral and physical, that sin would have wrought in his readers had they not received the gospel. We base this interpretation of the passage upon the following arguments:

1. A prolepsis of exactly the same kind is found in the parallel passage of the Epistle to the Ephesians: "God hath quickened us," says the apostle; adding, "He hath raised us up together and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Although these verbs are in the past tense, they denote future events. The Christian will not obtain the promised reward until a more or less distant period.—Dean Alford's Commentary.

In a similar manner, Paul says, Rom. viii. 30, "Whom he justified, them he also glorified," but tells us elsewhere, "We rejoice in hope of the glory of God." Chap. v. 2. Again: "Christ hath abolished death," viz: proleptically, or virtually, for death is "the last enemy that shall be destroyed." 1 Cor. xv. 26.

2. In the Epistle to the Ephesians, the apostle speaks of unconverted sinners as sleepers. v. 14; comp. 1 Thess. v. 6. Their sinnings may prove mortal, it is the precursor of death, and may possibly be their last sleep; but it is not yet complete and hopeless death.

3. In many passages the apostle distinctly states that sin does not constitute the state of death, but leads to it. Rom. vi. 21; vii. 5; comp. 1 John v. 16, 17: "The sin unto death;" and 2 Cor. iv. 3, "Our gospel is hid to them that are perishing," not to them that have perished. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. Wages are paid after work is done.

4. Prolepsis is a favorite figure of speech with the inspired writers, who use it especially in reference to death. In Gen. xx. 3, God, appearing to Abimelech, says to him: "Behold thou (art but) a dead man;"† in other words, "Thou art threatened with instant death, and at once to die." That same expression has become common in modern European languages. From its emphatic nature, such a figure of speech would readily be adopted by the bold pen of the apostle to the Gentiles. "Abraham," he says, "considered not his own body now dead;" that is to say, almost as good as dead. Rom. iv. 19; comp. Heb. xi. 12. "Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead (literally, 'of one who was dead,') so many as the stars of the sky in multitude."

Let us still quote Rom. viii. 10: "If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the spirit is alive because of righteousness." Evidently, "dead" here means virtually dead, or destined to die;‡ for in the following verse the apostle himself determines the sense by saying, "God shall quicken your mortal bodies."

5. It is impossible to accept the definition of death given by our opponents in the numerous passages in which they speak of dying to sin, to the flesh, to the law. Rom. vi. 2, 6; vii. 4, 6; viii. 13; Gal. iii. 24; Col. ii. 20; iii. 3; 1 Peter ii. 24. To "die to sin" does not mean to lay down a sinful life in order to take it up again under fresh conditions of existence! No; the "life in sin" is destined to total extinction, it must die out. The usual meaning of the word death is the only one that can obtain in the above-named cases; to die unto sin is to cease from it, to abandon guilty actions and feelings. The dead faith spoken of in the Epistle of James, ii. 26, is one which has really ceased to exist.

6. Lastly, how can we establish any relation between the first and the second death, or how understand the latter phrase, if we assume a forced interpretation of the term death? Would the Scriptures call second death a mere continuation of a previous state of alienation from God? We have already stated that we believe the "second death" to be exactly what its name implies—the future death in Gehenna of both body and soul, the dissolution of the whole human being. This is doubtless the reason why it is never called "a sleep," as sleep involves the the possibility of a return to active life.

Stress is also laid by our opponents on the words of God to Adam in Gen. ii. 17: "The day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Since Adam did not die within the twenty-four hours after his fall, they argue that death can mean a prolonged or even a perpetual life in sin. But the word day in the Bible, sometimes specifies a lengthened period.

In the fourth verse of the same chapter we read of "the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens and every plant." We know by the first chapter of Genesis that the plants were only created on the third day, therefore the day of Gen. ii. 4 includes at least three days; and there is little doubt that each of these days embraces a vast number of years. Respecting the occasionally indefinite sense of the word day in Scripture, comp. also Luke xiii. 32.

With the Lord "one day is as a thousand years." If God had meant that the death of the first sinner was to be complete at his fall, a more precise term, such as hour or instant, would have been employed. Death may be a very gradual process; it may be slow or speedy, lasting for days, months, or even years, and all sinners may be said to lead but a dying life.‡ As to the death of the body, medical men do not yet agree as to the precise stage of decay when it become total.

We therefore conclude that death, in the language of Scripture, signifies a gradual loss of life and existence, ending in the complete and ultimate destruction of the creature spoken of.

The term may be employed proleptically with regard either to physical or spiritual death, which leads us to make a fourfold distinction in its meaning.

1. Latent and gradual bodily death at work. Rom. viii. 10; 1 Cor. xv. 22.

2. Complete bodily death. Phil. ii. 27.

3. Latent and gradual spiritual death. John v. 24; Eph. ii. 1, 5; Col. ii. 13; 1 John iii. 14.

4. Complete physical and spiritual death, or annihilation of the whole being. Mat. x. 28; Rom. vi. 21, 23; viii. 13; Jas. i. 15; Rev. xxi. 8.

We believe that every passage in which the term "death" occurs is sufficiently explained by applying the above definition.—E. Petavel, D. D.

---

*French mort; Sanscrit mar(an), to grind, or to crumble away angelsächsisch, to scatter. Death, from ancient Sanscrit, a destroy, to fall; Hebrew mo'th, according to Parkhurst, to sink in dissolution. Comp. 1 Sam. xxv. 38, Nabal, though struck by death, does not expire till ten days afterwards. Pentaglot, interpr. Jer. xlii. 17, 22. A contemporary thinker has defined death as "the last stage of congenital weakness. The second state of death, that of corruption, reduction to dust, has received in the Celtic language, the name almore, whence the Latin mors, mortis, the French mort, the Italian morte, the Spanish muerte. From mor comes the French marais, the English marsh, morass, the German sumpf, sumpf, morast, moor-land. The Greeks called the murderer lethe, from the Celtic substantive leh, English h-ll. And have not marshes always been considered as the lurking place of death, the lair of hideous reptiles, whose breath is poison? Is not Satan the prince of the lower regions? Hercules slew the hydra (from hudor, water) in the marsh of Lerna. Mor (French for ripe) formerly meant, the state of fruit almost to decay. In short, death, in all languages, means dissolution."—Knight-Horter, Scientific Etymologies three Ac Analysis.

†הָנֵךְ מֵת see also Isa. xxxiii, 1. (Heb.) A similar expression is found in the parable of the prodigal son: "My son was dead, and is alive again."

‡Hyper-since either prolepsis, i. e. quasi: Jam mortuum, confessim moriturum, mortis se reddit jure obnoxium." (Grimm, Clavis, N. T. Philologica.) "Under the power of death." (Alford.) "Mortal, and will certainly die." (Ingram Cobbin.)

§See the pathetic appeal of Adolphe Monod, "[illegible] and a [illegible]." "A dying man to dying men."

‖A prolepsis like at the heart of the controversy relative to imputed and inherent righteousness, faith and works. "God, who calleth things which be not as though they were (already)." Faith is regarded as a principle of life, and hence as a virtual reality. Faith, according to him, implies works, of which it is the germ. Faith and works may be compared to the act of walking in reference to the direction taken. Both are alike indispensable for arriving at the goal; but walking occupies the inferior position, because it is mechanical, while the sense of the divine baptism knowledge and will. The theory of salvation by what one does, and that of salvation by what one believes, are united and reconciled in that of salvation by what one becomes; regeneration being unfailingly worked out by God in a true believer.

---

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 6.

Prelude—Egypt a Part of the Turkish or Ottoman Dynasty of the Mohammedan Empire—Arabia Produced Mohammed and his Empire—A Remarkable Country—Period of Mohammed's Birth—His Mission—His Empire.

Prelude—We have already stated that the Eastern Question is our specialty. Our reasons for so doing will appear as we progress. In attempting to solve this problem we shall be obliged to examine its principal phases, and its various complications. If, at times, we seem obscure, and deficient in method, the reader must overlook these weaknesses. So many thoughts press their claims to precedence, that, like recruits, it is a severe task to keep them in rank or under any proper and necessary discipline. Too numerous to count—their name is legion. A few specimens will illustrate our difficulties. We cannot take our pen to compose without such thoughts crowding for utterance as the following:

We are evidently living at the "Time of the end." Who ever saw the world in such a bustle as at present? No walking about. All are in haste; running to and fro, as if they had something vital to do or to communicate. No sooner is one invention legally patented than it is thrown aside by one superior. We must be down among the shadows of the last days. Time flies; who can discern the next scene in the world's great drama? Is it the advent? Is it the rapture? Who, then, will be taken? Where taken? How long in the heavens? What will the nations be about during that time? Is the world in the condition predicted at Christ's return? Where is the Hebrew nation? Are not its elements still among all nations? Who will gather Judah and Israel? We know Judah by his face; but where is Israel? What is his other name? Is it Saxon? Is it Britain, or Gursan? What is the mission of England? What the position of the United States? Position of Russia? Position of Britain in the coming contest? What will be the fate of the Ottoman dynasty? What will be the position of Germany, France, Spain, Austria and Italy? What are the three angels? The three unclean spirits? The Dragon? The Beast? The False Prophet? What shall be the fate of the Mohammedan empire? The fate of the Dragon? Of the Beast? Where will the Russian army fall? Will it be composed of all the Eastern idolatrous nations? What is the Euphrates of Rev. xvi. 12? Who are the kings of the east? What is mystic Babylon? What three systems of false religions control the three empires of Satan's triple empire? What countries will be united with Palestine in Israel's restored nationality? Will Egypt be in that nationality? Will Assyria be one of its parts? Will the British lion be there? Who gathers the powers to the battle of that great day? Will Japan, China and India be gathered to the final event in the army of the Dragon? Will the emperor of Russia command them? In what order will the false systems of religion be overthrown? Will it be inversely as their light; the great apostacy first; then the crescent; and last paganism? Do not Rev. xvii., xviii., six and xx. teach that order?

Egypt is a part of the Turkish or Ottoman dynasty of the Mohammedan empire, partaking, however, more of the Arabian or Saracenic dynasty. Head of the Ottoman. Her population and her religion are principally Arabian. The Mohammedan empire is founded upon the union of church and state; the altar, however, rules the throne. What position will Egypt occupy in the approaching contest? This will be examined and answered in its proper order. For a new prophet, a new religion, and a new empire, it was necessary to select a new territory; one outside of the boundaries of the four Gentile monarchies. Such a land was found in the Arabian peninsula; inhabited by a people dwelling alone and free. This country was wisely selected to be the home of this extraordinary people and religion of this remarkable empire.

We shall now describe the land, the people, the prophet, his religion and his empire, as it existed under himself, his caliphs constituting the Arabian or Saracenic dynasty; and under the Sultans which formed the Turkish or Ottoman dynasty of the Mohammedan empire.

1. Arabia is a name variously derived. It is derived by some from Araba — level waste. Such is not Arabia. Others say it comes from Eber—wanderer—same meaning and derivation as the word Hebrew. Others derive it from the Hebrew word Arab —to go down, — since Arabia was towards the going down of the sun to the inhabitants on the Euphrates. The Hebrew word Arabah—barren place—would suit part of Arabia.

Allow us to add another derivative to the above list. The Hebrew verb אָרַב a-rab—He lay in wait, hid, concealed himself, entrapped, seized, rushed upon, plotted, devised evil. Deut. xix. 11; Job xxxi. 8; Jer. ii. 12. Hence, also, we have אֹרֶב a-reb—a den, lurking place. So likewise אַרְבֶּה areh-beh—locust, the most ravenous and destructive insect. The noun אֲרַב a-rab (a rab) is applied to the inhabitants of Arabia, because they, like wild beasts, always lie in wait to seize upon their prey. Jos. xv. 52. Arabia is the original home of the locust. It is the Arabian or Locustian peninsula. One of the Egyptian plagues originated in central Arabia. Ex. x. 13, 14.

Arabia is a peninsula, triangular in shape; in length 1,500 miles, and half that in width, containing 1,200,000 square miles, and a population of about 4,000,000. An oblong basin, with two-thirds of its rim well watered, fertile, and abundant in its various productions, while the vessel itself is full of mountains, rocks and sands, driven by the deadly simoon. Above is the cloudless sky and the burning sun. It is like the apple of Sodom; without fair, but within, full of dust and sand; the original home of the horse, the camel, and the locust, which last has given the country its name. It is the land of "the terrible wilderness."

Without one navigable river, or any railway, its internal commerce is carried on camels, "the ships of the desert." That country, composed of rocks, tempestuous sands, and a waste howling wilderness, has been a theatre where the God of Israel has exhibited his wonderous acts, and his immutable purposes. It has its Sinai, where the law was given to Moses, amidst lightnings and thunders, and the voice of the trumpet. It has its horrible wilderness, God's school house where he instructed and disciplined his people for the space of forty years. It is the home of Mohammed, who, with the Koran in one hand, and the sword in the other, pierced and demolished the throne of idolatry both in the heathen world, and among the nations of apostate Christendom. It is the original seat of a religion and an empire which spread over and conquered the Eastern world, has stood the shocks of more than twelve centuries; and which now has a church of 180,000,000 of most fanatical, zealous and devoted members. Who can not trace the divine foot-steps among the nations?

2. The people of Arabia—The inhabitants of Arabia are as remarkable as the country itself. It was at first the land of Cush. They, passing away, were succeeded by the family of Shem, Ishmael, being only a naturalized citizen, at a later date—"Arabicized." It was first settled by Joktan, grandson of Shem. His family being pure Arabs; the descendants of Ishmael "are held to be only Arabicized." Joktan's thirteenth son was called Job-ab, a name compounded from Job and Ab—father. Father Job. Of Job we have a history in the Bible, and a book called after his name, the Book of Job.

Job was an Arabian prince; and, from tradition and scraps of history it would appear that he, with his flocks, as a shepherd prince, made his way into Egypt, and, under the express instructions of Jehovah, superintended the building of the Great Pyramid, the sign to Egypt and wonder of the last days. Should it be established that Job is the Melchizedek, it will add much to the Arabian character, since Job, in point of character is ranked with Noah and Daniel. Many noble families in Arabia now boast of being descendants from Job, and also carry the same name.

The land itself, of Arabia, as well as of all other countries, has much to do in forming the character of its inhabitants. They form two classes; the settled population, dwelling in towns and cities, and cultivators of the soil, and the Bedouins, or the roving inhabitants of the desert.

Industry and enterprize are not Arabian attributes. An author remarks: Arabia "is the anti-Industrial central point in the world." Should we make the habitable globe with its moving masses a vast circular tree, revolving around one common centre, the Arabian would occupy that centre while the Anglo-Saxon race would rapidly revolve near its circumference. Socially and morally they have been standing still for forty centuries, or at least from the days of Abraham.

The nomadic Arabs are Ishmaelites, the descendants of Keturah. They have but little resemblance to the citizen descendants of Joktan. The country of Arabia has never been fully subjugated by either of the four Gentile monarchies. This has been owing partly to their independent tribal existence, but more particularly to their physical ramparts. No army can subsist in the sandy wilds of the interior. Prophecy indicates vast changes in the land, and also in the people of Arabia. What changes will be shown as we advance. To the future, therefore, we postpone this division of our subject.

3. The Prophet of Arabia—Mohammed's introduction to the outer world, was sudden and very extraordinary. All the east had fallen before the armies of Chosroes, the great king (of Persia) whose power and external pomp far exceeded those of Solomon. In the midst of his glory, when intoxicated with his own splendor, as a demi-god, a letter was handed him from an obscure resident of Mecca, commanding him to receive Mohammed as the prophet and apostle of God. Mohammed then uttered this prediction, (the epistle being torn into fragments and thrown into the Kurasco river) "It is thus that God will tear the kingdom, and reject the supplications of Chosroes." This prediction was soon accomplished by Heraclius, the Greek emperor.

Who was this prophet that dared to utter such lofty aspirations? Mohammed the Arabian. Let us glance at his early years. Mohammed (the glorified), surnamed Aboul Cassem, was born at Mecca, the tenth of November, A. D. 570. He was descended from the tribe of Koreish; the noblest and the most powerful in Arabia. His parents dying in his early childhood, he was placed under the care of his uncle, Abu Talib, by whom he received the kindest attention.

J. P. WEETHEE.

---

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

Editor Restitution:

Perhaps many of your readers will be interested in the movements of Brother Ramsey. As it was well known to many that my health was failing and that I was induced by the intercession of friends and advice of my physician to travel, and as obedience is better than sacrifice, I concluded to obey orders, and accordingly fell into line armed and equipped as the law directs.

September 7th found myself and companion bidding adieu to the loved ones at home, and setting our faces toward the place of the rising sun. In due time we arrived in Chicago, wonderful Chicago; wonderful for its rapid growth and its sluggish river, its busy marts and its tipping corner halls, its temples of worship and its dens of infamy, also for the size of its purse and the depth of its poverty. But with all its wonders, none exceed the love of friends that has stood the ravages of time and still manifests itself as fresh as when first born into the world of friendship. After spending ten days in Chicago, visiting friends and reviving former associations, we again entered the chariot "whose wheels are like the whirlwind" and soon were flying toward the rock-bound coast of the Atlantic via Grand Trunk R. R. whose accommodations cannot be rivaled in empty water tanks, absent drinking cups and dirty cars. But patience and time were friendly and brought us safely through landing us in the town of White River Junction on Wednesday the 20th. Here commenced the second installment of visiting, followed by a visit up Otte Quechee River where we spent the first day worshiping with the Advent Church and preached for the first time since we left home, being wonderfully helped by fifty-six testamonies given as a prelude to the sermon. No wonder that even a sick man could preach with such auxiliaries as these. But the wonder to the writer was where did the people come from, for the Otte Quechee seemed to demand about all the available space between the green-caped rock-bound hill on either side.

Now and then a little space beside the dancing stream revealed to the eye of the traveler its line of stately sugar trees, interspersed with orchards here and there, laden with golden fruit. And then anon the busy hum of whirling industry. The buzzing saw, the noisy loom, the bleating sheep, the lowing cow, all these give evidence that even among the Green Mouns there is life, peace, and prosperity. Right there I began to feel enthused with new vigor; life seemed to flow with fresh and quickened blood and Ramsey began to be himself again, thanks be to the giver of every good and perfect gift. But right here when I pass the line between Vermont and New Hampshire, I will pause in this communication and if the patient editor does not consign this to the waste basket I will resume my notes from time to time, but at present farewell.

C. C. RAMSAY.

P. S.—For appointments address me at Exeter, New Hampshire.

C. C. R.

---

News Items.

NEW FRENCH RAILROAD IN AFRICA.

PARIS, Oct. 17.—Eighty Frenchmen, assisted by 1,500 African laborers, are about to commence the construction of a railway between the Niger and Senegal Rivers. Their operations will be protected by a military column, which will plant the French flag and erect two forts on the Niger.

It is only a few years since the interior of Africa stood for all that was mysterious in geography. The imagination alone could penetrate the jungles of that unexplored continent, and the question, Where does the Nile take its rise? could not be settled. Now travelers have marched across Africa, and cleared up many of its mysteries, and railroads are beginning to penetrate it in various directions. The latest undertaking of this kind is that of the Frenchmen who are to begin the construction of a railroad between the Niger and Senegal rivers. The light of civilization goes with the locomotive, and in a few years more, probably, there will be no more any mystery in Africa.

AUSSIA—FIRE IN ST. PETERSBURG.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 23.—A fire broke out this morning in some large lumber yards by the river Neva and is still raging.

EGYPT—COMMANDER OF THE ARMY.

CAIRO, Oct. 23.—Baker Pasha has been officially appointed to command the Egyptian army.

TUNIS.

France has at last taken supreme control of Tunis. This has been anticipated by close observers of France's recent military operations in that country.

FRENCH CONTROL.

PARIS, Oct. 23.—The Bey of Tunis has made a treaty with France by which that power assumes the debt of Tunis, organizes an administration of justice, and takes charge of all the public property, giving the Bey a retiring allowance.

The city of Manila, in the Philippine Islands, which was recently scourged by the cholera, was last Saturday in great part destroyed by a terrible cyclone.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 23.—A cablegram from Manila, Philippine Islands, says: "Business is suspended here, owing to the terrible cyclone of October 20, which caused great destruction to buildings and beached thirteen vessels."

There is no abatement in the yellow-fever epidemic at Pensacola.

A LADY WHO SAW WASHINGTON TAKE THE OATH.

Mrs. Catharine Cole Morris, who died on Thursday in her 96th year, at the house of her daughter, Mrs. L. J. Belloni, 131 West 126th street, was born in Vandewater street, in the Swamp. Her father held her on his shoulder on March 30, 1789, to see General Washington in Wall street take the oath as first President of the United States.

The first regular passenger train over the Nickel-Plated Railroad arrived in Buffalo at 9:20 o'clock Sunday evening. The train was made up at Conneaut, O., and was composed of engine No. 202, a mail, express and baggage-car, and two first-class coaches. A speed of forty-five miles an hour was attained for some distance east of Dunkirk.

William Penn landed at Chester, Pa., two hundred years ago yesterday, Oct. 27; and the Friends yesterday assembled at the meeting-house in that city to commemorate that event. A letter from John G. Whittier was read, inclosing a poem which he wrote sixty years ago. Addresses were delivered by Alfred H. Lane, President of the Pennsylvania Peace Society, and John M. Broomall, of Medina, O. This is the beginning of a week's incidents in that State, commemorating the bi-centennial. In Philadelphia it will be a week of interesting events and ceremonies.

---

If in a dark business we perceive God to light us by the lantern of his providence, it is good to follow the light obediently, lest we lose it by lagging behind.

---

Married.

At St. Joseph, Mich., Sept. 28, 1882, Alexander Scrogg, of Paris, Edgar county, Illinois, and Azorah M. Hatch, of St. Joseph, Berrien county, Mich.

---

I will be at Macedonia on Friday before the fifth Sunday in October, and speak as Brother Slusser may appoint.

A. B. OPEY.

---

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Age to come not a heresy," "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 30c., sixteen for $1.00.

---

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Fettingell, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Trilemma," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now exciting such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 300 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

---

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the apostle, the New and the Davidian covenants; their relation and relationship to each other. By C. H. Myers. 140 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Tenth Sol Front or a coloring view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Miss Hand. 40 pages, price 25cts.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Miss Hand. 48 pages, price 25cts.

Natural Immortality, an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact defense and Bible view of material immortality, not by birth but by grace. By C. H. L. Crosier. 18 pages, price 10cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, who he is? By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, '82, put into tract form.

The Sick-side Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By C. H. Myers. Price 25cts.

Poetry.

SELF-QUESTIONING.

BAY PALMER.

"One of you shall betray me."—Matt. xxvi. 21.

Oh, tell me, Jesus, to my heart—
My troubled heart—the secret tell;
May I from thee and thine depart,
As Judas, when he falsely fell?
Is it not he, this kissing flame,
That warms my heart at sin's dry name
Falls on my willing ear?
Is it not faith that oft hath brought
My trembling soul the peace it sought,
And stilled each restless fear?

This quiet joy that hidden flows
Deep in my soul, and where no wind,
Though many a rude wind round me blows,
And many a current makes me wind:
Can this mean joy that ever flows
Be aught but that the peace given,
To faithful souls revealed?
The precious and the living stone
That gladdens all it meets—the white
Worn unbelief concealed?

The tears that oft these eyes have wept,
When I before thy feet have knelt,
Or watch alone thy cross have kept,
And all thy pangs have keenly felt:
Came they not from that holy grief
That brings the broken heart relief,
And softens e'en to love?
Was not the hope that quickened them
Hope that shall triumph o'er decay,
And bear the soul above?

Speak, thou that knowest well, beside,
If I am false, or clasp thy hand,
And wherefore feet would stray or slide,
Then firmly hold and bid me stand,
Go forth from thee? Give me to bear
Thy bitter cross, thy thorns to wear;
But let me not depart!
No, Lord, afresh to thee I bring,
A free, a cheerful offering,
This trusting, grateful heart.

Selection.

The Relative Position and Occupation of the Church—The Body of Christ—In the Millennial Kingdom.

1. The promise involved in the mystic prophecy that the seed of the woman should crush the serpent's head, in due time found the beginning of its fulfilment in the birth of the Redeemer, Incarnate God! His advent was announced by an angelic proclamation of "Good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Heaven re-echoed the song, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace," and the manifestation of the "good will" of God to man. Redemption of the entire foreelected family of God, in all its branches, under whatever circumstances, by whatever means, or at whatever period that blessing might become a conscious reality to the several bodies concerned, was thus heralded from the throne of God. He spoke, and there appeared the Light of a new creation, "A Savior, Christ the Lord!"

I said that the beginning of the promise was fulfilled at his birth, which was but in process of performance in his life and at his death, and even in his resurrection. The full purport of the angelic message was not then, and has not been yet, manifested.

The first advent was necessarily in order to a second, that has been anticipated by ancient seers in language glowing with expectation and delight. "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

2. My subject embraces the position and action of two distinct bodies of the family of the redeemed, and that in order to the salvation of a third during the kingdom to come, and by this means fulfilling the above promise. The two first are the church, the body of Christ, a heavenly body, and the nation of Israel, an earthly body. Of the former of these two it is said by Christ himself, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father on his throne." Rev. iii. 21. Of which throne it is said in the next chapter, that it is both a throne "whose foundation is righteousness and judgment" (Psa. xcvii. 2), and also of peace, a throne from which operation is to be governed on earth by him who will sit on it, together with his royal and priestly associates.

Of the second body, national Israel, it is said, "Arise, shine! for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold! the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy resurrection." "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit."

Of the Lord himself, the word speaks, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Isa. ix. 6, 7. And again, "All kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him." "For the kingdom is the Lord's and he is governor among the nations." "Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." These are but introductory references to hundreds of similar Divine truths; moreover, they are revealed facts, dogmatically communicated, resting solely on the basis of Divine authority, apart from any lessons from God who proclaims them, or any deductions or systems of theology that may be drawn from them. Hark to the condensed statement of the apostle James at the dawn of the Christian era! "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." "That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things." Acts xv. 14, 17. Here is hope for the perfect literal fulfilment of the promise of the angel herald at the birth of the Savior; and the declaration of the very object for which the kingdom of the heavens will be established on earth.

3. "I will return!" "This is emphatic, admitting of no sceptical adulteration. But when and how? "Immediately after the tribulation" of the Anti-christian reign of blasphemy, idolatry and bloodshed; when the Jews, remnant of the Judean tribes, shall be sorely besieged in Jerusalem, "crying day and night to God" for deliverance. "And shall he not avenge his own elect?" The reply is, that "he will avenge them speedily;" which saying is directly connected with the advent of the Son of Man as recorded by Zechariah the prophet, who, writing of "The day of the Lord," says that its opening scene will be ushered in by the display of the nations in league with the Antichrist gathered together against Jerusalem, when the city will be taken, and the Jewish remnant in despair. "Then will the Lord go forth and fight against those nations." "As the lightning flashes forth from the east unto the west, so shall be" the power, the glory, and the suddenness of his appearance, when "His feet shall touch the Mount of Olives" for the deliverance of his city and his people. The heavens shall burst open and reveal him in the irresistible majesty of glory as the embodied fulfilment of "The word of God," accompanied by a mighty host of angels, and by the members of his body, "the armies which were in heaven," the victors in the great "war in the firmament," to which the living and the raised will be called to meet their Lord by "the voice of the archangel and the (Apostolic) trumpet of God," where they will be manifested overcomers "by the blood of the Lamb," and then, with him transported to "the throne of God;" whence they will come forth, as I have described, with the returning Lord, for the destruction of the Satanic Gentile Gothick and his armies by the "Sharp Sword" of Divine promise, "treading the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God," thus manifestly assuming the title that has long been pronounced, "King of kings and Lord of lords."

4. The body of Christ are, at the close of this scene, seen to occupy their assigned position, sitting on thrones of judgment. "The times of the Gentiles" will have passed, and the kingdom of the heavens become a manifest power on earth. The action of the judicial body of Christ, just referred to from 4th verse of Rev. xx., stamps at the outset the function of that body during the 1,000 years of the kingdom in its primary or Davidical phase. For the exercise of this office the saints will have been instructed and prepared, for having been characteristically separated from the world by the cross of Christ to be divine witnesses to its exceeding evil, they will have been translated beforehand that they might behold from heaven the righteous outpour of the vials of the wrath of God on the disobedient rejecters of his gospel, and blasphemous opposers of the sovereignty of his Son. As Moses was hidden in the cleft of the rock alone with God, heard how the name of Jehovah was manifested in showing mercy to thousands, though by no means clearing the guilty. As Abraham dwelt in the plains of Mamre, where, in the land of Canaan, he was persuaded there were not ten righteous men in Sodom, and could testify that "The Judge of all the earth" must act righteously in its destruction. As Enoch had walked with God and entered into his mind, having borne witness to the judgment of ungodly sinners at the coming of the Lord, and having been taken up to heaven to witness the coming in of the flood on the world of corruption, he could understand how righteous would be the judgments of the future world in its flagrantly apostate state, of which he had prophesied. Similar needful lessons will the body of Christ have learnt in heaven in order to fit its members for their judicial powers when reigning in authority with their exalted Head. To substantiate which truth I refer to Rev. ii. 26, 27, where the "overcomers" of professing Christendom, or the ecclesia of the present age, are promised at the end "power over the nations to rule them with a rod of iron;" the same words that are applied to God's King when in authority on Zion's hill, and prove these overcomers to be about to act jointly with him in restraint of rebellious kings. See Psa. ii. The 149th Psalm iterates the same promise to the "saints in glory," whose power shall be exercised in "executing vengeance on heathen nations, and binding their "kings with chains and their nobles with fetters of iron." "Know ye not," says Paul, addressing the Christian body, "that the saints shall judge the world?" Such then is the appointed avocation of the church at the period of which I am speaking.

5. Let us glance now at the ecclesiastical ministers of the Lord of the whole earth, of whom it was once said, that, in a regenerated state, they "should be a kingdom of priests, a holy nation." Behold! Israel then with "a new heart and a new spirit, having also the Spirit of God in perfect obedience in their land." The ancient faithful remnant with the patriarchs and prophets raised from the dead, "One nation upon the mountains of Israel," once more under a pure theocracy "that the heathen may know that I am the Lord, and will magnify myself, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of Israel for evermore." Ezek. xxxvi. xxxvii.

It was declared sevenfold by the prophet Isaiah, that Israel nationally should be witnesses for Jehovah to the heathen nations that he was God alone, that beside him there was no Lord, no Savior, no Deliverer, that he was Creator and King of Israel. Isa. xliii. For this reason "when the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he arranged their boundaries with reference to the position" of Israel on the earth. I need not enter here into the well-known facts of the national failure, apostasy, and idolatry; this was but natural to the corrupt Adam state; but the decrees of God know no failure, their fulfilments are "all yea in Christ Jesus." As there was failure in the flesh, it was but a Divine postponement in order to their discipline, and preparation as perfected "witnesses" in a regenerate condition, when once more in the land of promise and testimony; circumcised, not in the flesh, but in heart; as true descendants of Abraham, of whom it was said that in his "seed which is Christ," all nations should be blessed. This blessing is thus defined—the gospel has had its first instalment during the present alienation of Israel; but the apostle adds, if that be but a part, how much greater riches of blessing shall not the Gentile nations receive when Israel shall be themselves the objects of salvation, and Christ, or the Messiah shall be in the midst of them, the Divine source of all blessing, when "the government shall be upon his shoulder," and peace, judgment, and justice shall flow from the re-established throne of David. "It shall come to pass that I will gather all nations and tongues that have not heard my fame, and seen my glory, and in that day a man shall cast his idols of silver and gold to the moles and the bats." Moreover "in that day all nations shall flow with eagerness to the house of the God of Jacob, to the mountain of the Lord, and he will teach us of his ways." Oh! hear the rapture of the prophet when he says, "How beautiful upon these mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth salvation; who saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth." For "the Lord will make bare his arm," that the print of his nails may bear witness, "and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God." His words not his messengers alone to do his work, but by personal supervision attests the importance of this mission; as of old, when he sent the representative seventy "before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come!" Luke x. 1. Moreover, just as the church will have received her Divine lessons that shall fit the saints for the exercise of their judicial functions, so is Israel, whilst the severity of Divine chastisement, now scattered throughout the nations of the world, learning their languages and manners, thus becoming the best adapted missionaries for the abolition of idolatry and the presentation of the tidings of salvation.

6. It is a remarkable circumstance, overlooked by commentators, that chapters liii. lv. of Isaiah—which are in direct sequence to chap. lii. from which I have quoted the personal testimony of the Messiah himself to "The salvation of God" among the heathen—record the very words that missionary Israel will proclaim to those heathen in the presence of the Lord! Mark well the language, and the past tense of the verbs used! When despised and rejected by men, "We hid our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him smitten of God, and afflicted." But we have since been humbled and confess before you, that "He was wounded for our transgressions, and with his stripes we are healed." Behold him, and those very wounds by which, through faith, we stand before you now objects of Divine grace and mercy, a "white-robed priestly nation." The several merciful that Israel will have received in repentance, are then related in chap. liv., and then comes the invitation of richest graces in chap. lv. "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; come ye, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, and he will abundantly pardon." The exhortation then closes with the promise, that just as the inheritance of Israel will have become a land flowing with milk and honey, the desert rejoicing and blossoming as the rose, so shall the countries of repentant nations be blessed, "instead of the thorn there shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree!" The testimony of glad tidings is thus shown in its completeness.

The result may be seen in several Scriptures. In the great Epistle of Redemption (Romans), after describing the work itself, the three bodies of the redeemed are specified. First, the church in chap. viii. Secondly, Israel, nationally, in chap. xi., and lastly, the Gentile nations, who are said to rejoice together with Israel, at the period when the Messiah "the root of Jesse" shall be reigning over the Gentiles" on earth (chap. xv). The same truth is stated in Psa. xxii., the Psalm of Redemption, in which, from verse 22 to the end, the three parties are specified as the objects thereof.

In the 7th chapter of Revelation, in which the twelve tribes of Israel are by a numeral symbol distinctly seen as "sealed" unto salvation, there is revealed, as "sealed" under the same seal, "an innumerable multitude of all nations" in white robes with palms of victory standing before the millennial throne. Nor is it difficult to understand how these nations of the earth are thus bound together in the same bundle of life with Israel. Since we have so distinct an explanation in Isa. xxvii. 6, where it is written, "He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root, Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." Is this not the fulfilment of the 12th verse of Rom. xi.?

7. This being the appointed mission of Israel, and one of the objects for which the kingdom will be established, it is essential, in conclusion, to contrast the causes by which the millennial age will be characterized by so vast a superiority of spiritual fruit over the present age. The result or Divine purpose, may be given in a few words. In the present age of "grace by faith," God is only forming an Eve of the new creation, an helpmeet for the last Adam, when he shall manifestly enter on his dominion of creation. In the age to come, viz., that of the personal dominion of the last Adam and Eve, one of ocular faith, God will complete his family, or, as said at the beginning, they will "be faithful and multiply, and replenish the new earth!"

The means in aid of the accomplishment of this latter purpose are sevenfold.

a. The Lord Jesus, as Son of God, will be crowned and married in heaven. Rev. xi. 15-end; xix. 7-9. As son of David, he will necessarily be crowned and married on earth. I strictly avoid all imaginary circumstances, confining my remarks on these events in accord with Divine permission, which says that the events in the early history of Israel are typically figurative of those that belong to their later career.† 1 Cor. x. 1-11. As regards the marriage, I will merely point to the typical scene in Cana of Galilee (John ii.) It is of the glory of the resurrection I would now speak, for it will be the principal evidence of the object of the kingdom, in view of all nations. the enthronement of young Joash, who had been hidden for seven years, is singularly illustrative of the coming scene (2 Kings xi.), to which you may refer, but there is a nobler type, the triumphant entry of the ark, the symbolic throne of the Lord of hosts, into Jerusalem, when David gathered all Israel together, and organized a national procession with musicians and choirs of singers. 2 Sam. vi. Once more will he be required to gather the nation to bring into Jerusalem—not the ark, but—the King himself, who said, "The place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet!" Ezek. xliii. 7. An exceeding great army of patriarchs, princes and prophets, all white-robed priests, shall swell the pageant, shouting their hosannahs to "the King of glory," the Lord of the whole earth; and, as in Psa. xxiv., bidding the everlasting gates of resuscitated and beautiful Jerusalem to open to him who "cometh in the name of JEHOVAH!"

b. That the King will also be the guardian deliverer of Israel from all foreign enemies, will be made known to all nations by the sudden invasion of the land by Russian hordes assisted by Persia and Ethiopia at the beginning of the millennium, when Israel will be living in unsuspicious security. These vast legions will be permitted to enter the land, and there be destroyed by sword, fire and brimstone and hail from heaven, leaving but a sixth part to be afterwards dealt with. So great will be the multitude of invaders, that it will take seven months to bury the slain. Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix.

c. Satan, who since the day of the Pentecost, has hindered the gospel by every lying and subtle means, will, during the ministry of Israel, be securely bound in the abyss, to prevent any hindrance, that the word of God may have free course amongst the nation. Rev. xx.

d. The New Jerusalem will have "descended out of heaven," and be manifested in the firmament in its golden and jewelled glory. A city having the glory of God, whose light is the Lamb, whose throne as Son of God will be in it, and where will be manifested in glory, the wife of the Lamb, as inheriting the mansions of their Father's house. Thus, however, would fail to describe this wondrous city, but it is displayed in all detail in Rev. xxi.

e. The earthly city of Jerusalem, renovated and rebuilt in the gorgeous excellency described in Isa. lx. and Ezek. xlv. 6, xlviii. 15 to end. "The city of the Great King," whose "walls shall be Salvation, and her gates Praise." Between these two cities will be angelic intercommunication, fulfilling the type of Jacob's ladder, for the perfect judicial and ecclesiastical government. The new temple also will be erected on a mountain to the north of the city. Ezek. xli., xliii.

f. Entire removal of the curse, and the restitution of Eden-like fertility to the land, together with the Eden condition of the animal creation, for the last Adam is the Creator thereof. Isa. xxxv., ii. 3, xl.

g. A river of living water shall burst forth from the Temple in two streams, one towards the Mediterranean, and the other towards the Dead Sea. The latter will be healed and become a fresh-water lake, productive of fish and vegetation of luxuriant trees on its shores. Ezek. xlvii.

8. These miraculous phenomena will be divinely permitted in attestation of Israel's mission, the record announcing them is, in almost every instance, accompanied by the significant words, "That the heathen may know that I am the Lord." Proving thereby that the object of the mission will be the extirpation of idolatry (Isa. ii.), and conversion of these nations to the knowledge of the one true God! Or, in the words of the apostle, "That the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them!"

From what I have advanced from the Word of God, I emphatically and boldly affirm that there can be no second advent, no kingdom, nor Apocalypse of the Son of God, in a Scriptural sense, that is not demonstrated to have for one of the great objects the fulfilment of the covenant made to the fathers of Israel (Num. xv. 8–12) in regard to the salvation of the heathen nations, by the means which I have described: and that is not preceded and accompanied by such events and phenomena as those I have deduced from the Revealed Word. Gen. xxii. 17, 18; xxviii. 14, 15; Isa. 1–4; Acts xv. 14–17.—H. Goodwyn, in Rainbow.

*The other object is judgment of quick and dead, as stated in 2 Tim. iv. It into which I do not enter here.

†In my "Antitypical Parallels" these events are fully explained.

THE MOHAMMEDAN PILGRIMAGE.

The Route to Mecca—The Preparations, etc.

The Egyptian route is from Cairo on the track taken by the ancient Israelites across the desert to Suez, and from thence across the "great and terrible wilderness" of North Arabia to Arkabe, at the head of the eastern branch of the Red Sea. Striking southward, it proceeds through the desolate and dangerous regions of West Arabia, until at length, after a journey of 1,000 miles, the sight of Mecca, "the inviolable," gives the pilgrim hope of rest and safety. The trials to which "faith" is exposed in this journey are almost beyond endurance. Fatigue kills many. Thirst destroys many more. Ablution and cleanliness are impracticable. The caravan, as it toils its slow length along, scorched by the sun, suffocated by dust, and followed by the famished vulture, is a moving miasma. But the caravan, while it parts with its living load, gets richer as it goes. The treasures of the dead pilgrims swell the money bags and distend the wallets of the survivors to an extent which enables the stronger members of the diminished host to devote larger funds to the service of alms, feasts and sacrifices in Mecca than would in weaker hands have been regarded as prudent or possible.

The Syrian route is from Damascus, running in its course along the range of mountains which form the eastern side of the Valley of the Jordan, and passing through the old countries of Moab, Ammon and Midian. Leaving the trans-Jordanic regions, it traverses Arabia Petræa and the great Central Desert of Arabia, proceeding to Bir Azreh and thence, after a journey of 1,600 miles, to Mecca. This extraordinary journey, which for the greater part passes between sterile mountain ranges, and over immense sandy wastes, is not less perilous or less fatal in character than that which sadly distinguishes the Egyptian route. The suffering and mortality of the pilgrims exceed in degree those of the average calamities of war, and are only to be matched in records of famine and pestilence. The wearied caravan arrives at Mecca despoiled of much of its living freight, and of the victims who have survived, numbers weakened by disease, fail to obtain strength for the observance of the exhausting ceremonies of the holy festival, which consist in rapid marches round the Caaba, runnings between Safa and Merwa, throwing stones at evil spirits, ascents of Mount Ararat and tumultuous sacrifices of sheep, goats, kine or camels in the valley of Mina.

The principal marine routes are those followed in the voyages from the North African ports of Morocco, Algeria, Tunis and Tripoli to Egypt, the voyages from Constantinople, the ports of Turkey, and the voyages from India, Persia and the east coast of Africa. The passages by these routes being undertaken in sailing vessels ill-appointed and of small capacity, are tedious, dangerous and in all respects most unsatisfactory. To remedy the evils which at present attend the pilgrimage to Mecca, and to promote the good which it is capable of effecting, are not only humane objects, but they are of much commercial value and importance. The saving of human life is the first instinct of civilization, and the promotion of its well being is successfully sought through the instrumentality of commercial intercourse. The pilgrims trade as they travel. Mohammed says to them, "It shall be no crime in you to seek an income by trading during your pilgrimage." It is true that comparatively little trade is done, but to the amount effected it is of considerable importance, leading, as it does to an extension of the community of nations and to a profitable exchange of their respective products. The solution of the difficulties which beset the pilgrimage will be found in an abolition of the great land routes, and in the main a restriction of the passage to marine transit. The completion of the Suez Canal renders the solution easy by uniting the Mediterranean and the Red Sea and giving for the first time to the vast midland populations of Mohammedan countries a ready, healthful and economic approach to Mecca. It is ascertained that out of about 1,000,000 or more who annually contemplate making the pilgrimage to Mecca, but half of whom are deterred from attempting it by the perils of the journey, about 300,000 are prepared to take the advantages of a direct sea route.

The number of pilgrims who visit Mecca annually is estimated at not less than 150,000 to 180,000. The day of the "Courban Bairam," or Great Feast, is the day on which the pilgrims must be present in Mecca. On reaching the Meccan coast the pilgrims debark at Yambo or the flourishing town of Joddah, the port of Mecca. Joddah is also the principal port of both sides of the Red Sea. Besides the extra steamers which touch at it during the pilgrimage to Mecca season, the steamers of the British India, the Austrian Lloyds, the Russian (Odessa), the Turkish Asiatic, and the Egyptian Khedive Companies call regularly at Joddah. The towns of Souakim, Hodeida, Mocha, and Massowah (for Abyssinia), as well as the caravans for the interior of Arabia and those for the interior of Abyssinia and Upper Egypt (Dongola, Darfour, Senaar and Central Africa), take their supplies of stock from Joddah and bring their supplies of produce for sale to Joddah. The exports consist chiefly of Mocha coffee, hides and skins, wool, ivory, camel's hair, wax, gums, tortoise shell, mother-of-pearl, ostrich feathers, sienna, gray amber, coral, aloes, spices, balsam, drugs, incense, myrrh, etc. The imports are Manchester manufactures, Madapollams, gray shirtings, Turkey red yarn, American petroleum, tin plates, candles, biscuits, hardware, knives, razors, scissors, locks, bolts, hinges, screws, nails, white metal spoons, petroleum lamps, leather traveling bags, crockery ware, jewelry, chains, watches, etc. The Sultan of Turkey is considered the Supreme Chief of the Mohammedan faith, and the direct living representative of the Prophet, and consequently the numbers of the "Faithful" who seek the "First Temple" never fail to pray for him and for the safety of the Ottoman Empire. None but those of the Mohammedan religion are allowed to pass the gates of Mecca, although some three or four other creeds have succeeded in penetrating undetected within its precincts, but of course at the risk of their lives; in fact, it is most dangerous for any Christian or Jew to go beyond the outskirts of Joddah.

About ten days after the "Courban Bairam," or Great Feast, the pilgrims begin to collect at Joddah to take steamer on their homeward journey, and their embarkation lasts generally about ten days. After that there is a lull for a short time until the arrival of the pilgrims who shall have visited Medina likewise, and these are generally ready to take steamer at Joddah about seventy-five days after the "Courban Bairam" and for about eight or ten days. The rates of deck passages are: From Joddah, 40f to 60f each for Penang and Singapore, and about 20 rupees for Bombay. It can be easily understood that the steamers carrying the pilgrims are not the preferable ones for Europeans, especially ladies and children, to travel by. To old travelers via the Red Sea it is needless to point out the extra danger or risk and inconvenience incurred on board of such vessels, especially at the season when the dangers of epidemic disease or contagion may be anticipated as likely to be prevalent. The plague, cholera and small-pox are more prevalent on the other side of the Suez Canal than on this, and epidemics often suddenly break out among the enormous mass of Mohammedan pilgrims to Mecca.—N. Y. Herald.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published prices. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

SMALL PAMPHLETS. Suitable for gratuitous circulation.
1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Alford, Bickersteth, Ice, Bonar, and others. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thought for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Two copies 5c., or assorted packages of 100, 30c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.
Can You Believe? A series of 24 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in our list.
The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof texts.
The Age to come not a Heresy. By H. V. Reed. Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two views of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible one.
Human Government a Failure. By A. E. Macgruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or 25 for 35c.
Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? H. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and last Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 25 for 60c.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Christian Union. Joel A. Almonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each; 25 for 50c, or 35 for $1.
The New Birth. Josiah Peirce.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Almonds.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Jas. Begg, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each; $2 per 100, or 25 for $1.
Do Evangelicals Own Bolshevik Motto. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.
Witchcraft Unveiled; or, the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Almonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 12 for $1.
The Restitution; or the world restored to its original state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Doctrine of Purgatory as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 25c.
A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. Price 15 cents, or 75 cts. per dozen.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Nancy Cambell, Presbytery of Cork. Usually the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.00.
The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. (Contains a map of Europe and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense practical interest. 128 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.
God's Plan of Salvation. J. T. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The Story of Jesus, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith are fully and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.
Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Dilworth. Price 10 cents.
Hymns of the Advent, in the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by Charles C. Barker. Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is of a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmist" and the music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 50c.

Poetry.

A HEART SEEKING GOD.

"Oh, give me back a world of life;
Something to love and trust,
Something to quench my inward strife,
And lift me from the dust.

"I cannot live with nature dead,
'Mid flow'rs and caverns blind.
Powerless on earth as overhead
To trace all-guiding Mind.

"Better the instinct of the brute
That feels its God afar,
Than reason in life's services mute,
Talking with every star.

"Better to be a shepherd's thoughtless trust
Than mankind's daring sense:
The fear that creeps along the dust
Than doubt in beauty fashion.

"And knowledge, if it end in woe,
If earth be reason's day,
I'll lose the pearl without a tear,
And reap my startled way.

"And let the pride of wisdom turned
Its crush the casted weeds it rules
If freezing gains and gains are earned,
And faith forbid to live."

—From "Thoughts of a Lonely Life."

Selections.

THE WHOLE MATTER BROUGHT TO A FOCUS.

Nebuchadnezzar's vision—The great image of four metals—Daniel's interpretation—A prophetic compendium of universal history—The prophecy fulfilled—Babylon, Persia, Greece and Rome—The Gothic subversion of the Roman Empire—Uprise of the Papacy—The appointed period of its dominion expired—Impending perdition of the corrupt body politic—The Eastern Question—The final situation—"Prophecy and the Eastern Question" an fanatical collocation of terms—The divine fiat—The world ripe for judgment—The glorious sequel—All hail the coming day!

In this, the concluding chapter, it will be of advantage to look at the whole matter brought to a focus in the two visions exhibited with the interpretation, to Daniel, a Jewish captive of the seed royal at the court of Nebuchadnezzar. The common prejudice against the visions of Daniel we may well disregard in view of Christ's allusion to Daniel as a prophet, in whose writings information was to be found as to the events revealed. Matt. xxiv. 15. "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth let him understand)."

In Dan. ii. we have a vision that is very simple, striking, historically true and very intelligible, in the scheme and upshot of it. Nebuchadnezzar had a dream. His dream was prefaced by little contemplation on his part, as he lay in bed before he went to sleep, with regard to the future. He at that time was head of an empire that had carried all before it. Kings were subject to him; and his authority was co-extensive with the civilized world. He naturally wondered what should be after him. God revealed this to him, and here is testified what was revealed. The revelation was imparted at first in the form of a dream, but he could not recall the dream. He summoned the magicians, astrologers, sorcerers, and Chaldeans to be brought before him, to tell him his dream and the interpretation of the dream, threatening death in case they did not do so. They could not supply the information desired, and the decree went forth that they should be slain. Daniel was among the wise men of the king and also his three companions, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, and they were included in the general edict that the wise men should be slain. Prompted by the natural desire for self-preservation, they that night assembled together in seclusion, and prayed to God that he would divulge this secret to them, that their lives might be saved. Their prayer was answered, and Daniel went next day before the king and said. "The secret which the king hath commanded cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, show unto the king;" but, says he, "There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days." Verse 27, 28. Then he tells his dream.

He says the king saw a great image composed of divers metals: the head of gold, the breast and arms of silver, the belly and thighs of brass, the legs of iron, the feet with the ten toes, part iron and part clay; and while the king looked at the image, he saw a little stone, cut out of an adjacent mountain without hands, descend with violence upon the feet of the image, as the result of which, the image crumbled to pieces, was reduced to powder, the dust of which was carried away by the wind: and the little stone, gradually enlarging in size, became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. This was the dream, and he says, "I will show the interpretation: Thou, O king, art a king of kings .... Thou art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom," not a kingdom in the limited sense of a dominion recognising the sovereignty of a king, but a kingdom in the sense in which the empire of Babylon was a kingdom: that is an imperial power overshadowing all other nations; "and after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee," and, therefore, represented by silver, which is inferior to gold; and after that a third kingdom of brass, represented by the belly and thighs of brass; and, after that, there shall be another kingdom strong as iron, which shall be greater than the others, inasmuch as he says: the iron is stronger than the other metals: but he says, as ye saw the iron mixed with the iron towards the feet, so as ye get towards that period of time, the kingdom will be weakened by the introduction of a foreign element. And then he says (verse 44), in the days of those kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever: forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver and the gold;" as much as to say, "the meaning of the stone descending and destroying the image is, that God will set up a kingdom that will supersede all the human empires that will appear on earth."

Now what do we find in regard to the history thus foreshadowed? We find that it has run in the course marked out up to the present moment. The empire of Daniel was succeeded (before even Daniel had passed off the scene), by the empire of the Medes and Persians. The empire of the Medes and Persians was succeeded by the brazen-coated Greek empire, appropriately represented by the brass of the image. We find that after the lapse of nearly two centuries, the kingdom of the Greeks appeared on the scene, under Alexander the Great, and established the empire of the Persians. The empire of the Greeks broke up into four parts after the death of Alexander, as plainly foretold in Dan. viii. 22, also xi. 4. This was succeeded by an empire much stronger than the others as iron is stronger than the other metals: an empire which superceded all the others in everything that constitute a dominion great. It is perpetuated in all history and in all political lessons, that the Roman empire was the most magnificent political organization that ever exercised authority. The whole civilized world was under its heel; from Rome, on the Tiber, it governed the world in one vast system of universal dominion. But this empire mixed in its greatness. It "declined and fell;" as the vision foreshadowed. There would come a time when the iron would be mixed up with the clay, and when the iron dominion would be divided into little bits, symbolized by the ten toes. What we see now in Europe is an exemplification of this feature of the symbolism.

It will help the perception of the whole matter to look at a vision that Daniel himself had of the same thing. Dan. vii. 2. "I saw in my vision by night and beheld the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea. And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another .... I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of Days did sit, whose garment was white as snow.... The judgment was set and the books were opened .... I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom which shall not be destroyed." Now, what is the meaning of this? We are not left to guess. It is made as plain as we could desire. "These great beasts which are four, are four kings (or kingdoms), which shall rise out of the earth. But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even for ever and ever." Verses 17, 18.

In Nebuchadnezzar's vision, after the four metals, came a destroying stone: in this, after the four beasts, came another dominion—the saints of the Most High. But Daniel was struck with the fourth beast, not only on account of its greater size and dreadfulness, but from seeing ten horns in its head, and from noticing another rising up among the ten, and displacing three of them, and exhibiting the peculiarities of eyes and mouth, and speaking loud words. So he asks about it. He says, "Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others .... and of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the others which came up, and before whom three fell; even of that horn that had eyes and a mouth that spoke very great things. I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. Thus he said: the fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise; and he shall be diverse from the first, as ye get toward that period of time, the kingdom will be weakened by the introduction of a foreign element. And then he says (verse 24), the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise; and he shall be diverse from the first and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end. And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominion shall serve and obey him."

Looking at this in the light of history, what do we see in connection with the Roman empire? That after a prosperous career of about six centuries, the Roman empire was broken up by the irruption from the north of those barbarian hordes, represented by the clay, the Goths, and Huns and Vandals, and other races of people that inhabited the northern and central countries of Europe and Asia; which came down and upset the Roman empire. They did not abolish the Roman empire in the absolute sense, but amalgamated with it after the figure of the clay mixing with iron. They came down and settled in the Roman countries, under Roman civilization, and in many instances co-operating with Roman authority, but ultimately broke up the unity of Roman dominion. This was not the work of a day, the revolution that led to that result extended over a hundred years. It was a long time impending: the Romans for a long time resisted the encroachment of the barbarians, and held them at bay; but at last came the catastrophe; the barriers were thrown down, and the northern flood swept everything before it.

Now what we have to look at is this: that as the final result of their subversion of the Roman empire, the barbarians divided the Roman empire substantially into ten political sections. The first political settlement of the empire, after the great catastrophe from the north, presents us with a tenfold division, viz: 1. Vandals; 2. Suevians; 3. Visigoths; 4. Alans; 5. Burgundians; 6. Franks; 7. Heruli; 8. Huns; 9. Lombards; 10. Ravenna. Machiavelli, the historian of Florence, in the first chapter of his history gives an enumeration of the kingdoms that rose out of the ruins of the Roman empire, and the number is ten. Sir Isaac Newton gives the same number, though his mode of enumeration is a little different. We see Daniel's vision verified to that extent, that this fourth empire came to be divided into ten parts, as represented by the ten horns on the head of the beast symbolizing it. It would be interesting to bestow a moment's attention on the other little horn that rose after the ten, that had in its eyes and mouth, that supplanted three of the ten, that spoke great words against God, and sought to change time and laws, and that arrogated to itself general authority. Suffice it to say, that one hundred years after the uprise of the ten kingdoms in Roman Europe, the papal power made its appearance, answering to all the peculiarities of the symbol representing it. This power has been more stout in his looks, and more arrogant in his pretentions than the ten, has made war against the saints; has prevailed against them; has drenched the soil with their blood; has spoken great things against God; has dictated to all the world; has called himself King of kings and Lord of lords; has proudly called his city the Eternal City; has claimed the right to crown the other horns, and even demanded, in token of their subordination to him, that they should kiss his toe. You see it now in the decrepitude required by the fact that the prophetic measurement of his power is nearly up. "Time, times, and the dividing of time," i. e. reducible to 1,260 days, the number of years the Pope has been ecclesiastical lord of men "by law established."

What we have more particularly to mark is the event which terminates the career of this little horn with eyes and mouth. That event is thus defined in the chapter, first in symbol, then in the plain language of interpretation. The symbol: "I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake. I beheld, even till the beast was slain and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame." Verse 11. The interpretation: "The judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy it unto the end. And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominion shall serve and obey him."

Putting the two visions together, they both point to one great climax: the violent subversion of the authority of God, miscalled in Christ and his glorified friends, for the various systems of government that now exist in the world. They illustrate, in a simple and dramatic way, the issues of history as required by the promises made to Abraham and his seed, foretold in the more complex prophecies considered in the earlier part of this pamphlet. They help us to estimate the Eastern Question in its true character, as the providential development of the situation which has been arranged beforehand, as the appropriate occasion for the accomplishment of God's purpose to bring the world into subjection by judgment, and bless it with a righteous and universal government in the hands of his glorious Son, enthroned in "the city of the Great King"—Jerusalem, honored before time as the seat of a divine government, and again to be chosen as the throne of divine power and glory. Jer. iii. 17; Zech. ii. 12

"Prophecy and the Eastern Question" is no artificial or fanatical collocation of terms. It soberly represents the true character of the times we live in. God has spoken: centuries ago, he issued the fiat which is complicating European affairs. He decreed the political entanglement which should break up Turkey, decimate the Pope, and bring Russia, with a multitude of people at her steps, to the mountains of Israel, to be broken by Jesus, the King of Israel, preparatory to his re-establishment of the kingdom of David, through which to rule all nations in righteousness for a thousand years. Those who have surrendered themselves to the power of Jehovah's word, "lift up their heads" with quick, instinctive joy, at the accumulating symptoms of the approaching tumult of nations, when "rushing like the rushing of many waters, God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee afar off." Isa. xvii. 13.

The world is ripe for divine judgment. The grape-bunches are ready to be reaped for the winepress of God's anger, and the time is near at hand for the "word of God" to come forth to the bloody work of treading out the wicked fruit. With this work, all who are imbued with the zeal of the divine service have sympathy; not that they delight in evil, per se, but that they have learnt that the stroke of judgment will alone break up the inextricable tangle of evil in which human affairs are, in the present state, involved; that the storm of divine vengeance will alone relieve the atmosphere of the fetid and oppressive elements with which it is charged, and produce health to the nations by the healthy respiration of righteousness and peace; that the relentless arm of righteous retribution—for in righteousness doth he judge and make war—is alone adequate to deal that justice to the peoples which will clear away all incumbrances, and lay the foundation of that state of things in which mankind, first being pure, will be peaceable, filled with good will and glory to God.

All hail the coming day! ye have long tarried; break now in glory on our dark horizon, where faith alone, begotten of Yahweh's word, can see the glimmer of thy coming dawn. Oh, we wait with strong desire; give us the first token; send athwart our night the gleaming messenger of thy presence. Release thy prisoners; justify thy children; give them to see with their eyes the unbared arm of Omnipotence lifted up to save his chosen, and to smite all the proud and lofty. Oh, lift the curtain that shuts us out in the darkness which covers all the earth; unveil the impending glory; open the temple; uncover the ark of our covenant with God; scatter the lightnings of Jehovah's anger among the nations. Crash, ye hidden thunderer! and destroy them that destroy the earth; bring to the dust the high refugee of rebellion and lies; cast down the thrones; slay the Mother of Harlots; bring perdition on the Fourth Beast; and let all the world know that there is a God who judgeth, and who though long silent, will not always be still, but will rise to avenge his own elect, to carry out his own purpose, and to vindicate his own majesty and honor, against the ignorance, brutishness, perversity, and wickedness of a hundred generations. Now shall men see the glory of Yahweh: for his hand is about to be lifted up. The end has come; the times of the Gentiles are knelling to a close. Behold the signs!

—R. Roberts.

Youths' Column.

The Boy Who Kissed His Mother.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY
The Christian Publishing Association,

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. K. SARNIGO.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HALSTEAD, B. WILSON,
J. P. WESTRIDE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, O. N. MYERS,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 1, 1882. NO. 41.

THE RESTITUTION,
IS PUBLISHED
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR,
Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:
THE RESTITUTION advocates the dual "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a yearly belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 4.

Prelude.—Mohammedan's early life. His marriage and its results.—To the time of his flight from Mecca to Medina, A. D. 622.—From his flight to the conquest of Arabia, and the formation of his empire, A. D. 630. From the formation of his empire to his death, A. D. 632.

Prelude.—Is Arabia within the boundaries of the future land of Israel? So says Keith in his "Land of Israel." Such is also the view of Major Scott Phillips of London, in his "Curious and Original Discoveries, concerning the Re-settlement of the Seed of Abraham in Syria and Arabia, with Mathematical and Geographical Scripture Proofs." Do the prophets teach that view? If Arabia is a part of the land of Israel, difficulties are obviated, and great results must follow.

What are the boundaries of the future land of Israel? To the law and to the testimony let us appeal. What extent of territory did God deed to Israel? Let us examine the language and the spirit of the deed. The deed was originally executed to the seed (Christ). Then Abraham is included; after that the names of Isaac and Jacob are written in the deed; it then includes all of Abraham's seed by faith, and the whole earth is the deeded possession. This, it is conceded is the land promised to Christ for his literal new and Gentile children, but our present inquiry simply reaches the land to be allotted to the future Judah and Israel after their return. What are its boundaries? Its western limit is the Great Sea. How far does it extend north, east, and south? These are disputed points. In Ezek. xlvii. 15-23, and xlviii. 1-35. The northern and southern boundaries extend to the Euphrates and to the Red Sea as will appear from Gen. xv. 18; Ex. xxiii. 31; Deut. xi. 24; and Chro. ix. 26. The question in dispute is the eastern boundary; is it the Dead Sea or the Sea of Oman? When it is fully settled that the future land of Israel extends from the Euphrates and Lebanon on the north, to the Red Sea on the south, and that the Mediterranean Sea extends along its entire western limit, the Dead Sea would be a very contracted and imperfect boundary for its entire eastern limit. The Sea of Oman occupies the entire east, and is the uttermost sea of Deut. xi. 24; and the east sea of Ezek. xlvii. 18. These boundaries include the peninsula of Arabia. The land of Israel would then contain 1,230,000 square miles. One district in China containing 240,000 square miles has a population of one hundred and eighty millions (180,000,000). Let the land of Israel be as densely populated, and it would contain about one billion of inhabitants, or more than three-fourths of the present population of the globe. Ample room.

Mohammed's early life.—The reason for dwelling upon the life of Mohammed and his new system of religion, and also upon the empire which he founded, is obvious; that empire, originating with the "False Prophet," and partaking of that new religious element, is one of the three empires which constitute Satan's triple or trinity empire in the approaching conflict. Rev. xvi. 12-16. These elementary empires cannot be too familiar to the reader; since, under their three leaders, all the powers of Satan (the Antichrist) are combined.

The early years of Mohammed were occupied with that severe discipline, which was designed to give him success in his future mission. Though of the priestly tribe, his family, being exceedingly poor, was without influence. It was, however, a means of giving to the early reflections of Mohammed a pious turn. It was at an extraordinary period in the religious world. Three distinct systems of theology were then being taught in Arabia, and especially at Mecca, his native city; viz: the Sabean system, the Jewish system, and the Christian system. The Sabean, the religion of Arabia, was the worship of the heavenly bodies. Its power over the intelligent, outside of the priesthood, had long since become obsolete. The Jewish system, originating in God's promises to the fathers, and reduced to system under Moses, was taught in the Hebrew colonies that had settled in northern Arabia after the overthrow of their commonwealth by Titus. The unity of God was there distinctly taught. The Christian system then taught in Arabia, came from Abyssinia and the Greek empire, and was exceedingly corrupt, it being full of images and saint worship. Pure Christianity was, to Mohammed, an utter stranger. A vast amount of religious material was placed before Mohammed out of which to form a new system.

On the business of his uncle he was called to mingle with Jewish and Christian communities. He had joined himself to those of his own countrymen who had renounced Sabeanism; had listened to the expositions of Moses' law; and had acquired some knowledge of apostate Christianity. Such, however, was his poverty that no innovation was attempted till after his marriage, at the age of 28 years. A. D. 598.

From his marriage (A. D. 598) to his flight from Mecca to Medina (A. D. 622).—Commencement of the Hegira. This may be called the formative or constructive period; since during this period the materials which had been previously collected, were systematically arranged, a new religion, sustained by the sword, was organized. It was a period of birth-throes, during which the Arabian world was struggling to give birth to a new religious empire. We say religious, for that empire is the embodiment of religion and the sword; the union of church and state: the only empire that ever originated in the mind of one calling himself a prophet. Four years were occupied in making forty converts. Mohammed found it a severe task to remove from the Arabian mind its old religious ideas; and still more difficult so to prepare it as to germinate and give a vigorous growth to an exotic flora, such as suited his new religious thoughts. Great opposition sprang up as the numbers of his disciples multiplied. It was finally resolved that Mohammed should be put to death. To divide their guilt it was determined that one from each tribe (for each tribe was independent) should drive a dagger into the heart of the prophet.

Mohammed, informed of the conspiracy, fled from Mecca to a cave in its vicinity, and finally reached Medina, sixteen days' journey to the south.

From the time of his flight, to the conquest of Arabia, A. D. 630.—By calling the period just described, formative, we do not wish to be understood that it incindes the time of its growth. Like the tender scion, that shoots its head above the earth, continuing to grow upward, and to expand till it attains to full maturity, so was it with the Mohammedan empire under Mohammed and his successors.

At Medina his faithful gathered around him in numbers that soon became formidable. They learned his doctrines, and partook of his indomitable spirit. They were not to dispute for their creed but by the sword. This mode of propagating his doctrines suited the Arabians; and, for the first time in the history of that country, all the tribes submitted to be gathered into an empire. His armies increased.

He taught his followers, who were all soldiers, to look for a sensual paradise. Success, or even bravery, would be rewarded with sensual felicity here and hereafter. They rushed to the charge with a supernatural impetuosity, and courted death as the passport to the climes of immortal bliss. Christ and Mohammed have often been compared; but between them and their religious systems there is no analogy. Their contrasts, however, are worthy of particular notice.

Jesus was the prince of peace; Mohammed that of the sword. By Christ the smoking flax was not quenched; by Mohammed, the sword was his prime minister. The gospel of the Son of God is a system of love and peace; that of Mohammed is one of pure selfishness and revenge. Contrast, if you please, the Koran with Christ's sermon on the Mount; the one breathes the spirit of a loving brotherhood; the other hatred; the one is of the earth, earthy; the other is of the Lord from heaven. Under his banner of the Crescent the Arabian tribes in A. D. 629-30 were all subjugated and united into a religious empire of irresistible warriors.

From the formation of his empire to his death, A. D. 632.—The union of such independent elements as composed the Arabian tribes was a grand achievement. Their national combination under a new religion and a new standard indicated a divine agency. To breathe into this new organic structure a vitality of more than twelve centuries, proves a higher agency than that of Mohammed. The period of this national birth shows it was raised up for a special work; and that it will continue till that work is accomplished. It was at a period of gross idolatry, when Mohammed was sent forth to found his Unitarian Empire. That empire was founded upon two propositions; the one a cardinal truth (There is but one God); the other a cardinal falsehood (Mohammed is his prophet—apostle). To erect an empire upon such a foundation required the sword; and it was used freely. The empire of the false prophet had a universal mission; it must necessarily be aggressive.

Mohammed aimed to make Jerusalem the chief seat of his altar and his throne; to that end he ordered his armies into Syria.

Mohammed was a warrior. He fought in person at nine battles. The sword he called the "key of heaven and hell;" a drop of blood shed in the cause of God, a night spent in arms, is of more avail than two months of fasting or prayer; whosoever falls in battle, his sins are forgiven; at the day of judgment his wounds shall be resplendent as vermilion, and as odoriferous as musk; and the loss of his limbs shall be supplied by the wings of angels and cherubim. Such instructions infused into his soldiers a fearless and an unconquered zeal.

The holy banner was again unfurled, and three thousand faithful warriors marched under it for the conquest of Syria. At the severely contested battle of Muta, fought by the Arabs or Saracens (robbers of the desert), and the Greek Christians under the emperor Heraclius was the first contest between the Crescent and the Cross. Since that bloody conflict how many millions have fallen under those blood-stained banners, and will fall till the victorious banner of the King of kings and Lord of lords shall wave in triumph over a subjugated world. Lord, hasten that day of triumph. In the midst of his Syrian conquests, at the age of sixty-three years, Mohammed was called to meet the angel of death (A. D. 632). Here closed the life of the great high priest of this rapidly expanding empire of Mohammed, the prophet of Arabia, after founding a new religion (the Mohammedan) and kingdom.

J. P. WESTRIDE.

BALTIMORE, Md.

Editor Restitution:

I do not know that I can sufficiently express my appreciation of the article by Brother J. Cameron entitled "The Church—increase in understanding," which was republished in THE RESTITUTION of Oct. 18.

In speaking of the spirit of division that afflicts the church our brother asks the question: "Is this state of matters to go on till the Lord comes, or shall a vigorous effort be made by all sections of the brotherhood to put an end to it?" A vigorous effort ought to be made to put an end to it, I say. But how is it to be done, seeing that the mischief is principally wrought by a zeal for God and for truth, said zeal, however, being not by any means according to knowledge?

To come to the point at once, the disruptions in the church are caused by the refusal of certain sections to unite in worship at the Lord's table. This they term "fellowship," and by thus refusing to eat and drink there of the common hospitality of Christ (as it were) they sit in judgment at the host's table, a very impolite and improper return for the kindness of God, to say the least of it.

The cure is, in my opinion, at hand; it consists in a "free table," let the mottoes be "hands off," "judge not that ye be not judged," "let her alone, she hath done what she could." If a perplexed, languishing soul lifteth up itself to God, is willing to come with us, let us not gird up our phylacteries around us and scorn the very cup his lips have touched, if we could only remember that the Scripture requires that a man "examine himself," our attention would not be detracted from the contemplation of the love of God in the gift of his Son, whose valor, whose deeds, and whose victory, we celebrate.

There is not one in the United States that more strongly urges the necessity of knowledge of sound doctrine than I do, but in the name of common sense, let us have a sound spirit and sound unity first. How can we persuade men by withdrawing from them? This was not the apostolic plan; we find that Paul in addressing the Corinthians mentions the fact that there were some among them that denied the resurrection of the dead. Only fancy that, yet there was no disposition on his part to put them out of the church. We find also that the Galatians were foolish, but he wrote and tried to instruct them.

Now we have not even the authority that Paul had, yet will we separate the sheep from the goats? Brethren let us hand ourselves together on the prominent points of gospel truth, such as the "life only in Christ, and promises through him, and his kingdom," let us hold those up to the public. If there be those that insist on sect splitting, let such be tried for disorder and expelled. J. F. GELLETLY.

Youths' Column.

Creation.

I sing the almighty power of God,
That made the mountains rise;
That spread the flowing seas abroad,
And built the lofty skies.

I sing the wisdom that ordained
The sun to rule by day;
The moon and stars to gild the firmament,
And all the starry host.

I sing the goodness of the Lord,
That filled the earth with food;
He formed his creatures with his word,
And then pronounced them good.

There's not a plant or flower below
But makes thy glories known,
And clouds arise, and tempests blow
In order from thy throne.

His hand is my perpetual guard,
He keeps me with his eye:
Why should I then forget the Lord,
Who is forever nigh?

The Alpine Horn.

The Alpine horn is an instrument made of the bark of a cherry tree, and it conveys, like a speaking-trumpet, sounds to a great distance. When the last rays of the sun gild the summit of the Alps, the shepherd who inhabits the highest peak of these mountains takes his horn and cries with a loud voice, "Praised be the Lord." As soon as the neighboring shepherds hear him, they leave their huts and repeat these words. The sounds are prolonged many minutes, while the echos of the rocks repeat the name of God.

Says one: "Imagination cannot picture anything more solemn or sublime than such a scene. During the silence that succeeds, the shepherds bend their knees and pray in the open air, then repair to their huts to rest. The sunlight gilding the tops of these stupendous mountains, upon which the vault of heaven seems to rest, the magnificent scenery around, and the voices of the shepherds sounding from rock to rock the praises of the Almighty, fill the mind of every traveler with enthusiasm and awe."

Work If You Would Rise.

Soon after the great Edmund Burke had been making one of his powerful speeches in Parliament, his brother Richard was found sitting silent in reverie; and when asked by a friend what he was thinking about, he replied: "I have been wondering how Ned has contrived to monopolize all the talents of our family. But then I remember that when we were doing nothing or at play, he was always at work." And the force of the anecdote is increased by the fact that Richard Burke was always considered, by those who knew him best, to be superior in natural talent to his brother; yet the one rose to greatness, while the other lived and died in comparative obscurity. The lesson to all is: If you would succeed in life, be diligent; improve your time; work. "Seest thou a man," says Solomon, "diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before" that is, shall not be ranked with "mean men."

The First Telegram.

A letter written by Prof. Morse to his cousin, Mrs. Thomas R. Walker in 1844, a dozen years after the event alluded to thus explained the selection of the spiritual text "What hath God wrought," which was the first telegraphic message sent from Washington to Baltimore: "You are not aware, perhaps, that this sentence was the first sentence transmitted by telegraph from Washington to Baltimore, and inflited by my young friend, Miss Annie Ellsworth, the daughter of the Commissioner of Patents. She took the pains to come to me early on the morning after my appropriation had passed both Houses to be the first to inform me of the good news. I then promised her she should indite the first sentence transmitted by telegraph from Washington to Baltimore. This was the first sentence transmitted, and she indited it, and let me assure you my dear cousin, it has a meaning which few can understand in its whole extent."

The Maelstrom.

The most celebrated of whirlpools is that called the Maelstrom, which lies to the southward of the Lofloden islands, off the coast of Norway, near a large rock in the middle of the strait dividing the islands of Vuer and Moskenes. It is produced by the conflicting currents of one of the great Norwegian fiords. There are most extraordinary and romantic legends concerning the Maelstrom, but careful observations have shown that the peril has been magnified. At flood or ebb tide in summer it offers no danger even to small boats. But in winter, and during stormy weather, even large ships and steamers do not dare venture near it. At certain states of the wind and tide during this season the whole stream boils in mighty whirls, against which the largest vessels would contend in vain. These whirling waters would not suck vessels down in their vortex, however, as formerly believed, but would infallibly dash them on the rocks, or, in case of small ships, swamp them with water. The imagination of Edgar A. Poe, which pictured a descent into the Maelstrom, had no hold on facts whereupon to delineate his marvelous picture. Stripped, however, of its fictitious dangers, the Maelstrom is a gruesome fact, and the Norwegian fisher-boats are careful to give it a wide berth, except in very smooth and pleasant weather, when the tide is just right. This is rather a disagreeable necessity, as it is said that the Maelstrom and its vicinity furnish a favorite feeding-ground for the largest and finest specimens of the finny.—A World of Wonders.

What to do With Jesus.

There is one thing that the enemies of Christ cannot do. They can reject, scoff, rail, and blaspheme, but they cannot let him alone. The press is burdened with attacks on him. Unbelievers who cannot agree on anything else, do agree in this, to continue their warfare on him. Why do they not let him alone?

They cannot. He is forcing himself into the thoughts and discourses of men everywhere, and it is impossible to silently ignore him and his claims.

"What shall I do then with Jesus?" said Pilate. Do with him? Why not "let him go" and pay no more attention to him? Because they can not. He stands before every soul in silent majesty, claiming the homage and obedience of the heart. He stirs the world today as never before, and around his person the battle rages continually. He is in the world's thoughts, in its literature and philosophy, in its science and art, the one living, vital power. To banish him, is out of the question. He is in the midst of friends and foes, and there he will remain.

A Friend For Every One!

How we do want true friends; or at least a true friend. A friendless man! Oh, how we pity such a one! To travel life's weary journey all alone! Oh, poor, poor man who has to do that! But stay; did I say who has to do that? No man has to do it. If a man does it, it is because he chooses to do so. No man need be without a true friend. No; the most unlovable, uncompanionable, depraved man in the world may have for a friend the most loving one that is, Jesus, the sinner's Friend; Jesus, the true poor man's Friend; Jesus, who when upon earth was styled the Friend of publicans and sinners; who healed the sick, gave sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, put strength and vigor into the crippled limbs, raised the dead and went about doing good; Jesus, the same yesterday, today, and forever. He would be your best friend. He would love you as no other friend has ever loved or could ever love you. What must his love be when it could induce him to make sacrifices for you, such as those he has made? He who is Lord of all, dwelt in this sorrow-stricken world of ours in the form of a servant, lived a life of poverty and suffering,—listen to the confession of his poverty: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head"—was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief—oh, awful but blessed climax!—died the death of the cross (rising from the dead the third day), and all for you! Then, most assuredly, he would be a friend who would love you. He would watch over you and care for you when sickness laid you low; he would be with you when dark clouds of sorrow and trouble overshadowed you: he would help you in all your difficulties: he would guide you in life's perplexing maze.

Some people are very glad to be our friends when we are well off; but if things go wrong and we become poor, they completely forsake us. Is this the sort of a friend Jesus would be to you? Oh, no, no! He would never leave you nor forsake you. If you become so, poor that you hadn't a crust to eat, or a rag to cover yourself with, or a hovel to shelter you, he would be as close a friend as ever. He is a constant friend.

But there is something that Jesus would give you that no other friends could give, whoever they might be; something so desirable, so marvellous, so indescribably blessed, that if he were not going to give it to those who come to him, and if it could be obtained by such means, I would willingly endure the most awful sufferings it is possible to conceive, for millions of ages. If at the end of that time, I might obtain it. Mark, he gives it. What is it that man desires? Happiness. He seeks honor and riches and all material blessings, because he thinks their possession will add to his happiness. Well, Jesus would give you an immortal life of happiness, happiness of a kind far, far beyond our highest conceptions of happiness; an immortal life unmarred by pain, sickness, or sorrow; happiness, ineffable happiness, not for a thousand or a million years, remember, but for ever, for ever! And no one else can give you this. You can never get it by any other means. If you won't have Jesus for your friend, and accept it at his hands, you cannot have it. There's no immortality outside Jesus. "He that believeth on the Son (Jesus), hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life." "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

Here then one offers to be your friend, more loving than a mother, sticking closer than a brother, wiser than the wisest of men, more experienced than the oldest, omnipotent, and one who will give you blessings greater than you can desire or now understand.

Oh! will you not have Jesus for your friend?

Professor Max Muller says there is no language known into which it is impossible to translate the Lord's Prayer, and that no race of men exists so utterly destitute as to have no idea of one or more gods. The controversy as to whether religion is a universal feature of humanity ought to be considered as settled in the affirmative.

Brevities.

Dr. Schweinfurth has succeeded in freshening and preserving many of the leaves and flowers from garlands found on the breasts of mummies discovered last year at Deir el Bahari. A small herbarium is thus formed from plants which grew thirty-five centuries ago. A number of the species have been identified with those now found in the East.

Prof. Torinelli has lately exhibited at the hospital of Santo Spirito in Rome a corpse preserved by him. This body, once in a state of incipient putrefaction, has been reduced by Mr. Torinelli to a state of freshness as if it had been dead only a few minutes. After six months the body turns into a complete mummification with no odor of any kind.

Vague accounts of the appearance of Asiatic cholera in Europe have given way to definite assertions of its presence on the French side of the Mont Cenis Tunnel. As at intervals this plague has often made a westward march around the globe, its presence in Europe at any time in the future would not be surprising. The approach of winter would naturally make it less feared now than earlier in the season; but its first manifestations may come in autumn and its full force in spring.

Abul Korim Pasha El-Zahir, who is shortly coming to this country to make arrangements for the emigration of certain of Arabi Bey's followers, is one of the most noted Oriental scholars. He was graduated at Cambridge University, England, and he has translated Homer into Arabic. He is a member of many European learned societies and has been decorated by Russia, Turkey, France and Italy, and his residence on the Shoubra road in Cairo is the rendezvous of learned men visiting Egypt.

News comes from Panama that at the time of the recent earthquake there four huge waves rolled in from the Atlantic upon the coast of San Blas, and overwhelmed several small villages on the mainland and adjacent islands, drowning about seventy persons. The readiness with which the ocean responds to the impulse of an earthquake shock constitutes one of the great dangers that the inhabitants of low coasts in volcanic districts like Central America have to face. The more such phenomena are studied the less stable the earth's surface appears to be. Recent investigations by European men of science are regarded as showing that the crust of the earth bends even under the weight of the air, so that the land over large areas sinks when the density of the air above is materially increased. The tides also bend the earth's crust under their weight. Such facts give a new significance to the shakings of the earth occasionally left in non-volcanic regions, like those at St. Louis some days ago, and the shock at Montreal on Tuesday morning.

The procession carrying the sacred carpet from Cairo to Mecca, set out on October 5th. The correspondent of the New York Herald says: "The Egyptian route is from Cairo on the track taken by the ancient Israelites across the desert to Suez, and from thence across the 'great and terrible wilderness' of North Arabia to Akaba, at the head of the eastern branch of the Red Sea. Striking southward it proceeds through the desolate and dangerous regions of West Arabia until at length, after a journey of 1,000 miles, the sight of Mecca, gives the pilgrim hope of rest and safety. The trials to which 'faith' is exposed in this journey are almost beyond endurance. Fatigue kills many. Thirst destroys many more. Ablution and cleanliness are impracticable. The caravan, as it toils its slow length along scorched by the sun, suffocated by dust, and followed by the famished vulture, is a moving miasma." When the caravan was journeying to Suez on the way to Mecca, the canopy over the sacred carpet was caught and overturned by a telegraph wire, and the venerated emblem was exposed to view. The dervishes in charge were greatly excited by the accident. It is not certain but that the caravan will have to return, and the superstitious ceremony performed over again in Cairo.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 1, 1882.

Stockholders' Meeting.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association will be held in Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 11, 1882, for the purpose of hearing the reports of the Officers, and electing a Board of Directors.

E. K. BARNHILL, Sec.

BROTHER John Foore's address for some time to come will be Macy, Miami Co., Ind., where those desiring his labors may address him. His appointment is at Antioch the first Sunday in November.

A COMMUNICATION from Prof. Charles Gardner is held over till next week. Owing to the depressing effects of a severe cold we were not in a condition of health to carefully supervise the proof reading.

THE first of two articles from Brother Reere appears this week on the Anglo-Israel question. Will give the other soon, as some of our readers are interested in this theory. Late indications are to the effect that the lost tribes are to be finally found in Oriental countries.

Selections.

Age to Come Herald

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM, Aug. 12, 1882.

10 P. M. I will tell you how I have spent the most of this day. At one o'clock I dined with Mr. and Mrs. Floyd. We had a rare dish for me—roast gazelle; but it was delicious. At three we went to visit our kind friends from Illinois, where we spent a most delightful afternoon. All who know what we Americans believe, and why we are here, would naturally suspect what were the subjects of conversation. "From the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." The time was too short for an interchange of thoughts and anxieties and views now uppermost in all our minds. What a field for investigation is open before us. While others are taking thought as to what they shall eat, drink, wear, and how they shall accumulate wealth, we are seeking the kingdom of God, and his righteousness. We ask, What can we do? How can we help the poor refugees who have fled from persecution and death, to Jerusalem for safety? While we are waiting for events to transpire, how can we most profitably utilize the means in our possession? What is the present condition of this city, the country and people? Our hearts and hands are earnestly engaged, we verily believe, in the greatest cause that mortals ever enlisted in. In one sense we are waiting, in another we are not. There is very much we already see to do. In view of it the instrumentalities at present look feeble. But God is mighty, and he has "chosen foolish things to confound the mighty;" "base things of the world and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are." 1 Cor. i. 27, 28. It is God, the Almighty, who worketh all thing after the counsel of his own will. He worketh in us to do. Hence all things are of God. Therefore our labor here will not be in vain. It will accomplish that which he designs it shall.

After tea we were invited to enjoy the cool evening breeze, and witness the beautiful sunset scene from the housetop, as is the custom here. The fine residence in which our friends live, is situated on the hill Bezetha, in the northeast corner of the city. The view from this point is very fine. As I sat there in the gray twilight, my mind ran back over the past history of this sacred spot. What wonderful events have take place here since Melchisedec, king of Salem and priest of the most high God, with his bread and wine, met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings and blessed him! It was here that Abraham offered his son Isaac upon the altar. It was here the covenant of salvation through Jesus Christ was made with an oath, four hundred and thirty years before the law was given from Sinai. It was to Mount Zion that David marched his little band of soldiers when he was seeking a resting-place for the Lord; and he took it, the stronghold of the Jebusites, for God's sanctuary, where Christ will dwell among the children of Israel forever. It was here he pitched his tent, into which he brought the ark of the Lord who dwelt between the cherubims, from the house of Obed-Edom, when he danced for joy before it. It was here the angel with his drawn sword, executing the sentence of death upon the Israelites for the sin of David in numbering the people, was stopped, and stood over the threshing-floor of Ornon which David purchased for a place of worship, and where he ever afterwards offered his sacrifices; the site of the temple built by Solomon, and where the mosque of Omar now stands.

But time will fail me to make mention of what has actually taken place in this city of the Great King. My mind ran hastily over the events down to the present time, a narrative of which would fill volumes. And is it possible that I am in the very city where the events of the past, and of the future, which have been and are to be fulfilled, are of more importance to the human family than all other events? These are the very places so sacred in the memory of all the good. My interest in these places, and events, especially the events which are to transpire here, increases daily.

"Jerusalem is my happy home,
How I delight in thee:
When will thy sorrows have an end,
Thy joys when shall I see?"

But I must leave this train of thought, and hasten to tell you what has taken place here today. Forty-five Sheiks have been arrested by the Pasha of Jerusalem for entering into a plot to massacre the inhabitants and plunder the country. The plot was discovered in season to prevent its execution. The Sheiks are now imprisoned in the city; but I understand they are to be taken to Cyprus, if their followers do not free them. One of them, I am told, can command five hundred men. It is also said they are in communication with Arabi Pasha, who, it is claimed, was a native born Bedawin. God only knows what will occur before this reaches you. All kinds of rumors are afloat and no one knows what to believe. After all, the rains are the most remarkable events. The rain at Jaffa continued for nearly three days. They have also had rain at Nazareth.

I cannot see how anyone, after living here a few months, could wish to leave this country. War or no war, we feel like staying. I love the land, the atmosphere, the food, the water, everything. The Jews, many of them, do not seem to be much moved by the events now taking place. They have suffered so much, and passed through so many bloody scenes of dreadful sorrow, the reprieve they now find is a reaction from the great excitement they have passed through. Many are looking for their Messiah, and rest from sorrow. But their trouble has not yet ended. Mercy must still be shown to them.

I think we shall have war soon; but I shall not run. I had rather die in Jerusalem than desert it in a time of trouble to save my life. We can hardly account for the love we have for Jerusalem; even for the stones thereof. I can easily understand how we could fight for the city. If Christ's kingdom had been of the age in which he came to suffer and lay the foundation of his empire, his servants would have fought for it. Will they not fight for it, and take it too, when the age comes in which it is to arise, break in pieces, and consume, and rule all other nations?

The nights are quite cool just now, almost like winter. My feather bed I find to be comfortable. We need a good supply of bedclothes here as well as in New England.

Sunday eve., Aug. 13.—This evening is quite cool; in fact, we are having a cold summer. Our meeting today was profitable. Thanks be to God for the many privileges we enjoy in Jerusalem.

The forty-five Sheiks are still in Jerusalem, securely shut up in prison. The Pasha is a very good man. It is said the Prussian government has offered him a reward if he will keep the peace of Jerusalem. He goes out at night in disguise among the soldiers as a private citizen, to ascertain the feeling of those upon whom he must rely in case of trouble; and is doing his best to keep all quiet.

Aug. 14.—There has been great excitement today among the people. It is the last day of the Ramadan, a great Mohammedan fast, preparatory, like Lent, for Easter, or "the festival of sacrifices" called Bairam, commemorating the offering of Abraham's son Isaac. Ramadan commences with the new moon of the ninth month of the Mohammedan year, and ends with a series of official banquets. There was a rumor that the Pasha had left the city. Should he do so we shall know what to expect. If there is serious danger he will go. Mrs. Floyd and I called on the wife of an Austrian Jew, who was really ill from fright. She thought the Pasha had gone, and I found it was useless to attempt to reason with her. When they get frightened like this, I find they lose all reason. I saw the Pasha pass my house, and told her so, but it made no difference; she could not see anything but massacring. I told her that I had no place to flee to and must stay in the city. But nothing we could say would pacify her.

We heard that the Sheiks wished to be let out of prison to attend the festival tomorrow. [Probably the feast of Bairam, which follows the fast of Ramadan.] The Pasha sent word that if they wished to feast they could only do it in prison. He seems to be doing everything he can to keep matters quiet.

The captain of the English man-of-war at Jaffa came with private dispatches to the English consul here. Many blame the English for the trouble in Egypt.

Today closes the Ramadan fast. The bands have been playing and the cannon booming. If the Pasha had not been a man of sense and pluck, the streets of Jerusalem today would be running with blood and filled with dead bodies. The massacre was to commence today. The papers signed by all these Sheiks in prison is in the hands of the Pasha. The masses of the people do not realize the horror we have escaped. It is well that they do not. They seem to be almost paralyzed at such times. I hope no one intending to come to Palestine will get frightened and remain in America on account of the troublesome times here. Trouble as bad, if not worse, will come there sooner or later. We will not boast, for it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God; but I just wish to remind our opponents that God will save the inhabitants of Jerusalem this time. We have his unerring word that he will be the hope and strength of his people, and defend them in these last conflicts at Jerusalem. We simply believe in and trust his word. Where are those who have talked so loud and long about trusting in God and believing his word? The Lord may prove us, and may we be found wheat.

Aug. 16.—All is quiet here today. There were not so many Jews killed in Egypt as was at first supposed. Thousands came here, but some have returned to Alexandria. Many are wondering why they did not suffer more. God will hear the prayers of Jews, as bad as Christians believe them to be. God will save his people who cry unto him day and night. I have heard of Jews who spent nine days in prayer and fasting at the time of the massacre in Alexandria. I am thinking the Bedawins will not be permitted to hurt us. Save thy people, O Lord!

A. E. DAVIS.

PARTING.

And they all wept more, and fell on Paul's neck and kissed him, sorrowing most of all for the word he spoke, that they should see his face no more." Acts xx. 37, 38. "Finally brethren, farewell." 2 Cor. xiii. 2.

This text describes the parting of an apostle from his brethren, to meet again only in a better world. But though sustained by a divine hope, yet these men were human, and emotions and tears told of the pangs that rent their hearts. Saddest of all was the deep conviction wrought in every breast by the solemn words of the preacher, that they should never meet on earth again. The great strong heart of the apostle melted in unison with the hearts of his brethren, "and they all wept." The outpoured grief was "sore." Hands were clasped in warm affection. Arms were twined about the neck of the beloved one. Kisses rained upon the face they were nevermore to look upon in this life. Prayer went up to God for those who were to stay and toil, and for him who must go far away and suffer and die. How natural was all this!

Many are earth's parting scenes. Christians have frequently divided. Saints have clasped hands in separation at the breaking up of holy feasts of love; pastors have uttered farewell words to weeping congregations, and husbands from the clasp of loving wives; mothers in passionate grief have faltered adieu to idolized children, turning their steps to other climes,—"God bless thee!" bursting from the lips that quivered with emotion. Comrades on the field of battle, kindred on the docks of sinking ships, kings in the royal death chamber, pilgrims on time's shifting sands, have turned to dart the latest look into loving eyes. And then came the blank of long, lonely, ceaseless separation. Sometimes they have parted in hope, sometimes in despair, and never met again.

The death chamber has its sad, and scenes of separation, where only hot tears can keep the heart from breaking. It is the vestibule to a life of woe. The mother's unutterable anguish at the sight of the white face of her little one; the dying parent's keen solicitude at the thought of his lonely orphaned children; the agony of a life going out in remorse and despair,—who can tell it? Yet perhaps equally sorrowful is the dividing asunder of the living, in cases where there rises up in each breast a stern foreboding of an eternal absence. We may know the beloved is alive, we may be assured of their temporal welfare, but their godless life precludes hope. They are gone from Christ, gone from us. It is a living death, for though living they seem lost. "Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him, but weep sore for him, that goeth away, for he shall return no more." Jer. xxii. 10.

The Bible records many of these earthly separations. Its characters are mainly from the ranks of humanity. Two separations, diverse in detail and kind, are noted in the New Testament. We refer to the sundering of Jesus and John the Baptist by the death of the latter Matt. xiv. 1–13. And the going away of the Jewish millionaire in sorrow from the Lord. Matt. xix. 22. Not a tear was visible on the cheek of Christ, not a murmur is put on record, when he knew his faithful pioneer was slain. Of the rich man who preferred his estates and gold to fellowship with the meek and lowly Lamb, it is said, "he went away sorrowful." Did he then part from the dignified King reluctantly? Yet it was deliberately done. Doubtless Jesus grieved inwardly at his sad choice. We never read that these met again, the youth and his forsaken king. It was as the parting of Agrippa and Felix from Paul, who would have blessed them, but they would not. All was ended. They saw each other no more. At the bar of judgment they will meet face to face, and go away a last time from his presence, trembling and sorrowful. Ah that sorrow, how deep! that remorse, how keen! For ever and ever that parting will be! How many, when the test is applied, "Lovest thou me more than these?" make the same unwise choice, whose reparation from eternal good will be equally decisive and irrevocable in the great day.

Behold another wondrous parting scene. The place is a sacred hill; the actor, the holy Bridegroom and his chosen followers. The hour has come, "I go away," was sounding in their hearts. For that hour Jesus had sought to prepare them with many endearing words. "The Bridegroom shall be taken from you." At the thought their souls were "troubled." But the "far journey" to the "far country" was now to begin. How eagerly they gazed upon that dear face! With what intense emotions of sorrow mingled with awe, they listened to catch the latest tones of that voice! No embraces, no kisses are recorded. Mothers had kissed him when a babe, women had kissed his feet in penitence for sin, and men had rested in his bosom in other days. None of these now for the immortal one. Did he breathe farewell? It is not so written. But never did he seem so gracious, so lovely as now. From gazing heavenward, he would ever and anon turn benignant eyes upon the wondering faces around him. He listened as for some divine command from the throne. It came. Father, thy will be done. The chariot of the cherubim waited beyond the clouds. Suddenly the air grew radiant, angel wings clove the deep blue above, the seraphic glow upon his countenance grew to an unearthly brightness. The blessings of eternal love and life were dropping from his lips; the once pierced hands were lifted tenderly and for the last time above their heads. What a thrilling moment! Never was there such parting as this on earth, since Elijah was swept heavenward in flame. "He was parted from them." Luke xxiv. 50, 51. The mysterious flight skyward is begun. He is "out of their sight." Acts i. 9. The Master is gone to his God and their God. Did they weep? It is not said. But if there was sorrow, most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more, it was quickly turned to joy at the angel-tidings that this same Jesus should come again in like manner. Acts i. Could that day, that hill, that form, that face, that last benediction, that strange parting, that new-born joy, Luke xxiv. 52, at the heavenly assurance of an endless reunion at his return, ever be effaced from memory?

The day of judgment is, to the lost, the parting with hope. It is the parting with life. It is the endless separation from joy. It is the wedlock with despair. It is the shutting out of heaven's light, to converse alone with darkness and death. Other partings may have been in hope: this is in utter hopelessness. Other partings were for a season; this one is for age on age. In one tremendous day, at one final, terrible mandate of the judge, suddenly and without ceremony of earthly leave-taking, human destiny is fixed. "And shall separate them one from another." "The reapers are the angels."

That parting scene is at hand. It is near to come. It hasteth greatly. I shall be there. You will be there. I am not commissioned to ask you now if you are ready. I have a higher word. It is the word of authority from the King and Judge. In his name I entreat, I urge, I command you—"Be ye ready!"—D. T. Taylor.

The Bishop of Manchester preached last evening at the first of an octave of services at St. Michael's, Hulme, to celebrate the opening of that Church after cleaning and repairs. There was a large and crowded congregation. The Bishop, after a reference to the good work which the Rector (Rev. J. N. Pocklington) had accomplished in the parish during the 18 years of his ministry there, said that church, together with seven others in Manchester, owed its existence principally to the liberality of that large-hearted family whose name had almost passed into a proverb among Manchester people for sound Churchmanship and thorough religious zeal. The member of that family who, he believed, had taken the most interest—although all had taken much interest in that church, and who he understood, had for many years been willing to make up any deficiencies in the school accounts so as to enable it to be carried on with continued efficiency, though not so seriously ill as he had been reported in the newspapers to be, was still in a very precarious condition; and he hoped that in their prayers in that house of God and in private they would not forget the name of Hugh Birley, the senior member for Manchester, as one of those who desired to be prayed for, for he lay very ill. Proceeding, his Lordship said he was glad to know that their rector, in a pastoral note which he had issued asked for increased help not so much in money as in aid in the work of the parish. He (the Bishop) was quite sick himself of pleading for money. It was what he was asked to do Sunday after Sunday, until it became exceedingly wearisome. It seemed as if one could hardly speak about spiritual things because of the incessant pleading for money. The great thing needed was the raising of the spiritual and moral condition of the people; and it was after all not much use to enlarge our churches and schools and to build mission-rooms unless we succeeded in gathering the people into them, and influencing them spiritually, morally, and socially. It was the moral life of the nation that seemed to him to be in peril just now, and what had to be done first of all was too look more closely after its moral life and well-being. Some people thought intemperance was the great curse hanging over England at the present time. He did not think so. There was no doubt a considerable recidivism, to use a well-known word, who were cured with that terrible curse of intemperance, but there were other curses more deadly still. People might be perfectly temperate so far as alcoholic drinks were concerned, and yet their lives might be anything but according to that which God would have them. Seeing what he saw, and hearing what he heard, he distinctly said he believed that licentiousness was the sin that was eating out the moral life of the nation—licentiousness which one saw rampant in the streets of Manchester every evening one went about. That was the curse which, in pulpits, one hardly dared to mention for fear of shocking some delicate tastes, but which needed to be mentioned sometimes when one knew the ravages it was causing on every side. Every help that could be given to the Church was imperatively needed to create a more moral life amongst the people.

Some excitement has been caused in Paris by the expulsion of the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul from a building in the Rue de la Lune, where they kept a girls' school. The Municipality claim the house as public property, while the Sisters maintain it was bequeathed to them nearly two hundred years ago by a lady, on condition that prayers in perpetuity should be offered up for her by the girls attending the school. The Prefect of the Seine had given orders for the secularisation of the school, and the directress appointed by the Prefect in 1878 sent in her resignation, which was not accepted. She then assumed a hostile attitude towards the Prefect. A successor to her was appointed, and this lady, accompanied by an education inspector, was sent to take possession. They were refused admittance, and on Wednesday the Deputy mayor of the arrondissement, the police commissary, and a squad of policemen presented themselves, but admittance was again refused. A locksmith was thereupon sent for, and the building was taken "by force," all the locks of the inner doors as well as that of the outer one having to be picked. The Sisters have meanwhile been allowed to occupy two of the rooms till they have provided themselves with a suitable lodging.

God's gifts are on condition, and revocable on non-performance of the conditions.

Communications.

Notes by the Wayside.

Leaving White River Junction we arrived at Concord, the capital of the Granite State, where we spent several days visiting relatives and looking about the city, which by the way, is noted for its many factories. Here is where the celebrated Abbot-Downing carriage manufactory is located, there are also many other places of interest. I find, however, very few Restitutionists in the East; there is quite a congregation of Advent Christians in this place, and the leaders have a holy horror of anything that savors of restitution. But there are some that are inquiring and who believe that the nations will be blessed by the seed of Abraham.

Saturday, Sept. 30, found us in the old town of Exeter, famous for its Phillip's Exeter Academy, in which so many statesmen have laid the foundation of their future greatness. Exeter is not without interest to me, for here is where I spent some years of my early life, here is where I married my wife, who has so faithfully performed her marital vows, and shared my joys and sorrows for more than twenty-nine years. Here is also the birthplace of my daughter Bell, and I am now writing within a few rods of the house where she was born. Here also is the cemetery where we have laid two little ones, who rest in peace and quietly wait for the times of restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all of God's holy prophets since the world began. They shall come again from the land of the enemy. There is hope in thine end. These are the inscriptions recorded upon the little slabs that mark their resting places, and also recorded by the prophet Jeremiah. Here also sleeps the mother of my companion, and many others who have fallen by the wayside like the leaves of autumn.

But there are others who were the companions of my early life that live, yet time has set his mark upon them; silvered hair, the failing sight, the lines of care, all speak of the changes that Father Time has wrought, and gently remind us of the fact that "all flesh is grass."

Oct. 5, we take leave of Exeter and start on a trip to the Hill, via Lake Winnipiseogee. Arriving in Alton Bay about 11:30 A. M., we embarked on the steamer Mt. Washington for Centre Harbor. The day was all that could be desired. Nature had adorned herself in her autumnal robes of crimson, purple and gold, the little islets seemed like gems set in a sea of glass, while the rock-ribbed hills formed a cordon of gaily dressed sentinels, with here and there a Saul with head and shoulders far above their comrades. Away to the northeast stands old Chocorua, who has held his hardened face so long against the storms of ice, wind and rain that he is nearly bald. Still farther to the north stands old Mt. Washington, like an ancient patriarch surrounded by his numerous progeny, his white head lifted in silent adoration.

Here we close our communication and bid adieu, hoping to resume again in the near future.

C. C. RAMSEY.

SEVERANCE, Kan., Oct. 23, '82.

Editor Restitution:

Our meeting here is still in progress and will continue till tomorrow evening if not longer. The meeting is well attended and interest is manifested. Last Sunday—the 22nd—we immersed two, and today two others. One of those immersed on Sunday last is Brother J. J. Richardson of Dexter, Dallas county, Iowa. Brother Richardson is now about fifty-five years of age, and has been a prominent and an active preacher in the Church of God—Winebrennarians. Three years ago this last September he listened to me make a discourse on the Covenants, in Gilman, Iowa—the discourse which led to the writing of my book upon the Covenants—and expressed to me satisfaction as to the manner in which the subject was presented, upon which I then gave him a copy of THE RESTITUTION. Shortly afterward he became a subscriber; and now I have had the pleasure of baptising him into the faith. The brethren here think it to be a valuable addition, and that he will be of great help to them, as he expects to locate at an early date in Kansas. May God add his blessings to the work and keep us all in the ways of truth and peace that we may ultimately be enabled to exchange the cross for the crown.

Yours in hope,
C. M. MYERS.

God will dwell with those, and those only, that prepare him a habitation.

Godliness has the promise of the life that now is, but the life that now is has not the promise of unconditional godliness.

News Items.

NEW YORK, October 24.—The Herald's Cairo cable dispatch says: "The most alarming news has been received from Khartoum. The False Prophet, at the head of the whole able-bodied population of the Soudan, reinforced by some cannibal tribes of Central Africa, has utterly defeated Abdel Kader and Giegler, the Egyptian Governors in seven sanguinary pitched battles. The Egyptian loss in killed and wounded was 8,000, with their stands of arms, including 5,000 Remingtons. The remnant of the Egyptian army took refuge in Khartoum, and is now besieged there. All the provinces south of that city are lost to Egypt. The news of the capture of Khartoum is daily expected. The False Prophet permits the pouring of boiling tallow into the eyes and ears of his captives, and otherwise fiendishly tortures them. His manœuvers in some cases actually devour their prisoners for refusing to recognize him as the true prophet and Khalif. Dr. Schweinfurth assures me that there is a movement for the real revival of Islam, comprising Afghanistan and Morocco, and the doctor is confident that the movement will embrace Khartoum. The False Prophet's adherents increase like wildfire, and the Prophet himself is said to be marching toward Cairo. Abdel Kader was known to fame as the commander of the "Forty Thieves" under Sir Samuel Baker. Giegler is a German engineer."

CONSTANTINOPLE, October 29.—The Sultan has approved the plan elaborated by the board of German army officers for reorganizing his forces.

BERNE, October 29.—The village of Grindelwald, thirty-five miles southeast of this city, was almost entirely destroyed by a hurricane.

TEXEL, Netherlands, October 29.—The steamer Gulf of Panama, from Japan to Bremen, has stranded off Zelderhanks. Twenty-two persons were drowned.

VIENNA, October 29.—The damage by the flood in Tyrol will reach 15,000,000 florins.

The bridge on the Wildbadgasto road was swept away. The cemetery at Brudeck is flooded, the graves laid open and coffins carried away. The town of Lienz is completely inundated. The rivers Pex, Adige, Tagliamento and Brenta have overflowed and inundated the country. The distress in the flooded districts of Tyrol and Corinthia is beyond description. The people are taking to flight destitute of everything.

Sixty thousand families have been rendered homeless by the recent destructive cyclone at Manilla, in the Philippine Islands. Other towns also suffered seriously.

Several earthquake shocks have been felt among the West India Islands recently, but no damage is reported.

YELLOW FEVER.

PENSACOLA, Fla., October 26.—Thirty-three new cases of yellow fever and one death were officially reported today, showing a slight falling off in the number of cases. The total number of cases to date is 2,116, and 171 deaths.

BROWNSVILLE, October 27.—Some refugees arrived today from Tampico, and were sent back to Matamoras. There are rumors of fever outside the cordon and at Rio Grande City. Weather hot.

THE FALSE PROPHET NEARING KHARTOUM.

CAIRO, October 27.—The False Prophet is reported within three days' march of Khartoum.

Canon Farrar preached at the harvest thanksgiving service at Crewe Green Church on Friday evening. In the course of an eloquent address he remarked that there was never more than a year's food stored up in the world. Starvation, which was often within a day's march of countless thousands, was once a year within a month's march of the whole human race. Man, whether he would or no, must live by faith. A hailstorm, a flight of locusts, an invisible animalculum, a microscopic germ, a thread-like insect, a single scorching wind—thousands of natural agencies which the slightest disturbance of the equilibrium of Nature's forces would set in play—could in one week destroy the harvests of the world and reduce mankind to madness and desperation. Move the earth but a little nearer or a little further from the sun and the whole vegetable kingdom would be involved in immediate decay and rapid extinction. After but ever so little the inclination of the earth's axis as it rolls through space and not a blade of corn could grow. The great lesson they should learn was that "man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Poetry.

"I AM THE WAY."

ELSIE COULTHER.

Art thou the way, Lord? Yet the way is steep!
And beset with cruel thorns and sore with stones,
We stumble onward, ere we pause to weep,
And still the hot heart beats, the hours delay,
The end is out of sight.—Art thou the way?

Art thou the way, Lord? Yet the way is blind!
We grope and grope, perplexed with doubt and shame;
We only see the print of feet behind,
Invisible to us the forward mazes;
The chart is hard to read, we who have strayed,
Reset with bewildering doubles,—Art thou the way?

Art thou the way, Lord? Yet the way is long!
Year follows year while we are journeying here sick,
The limbs are feeble grown which once were strong,
Dimmed are the eyes and quenched the ardent will.
The world is cracked with earthquake and grief;
Yet we must travel on.—Art thou the way?

Art thou the way, Lord? Then the way is sweet,
No matter if it perish or destroy,
Through [illegible] pain or agony,
The perfect rest shall sound our welcome home,
Good cheer shall beat the forward pulse of day;
We shall find heaven at last through thee, the way.

S. S. T.

Communications.

"UNQUENCHABLE FIRE."

"Your friend, my friend:
For you and I are strangers in one sense:
We are human . . . and let at least such woe,
To trouble it right on God, in agony
Heed pay down all his store to buy the death
He doth deny us."

—Mrs. Hyperbole.

Awful words these—"unquenchable fire,"—but the popular ideas about hell, give them, it must be acknowledged, a meaning more awful still. We would not lessen their import: we are bound to ask, however, what do they express? Unquenchable fire and eternal torments have obtained such a coherence in the popular mind, that really, instead of being diverse, they have long ago, by a blind exegesis, been twined into exchangeable phrases for the same intolerable conception. To cast a man into fire of this character—what does it involve but that he is to be subjugated to ceaseless misery? So say popular theologians. Let us examine what truth is in the affirmation.

"Fire" is associated with pain, and to threaten a man with an application of it to his person is undeniably to threaten him with exquisite suffering. When sinners, then, are told that they will be cast into fire at last, it would be a gross perversion of the language, were we so to interpret it as to exclude the conception of extreme pain. In Scripture language it is used in its universally understood sense; were this not the case the terms would be virtually meaningless, and the book would become the plaything of every fancy. Often, no doubt, it has been so treated during its lengthened existence. The vagaries of men, however, do not destroy the principle, which seems to be a self-evident one, that it never was designed to be subjected to such sportive and destructive uses. Hence, when "fire" is spoken of as the element of final retribution, we feel bound by the laws of candor and common sense to understand the term in its every-day acceptation, and as suggestive of whatever the same experience infamous as it implies. Had such not been the mode in which it was to be apprehended, is it not a dictate of sound reason to aver that we should have been cautioned against so receiving it, and led also to form a correct notion of its import? Assuredly, fire suggests to every human being the idea of pain; but does not it not suggest more than that? If the hand is severely burned, are not the tissues at least more or less destroyed? To hurl a man into flames is to suggest the terrible idea that he will be burned,—burned alive, as we say, or put to death by the all-consuming element. If the fire could not consume, it could not pain him. When the three children of Israel were delivered over to the despot's furnace, they were not killed therein, because they were not pained; the fire was hindered by the Lord of the elements from doing what it would necessarily have accomplished had he not mercifully allayed its fury. The wicked are to be cast into fire, and the flames will not be counteracted. Indeed, were they to be prevented from acting in their usual course, there would, so far as the penalty of fire was concerned, be no punishment at all.

Ah, but this fire awaiting the condemned, some one cries, is to be an unquenchable fire. Distinguish, friend, we answer, between an unquenchable fire and an unquenchable man. A child in an infant school may do it in a moment. The Bible speaks of an unquenchable fire; it says not a word about unquenchable reprobates. It says the very reverse, and the evidence is not far to seek. "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor,... and he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. iii. 12. Mark the words "burn up," and the figure under which the subject are represented. "chaff," that which is highly burnable and destructible. We recommend the doubtful and bewildered on this point to get a handful of chaff, and having cast it into an intense fire to observe what will with becomes of each particle. Is it preserved or consumed? Such, alas! is the doom of sinners, to be thrown into fire, and consumed, as the chaff was beheld to vanish away. The judgment fire is said to be unquenchable, but, O reader, think of this, it will terminate the life of those flung upon its billows.

Take the wildest supposition you can make, that there is to be kindled by and by, or, if you please, that there is already burning, an unquenchable fire for the reception of the bad. We care not where it is, our argument is not affected by localities and names. Now suppose that this furnace or lake shall absolutely never go out,—that it shall be conserved by the Almighty literally inextinguishable. Shall it preserve or destroy whatever is consigned to it? If it, with a limited duration like ordinary flames, would destroy those cast into the gulph, shall its perpetual duration impart to it immortalizing, eternally conserving energies? To cast into fire is to destroy life; to cast into an "unquenchable fire" is surely to effect the same thing; and the adjective "unquenchable" is introduced into the sentence to intensify the thought that escape is impossible—that the flames will inevitably destroy the impenitent victims. Thus to be cast into "unquenchable fire" is another mode of expressing the plainer threatening,—"the wages of sin is death;" while it intimates at the same time the means whereby the second death shall be inflicted—by fire. In the prevailing teaching men are said to be unburnable and immortal: the Son of God declares that sinful men are to perish—to be burned up like chaff in fire unquenchable. We accept the teaching of the Lord Jesus, and long for the time when immortal-soulism and its unscriptural perversions will darken counsel no more.

The language "unquenchable fire" is familiar phraseology in the popular tongue; we have likely used it ourselves, and on such occasions, not being led astray by any creed, employed it rightly. It is expressive language, and every mind in ordinary circumstances acknowledges its force. A ship crosses the Atlantic and takes fire, the fire is found to be unquenchable, and as such does it hold entire, or inevitably destroy the vessel and every living creature that remains on board? In such an hour poor sufferers perish by unquenchable flames. When an irrevocable and ruinous judgment is threatened in the Old Testament, we find the announcement in this form, and who does not easily comprehend its meaning? "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, behold mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground, and it shall burn and shall not be quenched." Jer. vii. 20. Is this fury "not to be quenched" to waste or maintain,—to save and immortalize human and animal life or hopelessly to cut it off? The whole matter, as we judge, is too plain to be misunderstood long, if an inquirer aims at a vision of the truth. "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away."

W. G. MONCRIEFF.

MULTIPLICITY OF SEED TO EXILED ISRAEL.

I did not use the words "tribe" and "nation" synonymously; had Mr. Cameron not thus used them, two-thirds of his article would have been avoided. I believe in a distinction of tribes after the return, but parts of them will no longer be under separate governments; not so much as those states composing this government are, for the laws are all made by and proceed from the Executive at Jerusalem, so to speak—all Jesus' associates in authority derive the laws they execute and their executive authority from him. This is as it will be, but now it is not so. The facts as they exist prove there is not now a distinction of tribes with the ten; for, if we were to allow, which I do not, that the Anglo-Saxons are not the exiled ones, a distinction of tribes could not be shown. Take the American Indian for instance: they were separated into hundreds of tribes, but where would be the distinction between the twelve?

Concerning the account of Jacob blessing his twelve sons, I have this to say, which may throw some light on it as inquirer aims at a vision of the truth. "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away."

W. G. MONCRIEFF.

MULTIPLICITY OF SEED TO EXILED ISRAEL.

I did not use the words "tribe" and "nation" synonymously; had Mr. Cameron not thus used them, two-thirds of his article would have been avoided. I believe in a distinction of tribes after the return, but parts of them will no longer be under separate governments; not so much as those states composing this government are, for the laws are all made by and proceed from the Executive at Jerusalem, so to speak—all Jesus' associates in authority derive the laws they execute and their executive authority from him. This is as it will be, but now it is not so. The facts as they exist prove there is not now a distinction of tribes with the ten; for, if we were to allow, which I do not, that the Anglo-Saxons are not the exiled ones, a distinction of tribes could not be shown. Take the American Indian for instance: they were separated into hundreds of tribes, but where would be the distinction between the twelve?

Concerning the account of Jacob blessing his twelve sons, I have this to say, which may throw some light on it, and lead also to form a correct notion of its import? Assuredly, fire suggests to every human being the idea of pain; but does not it not suggest more than that? If the hand is severely burned, are not the tissues at least more or less destroyed? To hurl a man into flames is to suggest the terrible idea that he will be burned,—burned alive, as we say, or put to death by the all-consuming element. If the fire could not consume, it could not pain him. When the three children of Israel were delivered over to the despot's furnace, they were not killed therein, because they were not pained; the fire was hindered by the Lord of the elements from doing what it would necessarily have accomplished had he not mercifully allayed its fury. The wicked are to be cast into fire, and the flames will not be counteracted. Indeed, were they to be prevented from acting in their usual course, there would, so far as the penalty of fire was concerned, be no punishment at all.

Ah, but this fire awaiting the condemned, some one cries, is to be an unquenchable fire. Distinguish, friend, we answer, between an unquenchable fire and an unquenchable man. A child in an infant school may do it in a moment. The Bible speaks of an unquenchable fire; it says not a word about unquenchable reprobates. It says the very reverse, and the evidence is not far to seek. "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor,... and he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. iii. 12. Mark the words "burn up," and the figure under which the subject are represented. "chaff," that which is highly burnable and destructible. We recommend the doubtful and bewildered on this point to get a handful of chaff, and having cast it into an intense fire to observe what will with becomes of each particle. Is it preserved or consumed? Such, alas! is the doom of sinners, to be thrown into fire, and consumed, as the chaff was beheld to vanish away. The judgment fire is said to be unquenchable, but, O reader, think of this, it will terminate the life of those flung upon its billows.

Take the wildest supposition you can make, that there is to be kindled by and by, or, if you please, that there is already burning, an unquenchable fire for the reception of the bad. We care not where it is, our argument is not affected by localities and names. Now suppose that this furnace or lake shall absolutely never go out,—that it shall be conserved by the Almighty literally inextinguishable. Shall it preserve or destroy whatever is consigned to it? If it, with a limited duration like ordinary flames, would destroy those cast into the gulph, shall its perpetual duration impart to it immortalizing, eternally conserving energies? To cast into fire is to destroy life; to cast into an "unquenchable fire" is surely to effect the same thing; and the adjective "unquenchable" is introduced into the sentence to intensify the thought that escape is impossible—that the flames will inevitably destroy the impenitent victims. Thus to be cast into "unquenchable fire" is another mode of expressing the plainer threatening,—"the wages of sin is death;" while it intimates at the same time the means whereby the second death shall be inflicted—by fire. In the prevailing teaching men are said to be unburnable and immortal: the Son of God declares that sinful men are to perish—to be burned up like chaff in fire unquenchable. We accept the teaching of the Lord Jesus, and long for the time when immortal-soulism and its unscriptural perversions will darken counsel no more.

The language "unquenchable fire" is familiar phraseology in the popular tongue; we have likely used it ourselves, and on such occasions, not being led astray by any creed, employed it rightly. It is expressive language, and every mind in ordinary circumstances acknowledges its force. A ship crosses the Atlantic and takes fire, the fire is found to be unquenchable, and as such does it hold entire, or inevitably destroy the vessel and every living creature that remains on board? In such an hour poor sufferers perish by unquenchable flames. When an irrevocable and ruinous judgment is threatened in the Old Testament, we find the announcement in this form, and who does not easily comprehend its meaning? "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, behold mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground, and it shall burn and shall not be quenched." Jer. vii. 20. Is this fury "not to be quenched" to waste or maintain,—to save and immortalize human and animal life or hopelessly to cut it off? The whole matter, as we judge, is too plain to be misunderstood long, if an

Poetry.

HYMN OF TRUST.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

O love Divine, that stooped to share
Our sharpest pang, our bitterest tear,
On thee we cast each earth-born care,
We smile at pain while thou art near!

Though long the weary way we tread,
And sorrows crown each lingering year,
No path we shun, no darkness dread,
Our hearts are whispering, Thou art near.

When drooping pleasure turns to grief,
And trembling faith is changed to fear,
The murmuring wind, the quivering leaf,
Shall softly tell us, Thou art near!

On thee we fling our burdened woe,
O love Divine forever dear,
Content to suffer while we know,
Living and dying, Thou art near!

Selections.

HERESY; ITS NATURE, CAUSES, PREVENTION, AND CURE.

The essence of all religion is voluntary submission to the divine will. The standard or measure of that will must, of necessity, be revealed by himself, and that in terms of clear and unmistakable meaning. Jehovah spoke to the fathers by the prophets, but more recently by his Son and his apostles. This Son is emphatically "The Word of God"—the embodiment of the divine will in the highest sense. To every true disciple he is the only Lord," and to the collective body of believers he is what the head is to the human body—the source of unity and law in all that pertains to life and usefulness. He has bought it with a price above all price, and we are therefore bound to glorify him by a willing obedience. In word this is acknowledged by all; but in too many cases in practice it is denied. Some must have a visible as well as an invisible head for the church, forgetting that a body with two heads is a monstrosity, and that the true "church of the living God" is even now, in an important sense, a great unity. Although mutilated and broken, much of this is self-inflicted—wounded in the house of her friends. But she shall be manifested in her true character by the Master himself, it may be to the mortification and disappointment of many, when he "presents her to himself, a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing." How then should we labor to cultivate such a measure of unity now, as shall approximate most nearly to the character in which she shall be manifested hereafter, that we may not be ashamed at his coming, even were it by nothing more than suffering a deduction from our reward of glory and honor? What though we have to suffer in maintaining "the unity of the Spirit?" We suffer with him, and it is one of the reasons "why we shall reign with him." If we "studied" but half as much the things that make for peace, as we are sometimes tempted to study the things that make for division; if we made but half the "endeavor" to guard the unity of the spirit, that we are liable to do to sever it—we should find the present position of the brotherhood much more in accordance with their future destiny than it is.

Our lives also would be saved from much needless embitterment, and what is of even more importance, our characters from no little defilement and degradation.

WHAT IS HERESY?

But what has this to do with heresy? Is not heresy simply false doctrine? By no means; strange as it may appear, a man might hold to the faith of the gospel with tenacious grasp; he might put forth great efforts for its spread among his fellow-men; he might so sound on all the details of Biblical knowledge in their relation to gospel truth, and might even correctly know all mysteries, and yet be a heretic! Why? Because heresy is not a doctrine but a work; and a heretic is one who has become weary in well-doing in an important sphere of duty. When fully developed, heresy is an overt act patent to the observation of all, and it, even in its incipient stages, easily detectable. But how is heresy proved to be not a doctrine but a work? By the plain words of the Apostles. "The works of the flesh are manifest, which are these—adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like." Gal. v. 19–21. The position of heresies among such things as "variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, and envyings," sufficiently shows its nature in a general way, even if they were not called "works of the flesh." But its more specific character may be easily learnt from its use in the New Testament. The Jews at Rome in their interview with Paul, said, regarding the disciples—"as concerning this sect we know that everywhere it is spoken against." Acts xxviii. 22. The orator Tertullus, employed against Paul before Felix, the Roman governor, said, "We have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." Acts xxiv. 5. The word rendered "sect" in those passages, is haireesis, and signifies a body of individuals banded together upon some principles common to all. Referring to this Paul says, "After the way which they (the Jews) call heresy (a sect), so worship I the God of my fathers." Acts xxiv. 14. Again, in Acts v. 17; Acts xv. 5, haireesis is also rendered "sect" and is applied to the Sadducees and Pharisees. In all these instances the original word plainly signifies "a sect or faction" as it is defined in the Greek Lexicon. The Jews regarded the disciples of Christ as a sect, just as they did the Pharisees, not because they had renounced any doctrine or practice common to the Jews, but simply because they were distinguished by something in addition. This was quite correct. The Christians became a distinct body on a principle of selection embracing certain qualifications appointed by God himself. Hence they became God's sect or heresy. And because they became God's sect—the body of Christ—they were or no account to become subdivided. They were to be "knit together in love," or by love and no minor heresy or sect was to be allowed among them. The Galilean had received his education was the foundation of their fellowship and is therefore spoken of as "the common faith," because it was common to all the disciples. Beyond this "one faith" a wide margin existed, sufficiently ample to embrace every variety of mental development, and every degree of Scriptural knowledge.

But in addition to being a work of the flesh in forming a minor sect in the brotherhood of Christ, heresy is a practical denial of the authority of Jesus as the Lord and Master of his disciples, and head of his church. Like all the other works of the flesh its essence is self-will, just as, on the other hand, the fruits of the Spirit have their essence in the subjection of man's will to God's. Speaking of heresies and heretics, Peter says "There were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction." There is no reason to suppose, as we might be apt to do, that this is a denial of Jesus as the Christ, or any departure from the faith, for the simple reason that heresy is a work—a work of the flesh—and, as such, is an act of disobedience against Jesus as Lord or Master. As Paul says, "In works they deny him;" and here Peter describes their sin as "their pernicious ways." It is quite possible that those who bring in such heresies or sects may also have departed from the faith in a greater or less degree; but this constitutes apostasy, not heresy. Whatever reasons or motives may be alleged for the act of heresy, it is still an act separate and distinct from these. It is simply the refusal to recognize the oneness of the body of Christ, involving the discipleship and brotherhood of every one who has honestly complied with the terms of salvation in their broad outlines and yet true Scriptural meaning as laid down by Jesus and his apostles, and taught by Moses and the prophets. The result of such action is invariably either to establish a body such as Christ never authorized, and from which is excluded every one who does not conform to the unscriptural basis; or, on the other hand, to secede from a body founded on the Lord's terms, and to set up a separate organization. The authority exercised in doing this is a direct usurpation of the lordship belonging to Christ alone, unless it can be demonstrated that those excluded from the body have not complied with the Lord's requirements, which I am supposing they do. This assumption of authority is a practical denial of the Lord that bought them, to whom alone as the "One Lord," in virtue of being his purchased ones, they owe the most devoted allegiance.

It might be thought that Titus iii. 10 is against the view that heresy is a sect in actual existence, owing that a "heretic" is to be rejected, which implies his presence in the church. But the expression used here is, when fully rendered, not heretic, but heretical man, which indicates a man of heretical tendency, an incipient leader, although not yet having taken open action in separation. After the second admonition such an one is to be rejected, evidently on the principle that a limb in a certain stage of disease must be removed in order to prevent a greater evil to the whole body.

CAUSES OF HERESY.

We must notice here that the sin of heresy is ascribed in an especial manner to persons in the position of teachers or leaders. This, of course, implies the existence of a class who are led, which is expressly referred to by Peter in the verse following that quoted, "Many shall follow their pernicious ways." This cannot refer to the well-known fact that some men are more apt to teach and to exercise influence than others, but rather to the abuse of such gifts in dividing the body of Christ. This is evident from Paul's warning to the Ephesian elders—men who were selected by Paul himself or his deputy Timothy—"Of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." Now it is well known that the majority of men are prone to be led, and that in many cases blindly, to give their assent to doctrines plausibly set forth, whether they are able to understand them or appreciate the reasonings by which they are supported or not. In addition to this natural tendency, the voluminousness of human compilation which is the indispensible pre-requisite of the sect, effectually discourages that independent thought and judgment, as well as that liberty of speech, which are so necessary for the detection and exposure of erroneous views and opinions among the brotherhood. In such circumstances as these, there is apt to be assumed on the part of the leaders, a kind of of paternal control over the disciples, reducing them to, and keeping them in, the condition of children. This is, in one respect, the very essence of that gigantic heresy or sect known as the apostasy, in which this paternal function ascends through many grades, and finds its head centre in One Man, a Great Father, who claims supremacy over all who profess the name of Christ, the one head of the church. Even among Protestants, the boasted right of private judgment is practically ignored, through the existence of sects founded either on more or on less or else on the "one faith" of the gospel, for these are invariably fettered with the never-failing human creed.

The exercise of this paternal control, in seeking to regulate the utterances of the pupils in the assembly of the saints, has resulted in that standing institution of the apostasy—the pulpit. I am not aware that this has had any formal existence among our brotherhood. But it is the external symbol of the human creed, being the exclusive privilege of the man or men who agree to teach in accordance with the creed. It seems to me that much of the heretical spirit is due to a desire to be the exponent of certain ideas to which undue importance is attached, and at the same time to be free from the necessity of assigning satisfactory reasons for them. For example, a brother feels and complains that he has no liberty to speak on certain subjects, because others differ from him, and can speak their minds. He is clearly in want of a pulpit in substance if not in form. And so is that brother who can tell another that he must sit and keep silence, and learn of those who have the right view. It appears to me that much of the sectarianism that exists among our brotherhood has its source in the desire to guard an invisible pulpit from intrusion, rather than in any well-grounded conviction as to the absolute essentiality of certain details as matters constituting the faith that justifies.

In thus briefly touching on the causes of heresy, I would ask—How seldom is it the result of deliberate study of the Scriptures in relation to duty? And how often is it, in its earlier stages, the result of disturbing influences of a personal nature, or having reference to the degree of respect in which it is considered right to hold certain leaders? And how often are differences in doctrine resorted to to give decent coloring to the new organization?

But the chief source of heresy is self-will as manifested in an impulsive petulant temper which can brook no diversity of opinion, or uncongeniality of sentiment and disposition, and is ever ready, like children in the marketplace, to utter the complaint, "We have piped unto you and ye have not danced." There cannot be a doubt that it is the indulgence of this spirit that often leads to separation, while differences of doctrine are apt to be made the pretext. This childish spirit was so well described by a member of the Edinburgh church in its earlier years that I cannot do better than quote his words as reported in the M. S. Magazine, Excelsior, for 1867. A brother leaving the meeting for what were deemed insufficient reasons was the occasion of the remarks:

"It looks to me very like a petted child trying to run away from its parents, or which is continually quarrelling with its brothers and sisters, thinking its own notions of so much importance, that unless they are yielded to it must leave. Instead of seeking to assist one another, and of cultivating the noble and dignified character which Jesus shows, they give way to this pettish, childish, passionate mode of acting. It would be quite excusable in one who is really a child, and is merely feeding on the milk of the word, but it is quite painful to see one who has attained the age of manhood in Christ Jesus acting in this manner. It is a mere feeling which cannot endure a little rebuff—in itself wrong it may be—but it is more noble to endure. Therefore we should resolve, that, whatever others will do, we will cultivate the noble and dignifying things spoken of by Jesus, the Messiah."

Another cause of heresy is the tendency of some brethren to think lightly of their duty and privilege to contribute to the edification of their brethren, and so highly of the talents of some gifted brother, that they think it unbecoming to speak on any occasion when the gifted one is present. The result is very likely to be that any peculiar views or favorite opinions he may have, become from their frequent repetition and unchallenged assertion, the views of all, and too readily pass into the category of fundamentals.

Again, it has become the fashion for one brother to apply his own rule of reasoning to the opinions of another, and to decide that a certain view regarding a given subject is inconsistent with the one faith, and that therefore the one faith cannot be held alongside of such a view. The judgment of the accused brother may not be convinced that there is any consistency in the matter, but he must submit his judgment to that of his more talented brother. This is the paternal spirit already noticed, in the exercise of which the logical brother virtually, as the Bishop of Rome does professedly, puts himself in the place of God, saying, "I will be a father to you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters." It is evidently from this source that the negative phases of creed-restriction took its rise, by which a man is required not only to declare what he believes, but also what he does not believe.

These are only a few of the causes of heresy, but they may be said to spring from one root, human self-will refusing to conform to the will of God.

THE EVIL OF HERESY.

But who shall measure the evil of heresy? The various causes mentioned may all be reckoned evils. Peter charges it with bringing discredit on the truth. "Many shall follow their pernicious ways, and the way of the truth shall be evil spoken of." The world judges the "one faith" by the behavior of those who profess it. Letting our light shine before men is that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father in heaven. The prayer of our Lord "that they all may be one, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me," contains a truth which even now finds realization in the influence which the oneness of the disciples has upon the world, for it is the love of the disciple which often recommends the truth when argument would fail. Whereas the effect of division is, that the young are confused and inquirers stumbled; the weak-minded disciple is discouraged, and even the strong are liable to be paralyzed and rendered indifferent. And who shall undertake to say where this shall end when once begun? Often starting from some petty personal difference about the matter of arrangement or detail, which a slight degree of forbearance might overcome, how soon does it enter the region of doctrine; and how can faithful men endure false doctrine? Here the field is boundless. A true heretic searches for a new doctrine as for hidden treasure; and his search is often rewarded with success. Like a child with a new toy it absorbs all his affection, till a still newer takes its place, or some mishap befalls it. Have we not seen this enacted before our eyes? Yes, all of us know it to be true.

But, say some, we "must grow in knowledge." True; let us have all the knowledge we can attain to: but let us be sure that it is knowledge. Let us learn to discriminate between knowledge and mere opinion. Paul exhorts: "Foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they gender strife." Macknight renders this "Foolish and untaught questions reject, knowing that they beget fightings." Paul, again, describes a class as "doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil-surmisings," etc. In the search for knowledge, let the fear of offending against the apostolic warnings not be forgotten, and rather wait for light than dogmatize. Might it not be well to cherish an occasional predilection for a new grace or a rare virtue, and to cultivate a few of those fruits of the spirit which never fade or grow stale in the good and honest heart of the true disciple. This would be a worthy work, were it for no other reason than to have a little repose from the endless pursuit of so-called knowledge, especially of the essential kind, for it is endless. The essentials of the milk of the word, but it is quite painful to see one who has attained the age of manhood in Christ Jesus acting in this manner. It is a mere feeling which cannot endure a little rebuff—in itself wrong it may be—but it is more noble to endure. Therefore we should resolve, that, whatever others will do, we will cultivate the noble and dignifying things spoken of by Jesus, the Messiah."

Another cause of heresy is the tendency of some brethren to think lightly of their duty and privilege to contribute to the edification of their brethren, and so highly of the talents of some gifted brother, that they think it unbecoming to speak on any occasion when the gifted one is present. The result is very likely to be that any peculiar views or favorite opinions he may have, become from their frequent repetition and unchallenged assertion, the views of all, and too readily pass into the category of fundamentals.

Again, it has become the fashion for one brother to apply his own rule of reasoning to the opinions of another, and to decide that a certain view regarding a given subject is inconsistent with the one faith, and that therefore the one faith cannot be held alongside of such a view. The judgment of the accused brother may not be convinced that there is any consistency in the matter, but he must submit his judgment to that of his more talented brother. This is the paternal spirit already noticed, in the exercise of which the logical brother virtually, as the Bishop of Rome does professedly, puts himself in the place of God, saying, "I will be a father to you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters." It is evidently from this source that the negative phases of creed-restriction took its rise, by which a man is required not only to declare what he believes, but also what he does not believe.

These are only a few of the causes of heresy, but they may be said to spring from one root, human self-will refusing to conform to the will of God.

THE EVIL OF HERESY.

But who shall measure the evil of heresy? The various causes mentioned may all be reckoned evils. Peter charges it with bringing discredit on the truth. "Many shall follow their pernicious ways, and the way of the truth shall be evil spoken of." The world judges the "one faith" by the behavior of those who profess it. Letting our light shine before men is that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father in heaven. The prayer of our Lord "that they all may be one, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me," contains a truth which even now finds realization in the influence which the oneness of the disciples has upon the world, for it is the love of the disciple which often recommends the truth when argument would fail. Whereas the effect of division is, that the young are confused and inquirers stumbled; the weak-minded disciple is discouraged, and even the strong are liable to be paralyzed and rendered indifferent. And who shall undertake to say where this shall end when once begun? Often starting from some petty personal difference about the matter of arrangement or detail, which a slight degree of forbearance might overcome, how soon does it enter the region of doctrine; and how can faithful men endure false doctrine? Here the field is boundless. A true heretic searches for a new doctrine as for hidden treasure; and his search is often rewarded with success. Like a child with a new toy it absorbs all his affection, till a still newer takes its place, or some mishap befalls it. Have we not seen this enacted before our eyes? Yes, all of us know it to be true.

But, say some, we "must grow in knowledge." True; let us have all the knowledge we can attain to: but let us be sure that it is knowledge. Let us learn to discriminate between knowledge and mere opinion. Paul exhorts: "Foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they gender strife." Macknight renders this "Foolish and untaught questions reject, knowing that they beget fightings." Paul, again, describes a class as "doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil-surmisings," etc. In the search for knowledge, let the fear of offending against the apostolic warnings not be forgotten, and rather wait for light than dogmatize. Might it not be well to cherish an occasional predilection for a new grace or a rare virtue, and to cultivate a few of those fruits of the spirit which never fade or grow stale in the good and honest heart of the true disciple. This would be a worthy work, were it for no other reason than to have a little repose from the endless pursuit of so-called knowledge, especially of the essential kind, for it is endless. The essentials of 1883 are one thing; but who shall say that they shall be the essentials of 1883 or 1884, if the Lord come not to stay the plague? The Bible in the hands of hair-splitting theological dogmatists can furnish any amount of material for the formation of sects for an indefinite period. But to the true man of God it is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that he may be perfect, thoroughly furnished for all good works. A serious question remains: Should the Lord come now, would he approve the essentials of 1882, as laid down by many? In the light of the Scriptures of truth, I have no hesitation in expressing my firm conviction, after mature consideration, that those essentials of 1882 would be disapproved!

It may be, however, that our circumstances, being in some respects different from those of apostolic times, preclude us from committing the same degree of heresy as the disciples were liable to commit. Diotrephes refused to receive the apostle John, "prating against him with malicious words, and not content therewith, neither doth he receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church." Constructive charges against brethren of subverting the faith may shield modern heretics from coming under the same class with Diotrephes, who seems to have acted from the love of pre-eminence, and not from a desire to defend the faith. But let all such beware lest a similar motive be at bottom the prompter of zeal for the truth. The day shall declare it. It should be ours to abstain from even the appearance of evil, and rather to keep at a perfectly safe distance from the outer margin of such a sin as heresy. For what is the apostolic dictum as to the evil of this sin? Peter says, "they bring upon themselves swift destruction." And Paul declares that "they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." These are heavy words, and we may "lay the flattering unction to ourselves," that we who have the one faith of the gospel—"the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," in their plain and Scriptural acceptation, who have put on that name, by being baptized into Christ, and are zealously contending for that faith against all comers—are in no danger of falling under the condemnation intimated by the apostles as the punishment of heresy. But our Lord himself gave the warning—"Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." The Father's will is our obedience to the "One Lord." It is quite possible to style ourselves his brethren and at the same time forget that he is our Lord, and we may even in word confess his Lordship and in works deny him. The will of our Lord, as well as his earnest prayer, is that his disciples "may all be one." It was the great aim of his apostles to realize that prayer, and to maintain among the disciples that oneness for any reason short of absolute and determined denial of the faith, or open and persistent disobedience of plain precept, is nothing less than high treason against the majesty of the Lord of glory. And as he who is now our Lord and Master shall be King over all the earth, and shall have for his subordinate rulers those who have been faithful in the present, we might well ask the question—Will present disobedience afford any guarantee for subordination in the future? Will refusal to "suffer with him" now, in forbearing with his brethren, be a good title to a participation in his future reign? Is not the promise only to him who overcomes? to them who by a patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, and to those who are thus faithful unto death?

PREVENTION AND CURE OF HERESY.

In heresy, as in all other evils, "prevention is better than cure," but, nevertheless, cure is a good thing. And there is just one panacea for all the causes and forms of this disease of heresy, and it is at once a preventive and cure, that is, Love. This fruit of the Spirit, which justly takes the lead of the rest, in an active, operative principle—"love not in word, but in deed and in truth." "Above all things put on love, which is the bond of perfectness (the perfect bond), and let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to which also ye are called in one body." This is very plain. Jews and Gentiles, with strong prejudices of race and religious training, were formed into the one body of Christ; and one great end of their being so formed was that the peace of God should rule in their hearts. This was necessary to their associated existence, as well as to their cultivation of the character required in the "heirs of the kingdom." To secure this peace, love is the perfect bond. Paul not only earnestly desired, but continually prayed for, the "fellowship in the gospel" of all the disciples. Thus he wrote to the Philippians—"Always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy, for your fellowship in the gospel, from the first day until now."

The particular form which this perfect bond will take in the actual working of such a society as the church, is forbearance. In such circumstances there is not only ample scope but absolute need for even a large measure of this quality. Hence the many injunctions by the apostles to the exercise of humility, courtesy, brotherly kindness, etc. Paul exhorts and even beseeches the Ephesians that they "walk worthy of the vocation (or calling) wherewith they were called; with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit by the bond of peace.

It will greatly help in the prevention and cure of this evil, if its true nature be kept in mind. In addition to what has been said on this point, I would only add that heresy is literally "a choice or option." It comes from a root, which signifies to take, to choose." It is thus a setting up of man's choice against God's, as if the church was a voluntary society, which the true disciple might join or not as he pleased. The simple fact of a man becoming a disciple makes him a member of the body of Christ; and any assembly of those members who presume to forbid such a one the privileges of such assembly, are bound to demonstrate his unfitness to the satisfaction of all concerned. Failure to do this must be set down to sectarian bias, a choosing to constitute the church on arbitrary principles, which cannot be scripturally maintained. Paul said to the Corinthian church—"I hear that there be divisions among you, and I partly believe it; for there must be also heresies (margin, sects) among you, that they who are approved may be made manifest among you." That is, the forming of parties choosing particular terms of fellowship, irrespective of the Lord's choice. Jesus spake in a similar strain when he uttered the warning—"It must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!" The Corinthian church had not reached the worst form of the evil, namely, heresies; but they seemed far on the road to it, for there were "divisions" (margin, schisms) among them. When a heresy or sect should be developed, those who were approved should be made manifest.

I hope these remarks will be accepted in the spirit in which they are offered, as a contribution towards a better understanding of an important New Testament principle, bearing on the unity and well-being of the brotherhood, and on the credit of the gospel we all profess.—J. Cameron, in Christian Leisure, Edinburgh, Scotland.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

As per arrangement the Northern Indiana Conference of the Church of God will (D. V.) be held at Plymouth, Marshall county, commencing Friday, Nov. 10, 1882, and hold over the following Sunday. The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association will be held at this time. Brethren, this Conference meeting does not belong entirely to the friends at Plymouth—it is your own. Let all make an effort, make a sacrifice if need be, to attend, and a good meeting is assured.

By order of the Conference,
A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

I propose preaching this winter and desire the brethren scattered through the west half of Iowa to report to me at Newell, Buena Vista county, Iowa, and I will try and visit them during the winter. Yours Truly.
T. J. WHITCUTT.

Please announce to the brethren that F. G. Williams and S. H. Rice, of this place, would like to meet with the brethren anywhere within 100 miles of here, at suitable times during the coming winter, for the purpose of giving lectures on the subjects which most interest us. We are well supplied with charts illustrating prophecy, the Great Pyramid, history, etc.

Brethren wishing to make arrangements please address either of us at this place. It seems to us that much greater effort ought to be put forth to enlighten the world concerning fulfilled prophecy, and subjects relating to the kingdom of God. We know our weakness, but feel willing to do what little we can. Will the brethren lend a helping hand by notifying us of such places as they think will give us a hearing—this is all we ask.

F. G. WILLIAMS.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are four kinds: "Can you believe." "Age to come not a heresy" "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Institutes," "Theological Trilemma," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now existing; such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press, 300 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and Their Relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Israelitic, the New and the Everlasting Covenants; their durations and fulfilment with prophetic outlines. By G. N. Boyce. 300 pages. Beautifully cloth, price $1.

The Truth and Error in a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of Immortality and future punishment. By Silas Hume. 80 pages, price 30c.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Silas Hume. 80 pages, price 30c.

Spiritual Immortality an Equal to Eternal Existence. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact defense and Bible view of material Immortality, by Joel Stocker. By O. H. L. Crosier. 16 pages, price 10c.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, who he is. By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Cincinnati, O. 8 pages, price 10c. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1882, put in tract form.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By G. N. Boyce. Price 25c.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—By A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a cloth bound book of 456 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee to the worth of the work. Price only $1 each. Send to this office for them.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TRACT PAMPHLETS.

Suitable for wide distribution.

1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by James Bayliss, in 1692. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Prospects for Tribulation. 6. The Two Advents. 7. Signs of the Times. 8. Restitution Age. 9. Reign of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies of any assorted package of 10c. pkg.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25c for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

Can You Believe? A series of 20 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate to our list.

The Second Death Briefly. Contains an abundance of proof texts.

The Age to Come not a Heresy. By H. V. Reed. Life and Death. A concise statement and concise of the two views on these terms, with the Word of God and Bible only.

Heaven Government a Failure. By A. B. Maxson.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

6c. each, or 10 for 50c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? D. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Boner, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future "pre-mill" gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

8c. each, or 15 for 50c.

Resurrection and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each; 10 for 50c. or 20 for $1.

The New Birth. Joseph Price.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Israel. Joseph Marr, U. B. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Marriage in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate on brides.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

7c. each; 3 for 20c. or 20 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

What can I do to be Saved? or the Voice of God Again to Sinful Men. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.

9c. each, or 12 for $1.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state; and this to be its everlasting condition. S. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 20c.

A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Hocard. Price 15 cents, or 12 cts. per dozen.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of York. Exactly the book for the times. 240 pages, cloth $1.00.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Papal Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 192 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading points of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 200 pages, cloth $1.

Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Dilworth. Price 10 cents.

Hymns of the Advent, is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by Charles C. Fisher, D.D., Baptist, published in this book the "Midnight Cry of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Paradise Hymns, whose music is as a heavenly bird word. Those having the "Christian Pentecost" or any music book will do well to get this work. Price 60c. cloth 60c.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public and family worship, compiled by G. N. Boyce and John Arnold. Just ready.

The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson. Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the various Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built ups with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to support the sectarian meaning of the New Testament writers.

Also a improved edition on larger paper, 864 pages, cloth $6.00, library binding $8.00.

THE RESTITUTION
is published weekly by
The Christian Publishing Association.

Officers by Board of Directors:
E. L. DIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
M. E. MARSHALL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

Executive Committee:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

Special Contributors:
D. T. TAYLOR, H. WILSON,
J. P. WESTFALL, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, G. M. MYERS.
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 8, 1882. NO. 42.

THE RESTITUTION
THREE TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR,
Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to
The Restitution,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

APPELLATIONS APPLIED TO GOD.

Of things, of superior rank, of power, of age, of size, or extent, of character, of description, of dominion.

So much that is not only shared but even contradictory to itself is continually being advanced by so-called Hebrew scholars, in the way of interpretation of the above terms used as appellatives, that I think a careful analytical study and exposition of the Greek words into which the old Jewish rabbis, who certainly understood both Greek and Hebrew as living languages, much better than any of us do now as dead languages, translated the corresponding ideas or concepts contained in the Hebrew, will be not only profitable, but interesting. Moreover, I find after a careful and exhaustive study and comparison of the Scriptures both of the Old Covenant and the New, in the Greek that they are harmonious throughout, that the concepts as expressed in terms or words are identical to a wonderful and unaccountable degree, except upon the supposition of Divine inspiration.

It is so natural for human wisdom to err in supposing that the same concept can be expressed by two or three synonyms or words of about the same meaning. The inspired writers of the Old and New Covenant Scriptures, however, never make this mistake, nor have the original translators from the Hebrew into the Greek of the Septuagint fallen into this error, and we find from the beginning of Genesis to the end of the Apocalypse the same terms and the same idioms used to express the same concepts, and to my mind this is one of the most remarkable and convincing evidences of the One Master hand supervising and directing the whole work.

Now we find the person who is afterwards designated by the appellations which stand at the head of this article, called in the first chapter of Genesis elohim. In the second chapter of the same we find him several times designated as yehovah elohim, for the first time in verse 4 of this chapter. From this point on to Gen. xv. we find this person called sometimes elohim, sometimes yehovah elohim, sometimes yehovah alone; and in Gen. xiv. 18, 19, 20, in the account of Melchisedek meeting Abraham, he is three times designated The Most High God—el elyon. In chap. xv. 2, we find Abraham addressing him as adonai yehovah, and again by the same appellative in ver. 8. The meaning of this last term is Despotic Lord. In chap. xvii. we find him announcing himself, however, to Abraham and entering into the covenant which was according to circumcision (the covenant according to promise with Abraham remember had already been made and the account of it given in chap. xv.) as I was saying, we find him entering into this covenant according to circumcision, under the appellative of el shaddai—The God, and in ver. 8, saying to Abraham that he would be unto his seed after him "for a God."

This explains why in Ex. vi. 2, 3, the term yehovah is emphasized and the statement made that he appeared unto Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, as "being their God," and that his name "Lord" he did not disclose unto them.

Again in Ex. iii. when Moses asks him by what name he shall announce him and his message to the sons of Israel other than "the God of their fathers," he replies, tell them "I am ehyeh"—The One who Is," and thus shalt thou say unto the sons of Israel, ehyeh, The One who Is, sent me unto you." In the following verse, however, he tells Moses to give the following specific instruction to the sons of Israel: "And God said again unto Moses, Thus shalt thou say unto the sons of Israel, yehovah elohe, A Lord The God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob sent me unto you. This is my everlasting name and memorial unto generations of generations."

From the announcement in Ex. vi., to which we have already referred, on through the length and breadth of the Scriptures, Old and New, God's purpose and teaching seems to be to impress upon mankind the importance of the fact that while there may be what appears to men to be gods many and lords many, there is really One God, in the sense of Supreme Lord. Now this truth is very concisely stated and forcibly impressed by Paul in I Cor. viii. 6. He is speaking of idolatry, which is a departure from this truth, whatever form it may take, and in ver. 4, he says, "We know that an idol is nothing in a cosmos, and that there is no other One God save One," and then goes on to say, "and even if there are so-called gods either in the heavens or upon the earth (even as there are gods many and lords many) to us (Christians) there is One God the Father, from out whom are all things, and we unto him (that is we have a common oneness with him, a common participation or partnership with him in our new nature spiritual and all that this implies); and one Lord Jesus Christ, through whom are all things, and we through him."

Again in I Tim. ii. 5, the same truth is impressed still more concisely: "For there is one God and one Mediator between God and men, a man Christ Jesus."

The common sense teaching in these passages, which are really the keynote of the whole harmony of the Old and New Covenants, is that this person denominated elohim, is a First Cause, and moreover a personal First Cause with every one and every thing in the scale of animate or inanimate being, subordinate to and dependent upon his despotic will.

Now let us analyze the various appellatives which he has taught us in his word to apply to him as explanatory of what he is, and see if they do not teach just exactly this truth. And first the appellative which his word first applies to him, namely, elohim. Scholars have differed in regard to whether this word is a primitive or derivative, but we find the unequivocal statement of as old a scholar and Greek historian as Herodotus in book 2, par. 52, that the word is a derivative, and as we would naturally suppose, is derived from the verb alah root al, and is a verbal noun, denoting the doer of that which is expressed by its primitive. The meaning of the primitive is to put, set or place, or in a metaphysical sense, to purpose, dispose or determine.

Then the verbal noun would mean the person who does any of these things. Is not this just what a Great Personal First Cause is and does. Is he not One who purposeth, determineth, disposeth, appointeth, setteth or placeth according to his own despotic and sovereign will? Adon, then is The Disposer.

Now let us take up the next term in the order of his revelation of himself, namely, yehovah. This word is also a derivative through avah from av, meaning a head, and means a person who does that which belongs to the head; that is, exercises headship or intelligent control or government, and of course it is a relative term, the headship and the nature of it being determined by the character and position of the person to whom the term is applied.

But we have already learned from the first term or appellative, that this person is a disposer, or one who purposeth according to his sovereign and despotic will, this meaning being inherent in the very word itself, and well expressed in the proverb "man proposeth, but God disposeth." Therefore the term yehovah when applied to God, merely serves to explain or emphasize the fact of his sovereign intelligent action as a "disposer," and means "Lord." We then have so far A Lord, The Disposer of all things.

The next term or appellative in order is eyeh which is explanatory also in its nature, and is merely the present participle of the verb hayah "to be," used substantively, and means "the Being," or "the One who Is," or "the One who Exists," and by this term is expressed the fact simply of personal existence. Personal, though, remember and bear in mind reader, that all these appellatives are personal appellatives. God is a person, not a law or a force or a principle, and so far in the teaching he is from the very meaning and form of the words, grammatical and etymological, one person.

The next in order as he reveals himself in his word is the appellative chai. This is also a present participle of the verb chah, meaning to live or have life, used substantively, and means "the Living Being," or the One who has personal animate life, and as we never find in nature or in this natural order of things personal animate life without organism, we would expect according to human reasoning, that this living Being would have some sort of organism in which this life resides and we have this indirectly taught by comparison in the very first chapter of Genesis, in the statement, "let us make man according to our image, and according to a process of conformity to us." Now man is a personal organic being, and we find that when the organism in which his life resides fails in the performance of its offices he dies.

But we have more specific revelation and teaching on this subject. Christ tells us specifically what has been generally revealed all along before in his word, that God is a pneuma a Spirit, and this is the next term or appellative for us to consider.

What is a pneuma? Let Paul answer 1 Cor. xv. 44: estin soma psuchikon kai estin soma pneumatikon. "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body." Notice the term Paul uses, translated "natural." psuchikon is an adjective derived from the noun psuche meaning the natural life in contradistinction to another life called the pneumatikon or spiritual. This word being an adjective derived from the noun pneuma meaning spirit. Now the term psuche is used in two general senses in the Scriptures of the Old and New Covenant, namely in the sense of the natural life and in the sense of the organism in which this life resides.

As instances of the latter use see the frequent specific instructions under the Levitical law in the books of Leviticus and Numbers in regard to touching an unclean one living or dead. See this passage in Num. xix. 11:

Ho haptomenos pantos nekrou psuches anthropou, kai apothanon ekatheristai hepta hemeras.

"The one who toucheth any dead soul (psuche) of a man shall be unclean seven days."

See a similar warning in Num. vi. 6, 7. Read Lev. xxii. 1-6, and bear in mind that the psuche is what Moses is talking about here, and I think you will be satisfied that psuche sometimes means the organism in which the natural life resides, and not what is commonly understood by "an immortal soul."

Then think of and read about Christ as he was after his resurrection, and as he appeared in his completed state of spiritual organism, or as an organic pneuma, and this perhaps will make clearer the statement which Paul makes and which I have quoted above, and so from the teaching of Scripture we have no reason to suppose that there is any complete spiritual life without organism.

The words zoio and pneuo are both verbal nouns, and express the effect of the action of their primitive verbs, and the verbs both mean "to breathe." Then the effect or result of breathing is an animate or living organism, the cessation of it a dead organism. There can be no animate organism without breath, neither can there be any breath without its consequent result—animate organism. This we know to be true of the psuche and we have Paul's specific statement to the effect that the same phenomenon is true of pneuma. Therefore when Christ tells us that God is a pneuma he means that God is an organic spiritual being, having a breath of spiritual life, and we are told that Christ in his perfected or completed post-resurrectional state is an eikon or image of him, and I suppose in the same analogous sense in which Adam's son Seth was an image of his father, who is said to have been begotten according to his—Adam's—idea and eikon, and I suppose that this statement in Gen. v. 3, is given us in this specific way to teach us this very truth by analogy.

The remaining terms to consider are kurios-kurieuo and dioteuo. These also are verbal nouns denoting the doer of the action expressed by their primitives. The first is from the compound verb kuriarcheuo, which means "to control all things," and the verbal noun would mean a person who controls all things, and from the very nature of the definition there could therefore be but one such person. The other comes from the verb dioteuo, which means to rule with despotic sway, and the noun would mean the person who thus rules, and of course the extent of this person's sway would be limited only by the extent of the realm over which he held sway.

The first of these two words implies an unlimited sway, the last is limited only by the fact of what the realm is.

Every one of these appellatives then we have found to be personal appellatives. Theos, kurios, a despotes, eyeh, chai, pneuma define the nature of this person, elohim, yehovah, adonai and eikon his official position and character as a ruler, or in one word his Sovereignty. Now it is in one's personal nature and the assertion of this personality within the realm of that person's sovereignty that his glory consists and resides, is it not? Well, God, this God of whom we have been speaking has said unequivocally, "My glory will I not give to another," and I do not believe he has or ever will. In the type Pharaoh stands in the place of God and Joseph in the place of Christ. Did Joseph become Pharaoh or Pharaoh Joseph? In the type Moses is said to have become "for a god" to Aaron and his sons as well as to Pharaoh and the Egyptians, and Moses is a type of Christ. Did Moses become God thereby? In the type of course Aaron and his sons represent the "brethren of Christ," or "the royal priesthood." In the type Moses is for "a god." In the reality Christ is a god; but it cannot by any analogous reasoning be inferred that either of them was a God—The God himself, the one personal God, who has said, My glory will I not give to another, which is in substance just what Pharaoh says when he confers the same authority upon Joseph. These are the exact words and very significant they are too:

Idou kathistemi se epano pases tes ges Aiguptou. Kai aphelomenos ho Pharao ton daktulion ton heautou apo tes cheiros autou edooken auton epi tes cheiros Iosephi.

And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh. (Personality and consciousness of its glory asserted here, I think.) Without thee no one shall raise his hand over all the land of Egypt, and Pharaoh called Joseph's name "A Savior of the World."

We conclude therefore, that there is One personal, spiritually organic Almighty God; the Great Intelligent First Cause of all things, the Creator of all things, and therefore having an inherent right to rule as a despot over all things, or to appoint any one else he may choose to rule subordinately to him, as Pharaoh appointed Joseph, and as he hath chosen and appointed his subordinates according to his will and word from Enoch and his days to Christ and his days, and called them all "sons of God" alike. I see no difference in kind, but in degree. Each one, whether he be Enoch, Moses, Elijah or Christ is a person, and has a distinct personality of his own. Each and all of them have a miraculous or supernatural experience while in the flesh, an experience which indicates a "partnership" with God, and I do not see that this partnership differs in "kind," but in "degree." I see that God gives the ability to Enoch and all of these several persons, and that he is the source of their ability, and I see that while still asserting and maintaining his own distinct personality and power which is his glory, he has permitted and directed his Son Jesus Christ to hold the intelligent reins of control over this universe for a specific purpose and period, which is designated as tous aionas ton aionon, and has called him kurios of all (not of his pneuma creation in the sense of making, but of) his ktisis creation in the sense of to populate, colonize or govern according to certain existing laws.

Paul makes this very clear in 1 Cor. xv., where he says "not first was spiritual, but the natural, after that the spiritual. The first man was from the earth, of dust; the second man the Lord from heaven," and in ver. 45, just preceding, he has named these two men the first and last Adam. The one is first in the order of time and creation, the other is first in degree and importance of creation, and herein we see the true and primitive meaning of the Scripture which saith, "the first shall be last and the last first," and the meaning also of John's words, where he says, "he hath been preferred before me, because he is my chief." Of course in the plan and purpose of God, Christ was always first, and God is said to have finished all his works in six days and to have rested on the seventh; but Christ says, My Father worketh hitherto and I work. In what sense then did God finish his works in six days? In the same sense that an architect finishes his plan and purpose of a great building.

Remember God calls himself both an architect and a builder, technites kai demiourgos—last clause of Heb. xi. 10, and I suppose that every son and daughter of Adam, from the beginning to the end of the world was one of the completed details of this plan and purpose of God, but they had to be brought forth or worked out in the building process just as the details of the architect's plan have to be worked out in their order from the "building in" or preparation for the foundation stones upward.

So we find in Rev. xxi. 18, this statement, — kai he oikodome tou teichous autes ennphos—"and the building in (the sub-foundation) of the wall is jasper." Do you know, reader, what jasper stands for in the symbolic language of Scripture? It is the character and attributes or nature of God. Now the foundation stones or themelioi are laid one by one upon this oikodome. The lithoi constitutes the first course of masonry into which is finally fitted the akrogoniaion or corner-stone. See Eph. ii. 20: "Having been built upon the foundation course of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the corner-stone — akrogoniaion. Again, "Have ye not heard how that the stone which the builders rejected hath become the head of the corner, that is the akrogoniaion? When did it become so in the order of time? Read 1 Peter ii. 1-8, and note the significance of ver. 6 with its context as an answer to this question.

Dioti periechei en Graphe—Idou tithemi en Sioni lithon akrogoniaion eklekton entimon kai ho pisteuon ep autoi ou me kataischunthe.

"For I lay in Zion a stone, a corner-stone, chosen, precious and the one who believeth in it will not have been put to shame."

I repeat, when was this stone actually laid? Was it not when Christ himself said "it is finished?" When was it rejected by the builders, and who were these builders? Were they not the old Jewish church, and did not that rejection just precede the fact of the laying of the corner-stone by the hand of the Master Builder?

This stone is called a living stone in ver. 4. All whom Peter addresses in ver. 5, are also called living stones. Had not the first course of the foundation already been laid ready for the corner-stone by the hand of the Master Builder, namely those living stones, called the apostles and prophets, Eph. ii. 20? Is not that the way in which a great building is usually built? The corner-stone is never laid first in the order of time, although always first in the order of importance in its relation to the whole building. Why so important? Because every angle and the harmony and symetry of the whole building is determined by it.

Let us review now the divine order or plan being worked out as we have found it revealed in his word.

1. The themelioi or preparation for the laying of those living stones in God's temple. This is the assertion in his word of the nature, character, attributes and purpose of God—theos—all summed up in his personality one and indivisible.

2. The themelioi of the living foundation stones, called "the apostles and prophets."

3. The living foundation stone called "the chief corner-stone."

4. All who are being built as living stones upon this living foundation, the work thus going on to a completed state, the whole when completed called an oikos pneumatikos, a spiritual house, hieroteuma hagion, a sanctified priesthood, a royal priesthood, or kings and priests unto theo, The God and his (Christ's) Father. To him be the glory and the controlling power for the ages of the ages. Amen.

Who then is Christ? The living Son of the living God, and the archo of all his creation. Anything more or less than this is a perversion of his living word, because in 1 Chron. xxix. 12, by the mouth of his servant David the Living God says that he himself is Ruler (or archon) of every archo—archei pantos archou, and moreover, kai en soi dunamis kai to kratos en soi megalunai kai to archein epi pantos.

"And in thy hand are strength and sovereign ability, and with thy hand art thou almighty to magnify and to strengthen all things," speaking of himself by the mouth of David.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Selections.

A Conflict of Spiritual Authority.

If ever there were a monarch to whom the old saying "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown" would apply, it is the Sultan of Turkey. Since his defeat by Russia troubles have heaped themselves upon troubles, and no sooner is he out of a complication than another ensues. Only by duplicity has he escaped serious responsibility in Egypt, but no sooner is he out of his Egyptian troubles than the whole population of the Soudan is in a ferment and rising against his spiritual authority, while on the Persian frontier the old Kurd Chief, Obeidullah, is at the head of a strong army, which he must suppress. And this is not all. A worse trouble has arisen at Mecca, which is the spiritual capital of Islam, and sometimes in Mahommodan countries the spiritual capital, when once a religious frenzy was roused, has proved stronger than the political capital.

The events at Mecca are part and parcel of a great religious movement, involving a revival of Islamism which is of extraordinary interest, and which promises before it is settled to make considerable stir in the religious world. It will be remembered that about three years ago the Grand Shereef of Mecca was assassinated at Jeddah while leading the procession of pilgrims who were on their way to perform the sacred rites at the temple of Kaaba. It has been implicitly believed ever since in the Far East that the murder was the indirect work of the Sultan, and that belief was strengthened by the refusal of the Sultan to appoint the Shereef's brother, who was his legitimate successor, in his place. He kept the brother out of the position by force and appointed instead one Abdul Metalib, a Turk, whom the Sultan thought would be entirely subservient to him and would be of great service in restoring his waning influence in the Holy Places. The new Shereef for some reason did not fulfil the expectations of the Sultan, and one day he suddenly disappeared from Mecca. Everything in the East happens mysteriously and dramatically. For a long time it was not known what had become of the Sultan's Shereef, and it is not known even now what were his grounds of offense, but it has recently been discovered that he is in the same prison with the unfortunate Midhat Pasha. This indignity to so high a religious functionary caused a feeling of great disapprobation among the faithful, and this feeling was intensified when a few days after Abdul Metalib's disappearance a new Shereef, Aoun Refik, appeared upon the scene. He had not been in office a week before it was apparent that he was appointed only to carry out the purposes of the Sultan and advance his personal interests. It was discovered that he had been politically intimate with the Sultan, and all his movements showed that he was the Sultan's creature. The most determined opposition has been made to him, and the Ulama have refused to recognize him, which at once brings about a conflict of spiritual authority. More than this, they have appealed to the Arabs, which may bring out a conflict of temporal authority, as the feeling of dissatisfaction is not confined to Arabia, but also pervades Africa, as is shown by the uprising in the Soudan.

The elements which are in such vigorous commotion promise to develop into a struggle within Islam itself, which may not settle until radical changes have been made, among them the possible wresting of the Holy Places from the control of the Sultan, and whatever power shall hold these places will exercise a tremendous influence upon the future of Islam. The most sacred thing in the eyes of Mohammedans is the custody of their Holy Places, and they will not regard with patience or reverence any custodian who is perverting his position to minister to the political policy or the selfish and sensual desires of the Sultan and his corrupt clique. It is the universal testimony of all observers who are acquainted with the world of Islam that discontent exists everywhere, and that its followers are anxiously waiting and watching for the coming of the Messiah foretold by the prophet. When the struggle does come for the reform and revival of Islam, a struggle which will involve the spiritual interests of six hundred and seventy-five millions of human beings, it cannot but possess an extraordinary interest. What will be the result? Is this dangerous cleavage in the ranks of the faithful the first sign of impending dissolution and the triumph of Christianity? This would appear to be the opinion of Mr. Oliphant, a very close observer, who in a recent article said:

The coming man of genius as yet unrevealed, and is perhaps never destined to come at all. If so, the tendency of political history seems to point clearly to the decay of Moslem influence, and to the extension of Christian power in Egypt, in Syria, and in Anatolia. The Pan-Islamic scheme must perish through the weakness and artificiality of its character, through the disunion of Moslem tribes and sects, and the evident contradiction between the Sultan's pretensions and the plain words of the Koran.

Opinions differ, however, among the authorities. Mr. Wilfrid Blunt, who has spent almost his entire life among Mohammedans, declares:

The great difficulty which, as things now stand, besets reform is this: The Sheriat, or written code of law, still stands in orthodox Islam as an unimpeachable authority. The law in itself is an excellent law, and as such commends itself to the loyalty of honest and God-fearing men; but on certain points it is irreconcilable with the modern needs of Islam, and it cannot legally be altered. When it was framed it was not suspected that Mohammedans would ever be subjects of a Christian Power, or that the Mohammedan State would ever need to accommodate itself to Christian demands in its internal policy. It contemplated, too, mainly a state of war, and it accepted slavery, and concubinage as war's natural concomitants. It did not understand that some day Islam would have to live at peace with its neighbors, if it would live at all, or that the general moral sense of the world would be brought to bear upon it with such force that the higher instincts of Moslems themselves should feel the necessity of restricting its old and rather barbarous license as to marriage and divorce.

Mr. Blunt thinks that the necessary changes in the law will be made, not at Constantinople, but at Mecca, and that when the legal difficulties are overcome and Mecca has been made the centre of supreme power, Islam will be brought into harmony with Christianity. This is a glowing view, but whatever else may happen it would seem inevitable that the time is speedily coming when the Caliphate will be transferred from the Bosphorus to the Holy Places, and Abdul Hamid, who obtained his present position by craft, by corruption, and probably by murder will no longer exercise any spiritual authority over Islam.

BUCHANAN, Mich., Oct. 20, '82.

Editor Restitution:

Our father (Borne)l Bronson) died last Thursday morning, aged 81, in full hope of a "better" resurrection. Before his death, in settling his business, he gave me five dollars to be given to THE RESTITUTION. I have inclosed the same according to his wishes. Do with the little amount as you may see best, as a gift from father who is now done with all the cares, sorrows, and tears, of this life and is now at rest awaiting the better morning soon to come.

Yours in hope of the same,
L. E. BRONSON.

I propose preaching this winter and desire the brethren scattered through the west half of Iowa to report to me at Newell, Buena Vista county, Iowa, and I will try and visit them during the winter. Yours Truly.
T. J. WHITENITT.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 8, 1882.

Stockholders' Meeting.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association will be held in Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 11, 1882, for the purpose of hearing the reports of the Officers, and electing a Board of Directors.

E. K. BARNHILL, Sec.

As our columns are full we must defer notices of books and periodicals to a future number.

Let all do what they can for the success of THE RESTITUTION. Should the Association make a change in its Editorial management, we shall feel the same anxiety for its prosperity.

One of our prominent writers has paid ten subscriptions for six months to have THE RESTITUTION sent to ministers and friends of his acquaintance. It is a sacrifice on his part as he is not wealthy. To him and to others who have aided we extend our thanks.

We give by way of introduction to the following selection, the full text of the Latin Vulgate with literal translation. Thebes, or Diospolis, was situated in Upper Egypt on both sides of the Nile, and at quite a distance from any Sea. Hence the description of the prophet more nearly suits the situation of Alexandria. "Numquid melior es Alexandria populorum, quae habitat in fluminibus? aquae in circuitu ejus; cujus divitiae mare: aquae muri ejus. Nahum iii. 8. Now art thou better than Alexandria for populousness which dwells amid the rivers? the waters encompass her—from the sea is her wealth—and the waters are her walls." For a time Alexandria was the greatest trading mart in the world, and marine traffic constituted the source of its great wealth. It lost its mercantile supremacy when the East India trade was diverted by sailing around the Cape of Good Hope. We give the Latin text and the selection as curious co-incidences if no more.

ALEXANDRIA'S DEVASTATION FORE-TOLD.

A Society journal of the fashionable world utters the following comments on the prophetic aspects of the Egyptian war: "The rapid decadence of the Ottoman Empire and the mysterious undercurrent and belief among all Mohammedans that the crisis of their religion has arisen, and that a religious war ('Jehad') will forthwith take place, which shall either fully re-establish the Mohammedan power as in its palmy days, or end in its utter destruction, is of great interest. The prophet Nahum graphically describes Alexandria as situated among the rivers with the waters around about, and the sea as a 'rampart' (Nahum iii. 8): 'Art thou better than populous No Amon, that was situate among the rivers: that had the waters round about it, whose rampart was the sea, and her wall was from the sea? Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength.'

"This is exactly what Alexandria is surrounded by, the rivers of the Delta and the lakes, with the sea in front. In the margin of the Bibles of the sixteenth century No Amon is corrected 'Alexandria.' In the older Jerish Spanish Bible the text is Alexandria. In the Vulgate (Jerome's) the words are 'faciam judicia in Alexandria.' The Jewish Targum of Jonathan Ben Uziel distinctly calls it Alexandria.

"After the battle of Issus, Alexander was so elated that he declared himself to be the son of Jupiter Amon, and marching south to Egypt, he laid seige to Gaza on the way. His army being detained by the protracted resistance of that city, he made his celebrated journey to Jerusalem, where the high priest in his robes, and the priests and elders, came forth to meet him, showed him the prophecies of Daniel concerning Himself, and declared he was commissioned by Jehovah. Greatly exalted by this further evidence of his Divine mission, he came to the ruins of the city of Jupiter Amon and ordered it to be rebuilt (n. c. 332).

Passing on, he went several days' journey into the Libyan desert, to the celebrated oasis of the Temple of Jupiter Amon, and there he was, with much ceremony, declared by the priests of the Temple to be the son of Jupiter Amon. He returned with great triumph, ordering his new city to be called, not merely the city of Amon, but of Alexander, the son of Amon. The devastation of the city of Alexander, son of Amon, at the present day is therefore a singular incident. Now in the fullness of time the long foretold, and nearly finished, destruction of the Mohammedan power in Europe, Asia, and Africa is nearly accomplished, and the great River Euphrates of the prophet very nearly dried up. It is a strange fact that we are looking at the fulfilment of prophecy before our very eyes, while the thinly-veiled determination of Russia to try to seize the Holy Land, and profit by the dismemberment of Turkey, points with no faltering finger to 'the things that must shortly come to pass.'"

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 5.

Prelude—By what agencies, and in what manner will the land of Israel be so fertilized as to sustain a dense population?—History of the Arabian Dynasty — Its names — Arabian — Saracenic—Location—Caliphate—Why so called?—First family that ruled the Mohammedan empire—Mohammedan empire to the building of Bagdad—As a power in the government of the world.

Prelude.—Land of Israel fertilized. By what agencies, and in what manner shall it be accomplished? Water, combined with some other power, is admitted to be the chief agent of its increased fertility; but whence the water, and how applied we propose to discuss.

I. One view brings the water from the Great Sea, through an earthquake channel, Zech. xiv. 5. That theory is, in substance, the following: The earthquake of Zech. xiv. will open a deep, broad channel from Azal on the Mediterranean Sea, in a line through the Mount of Olives, towards the Dead Sea. The waters of the Dead Sea being 1312 feet below the waters of the Great Sea; these latter waters, by the law of gravitation, rushing down this open channel, fill the Dead Sea basin; these waters, held in by surrounding mountains, rush down and clean out the old bed of the Jordan to the Red Sea. In this manner Jerusalem would be made the great seaport for the world's commerce, and the land of Israel be made, in this manner, a new Eden. This view has thrown around it one feature of interest, that of novelty. Can it be correct? We think not. Our space will not allow us to dwell on its difficulties. Three objections will be sufficient to name.

1. The theory assumes too much relative to the channel.

a. By making Azal, Asedon, it opens a long channel. Azal is a common (appellative) noun rather than a proper noun. Its Hebrew is אצל and signifies standing still, ceasing; as a noun it means to the ceasing, or end. My mountain valley,' is the valley of Jehoshaphat—lengthened eastward by the earthquake valley which terminated toward the east at Azal; to the ceasing or end of their danger, a short space east of the eastern base of the Mount of Olives. God prolongs the valley of Jehoshaphat, east through the mount for sudden escape. They pass through it to a place of safety. The new valley was east of Jerusalem.

b. The waters of the Great Sea would rush downward till they had filled the basin of the Dead Sea, submerging En-gedi (Gen. xlvii. 10) 900 feet; and En-eglaim 1240 feet; a somewhat moist place for drying nets.

c. By actual measurement the waters of the Mediterranean and Red Seas have exactly the same mean level. The Dead Sea basin being filled to its brim, the three seas occupying the same level: how then could the old Jordan bed be cleaned of its drift sands by any of these waters? Would the force of gravity allow any flow in these waters? When these objections are removed we have others to present. The affirmative will appear in our next number.

The Arabian Dynasty of the Mohammedan empire.—The materials for Mohammed's new religion, and his new empire were gathered, educated, and closely drilled for the work of their mission by Mohammed himself; but the mission itself remained to be announced by his immediate successors—Caliphs. The dynasty that succeeded him in his empire was called by various names, such as Arabian, Saracenic, Locustian and Caliphate, as pointing out the nation or the office. The dynasty was called Arabian because the people of Arabia composed it; and as Arab means locust, it was Locustian. The Arabs were called Saracens (robbers of the desert) by the Greeks and Romans; a name which made tremble the nations of Christendom. We can use either of the four: since Caliphate means succession and simply denotes the office. As Caliph signifies succession, the peculiarities of the successions should be noticed, in order that the reader may the better understand the mission of the Mohammedan empire.

Mohammed's Caliphs or successors were to occupy the prophet's position in the new empire; but Mohammed was a priest and a kingin royal high-priest, with the throne subservient to the altar; the Koran was a civil code as well as the rule of faith. The Caliphs were under the Arabian dynasty, royal high priests. Under the first dynasty there was a union of the church and state—the church, the chief thought, the state its subordinate adjuncts, to aid it in its conquests. Thoughts exist in groups, one chief thought with its family of associated thoughts, as adjuncts or accessories. Thoughts become visible by giving them bodies; by an embodiment. The universe is the embodiment of a series of divine thoughts. The earth is the embodiment of one in that infinite series. This chief thought has its family of subordinate thoughts. The chief thought in the earth's creation was to furnish a habitation for a being in his image, to govern the lower orders of animated nature; and himself to be under the pure and holy government of his incarnated Son. As the earth progressed in its series of developements, new families of thoughts sprang into being by assuming visible forms. Thoughts are either chiefs or accessories. A few examples will illustrate our meaning.

The empires of the earth are embodiments, each one, of one chief or central thought with its families of subordinates and accessories. Man thinks, these thoughts assume visible forms.

1. Babylon, for instance, is a visible embodiment of a chief thought with its family of subordinates. Some person, standing upon the site, thought that it would make a desirable abode. It was made such, and the chief, and at first invisible thought, assumed a visible form, and was made a single dwelling place. Its growth was by the visible embodiment of families of accessories. By investigating the elements of any embodiment we learn the character of the thought itself.

This primary chief thought which, by families, afterward grew into an empire, was, at first, the thought of one man, assuming the visible form of an earthly abode. The thought had no religious element. It was purely of the earth, earthy. Each of the four Gentile monarchies belongs to this class of thought. It was so of Persia, Greece and Rome. They were the offspring of worldly thoughts, without any religious element. The religious elements of the four empires were after thoughts belonging to the families of the secondary accessory thoughts.

The allegation, designed to be established, will find a clear illustration in the origin of the Roman empire. Romulus, walking in the vicinity of the Tiber, is struck with the peculiar beauty of a certain spot. A thought springs to birth—this would make no pleasant home. This thought is subsequently embodied, and a visible farm home is the result. This chief parent thought gives birth to an endless progeny of thoughts, secondary, though related to the chief parent thought. The embodiment of the accessories constituted the village of Rome; then, by their increase, the village became a city; and in the revolution of ages, the mighty all-conquering Roman empire. A simple thought springing up in the brain of one man, grows into an empire. It will be seen, also, that religion was no attribute of this chief thought. The same is true, as we have already stated, of the four Gentile monarchies. Religion was the growth of after-thoughts, born simply to aid worldly schemes. Our allegation which we purpose to establish, is this, the Mohammedan empire in its origin, and in its constituent elements, is unlike the empires that preceded it; and well deserves the name of a new empire, composed of a new religion, and a new code of civil jurisprudence; both systems originating in the mind of Mohammed and contained in a book called the Koran. In this empire a divine truth is the chief, primary thought—"One God."

Born under a system of gross idolatry in whose Kaaba (square house) were 360 images, and he himself of the tribe of priests, a thought is born in the mind of Mohammed, which, when named, was called, "There is only one God." We do not pretend that this thought originated with Mohammed. The Arabian prophet got the thought from the mind of Moses; and Moses received it from God, "Hear O Israel, the Lord, our God, is one Lord." Mark xii. 29; Deut. vi. 14.

Mohammed, however, gives this thought of the divine unity, quite another origin: "Conveyed by Al Borak (the lightning; from Mecca to Jerusalem, he there, under the guidance of Gabriel, passes upward through the seven heavens, saluting as he passes the various ranks of men (Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses and Christ) and of angels." Beyond the seventh heaven, he was alone, having transcended the limits of all other created being. Passing the veil of the Divine Unity, his lightning steed hurried him onward to within two bow-shots of the throne, where, amidst the joy coldness that protects the mountain throne of light, he was touched by the hand of the Deity. Such an origin of the Divine Unity was sufficient to silence all his idolatrous objectors to his views.

This primary thought, enthroned as chief in the mind of Mohammed, soon begets a family of accessory thoughts; individuals of which are as follows:—"God is not begotten, neither is he a begetter; therefore Jesus is not the Son of God." 2. I am sent (apostle) of God to proclaim this truth (the divine unity) unto all nations as the article of faith and universal obedience. 3. The sword is the only effectual agent to accomplish such a change in human belief. Such was the origin of his empire. The embodiment of the cardinal truth (one God) with its primary adjunct (Mohammed is his apostle) gave to the world a new religion. The embodiment of the power of the sword originated a new empire. Their union in the person of Mohammed constituted the original Mohammedan empire, an empire peculiar in its origin and in its history.

The Mohammedan empire, under Mohammed its founder, was a union of church and state, the state being subordinate. Since that empire is the proper offspring of Mohammed's brain, it should have the name of its father; and not that of a foreign dynasty (Ottoman). It is an empire, in the strictest sense, of a false prophet. It is a religious empire, a church empire; composed of a body of Unitarians—the great Unitarian church of the world. Its first dynasty of rulers was composed of Unitarian high priests. Its second dynasty of chief rulers, was civil, that being the predominating power.

In the four Gentile monarchies, the civil is the original predominating element; in the Mohammedan empire the religious element is supreme. In the four universal empires the throne was supreme. In the empire of the False Prophet the altar was supreme; it resembling the Papal empire. The Mohammedan empire may exist, and be one of the chief empires in Satan's triple empire, though its present dynasty be driven beyond the Euphrates, its ancient extreme western boundary.

Late movements in the Mohammedan world, point to the restitution of the supreme power to the Caliphs, and the re-establishment of the Arabian dynasty. Under this dynasty the Mohammedan empire was in its zenith of glory. The power of the Caliphs was supreme. The belt of empires, except a small fraction of the Latin and Greek empires, was under their domination. They were the most absolute sovereigns then in existence. Their riches and splendor exceeded the Roman, even in the days of Trajan. To those that desire to master the events of the fifth trumpet, the Arabian dynasty of the Mohammedan empire should be fully studied.

J. P. WEETHEE.

"THE WORLD'S CRISIS."

What it is! and How Misapplied to "Darken Counsel" and Mislead.

One thing is certain. It is a majestic phrase; as profound in its import as it is comprehensive in its relations to God's great purpose as to man, the earth, and the universe. Eph. i. 8–10. "Crisis" or crima is the Greek word for "Judgment according to truth." Rom. xi. 21. "He will send forth judgment (crisis) unto victory." Matt. xii. 17–21.

"The world's crisis" demands its revealed duration; its "times" with its order of events as they stand related to all classes; to the "Jews, Gentiles, and the church of God."

Please observe. Every agent of our government is bound to accept his orders and instructions as given. No one is allowed to obey in part and disobey at discretion. Thus in teaching truth—"the logos (word) of the living God." 1 Pet. i. 23.

No one may teach the first advent consistently, and ignore the second, as embodied in the Lord's supper service, and all gospel. No one can rationally teach "the resurrection of the just" and deny that of "the unjust," as taught in the same text—because both are alike truth or falsehood, as to accountability. John iii. 16–21; v. 24–29; Acts xxiv. 14, 15; 2 Peter ii. 9; Jude 3–15.

It is vain to teach "mercy" and deny "righteousness;" because "mercy and truth meet—righteousness and peace kiss each other." Psa. lxxxv. 10–13. They blend in moral government. Again we read: "Justice and judgment are the habitation of the throne, mercy and truth (according to truth) go before his face." Psa. lxxxix. 14.

Thus as to this phrase: "The world's crisis." Both right and reason require that we take it in its relation to all objects and classes as "God has spoken," (but never as men misjudge).

But our caption; "The world's crisis," is publicly and persistently limited (in redemption) to the deliverance of "the church" and (in restitution) to new heavens and earth, at once. Omitting both time and event—"Israel the throne and tabernacle of David—the land of promise—the times of Restitution—the thousand years;—(six times told in one passage); and the anti-typical and essential Sabbath,—the great and appearing day of the Lord—as a thousand years." Heb. iv. 1–9; Acts ii. 20; 2 Pet. 3–8; Rev. xx 3–7.

There was no excuse for the Jews that they were consistent with prevailing party opinion against Jesus, John viii. 22–24. So now, it is true that, "the Lord will crush kings in the day of his wrath." Psa. cx; Dan. ii. 44–45; Rev. xvii. to xx. But "the world's crisis" is to inaugurate Christ and his saints in "the kingdom to come, and that in the world to come." Heb. ii. 5–14; Matt. xii. 32; and for the crowning consummation of "the restitution of all things spoken" in "new heavens and new earth."

This grand view seems certain from the succession of all the great crises of earth's government. The judgment of God on Babylon was by the inauguration and career of Cyrus the Persian. Both alike belonged to that "crisis!" So the judgment on Jerusalem and the Jews, at the close of the Mosaic age, was soon Sent with the opening of the age of gospel grace to the Gentiles. Acts xv. 14; Rom. xi. 12–15.

Thus "the kingdom of men" (7 times Dan. iv. and v.) will give way to "the reign of Christ—the kingdom of God" Dan. iv. 17; ii. 44–45; 1 Cor. xv. 24–27. "Man's day—man's judgment," 1 Cor. iv. 3, is to yield to judgment "day of God—as 1000 years." 2 Peter iii. 7–10. "The times of the Gentiles" to "his times, who is the blessed and only Potentate—the King of kings." 1 Tim. vi. 15; Psa. lxxii. and xcviii; Luke xxiv. 25, 44. This fact is broad and firm enough to sustain the entire argument for patriarchal and prophetic faith and hope.

"The Prince of this world" must go, as "the Prince of Peace" comes into power. John xiv. 30; Rev. xi. 15–18; Isa. ix. 6–7; Rev. xix. and xx. "The power of darkness"—"the night of sin" must end in "the sun of righteousness and day of God." What can object to God's having time for this day? The principle seems one of cause and effect; "as it is written, Zion shall be redeemed with judgment and her converts with righteousness." Isa. i. 27. All Scripture affirms this.

These illustrations forbid that any instructed heart should consent (except in utter mistake) to publish and maintain, (unfaithfully) but one aspect of this great theme, and that exceedingly circumscribed. For those who ignore the 1000 years, the times of restitution, and the revealed subjects of the reign and restitution," act as if they fear to trust Christ, in the exercise of his full power in heaven and earth!" They distrust "the saints, even under Christ and in the counsel of God," as if God's word was too weak for faith to rest on. Dan. vii. 17–27. Note. This is to aid the feeble; and on my part to be "a fellow helper to the truth." 3 John viii. The facts of the case show the folly and the wrong in limiting the truth embraced in "The world's crisis," as the paper in Boston with that title does, as if to "a third dilution." Gen. xxii. 17–18; Psa. lxxii. 17–20; Matt. xix. 28, 20, 21; Luke xxii. 28–30; 1 Cor. vi. 2; Rev. ii. 20; xx. 4–6.

This grandest of titles should not be belittled and whittled down to the very small measure of any human speculation, and omit the Patriarchal, Mosaic, Apostolic and Messianic teachings as to the future of earth and man. We should indeed proclaim the doom of "Babylon the great," etc., but we should set forth the everlasting rainbow—covenant, as to "the restitution of all things spoken by all the prophets," Amen! This is the crowning glory of the "crisis." The gospel calling of the church of the First Born, over 1800 years should allow 1000 for the restitution!

The truth edifies, enlarges the heart and inspires the most ecstatic joy of hope. Rom. 8. "The sin of the world" will indeed be "taken away," but mainly that all the promises—"Yea and amen"—may be fulfilled to the glory of God." Amen!

The contrast between judgment and mercy is very greatly on the side of mercy. "Mercy rejoiceth (glorieth over or) against judgment." Jas. ii. 13; Matt. xii. 7; Hos. vi. 1–3; Deut. xix. 13; xxi. 9; 1 Cor. x. 8–11. Sin was put away by executing the sinner to save and bless Israel. So of "The world's crisis." For there can be no "deliverance" of creation (creaturehood) from vile with the Pope, Grand Turk and the Devil in it.

Hence these powers must end, in order to filling "all the earth with the glory of the Lord" by the blessed reign and restitution. Amen.

J. B. COOK.

News Items.

CONSTANTINOPLE, November 2.—The Sultan has furnished Gen. Wallace with letters to the Syrian authorities, instructing them to receive and entertain the Minister of the United States as his guest.

News of even a greater disaster than the Manila hurricane comes from the far East. In central Japan whole villages have been swept away by floods, and thousands of lives are said to have been lost. The more it is studied the more remarkable the weather of the present autumn appears to be.

ALEX SUEZ, November 5.—The forces of the False Prophet in the Soudan have made five attacks on the town of Obeid, the capital of Kordofan, but were driven back with great loss. Among those killed were two brothers of the False Prophet. Obeid remains invested, and the Prophet continues his advance upon Khartoum, for which there is hope of a successful defense.

CONSTANTINOPLE, November 5.—There was an earthquake in Northern Syria yesterday. Several villages near Aintab were destroyed. No loss of life is reported.

FRENCH INTERESTS.

PARIS, November 6.—The European Powers, with the exception of France, accept the proposition of British control in Egypt under European surveillance. The Paris papers are much irritated at this state of affairs, and earnestly urge the government to carefully guard the interests of France against the rapacity of the British.

REBELS INDICTED.

CAIRO, November 6.—The committee for the prosecution of the rebels, which is holding daily sessions here, has tried 200 prisoners, of whom fifty have been found guilty. These will have trial by court-martial as soon as it can be convened.

THE WAR IN SOUDAN.

Eight thousand troops are on the point of starting to Suakim to oppose the new insurrection. A reserve force of 3,000 has been detailed to remain at Koroska and guard that point.

ST. PETERSBURG, November 6.—The weather is extremely cold, and the navigation is closed. The river Neva is blocked with ice.

FASTEST MAIL TRAIN ON RECORD.

PITTSBURG, Pa., November 4.—The Australian mails, en route from San Francisco for Europe, arrived here this morning, and will reach New York this evening, provided no accident occurs. The mails left San Francisco Monday afternoon last, and will make the trip in five days, the fastest mail train on record.

The special correspondent of the London Telegraph tells the following story about Arabi, and declares that it is authentic: "When Arabi had constructed the big dam across the canal at Tel-el-Kebir, which was to complete the Arabian stronghold, it was considered absolutely necessary to obtain the approval of a holy Bedouin recluse. Arabi conducted the sage everywhere; showed him the Christians, on whom he invoked a curse; led him over his works, displayed his army, and demanded a blessing on his arms. When they came to the wonderful dam, the saint followed ominously and cried, 'What, my son, is this?' 'Holy father,' replied the rebel chieftain, 'this is to cut off all the water supply from the odious enemy.' 'This may not be,' retorted the recluse sternly; 'know that the hateful Christian, though lamentably benighted and besotted, and grievously arrogant to boot, is, after all, an erring child of Allah. Water is given for all creatures. He has a right to water, like the rest. Open the way, that at least some of the precious stream may moisten his parched throat.' And actually it was found, on arrival at Tel-el-Kebir, that, reluctantly enough, no doubt, Arabi had obeyed the sage mandate. Through the centre of the dam an opening had been made about six feet wide, by way of which the muddy stream was percolating slowly. The English had found the water scanty and foul, but, thanks to the Bedouin sage, the supply was not totally cut off.

No preventing Providence I will be at Eureka, Wis., to commence meeting Friday evening, Nov. 10, and hold over Sunday. Will Brother Jaeger please to see that the proper arrangements are made, place of meeting decided on, and appointment circulated so that the people will understand when and where the meetings are to be. I will be at the Berlin depot Thursday, on the noon train; please meet me there.

MRS. A. C. SEDUWICK.

Youths' Column.

A Lullaby.

Sleep, my child! the shadows fall;
Silent darkness reigns o'er all;
Bird and bloom are lost to sight
In the folded arms of night;
Stars will soon from cloud-haven peep,
While all nature lies asleep.

Breathe thou softly! dear is rest
For tired heart and aching feet;
No dull care nor toil is mine—
Nor sin, thou fearest child of mine;
Trancquil on thy soft couch rest,
With dreams of heaven in thy breast.

Hear! are sleeping; close thine eyes;
Watch with a soft surprise;
Across the morning sun, thy smile,
And sweet gratitude without guile.
See! the sleeping in the dew are;
Shadows fall the daylight hours.

Sleep! Thy Father guards thy rest;
Lay thy head upon his breast;
Safe from those who seek to harm,
Folded in his love and arm.
Sleep! The wars have long been sleeping;
Angels guard from evil keeping,
Over head the pole stars shine
With a radiance half divine,
Slumber, innocent and light,
Wait from heaven on thee to night.

THE PURE IN HEART.—A little girl having read her daily text to her teacher the first twelve verses of the fifth chapter of the Gospel of Matthew, he asked her to stop, and tell Him which of these divine graces, said by our Lord to be blessed, she should most like to have. She paused a little, and then said, with a modest smile, "I would rather be pure in heart." Her teacher asked her why she chose this above all the rest. "Sir," she said, "if I had a pure heart, I should have all the other graces spoken of in the chapter."

You are tender-hearted, and you want to be true, and you are trying to be; learn these two things: Never to be discouraged because good things get on so slowly here; and never to fail daily to do that good which lies next to your hand. Do not be in a hurry, but be diligent. Enter into that sublime patience of the Lord. Be charitable in view of it. God can afford to wait; why cannot we, since we have him to fall back upon? Let patience have her perfect work, and bring forth her celestial fruits. Trust to God to weave your little thread into the great web, though the pattern shows it not yet.—George McDonald.

What Jesus May Say.

Two young girls were walking leisurely home from school one pleasant day in early autumn, when one thus addressed the other:

"Edith Willis, what will the girls say when they hear you have invited Maggie Kelly to your party?"

Edith was silent for a moment, and then, raising her soft blue eyes to those of her companion, she replied:

"Ella, when mamma told me to invite Maggie I asked her the same question. She told me it made no difference what the girls said, who thought Maggie quite beneath them because she was poor and her school-bills were paid by my father; and she asked me if I would like to hear what Jesus would say. So she took her Bible and read to me these words: 'And the King shall answer and say unto them, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'

Ah, little readers! never ask what this and that one will say while you are doing what is right, but what Jesus, your King, will say on the glorious resurrection morning that will soon dawn upon us.

A Timely Song.

It was evening. Mr. Lincoln sat in silence on the deck of dispatch boat No. 9, as it was wending its way along the river, apparently absorbed in the war cloud. The Doctor asked Toinette the octoroon, to sing. She declined on account of the silent presence in their midst. Mr. Lincoln, though seemingly unobservant, heard the request and seconded the desire for a song. So Toinette, with the thought of the great sorrowful, over-burdened heart before her, looked out upon the deepening gloom and sang:—

Oh! why should you fear when the tempest comes down,
And storms gloom o'er you with stillness frown?
The clouds that above you so threateningly lower
But echo the mandate of infinite power.
Hush, terrified soul! as in darkness ye plod!
Be still and remember that I am your God!

Why deem that the burden of sorrow and care
Is more than thy faltering spirit can bear?
Why shrink from the task to thy moments assigned?
I know all thy weakness—I temper the wind.
Be still—and but think as the winepress is trod
Thy Father so wills in the vineyard of God!

The thunders above may incessingly roll,
My eye watches over thy tempest-driven soul!
The nerve yawns before in impervious gloom,
Yet the infinite dwells in the shade of the tomb.
Be still, and remember, O murmuring clod,
Thy future is only the present of God.

The gloom faded out of the face of the President as he came toward her and said, "I thank you, madam, for uttering in song the truths that ought to live in my heart at this time." And he pressed her hand in gratitude.—Henry Churtan's "Toinette."

Poetry.

HYMN AT THE CHRISTIAN'S BURIAL.

Neighbor accept our parting sigh:
The road is short, the rest is long;
The Lord he right here, the Lord takes home.
This is no house of permanence.

On bread of saints and tree of tears
The pilgrim fed these threescore years;
Now landlord world, shut to the door,
Thy guest is gone forever more.

Gone to the land of sweet repose,
His comrades bless him as he goes;
Of toil and trial the day was full
A good sleep rests, the night is cool.

Yea, silence hails, since work is done,
And in the blessed Sabbath stands
Which from this weary work-day lapse
Awaits God's folk through Jesus Christ.

Communications.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 30, '82.

Editor Restitution:

It has been my pleasure during the past two or three months to either visit or receive visits from brethren connected with a number of Societies of the Church of God in this eastern part of the country, and it has occurred to me that a few facts concerning the brotherhood in the East might be of interest to your readers.

The Bible truths as advocated in THE RESTITUTION have been believed and taught along the Atlantic seaboard for over thirty years, but the Churches that have been organized upon that basis have passed through many trials and divisions, owing principally to that spirit of intolerance and controversy which for a time were supposed to be inseparable from a proper defense of the Gospel of the Kingdom. There has been however, during the last few years quite a revolution of feeling in this particular, and the old system of proscription, which made every believer a judge with supposed authority to condemn his brother has been almost entirely displaced, and a feeling of forbearance and brotherly love is taking its place.

It has been my privilege within a few weeks to meet and worship with the two congregations at Brooklyn, and one at Baltimore; and have also had visits from brethren J. O. Woodruff of Elizabeth, N. J., L. C. Thomas, formerly of Pittsburgh but at present resident in Delaware; and N. J. Morgan of Winchester, Va. and as a result of my observations and conversations with brethren I feel satisfied that the times are propitious for a revival of the truth in these parts.

In Brooklyn there are two congregations, located in different parts of the city and somewhat different in matters of church order, but otherwise, so far as I could learn in full sympathy and fellowship. One congregation under the name of the "Church of God" meets regularly every Sunday Morning on Grand street, where Brethren George W. Young, Francis Coghill, John Donaldson Jr. and others endeavor to hold up the lamp of truth.

The "Church of the Blessed Hope" meet every Sunday morning and evening in their comfortable chapel on Cumberland street, under the pastorate of Bro. George B. Kramer, actively supported by Brethren J. B. Cook, M. S. Driggs and others. Bro. Kramer is a very able and fearless exponent of the Word, and should be a mighty instrument in the hand of the Lord for spreading the true light amid the theological darkness of the "City of Churches." For a number of years Bro. Kramer was located at Wilmington, Del., but while acting as pastor of the Asbury Methodist church his convictions of truth would not permit him to work with that denomination, and he resigned his charge and established an independent church, under the name of "The Household of Faith." He has but recently moved to Brooklyn.

At Newark, N. J., there is a small congregation, but not being posted I am unable to give particulars regarding them. This was the home of Bro. William Shepbard, whose name will be familiar to your readers as a frequent contributor to your columns, and who died about a year ago.

At Elizabeth there is also a small congregation, and, as I learn from our venerable brother Woodruff, they hold regular meetings.

The Church at Philadelphia has a membership of about forty, having increased materially during the past two years. We hold regular meetings every Sunday morning in the hall on the N. W. corner of Thirteenth and Arch streets; where our brethren and the public are always welcome. We have no regular preacher, but such of the members as are selected by the society as best fitted for the work expound the Word to the best of their ability. We have been blessed so far, and it is our desire to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace, working together in our Master's cause until he shall come. In company with other cities, there are in Philadelphia a number of societies who, like ourselves, are looking for and loving the appearing of our Lord; and although from various causes we work in different circles, still, in so far as they are advanced in the school of Christ we bid them God speed trusting to the Master for the harvest.

There is quite a flourishing society of believers in the coming and kingdom of Christ, at Wilmington, Del., brought to the knowledge of these truths through the labors of our beloved Bro. Kramer. Now that he has gone to work in another field of the great harvest, I trust that they are strong enough to care for themselves if necessary. My observation has been that where a church has depended entirely upon the labors of a single man, who has acted in the capacity of Pastor, as well as Evangelist, while it might flourish as a well watered garden under his care, yet the danger is that from habitually leaving the labor to one man, the others become weak, and when the prop is removed there is a falling away. I would not discourage any congregation however in securing the services of an able advocate of the truth to labor with them, but would urge the importance of so ordering the work of the church that all its available strength may be utilized, and developed.

A short time ago I paid a visit to the brethren in Baltimore, enjoying the hospitalities of Brethren Cherry and Gellety, and worshipping with a little band in an upper room. I wish that I could give a favorable report of the cause of truth in that city, but cannot truthfully do so. The members of the "One Body", and believers in the "One Faith" in the Monumental City have been very much divided and torn by faction. As one brother expressed it: There were six or more little companies meeting in out of the way places, and a number of others wandering about like comets without an orbit, unable to rest anywhere. During our visit we conversed with a number of the brethren, and at a special meeting urged the importance of Christian Union. There seemed to be a general and hearty desire to come together upon a liberal basis, and work together for the common interest, and the Master's cause; and a movement was started at once to accomplish that end. May the Lord watch over it and guide those brethren who have undertaken the good work.

I mentioned above, having had a visit from Bro. N. J. Morgan, of Winchester, Va., whose name is doubtless familiar to most of your readers. He was with us for a week and spoke at our meeting; and his visit was greatly enjoyed. From him I learned much as to the work being done in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley, or Valley of Virginia. Brother Morgan has done valiant work in the Master's cause for over thirty years, and is still at the good work. From him I learn that at Winchester, and in the adjacent country, there are in the neighborhood of 100 believers, and in Winchester they have their own place of worship termed "The House of the Brethren" where visiting brethren are cordially welcomed. One object of his visit north was to extend an invitation to the brethren to attend their stated assemblies, assuring all who would come a most hearty welcome: which no one will doubt, having in mind the proverbial Virginia hospitality.

I was particularly pleased to meet brother Morgan for the reason that I had, in common with others, received the impression that the society at Winchester were very exclusive, refusing the fellowship of any who had been baptized under what is called the "Matthew Formula", that is in the name of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. I was gratified to learn that they had been looked upon in an improper light in this regard. They, on the contrary, do not act as judges, and welcome all, letting each one examine himself, believing that to his own Master he standeth or falleth. This idea has probably arisen from the fact that for many years they have believed and practiced baptism in the name of the Lord Jesus, which is now the belief and practice of such able advocates as brethren H. V. Reed, G. M. Myers and others in the East and West. I make these extended remarks concerning the church at Winchester, fearing that others, like ourselves have been led to look upon good earnest Christian Brethren and Sisters in a false light.

From Brother L. C. Thomas I learned that a body of believers has been called out in Pittsburgh, and that they meet regularly every week. This, as your readers will remember is the home of Bro. J. H. Thomas who has written a number of powerful articles and pamphlets recently. I have not had the pleasure of meeting any of the brethren at Pittsburgh, but hope that ere long there may be some means by which all of like precious faith in the East may be able to have stated general assemblies for mutual work and fellowship. We can help one another, and by our united efforts accomplish much good which singly we would be too weak to do. Brethren, think of these things.

SAMUEL WILSON.

COOPERSTOWN, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:

I am much interested in the articles published on prophecy, but have come to the conclusion that most of the writers have a theory all arranged, and go to the Bible to find proof to sustain their theory instead of searching to ascertain what is truth.

Roberts calls the English, Russian and Ottoman three Anti-Christian powers. The Russians belong to the Greek Church and are professedly followers of Christ. The English nation have done more for the cause of Christianity than the rest of the world combined. They have translated the Scriptures into nearly every language and dialect on the globe, and have spent millions to publish and circulate them to the ends of the earth, but the effects and benefits resulting from this labor are comparatively very small. And this is not to be wondered at, seeing we have so many among us and some regular attendants on divine service, who know little more what the Bible teaches concerning man's nature and future destiny than the heathen who never saw the Bible. But in the near future are momentous times, how near I cannot say, when a portion of the House of Israel and Judah will be gathered to the land of Palestine, and then the Russian autocrat with all his hands will go forth to rob and destroy them, and then at that time Christ will come, will deliver his people and destroy those combined hosts who have come against them, and when this takes place it will cast a halo of light on the sacred Word, and it will startle the world so that they will examine and believe the Scriptures. There won't be many infidels or spiritualizers among professors in that day when the Lord shall show forth his power and make himself known to the ends of the earth.

Yours truly,

S. HARPER.

Selections.

STORMS AND EARTHQUAKES.

The destruction of the greater portion of the city of Manila by a hurricane on Friday, Oct. 20, will, for reasons, awaken more than a merely sympathetic interest. In the first place, Manila is one of the chief commercial centres of the East Indies, and its extensive trade has brought it into close relations with the principal nations of the world. Among the shipping injured and destroyed by the storm were several vessels from foreign ports, and the business of the town is said to have been completely suspended since the disaster. So great was the force of the hurricane that all the wooden and thatched houses were blown down, the roofs were torn from the stronger buildings, and the Government offices, hospitals, and factories were destroyed. The effects of the tempest were not confined to Manila, and great destruction was wrought in other parts of the island of Luzon. According to a cable despatch, 60,000 families have been rendered homeless, yet the loss of life was comparatively slight.

Aside from the commercial interests involved, this disastrous storm possesses great interests from a scientific point of view. The study of the phenomena of the atmosphere is being pursued now with greater energy than ever before. The tropical storms, of which the hurricane that devastated Manila seems to have been a type have always attracted a large share of the attention of meteorologists, and it was from the study of such storms, pursued largely by means of the log books of ships which had encountered them, that some of the fundamental theories of the science of meteorology, as it now exists, were derived. Only recently a special investigation of the hurricanes of the China Sea was set on foot, and the Manila hurricane will furnish valuable data to those who are engaged in this work.

One of the features of these storms which specially needs investigation, if the study of them is to lead to any practical result, is their tendency to break out at intervals with unexampled fury, sweeping everything from their track. Hurricanes are not uncommon at Manila, but heretofore they have not wrought such great destruction there. The storm which swept the city into ruins on Friday appears to have possessed many times the power of the ordinary hurricanes. How unusual its force must have been may be judged from the fact that, on account of the frequent storms and earthquakes experienced there, the houses of Manila were constructed with a view of resisting such shocks. The same phenomena have been witnessed in the Indian Ocean and the West Indies, where hurricanes prevail, which are classed by meteorologists with those of the China Sea. In 1822 a hurricane of tremendous fury burst over the upper end of the Bay of Bengal and the delta of the Ganges, causing enormous loss of property, while 50,000 persons are said to have perished in the floods that were produced. So in 1780 a hurricane at Barbadoes wrecked a great number of ships, and caused the loss of 4,000 lives. There was a similar storm, though much less destructive, at Tokio in October, 1880, when 1,500 houses were blown down and 65 persons were killed. It is known that the motion of these storms is rotary, and that they commonly occur at certain seasons of the year; but information is needed as to the causes which produce phenomenal tempests like that at Manila, and as to the possibility of obtaining warning of them.

Of late years much attention has been given to theories which recognize causes outside the earth as influencing its meteorological conditions. The most conspicuous of these theories relates to the supposed coincidence of the periods of sun-spot maxima with storm cycles on the earth. The evidence collected for and against this theory is contradictory, and men of science do not undertake at present to decide upon it. They, however, regard the theory as possessing sufficient probability to warrant a thorough investigation. The facts which are established are that at certain periods the sun exhibits some mighty disturbing force which is manifested by tremendous outbursts of burning gases and the formation of enormous chasms in his surface, and that at such periods—and apparently as a result of the solar disturbances—the sun exerts an unusually powerful electrical influence upon the earth. This is shown by great displays of the aurora borealis like those of last spring and summer, and by magnetic disturbances which affect the needle and sometimes cripple the telegraph.

According to some theorists earthquakes also occur most frequently in cycles which depend upon extra-terrestrial influences, and we are now entering one of those cycles. In the light of recent investigations of the flexibility of the earth's crust, which are said to show that it bends not only under the weight of tidal waves in the ocean, but under great atmospheric pressure, the question may arise whether there is not an intimate connection between earthquakes and atmospheric phenomena. At any rate, there is now a good chance to ascertain the truth, for the sun spots have been growing more numerous and larger during the last two years, and in that time we have had tornadoes, hurricanes, floods, and other meteorological commotions of almost unexampled fury, besides an extraordinary series of earthquakes, marked by such disasters as the destruction of Chassiecla and Chios, and the more recent disturbances in Central America and at the Isthmus of Panama. There is an opportunity to do the world a great service by discovering the laws that govern the stormy side of nature.

THE FUTURE OF THE JEWS.

In spite of the growing infidelity of the present day there are still vast numbers of intelligent men in all civilized countries who regard the Bible as a divine revelation, as the authoritative guide given by God for the right conduct and government of man in this life. Our Bible societies and religious institutions illustrate the influence which this book still exerts upon millions of the human race. In its promises the Christian derives solace in the deepest distress. His social and religious habits are in a great measure framed after the pattern set forth in the Bible, and the moral attitude of society is regulated by its teaching and its commands. Its authority is recognized in our common law, and in all the social, commercial and private intercourse of man with his fellows the Bible is avowedly or tacitly admitted to be the supreme mentor. But while its teachings do unquestionably influence our lives we seem to give them little place in our thoughts, especially when our thoughts are turned to the great questions of the day. We listen with some degree of respect to the moral truths it indicates, but purposely ignore its authority in the political government of the world. That such is the case is manifest in the present discussion on the proposed colonization of Palestine by the Jews. Your correspondent, "M. C." very ably sets forth the feasibility and desirability of Palestine colonization. Another of your correspondents, H. W. Unger, does not think favorably of this scheme, and suggests that Australia would be the best place to send the persecuted Jews of Europe; but in all the discussion on this subject, either in American or European journals, very little importance seems to be attached to the fact that the Bible distinctly promises that the Jews shall be gathered from among the nations of the earth and restored to the land of Palestine, which land is promised to them for an everlasting possession.—New York Herald.

The Syrian Colonization Fund.

Of the many strange things resulting from the persecution of the Jews in Russia, the strangest certainly by far and away is the dispatch to Palestine of the small colony of our co-religionists under the auspices of the Committee of the Syrian Colonization Fund. It is, indeed, curious that the first really practical attempt to effect a settlement of Jews in the Holy Land should have been made by such a body as this. The Syrian Fund consists entirely of Christian ladies and gentlemen—Mr. Sydney Woolf, M. P., being the only Jew connected with the organization—holding very pronounced views upon religion and the temporal restoration of the Jews to the land of their inheritance. Bearing this in view; we have been gratified to note—as our readers have observed from the paragraphs in preceding numbers—that every deference has been paid to the religious views and necessities of the Russian Jews who are selected as emigrants, and no far no attempt of any kind whatever has been made to influence them in regard to matters of conscience. As the Committee are taking the matter thoroughly in hand, we can see no reason why the colony should not succeed, especially if, continuing as they have begun, the Fund confine itself solely to promoting the material success of their infant colony, and "shy" at vexed questions of creed and belief. And this consideration is, not unnaturally, one that we deem of the highest importance. Of the humane and good motives by which the managers of the Fund are impelled, we cannot speak too highly; and tempered by discretion in the particular respects we have referred to, the results will, we venture to believe, prove as gratifying as the object is good and elevated. The work conducted, as we have indicated, commends itself doubly to non-Jewish readers, to whom the Fund now appeals for aid, and will, we trust, meet with a response that shall enable the organization to carry out successfully its thoroughly philanthropic, and we believe eminently disinterested, efforts in behalf of the helpless Russian Jews.—Jewish World.

Brevities.

A few days ago it was reported that the great volcano of Kilauea, in the Sandwich Islands, had burst forth in the grandest eruption witnessed there in a quarter of a century. Now the news comes that the giant Mauna is hurling forth flame and smoke. With its storms, floods, tornadoes, earthquakes, and volcanic outbursts, the present year will be long remembered.

The Photographic News describes an interesting experiment in heliography or signalling by sunshine, in Egypt. Colonel Keyser ascended one of the Pyramids near Cairo, and, setting up a heliographic mirror, reflected a ray of sunshine all the way to Alexandria, a distance of some 120 miles. The signals, appearing like pin points of brightness, were distinctly readable on the coast, and took the form of a message from Sir Garnet Wolseley to the Khedive.

Eighty Frenchmen, engineers, guides, foremen, and navvies, with 600 Moroccо navvies enlisted in Algeria, 600 Senegal negroes, and 200 or 300 Krotmen, are about to commence the construction of the railway to connect Senegal with the Niger. Their operations will be protected by a column under Col. Desbordes, which will victual the posts, plant the French flag on the Niger, and erect two forts on that river. A second railway, from St. Louis to Dakar, is also about to be commenced, and a cable will shortly be laid between France and Senegal.

BOSTON, Oct. 30.—There has been incorporated here the Palestine Colonization and Christian Missionary Association, formed for the purpose of colonizing Palestine with industrious and energetic Christians, and by their prudence, labor, and perseverance restoring it to its former grandeur, so that it will not only be the centre of the world geographically, but also in art, science, and wealth. The members of the association claim that under proper management the soil can be restored to a very high state of cultivation, mineral resources developed, and a basis of industries established, thus producing vast commercial intercourse with other nations. It is the purpose of the association to run a line of packets between Boston and Palestine, and the management is now negotiating for the purchase of suitable vessels.

Arabi's guards are anxious about their prisoner, and watch him for fear of suicide, though that is unlikely with a Moslem. He has sunk into a profound sadness, speaks only when strongly urged, and looks out aimlessly at the wall of the little back yard, which is his only prospect, thinking, perhaps, of Tel-el-Kebir the impregnable and that ride for life on horseback. His malady of body may increase his despondency of mind, but at present his condition is that of a profoundly hopeless and spiritless man. Toulba, on the other hand, is full of life, discussing pros and cons with his janitor through his interpreter.

Late advices received at Harvard College Observatory from Dr. B. A. Gould at Cardova, South America, show that the honor of the discovery of the great comet belongs to him. It was first seen at his observatory more than a day previous to its discovery by Finlay at the Cape of Good Hope, and five days before it was seen by Dr. Cruls at Rio. Late letters from the Cape to a prominent English astronomer show that the comet was observed there upon the day of its perihilion passage clear up to the edge of the sun, where it suddenly disappeared. This observation has no parallel in the history of astronomy, and is evidence of the extraordinary brilliancy of the comet. Mr. Chandler, of the Harvard Observatory, has just computed a new orbit, which is of much greater accuracy than any heretofore obtained, and gives unmistakable evidences of periodicity. By means of this a comparison of the observation of Finlay with the position which the present orbit gives for that date has been made, and the variation between the observed and the computed places is less than the diameter of the nucleus of the comet. From this close agreement it is evident that no sensible perturbations attended the very close approach to the sun.

The 15th of last month was a noteworthy date, being the 300th anniversary of the introduction of the Gregorian calendar. It was the work of Pope Gregory XIII., who in the year 1582, being struck by the fact that the vernal equinox, which at the time of the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, had occurred on March 21, then happened on the 10th, caused ten days to be thrown out of the current year—the day after Thursday, Oct. 4, being declared Oct. 15. This alteration of the style was immediately adopted in all the Roman Catholic countries in Europe; and even in England an attempt, of which little notice has been taken, was made to introduce it two years later. On the 16th of March, 1684-5, a bill was read for the first time in the House of Lords entitled "An act giving her Majesty authority to alter and new model a calendar in accordance with the calendar used in other countries." It was read a second time on the 18th of the same month, and then the project was shelved for nearly two centuries. It was not until the year 1852, in the reign of George II., that the Gregorian calendar was adopted in England, and by that time it had become necessary to drop eleven days. The 3rd of September was declared the 14th, so that the month only contained nineteen days.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

As per arrangement the Northern Indiana Conference of the Church of God will (D. V.) be held at Plymouth, Marshall county, commencing Friday, Nov. 10, 1882, and hold over the following Sunday. The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association will be held at this time. Brethren, this Conference meeting does not belong entirely to the friends at Plymouth—it is your own. Just all make an effort, make a sacrifice if need be, to attend, and a good meeting is assured.

By order of the Conference,

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

I have announce to the brethren that F. G. Williams and S. H. Rice, of this place, would like to meet with the brethren anywhere within 100 miles of Northfield, Rice County, Minnesota, at suitable times during the coming winter, for the purpose of giving lectures on the subjects which most interest us. We are well supplied with charts illustrating prophecy, the Great Pyramid, history, etc.

Brethren wishing to make arrangements please address either of us at this place. It seems to us that much greater effort ought to be put forth to enlighten the world concerning fulfilled prophecy, and subjects relating to the kingdom of God. We know our weakness, but feel willing to do what little we can. Will the brethren lend a helping hand by notifying us of such places as they think will give us a hearing—this is all we ask.

F. G. WILLIAMS.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Age to come not a heresy," "State of man in death," and "Law and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. C. C. Wendruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? where is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M. (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Trilemma," etc.) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now exciting such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 240 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationships. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Mosaic, the New and the Israelitish covenants; their duration and relations to each other. By G. M. Myers. 360 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth Set Free; or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Silas Henn. 96 pages, price 20cts.

The Hope of Israel, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Silas Henn. 48 pages, price 15cts.

Material Immortality; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact defense and Bible view of man's immortality, not by birth but by grace. By O. R. L. Crozier. 48 pages, price 10cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, who he is. By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1882, put into tract form.

The Voice of Israel Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By G. M. Myers. Price 25cts.

THE AGE TO COME

—PRESENTING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—By A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a cloth Bound book of 181 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee for the worth of the work. Price only 50 cents each. Send in your order for them.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of price-stated price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

GOOD TRACTS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Scott Baptists, in 1660. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Seekers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Repentance. Ten copies 60c., or assorted packages of 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5 for 10c; 10 for 20c; 100 for 60c.
Can You Believe? A series of 20 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate to any one.
The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.
The Age to Come not a Heresy. By H. V. Reed.
Life and Death. A concise tract on and contrast of the two states of these terms, in which the Theological and Bible use.
Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Maxwell.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
50 cents, or $3 for $5c.
Is it Essential to Believe in the Eternity of Hell? By Wilson.
Signs of the Times. By Baxter, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. By H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future threefold gathering of the Nations, Israel, and the Saints.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
50 cents, or 25 for $5.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. By Boyd. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Christian Union. By A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
[illegible] 50 cents, or 25 for $1.
[illegible] By Jonah Peirce.
[illegible] By A. Simonds.
[illegible] By Joel A. Simonds.
Restoration of Israel. By Joseph Seiss, D.D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Plain Words. By Richard C. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to who every Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The King in His Beauty. By H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate on occasions.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
To each; 5 for 50c, or 10 for $1.
Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. By H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
20c. each, or 15 for $1.
The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and life to its everlasting condition. By Miller. Careful and satisfactory examination of Acts III. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 44 pages, price 5c.
A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Francel Howard. Price 15 cents, or 75 cts. per dozen.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Durk. Exactly the book for common circulation. 240 pages, cloth $1.
The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, France, Africa and the Jews. Contains 3 maps of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 178 pages, cloth 75c, paper 50c.
God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading points of Bible theology. Every one who will read this book will find the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 200 pages, cloth $1.
Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Jaquith. Price 10 cents.
Hymns of the Advent, in the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by Charles C. Burleigh, Esq. Editor combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and "Hymns of Immortality" in a choice selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmody" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 60c, cloth 90c.
The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and tunes designed to public and family worship, compiled by G. M. Myers and John Arnold. 300 pages, cloth $1.
The Everyday Digest. Benjamin Wilson. Contains the English Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrations and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.
The different renderings of certain passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so rendered in the commonly received as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.
New improved edition on large paper, 864 pages, cloth $4.00. Morocco binding $5.00.

Poetry.

FAINT NOT.

W. L. CROCKETT.

Time in his onward march may bring
To every heart its sorrow,
Seek not for this, for suffering
Will not bedim the morrow.

The shadows shorter grow each day,
The clouds begin to sever,
The clinging mould of Death's decay,
Will soon be gone forever.

The King! the King of Israel!
When David's throne adorning;
Of all his splendor who can tell,
The glorious Star of Morning!

Faint not amid the heavenly light
From out life's portals streaming;
Faint not while from us flees the night,
And its conqueror's sword is gleaming.

Be strong! O fellowheir of His, be strong!
Seek but thy leader's pleasure,
And thou shalt surely have with Him
Eternity's great treasure.

Selections.

Age to Come Herald.

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM, Aug. 21, 1882.

Peace reigns in Jerusalem so far, but there is much excitement among all classes. We hear that excensive war preparations are being made by all European nations. It is thought by some that the Sultan will invite some nation to assume the protection of Syria, as it will be impossible for him to control it with the conflicting interests. This country is to be the "stone of contention." All nations are to burden themselves with Jerusalem, but none of them will obtain possession of it, for the word of the Lord assures us that "they will be cut in pieces," and his own kingdom set up.

The Jews continue to arrive here, some with means and others with nothing. There is a fine opportunity for those who wish to improve it to help the poor Jews at Jerusalem.

Aug. 22.—I drank tea this evening at the Hotel Freil, with Mr. and Mrs. Floyd, Mrs. Brinton, and Frank. A Sheik from the Jordan was present with whom we conversed about the war in Egypt. If the English are victorious in a battle soon, I think all will be safe here: but if Arabi should gain a victory we have reason to fear that trouble will follow. But our God is Almighty and we will not fear. My continual pray r is—"Thy kingdom come."

When I go out the Arabs ask me if I am not afraid. I tell them "No, I think no one wishes to harm the Americans." "No," say they, "America is a great way off and no one expects Americans will come here to fight." On this very account we from beyond the great waters may be safer than those of other nationalities who are more liable to be suspected of some evil design.

Last week I had the pleasure of riding to Bethlehem with Mr. Floyd and wife, and two American ladies. I enjoyed it much. On the way we had the privilege of visiting and entering Rachel's tomb. It is opened but once a year, when visitors who wish can enter. There are many other interesting objects to be seen in a ride to Bethlehem. But I generally have but one thought upon such occasions—"When will Jacob come in possession of his own and be at peace?" God only knows how sincerely I pray for that day.

Our markets are now filled with fresh vegetables of the finest qualities, and fruit of almost every kind. There is no lack at anything in the line of eatables. Having food and raiment, we will endeavor to be content therewith, but we want something more. The fulness of the blessing of God will come in due time to this land, through prayer and faith, sacrifices, privations, sufferings, wearisome labor, and God-like perseverance that knows no defeat. By the help of Him who chose this holy mountain for his sanctuary we will "fight it out on this line."

Aug. 23.—We hear that Port Said and the Suez canal are taken by the English. I would not be surprised if this should cause trouble with France. That canal so beneficial to commerce may prove to be one cause of the gathering of the armies of the nations to the Levant. But all is well here this morning, thanks be to our Heavenly Father.

Aug. 27, 1 P. M.—All is well in the city of David to-day. You in Boston know more of the affairs in Egypt than we do. To-morrow will bring us telegrams and papers. No one here believes that Arabi stands any chances of victory in battle with the English. The report is that Lesseps has been illy treated by England. We have all kinds of rumors. I wish we could have reliable news. Those Sheiks are still in prison waiting the turn of affairs in Egypt.

Evening.—We have heard Mr. Spofford speak to-day. He always has something good to say; and his words of cheer is most enough to cover all cruelties. This kind man possesses the rare virtue of sincerity in everything he says or does. At the close of our meeting, Sheik Rasheed was announced. I think I have spoken of him before—the Sheik from the Jordan. He is a staunch friend to Mr Floyd. After kind greeting, Mr. Spofford requested Mr. Floyd to interpret what he had to say, which he did to the great satisfaction of all present. He is the Sheik who must either conduct personally, or send dragomen with all travellers who visit the Jordan. He had many hair-breadth escapes from death, and has seven bullets in his body now. With a spear thrust through his right shoulder, he was obliged to ride six miles on horseback to a friend who filed it off and pulled it through. In person he is fine looking, and a real Arab gentleman; tall, with an intelligent face and large brain. He had been East twenty five days' travel beyond the Jordan. When he saw that we were interested to hear about that region he seemed pleased to give us all the information he could.

After ascending the mountains from the Jordan, you do not descend on the other side, but find yourself upon a high, level plane, with no appearance of mountains beyond very near. The Bedawins are numerous as the sand of the sea. He thinks there are at least six hundred thousand in the country through which he traveled. They are not strictly Mohammedans, but believe in one God, and have some knowledge of Christ. They are under no government, but have customs of their own and are a law unto themselves. There are about sixty thousand Jews among them of immense stature. "We are afraid of them," said he, "they are so large and strong." The land is nowhere cultivated. The principal food of the people is camel's milk and some kind of mush. They have no diseases like the rest of mankind, and are never ill. The opportunity of listening to Mr. Spofford and this Sheik has been valuable to-day.

The city is now, at 10 P. M., enveloped in a dense fog, which is something quite new to me.

Aug. 28.—I was interrupted in writing about twelve o'clock last night by screams from friends near by who supposed that a strange man was in their house. I immediately went to their assistance and asked, "Where did you see the man?" "In the room," they replied; "and the sound of his voice was Arabic." "Where did he go?" "Into the adjoining room," was the answer. "Well," said I, "bring a light and we will find him." Lights were brought and a thorough search was made; but no man was found; and the conclusion was that it must have been a ghost! "Mrs. Davis," said they, "you do not seem to be alarmed; why are you not afraid?" My answer was something like this: "There is nothing to be afraid of. Ghosts never do any harm. If we had found a thief in the house, I might have been alarmed, but I have no fear of ghosts."

The people here are in a condition, especially now, to imagine many things that are not real. The best remedy for this is implicit faith that God rules in all things. He is Almighty and will protect us in the path of duty; unless it is naturally for the best that we should not be protected. And if it should please the Lord to "bruise" us, as it did to bruise Christ, we should be ready to say, and shall say as Jesus did, if we have full confidence in God, "Thy will be done;" having no fears but that it will be done, and no murmurings because it is done.

Telegrams arrived last night informing us of a victory of the English in Egypt. We are asking the question to-day—"Will the other nations allow England to hold Egypt? or will their victory there cause further wars?" Whatever the result may be, we are sure that "in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and the remnant whom the Lord shall call."

There are dark clouds overhead to-night and indications of rain. They have had sixteen hours' rain in Damascus. The curse is being removed, thank God.

A. E. DAVIS.

Messiah's Herald.

LETTERS FROM PALESTINE.

Dear Brother Orrock:

Having just returned from an excursion to the Mount of Olives and Bethany, thought I would give you a short description of our journey. All the hillsides around the city are full of rock-cut tombs,—two of which we entered. We passed along by the eastern wall of the Russian buildings, to a footpath which leads to Noby Samwel (Mizpeh), followed the path about one and one-fourth miles northwest from the city wall, to the tomb of the Judges. Over its door is an ornamented carving. We entered a chamber about nineteen feet square. On the east and south sides are two other small chambers, also in the southwest corner; and in the northeast corner are steps leading down to other vaults. In these chambers are about seventy receptacles for dead bodies. From this tomb we traveled southeast about three-quarters of a mile, passing numerous rock-cut tombs, until we reached the so-called tombs of the Kings, just by the east side of the Damascus road, about half a mile north from the Damascus gate, or city wall. The tombs are enclosed by a stone wall, built only a few years ago. We entered the enclosure and descended about twenty feet by a flight of steps cut in the rock. They are from ten to twenty inches deep and about thirty feet long. At the bottom are several rock-cut cisterns; from which we entered at the north a large court about ninety feet square and twenty deep. At the west side was a large double doorway which opened into a court thirty feet long by eight wide, and about thirteen high. At its south end is a small door about two and one-half feet square; by the side of it is still a rolling stone which once closed the sepulchre door. Through this small door we enter a large chamber, and from it several small chambers. On the floors are strewn fragments of richly carved sarcophagi and stone doors. Perhaps here was the monument of Helena, queen of Adiabene, mentioned by Josephus—Wars of the Jews, 5th Book, 4: 2.

We followed along west of the Jehoshaphat Valley to the path that descends from St Stephen's Gate down into, and across the brook Cedron, and entered the garden of Gethsemane, John xviii. 1. The garden is enclosed by a high stone wall and is kept by a Latin monk, who for a small piece of money will give flowers and olive leaves which grow in the garden. In the garden are eight old olive trees, which are said to have stood since the time of our Savior; perhaps they are the sprouts of the same. Here our Lord oftimes resorted with his disciples. Here was the scene of his agony. Here he was betrayed by one of his supposed friends. Oh! that night, that dreadful night, when all the sins and guilt of a sinful world fell on his guiltless head. Although an angel came down to strengthen him for the dreadful conflict, yet the angel did not share his load. It was an hour of darkness. How simple are the records of that momentous hour. "Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and said unto his disciples, Sit ye here while I go and pray. Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here and watch with me. And he went a little further and fell on his face and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me, nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt. And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood, falling down to the ground."

From the garden we ascend the Mount of Olives by the way that David went barefoot and weeping, while fleeing from Absalom. 2 Sam. xv. 30. On the top of Olivet we ascend a minaret also by the so-called Church of Ascension, and on the west the city is like a map before us. There is no place where one can get such a view of the city. On the south we can see the hill country of Judea, as far as Hebron, southeast the wilderness of Judea, all along the west side of the Dead Sea, also the so-called tomb of Herod. On the east the Dead Sea, valley of the Jordan, and mountains of Moab beyond. With a glass the ruined castle of Macherus can be identified on the side of the Moab mountains, about twenty miles south of the northern end of the Dead Sea. It was in that castle that John the Baptist was put to death. "Accordingly he was sent a prisoner to Macherus, the castle, and was there put to death."—Josephus Ant. of the Jews, 18, Book 5-2; Matt. xiv. 10.

Just opposite the head of the Dead Sea, with a glass, one can see Mount Nebo, where Moses stood and viewed the land of Canaan. To the north, Nob Gibeah, Rock-Rimon and Ophra are in full view from the minaret, northwest. Neby Samwell (Mizpeh), and on the west side of the Mount of Olives, down to the Cedron, the ground is covered with Jewish gravestones. I have seen many of the old Jews coming to Jerusalem for the sake of being buried here. The Jews love the city of Jerusalem with a love that 1800 years' exile has failed to destroy. A few rods south of the minaret is a church which was built by a French princess. Inside one of its courts she has the Lord's prayer written on tiles, in thirty-three languages. She thinks it is the spot where our Savior taught his disciples to pray; and she says all sects can join in saying the Lord's prayer. If the church she has prepared a tomb for herself, where she intends to be buried when she dies.

We descend over the southeast side of the mount, passing almond, olive and apricot trees until we reach Bethany, a small village about two miles from Jerusalem. John xi. 18. The ruins of an old Greek church is said to mark the sight of the house of Mary and Martha. It was at Bethany our Savior made his home, while in Judea, the same as Capernaum, when he was in Galilee. Here Lazarus died; and Christ, on hearing that his friend was dead, set out for Bethany. The sorrowing sister, Martha, ran out to meet him, exclaiming, "Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died. Jesus said unto her, Thy brother shall rise again. Martha said unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection, at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live." Oh! what words of comfort and encouragement to the true believer. Grander words than these the world had never heard; and at the graveyard in Bethany, in a cave, our Lord proved his words true. "He cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth! And the man that had been dead four days came forth at the sound of that voice." And the hour is coming when all that are in their graves shall hear that same voice, and come forth. How interesting to stand upon the same spot where those words were uttered.

From Bethany Christ set out on his triumphal, and last visit to Jerusalem. Crowds of people were gathered about him with palm branches, shouting, "Hosanna, hosanna in the highest." It was from Bethany that our Savior ascended into heaven. "And he led them out as far as Bethany, and he lifted up his hands and blessed them. And it came to pass that while he blessed them, he was parted from them." Luke xxiv. 50, 51.—Rollin Floyd.

Communications.

INFORMATION WANTED CONCERNING ISRAEL.

A brother writes to me for information concerning Israel in connection with Rom. ix. 6-8, and xi. 7, 23-32, with reference to my articles which in a measure identified them with the Anglo-Saxons.

The readers of THE RESTITUTION know well that the name Israel was given to Jacob and at once became his family name, and that his posterity were known by it. It embraced his twelve sons and their descendants, and is never applied to any other people. But it became restricted in time, to a great extent, and was, after the reign of Saul, used to represent ten of the tribes—or eleven if we count Joseph's two portions as two tribes. The word in its restricted sense is largely used in the prophets. It began to be restricted as early as the times of Joshua, xi. 21, but became quite permanently so with the commencement of David's career. There was an object in this, and that object was to have us bear a perfect type as could well be of the future kingdom of God. David and Solomon were types of Christ; Judah and Levi, under the common title of Judah, were a type of Jesus, co-rulers—kings and priests; and the remaining ten tribes were the body of the kingdom, and, as the Scriptures designate them, the kingdom.

Judah was chosen to be the ruler—1 Chron. xxviii. 4—and it should be a well-known fact that David reigned seven years over Judah—2 Sam. v. 5—before beginning to reign over Israel; therefore his associates in office were chosen from that part of the people, and Levi is classed with them because the priesthood were national offices. That they were national offices is proved by the fact that they had no inheritance in the land and were supported by the people. But, furthermore, Levi is excluded from being classed with the others because they are limited to ten tribes, 2 Sam. xix. 43, and because, after the revolt, Jeroboam made priests of the lowest of the people that were not Levites. 1 Kings xii. 31. I think one object to be obtained, at least, by the separation of the offices of priest and ruler to two separate tribes, was avoiding for a longer period the corruption that was sure to come. The two tribes (I count Joseph's two portions as one) were called the kingdom, 1 Kings xi. 13, 14, and they were sometimes designated as "all Israel," 2 Sam. v. 2; 1 Kings xii. 20; see also xi. 13, 14, and sometimes they are called Joseph and sometimes Ephraim, 2 Sam. xix. 20, 43; Ezek. xxxvii. 16; Isa. xi. 12. The whole kingdom revolted from Rehoboam as predicted, 1 Kings xii. 20, but as God had promised the house of Judah should have one tribe, xi. 13, 32, 35, Benjamin almost immediately gave back his allegiance to him, xii. 21.

It is easily ascertained, then, that Israel means the whole twelve tribes sometimes; the ten tribes very frequently, if not largely, from the times of Saul; and sometimes, though rarely, to the house of Judah, the two tribes, Ezek. xxi. 25. But the far more common use of the word is in its application to the ten tribes. The context and good judgment must decide the meaning wherever there is any doubt.

But although the twelve tribes were a type of the future kingdom, yet they will be that kingdom in the same sense that the ten tribes were the kingdom in the type; i. e. they will be the subjects, or body of the kingdom, while Jesus and his co-rulers will be the head. And this kingdom will bless the nations. Not simply Jesus and his official associates, but Israel united will be an important factor in that work; but of course they will first be fitted for it, Ezek. xx. 34-40; Matt. xiii. 41. I cannot read the promises to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in any other light than that the kingdom is the seed, and the seed the kingdom. In some particular passages in the Scriptures, the head of that seed—Jesus, with his associates sometimes—is brought to view so prominently that the rest is, for the moment, lost sight of, but it is there just the same; and so, in other cases, the body of that seed or kingdom is so prominent that the head is obscured, but still it is there. Why did Jesus and his apostles preach "glad tidings concerning the kingdom" if the subjects will not be instruments in doing the good things of which they wrote? For my own part I do not believe the Lord used a word so repeatedly in a restricted or synecdochal sense.

After a period following the revolt and separation, the ten tribes were carried captives into Media and never returned, and the two houses of Israel have ever since been separate. The ten tribes became lost to themselves and the world, but the Lord is now identifying them with the Anglo-Saxons. With the foregoing thoughts before us, they may enable us to better understand Paul's language in Romans ix. 6. The apostle had shown that the promises pertained to Israel, but in this verse he shows that although that was the case, yet his preaching was not in vain, because those on whom his words had the desired effect were taken out of Israel and became members of that body which is neither Jew nor Gentile, Gal. iii. 8. Israel was not to be supplanted, but the forming of a separate congregation to be the body of Christ, the governors of Israel, was one object of his preaching. Rom. viii. 17, 18. Another way to understand this verse is to let "all Israel" refer to the twelve tribes, and "a" Israel" to Judah, the Jews. Then the apostle's meaning would be that although his words had not taken effect on the Jews, who were of Israel, yet it had taken effect on the ten tribes although no one then knew the fact. I like the former, but am of the opinion that both may be intended.

7. Change "neither" into "not" and read this verse immediately after the 5th, or after "whose are the fathers," and we have its grammatical connection and the apostle's meaning. This verse shows why none other nation than Israel is especially related to the fathers and the promises to them. They might be seed of Abraham, as Ishmael, but the promises were only through Isaac. Thy seed shall be called in Isaac, not in Ishmael or any one else. Gen. xxi. 12.

8. "The seed", and "the children of God," in this verse, are the same; "the children of the promise" are "the children of God" or "the seed;" and according to verses 9-12, "the children of God" are the children of Isaac through Jacob. These are Israel to the exclusion of all other nations. Ishmael and the other sons of Abraham and Esau are "the children of the flesh." The distinction is drawn between this fleshly seed and the children of Jacob. Bear in mind, please, that the apostle is not discoursing particularly, in this chapter, concerning the church which is Christ's body, but concerning Israel collectively.

xi. 7. The election here mentioned is that class who have been selected out of Israel to be joint rulers with the Lord Jesus, and are, therefore, not Israel, but members of that body which is neither Jew nor Greek. But here, as with verse 6 of chapter ix., another interpretation might be intended, and very reasonably too; and I think I prefer it. The elect remnant, whom the apostle represents to have obtained what Israel sought for, are the ten tribes (the whole for a part, Benjamin not being then dispersed). The remnant in the prophet's day were not seen—not recognized; neither were the ten tribes been or recognized in the apostle's day. This interpretation may be true with a great degree of plausibility as the former:

1. Because Jesus says, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you (Jews) and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Now I wish to ask, Where are Jesus' co-rulers called a nation? If you refer me to Peter, I will tell you that he is particularly addressing the ten tribes, 1 Peter i. 1,* and not that little company. But if we understand "the nation" to mean the ten tribes, all is plain, and God's promises to Abraham and his seed confirmed. The kingdom was to be given to the ten tribes, but that will not debar the Jews from becoming a part of it under the Lord Jesus. It would be taken from them in this sense: they would be debarred from being at all foremost in numbers, in royalty, and also even to prominence as subjects. "The birth-right was Joseph's." 1 Chron. v. 2. In the light of our identity with the ten tribes, the temporal kingdom was taken from them (the Jews) and given to the Anglo-Saxons—the ten-tribed house of Israel. Allow the Anglo-Saxon to be that nation and how beautifully true is the language of the Savior! Have they not accepted the Savior and proclaimed him as less no other nation? and to a great extent, brought forth the fruits of the kingdom? More so than any other nation!

2. Because nine tribes were a remnant, Benjamin not then being dispersed, I wish to show how this can be. If you take ten yards of cloth and cut off one yard, you have a remnant of nine yards. Now that is just the case here, the body of the kingdom was composed of ten tribes; they all revolted, but as God had promised, one tribe was given to Judah; therefore when Benjamin was taken from the ten, the remnant was composed of nine. The apostle's preaching was having effect on this remnant, and in speaking of their obtaining what Israel—the Jews, those of Israel—sought for, he speaks of them as they existed when last heard of or known. They were a remnant then; but we believe Benjamin afterward united with them.

Verse 29. The word "for" introduces the reason why the enemies of verse 28 are beloved for the fathers' sakes. "They are beloved for the fathers' sakes because the gifts and calling of God are without repentance—are not things to be repented of." (Diaglott.) The "gifts and calling" are those promised to the fathers concerning their seed Israel, because the election of verse 28 is not the election of verse 7. The latter is special, the former a general or common election. It is an election common to all the tribes because the enemies remain such until the deliverer comes and all Israel are saved, and because it is an election that directly concerns the fathers. "They are beloved for the fathers' sakes as touching or concerning the election." Whose election? What election did God make that concerned them and the fathers? What but the election of the twelve tribes for a special people? There is no other reasonable conclusion. Therefore, individuals must repent, but God does not, of his promises to the fathers concerning Israel. Please notice the continuity from verse 25. They are blind "until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; the deliverer comes and ungodliness is turned from them; yet they are enemies now for your sakes: the blind ones, the enemies, and the delivered ones are the same class; therefore God's gifts and calling can not be those that relate especially to individuals, but to the nation. Paul's conversion was a type of the conversion of the Jews at the coming of the deliverer, but his calling to the ministry and any gifts to him followed repentance—"What wilt thou have me to do."

30, 31. The unbelieving ones of verse 30 are the enemies of verse 28, as the connection shows. These verses grammatically follow the 28th. The 29th gives a reason why they are beloved concerning the election, and these verses give another reason: because as ye, the ten tribes, have been unbelievers, yet have obtained mercy through their (the Jews) disbelief, even so are these Jews unbelievers now, that they may also obtain mercy through the mercy that is now extended to you, the ten-tribed house, who are now only recognized as Gentiles. This is the meaning because it is apparent that the word "through" is used in the sense of noting a means or an agent, and in this sense a cause. Ye have now obtained mercy through, by the means of, their unbelief. Their unbelief is a cause, then, of the Gentile fulness, ten-tribed Israel, accepting the gospel and having mercy shown them. And a cause of the Jews obtaining mercy at some future time is the mercy that is now being extended to us, the ten tribes—that through, by the means of, or because of mercy extended to us, they will obtain mercy. That it is the ten tribes, but known as Gentiles, seems evident because there is a Gentile fulness (verse 25; Gen. xlviii. 19) to come in, and to be a parallel example, they must at some previous time have had special mercy shown them. The Jews had had mercy, were now under disfavor, but would have future mercy by the means, or because of this Gentile fulness having mercy shown them. Where, or what is the reason they should receive mercy if this Gentile fulness had not previously had special mercy shown them?

But allow that the apostle is talking about the two houses of Israel, one of them as Gentile, and the case is clear and the example a parallel. But you tell me that the word "through" is used to note the means or agent, and that those who are having mercy shown them now will convert them by preaching, or at least, will be the active agents when the proper time comes! But I cannot allow this because the word is used in exactly the same sense in verse 30 as it is in 31. The unbelieving ones are not the means in the sense of being the active agents, neither are the "ye;" but it is through or because of the condition they are in because God's gifts and calling are not to be repented of, not only with regard to the Jews, but the ten tribes also. If the "ye" are not the ten tribes, how are these verses a reason for the Jews being beloved concerning that election which embraces the twelve tribes? They are beloved "because like ye in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief, even thus have these in like manner not believed, that through your mercy they in like manner may obtain mercy." There is no resemblance at all if the "ye" and "your" do not refer to the ten-tribed house. For the Jews have been unbelievers in like manner and are to receive mercy in like manner. In what does the resemblance consist? In disbelief under a given amount of light.

Both houses of Israel were guilty in this respect, but pure Gentiles were not. In mercy being shown them, the resemblance consists in their being elected to special privileges, being the promised seed of the fathers, to which pure Gentiles are not. Individuals of the Gentiles are elected under given conditions, but the apostle is not discoursing particularly about that individual election, but a national election that is directly related to the fathers.

32. From what has been said it is evident that "them all" refers to both houses of Israel, Judah and Israel, the Jews and the ten tribes. Centuries before, God had cast off, for a time, the ten-tribed house on account of disobedience, and given them a "bill of divorce (Jer. iii. 8) that they should no more, until a specified time, be known as his people Israel." Hosea i. 9, 10. Now in the apostle's day the time had come when they should be enlightened, not with respect to who they were, but with respect to the one God and his Son Jesus Christ (for they were before idolaters), and nationally accept them; and in order to do this, the Jews must be rejected for unbelief as they had been, that the gospel might be preached to the Gentiles. But why publish it to the Gentiles if the ten tribes were the ones intended? Because the ten tribes had a mission to perform in a Gentile capacity that they could not perform when known to be Israel. But in relation to the design of the gospel to select by a thorough discipline a class for exalted positions—co-rulers with Jesus, and to a great extent the design of the kingdom, the whole twelve tribes are in darkness today; but with reference to the one God and his Son, the ten tribes—the Anglo-Saxons—have accepted them and yielded a national obedience, to my mind, as great as ancient Israel ever did in their most favored days.

To conclude: I am aware of such texts as, "Say not within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father." But such texts can teach nothing more than that they should not trust their individual salvation to that imaginary hand; for if they did, they would be lost. The nation, collectively, will be saved and fill the position assigned them, the promised seed of Abraham, but each individual of the nation will have to make his or her calling and election sure by a thorough practical life. E. H. REEVE.

*Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the sojourners of the dispersion" (Diaglott)—"to the elect who are sojourners of the dispersion" (Revised Version). There would be no propriety in referring to the dispersion of all mankind, but an apt appropriateness to the dispersion of the ten tribes. See James i. 1.

Scripture truths look best in Scripture language, their native dress.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. SWITZLER.....President.
W. TUTTLE.....Vice President.
E. E. HARSHILL.....Secretary.
A. R. UNDERWOOD.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
W. TUTTLE, E. E. HARSHILL,
J. H. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HAYHURST, B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, H. N. TUTTLE,
WILEY JONES, A. WILSON,
A. R. MAPLE.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 15, 1882. NO. 43.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations, the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the literal repentance, or penitent confession as prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as a requisite for Restorationism.

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 6.

Prelude. Egypt among the lands of Israel is fertile. Rivers, waters, their origin and distribution. Mohammedan empire under the dynasty of the Caliphs. Their conquests. Persia. Syria. Egypt. Africa. Its decline. Turkish dynasty. Its growth and power. Its decline. Egypt. The Nile. The Aim of their special mission. Rev. ix. 1-12. Locustian dynasty.

Prelude.—The land of Israel is not made productive by the circulating though it of sea waters. Such waters are not "living waters;" nor are they sufficiently elevated to circulate. Living waters belong to the natural system of irrigation; to that system which God renders efficient over lands of extreme fertility. The meteorology of the land of promise must resume its ancient laws. The former and the latter rains shall be restored and so modified as to satisfy the wants of every season, and their channels of distribution so arranged as to answer all purposes of a complete and perfect irrigation. That there will be such rain and channel systems over and in the land of Israel, the Bible most emphatically teaches.

1. The rain system of the land of promise will be restored and perfected 2. Its channels of distribution shall be made efficient, and, in kind, perfect 3. The results will be the fertilizing of the soil to such a degree that it will sustain a dense population. Let us hear the inspired prophets: "And there shall be upon every high mountain, and every high hill, streams of water in the day of the great battle, when the towers fall." Isa. xxx. 25. Copious rains are here implied. "I open upon the hills streams, in the valleys fountains, and make the desert pools of water, and the dry land springs of water." Isa. xli. 18. Abundant rains precede. "I will pour water upon that which is thirsty, and streams upon that which is dry; I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessings upon thine offspring." Isa. xlv. 3. Here literal water is a type, typical and anti-typical waters. Literal or typical waters, and spiritual or anti-typical waters, having the same location. (See Isa. xliii. 20; xliv. 3; xlviii. 21; xlix. 10; lviii. 11). "I give them and the environs of my hill for a blessing, and cause the rain to come down in its time." Ezc. xxxiv. 26. Here the rains are promised whenever, and in the places wanted.

Their results are described in Isa. xxxv. 1, 2: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose." In Ezc. xlvii. 1-13, the waters and their healing and fertilizing properties, and their abundance are fully described; they are literal and typical waters. "And it shall come to pass at that time that the mountains will drop with must, and the hills will flow with milk, and all the brooks of Judah will flow with water, and a fountain goes forth from the house of the Lord and waters the valley of Shittim." Joel iii 18. Great physical changes are here implied.

Since Shittim is in the land of Moab, east of Jordan, Num. xxxiii. 49, how could waters from Mount Zion now water the valley of Shittim? In Zech. xiv. 8 we have the following: "And it hall pens in that day, living waters go forth from Jerusalem, their half to the east sea, and their half to the west sea, in the summer and in the winter (continually) shall it be." These waters flow east and west over the whole land. Physical changes must precede such a flow. (More of this hereafter). What are these waters? The term water, in the Bible, is used to express three classes of thought: a word with a triple meaning:—

1. Literal water; this is its ordinary meaning. 2. Nations and people are symbolic waters. Isa. vii. 7; Rev. xvii. 15. 3. There are spiritual (typical) waters. Nu. xvii. 8; Nu. xx. 11; see Nu. xxxiii. 36. That stream followed Israel 37 years, literal waters; and, at the same time typical, as explained by Paul in 1 Cor. x. 1. Christ said: "If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink." Jno. vii. 37, 38. I am the typical rock whence flowed the typical river that supplied my people. This last, however, must be noted—These three rivers of waters have their literal locations. These typical and literal waters described by the prophets are located in the land of Israel, and accomplish their so-called work in that land. The literal waters fertilize the land of Israel: the spiritual waters purify the people of the land. Zech. xiii. 1. "For sin and uncleanness" vs. 2-8, 39. "He that hath faith on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water;" explained vs. 39 ("But this he spoke of the spirit, which they that believe on him should receive, for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified.") As literal water to the thirsty soil, so are the spiritual waters to the moral world. Both the literal and typical waters shall flow from Mount Zion: the one the literal waters to fertilize the land of Israel; the other to wash the people from their moral pollutions. Both fountains are located in Mount Zion.

Mohammedan empire under the dynasty of the Caliphs.—We have given our reasons for calling this empire Mohammedan, rather than Turkish. The Mohammedan empire is the brainwork of the false prophet Mohammed alone. He is its legitimate parent, both as to its ecclesiastical and its civil elements; it should therefore take the name of its father. Through the Koran, Mohammed rules that empire with equal power while dead, as when alive. He, through that book is the living father of a living empire.

His successors were called Caliphs (Caliph means successor). They adopted the Koran, as the only exponent of religious faith; and also, as the embodiment of their civil jurisprudence. Mohammed formed the empire out of his own countrymen, the Arabs (Joktan); and, during his life, his followers were Arabians. No foreign conquests were made. They were drilled in the Arabian "pit," ready to rush forth to their work.

The first three Caliphs and their mission.

1. Abubeker, the first Caliph, and father-in-law to Mohammed, succeeded to the royal high priesthood A. D. 632. His first efforts were to subdue the Arabian tribes that had revolted on the death of the prophet. To keep the Arabians occupied, he marched against Babylonia, and the Greek emperor Heraclius, whose armies were in Syria. He died A. D. 635, aged 63 years.

2. Second Caliph.—Omar, the prime minister of Abubeker, succeeded him, A. D. 635. His success was truly wonderful. During his royal high-priesthood, he conquered Persia, Syria, taking Jerusalem, where on the site of Solomon's temple, he erected the Mosque of Omar, which is now standing. In ten years the Mohammedan power occupied the zone of empires from Khiva, in the north of Turkestan, to the western boundary of Tripoli. He was assassinated by a Persian slave, A. D. 644, after a reign of 9 years.

3. Third Caliph.—Othman Ibn Affan was born about A. D. 574 of the family of the prophet, and succeeded Omar A. D. 644, Dec. He was despotic; and, in consequence of his cruelty and injustice there were many revolts. The boundaries of the empire still extended. He was assassinated by Mohammed, son of Abu-beker, whom he strove to put to death.

4. Fourth Caliph.—Ali was Mohammed's cousin, son-in-law and vizier. When Mohammed, before his assembled kinsmen, asked who would be his vizier, Ali, (being only 14 years of age) replied, "I will! Let but a man advance against thee, I will pluck out his eyes, dash in his jaws, break his legs, and tear up his belly. O prophet, I am thy vizier." This answer is Mohammedan, but not Christian. It is the spirit of that empire. Ali established a sect of his own in Persia, and succeeded Othman as the fourth Caliph, A. D. 649. He was assassinated in the mosque at Cufa, A. D. 660, while contending against the claims of Moawiyah, who had assumed the title of Caliph.

Hasan, Ali's eldest son, succeeded his father, but resigned; then his younger brother Hosein, who was slain by Yezid of Damascus, son of Moawiyah. The throne of the Arabian empire was now removed to Damascus, where Caliphs were appointed, not of Mohammed's family. Persia still adheres to Ali as Mohammed's vizier. The Persian creed reckons twelve Imams or pontiffs, viz.: Ali, Hasan, Hosein, and the lineal descendants of Hosein to the ninth generation. The nine Imams despised the pomp of the world and spent their lives in the study of religion, and put into practice the same principles. The twelfth Imam, called Mahadi (guide), surpassed his predecessors in sanctity and in his solitude. He made a cavern near Bagdad his secret abode. the time and place of his death being unknown, his followers, therefore, pretend that he still lives, and will appear before the day of judgment to overthrow the tyranny of Dejal, or the Antichrist.

We give these items of history that the reader may the better judge of the grounds of the Mohammedan faith in a coming Messiah (el Mohadi).

The posterity of Mohammed and Ali stand above princes. They are reckoned equal to the angels. They are the sheiks, sheriffs, and emirs of the Ottoman empire. A family of three hundred persons, the pure and orthodox branch of the Caliph Hassan, is preserved without taint or suspicion in the holy cities of Mecca and Medina, and still retains, after the revolutions of twelve centuries, the custody of the temple and the sovereignty of their native land.

5. Fifth Caliph.—Yezid, had his throne at Damascus. Mecca and Medina being abandoned, and the family of Mohammed rejected. The Koran, however still continued to be the rule of faith and the supreme tribunal of all civil jurisprudence. The brain of Mohammed, therefore, was the dictator. Space will not allow us to dwell at length on the history of the succeeding Caliphs of the Arabian or Saracenic dynasty. Conquest and discipleship were their distinctive national traits, till the founding of Bagdad, the city of peace. A. D. 762. Mostassem, the last of the Abbassides (of the family of Abbas, uncle of Mohammed) was taken and put to death by the Tartars, A. D. 1259, the 20th of February. In the 10th century, the Mohammedan empire had three Caliphs, and three capitals. Cordova, in Spain; Cairoan, in Africa; and Bagdad on the Tigris. It was then of vast extent, great power, and inculculable wealth. The Caliphs were for centuries the absolute monarchs of the earth. In their persons were joined the altar and the throne. For the space of one hundred and fifty years their temperance and frugality were remarkable. Their food and dress were very ordinary though the wealth of the globe was gathered at the feet of their thrones.

Their institutions of learning at Bagdad, Cordova and Cairoan became very celebrated, and the Arabian learning continued popular for five centuries. Their youth, leaving their armies, entered their colleges, and the arts of peace succeeded the profession of war. This change in the Arabian dynasty paved the way for their fall, and for the introduction of a new family of rulers (the Ottoman).

Closing remarks.—Did John, in his prophetic visions, see this Arabian, Saracenic or Ismaelitian dynasty—this family of Caliphs? We affirm that he did, for, it was located within his prophetic horizon, and its mission was against apostate Christianity, as then existing in the Greek and Latin empires. If John saw this power, where in the Apocalypse, is its record? We answer, in Rev. ix. 1-11 inclusive. Read that record, and compare it with the history of that dynasty and mark their many and very striking analogies. These analogies have been published in our "Coming Age," to which we refer the reader. No one can follow Mohammed from A. D. 612 to his death, and his Caliphs or successors to the founding of Bagdad (the city of peace) A. D. 762 without concluding that they were sent for a special work; and that their appearance was like armies of locusts, and that their work was similar. That they were executive powers will appear from their failure to carry out fully the intent of their conquests, viz. the subjugation of the world to the Islam. Had they not been defeated by Charles Martel on the plains of France, the crescent would have forever, perhaps, taken before the crescent, and the Mohammedan empire would have been the fifth universal monarchy. It was not the stone kingdom, and was, therefore, doomed to be overthrown.

J. P. WEETHEE.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

October 5. We arrived at Zamwork in due time, where we remained for one week during which time I had the privilege of telling the good news of the kingdom, which was well received. I also visited the grave of my mother, who quietly sleeps near the base of Mt. Chocorua, waiting the summons of the Life giver; I felt to say, "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Sunday, the 15th, found us again in Exeter, where I was invited to preach in the a. m. I accepted the invitation and preached from Luke xxi. 24, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." I endeavored to show that the times of the Gentiles were nearly fulfilled, and that Jerusalem would no longer be trodden down by the Gentiles. That kind of preaching brought two men to their feet with their hosts on, one of whom declared that such preaching introduced an age to come, he did not believe it, he would not believe it, and no one should be allowed to preach it; but it is preached, nevertheless, and will be if Jesus has his way about it and I think he will.

Blood, fire and smoke seems to be the good news or gospel of the people who say that they are called to give the last message to a doomed world (not a world blessed).

Sunday, October 22. Visited Brentwood. Preached in the evening to a large congregation upon the subject of the new heavens and the new earth; it was well received, probably because they were not Adventists. They expressed themselves as being desirous of hearing more.

October 25. I visited Concord again for the purpose of attending the annual conference of the Advent Churches of N. H. Said conference held over the following Sunday and was conducted in a true sectarian style, the leaders taking special care not to invite any who might be in advance of their creed. The burden of the message was that they were the chosen people of God; chosen to deliver the last message to a doomed world, viz. "The Lord is coming to execute vengeance with fire and brimstone, but he would save those of like precious faith." They could even thank God that their children died in infancy, thus making death the gate to endless joy. According to their teaching the innumerable company which John saw was composed of those who died in infancy; the little immortals being of various ages, from one minute upward. During the entire conference not one sermon upon the subject of the kingdom was preached, and the signs of the times were almost ignored or only alluded to incidentally.

The testimonies in the social meeting were characterized by a spirit of love and an earnest desire to reach the unconverted. I saw many very dear friends who were glad to see me, and whose hearts were in their hands; but those who deemed it their duty to regulate the work of the Lord they could offer the hand without the heart. I would remark that it seemed strange to me, as the people once sought my labors, but now it was thought best not to invite me to participate in any of their labors. So I was informed by the president of the conference, who said he was sorry that it was thus, but he was advised.

Of course there is safety in a multitude of counsel, and the N. H. conference was protected from the infection of a gospel sermon or prayer, or even the reading of a hymn by the writer. But in the social meetings I tried to bear testimony to the glorious gospel of God's dear Son and I was enabled to rejoice in view of the fact that God had led me out into the battery of the gospel. I felt that like David I could say "Enlarge thou mine heart and I can say fill it with thy love. I pray that I may be kept where I can be patient in tribulation, rather than enter hope, and endure, and thank God that I may be able to endure these for Jesus sake.

This week has been the best one of my life. I have consecrated my heart, my life, my all to Jesus and his truth. I am having a rich experience in the fullness of the gospel of Christ. Never did I see Jesus as I see him now: such a fullness, and such a glory, and such a blessing is well worth a life of toil and sacrifice. I hope to return to the west in the spirit of gospel love and truth. I am satisfied that we as a people do not drink of the fountain, we only sip. It is our privilege to know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings being made conformable to his death. I wish to say that I had the privilege of visiting Br. and Sr. Ford, from whom I received spiritual as well as temporal things. They distribute to the necessity of saints. But I must close. More anon.

C. C. RAMSEY.

Youths' Column.

The Lord's Prayer.

Our Father, God, thy kingdom come,
Thy perfect will on earth be done,
This world rule thou supreme by love,
As reigneth thine in heaven above.

Give us this day our daily bread,
Share from thy bounty all we need.
In mercy thou our debts forgive,
As towards our debtors we forgive.

Into temptation lead us not,
Deliver us from evil's lot.
For thine the kingdom and the power,
The glory thine forever more.

Bearing False Witness.

"What is the ninth commandment?" said a teacher to a boy in Sunday school.

"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

"What is bearing false witness against your neighbor?"

"It is telling a falsehood."

"That is partly true; and yet it is not exactly the right answer, because you may tell a falsehood about yourself."

Then turning to a very little girl, she said,

"It is when nobody did anything, and somebody went and told about it."

"That will do," said the teacher, with a smile.

Working Dogs.

I once heard a gentleman say, that during a long stay in Holland he never saw a single dog idle, that was old enough and big enough to do any work.

All sorts of barrows and carts are built on purpose for them, and they gallop along at a great pace.

They are used to carry the fish, wood, vegetables, and anything else which their owner wishes, and when it is all sold, and you think the poor dogs might reasonably expect to go home with an empty cart behind them, the master jumps in, and rides back in state.

But this is not the worst part of the story, for a certain amount of work never hurts any animal, any more than it does boys and girls; but it makes us sad to know that, as a rule, the poor dogs are miserably fed, and are often driven till they drop down from exhaustion. Still they are wonderfully patient and persevering, and will lick their master's hands gratefully if he treats them kindly.

In Kamtschatka the dogs are the only animals that can be used to draw sledges. They are strong and active, and run over the snow at a wonderful pace. A courier once drove two hundred and seventy miles in less than four days in a sledge drawn by dogs. They are generally five to each sledge, and they are harnessed four abreast, with one for a leader. But in spite of all the work they do, they are badly treated and ill-fed; they hate the work they have to do, and give a melancholy howl when they are first harnessed. In Newfoundland the dogs are used for all sorts of hard work, but they are treated very kindly, and are so gentle and good, that they will sometimes draw a load of wood from the forest to the seaside, wait for the cart to be unloaded, and then go back to get it filled, entirely alone.

Letters to a Son.—No. 6. Part I.

My Dear Son:

Presuming that I have adopted the right method for understanding the preaching of the apostles, and its effect upon their audiences I might now pursue a similar course in regard to ourselves. I would inquire as to what knowledge we might attain to at this distant date, seeing we possess all the means of information possible to them. This would lead us at once to man's lost estate, when there was no sin. Adam and Eve were placed under the law of their Creator. "The Lord God commanded the man saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die"—(Gen. ii. 16, 17). A certain consequence of disobedience is here threatened, but there are other consequences as inevitable. Death is the penalty, or ultimate consequence of sin; but the first sinners became possessed of fear and shame. Their attempt to throw the blame of their conduct upon one another has been practised by all their descendants, showing at once how natural is the consciousness of wrong-doing, and how strong the desire to be considered righteous.

You will observe that Moses does not broach any theory about the hereditary nature of sin; but he gives a history of the descendants of the first pair which shows that they all followed in the footsteps of their first parents. Neither did he theorize when he instituted that worship of the tabernacle according to the pattern shown him in the mount; otherwise he might have demonstrated the necessity of sacrifice on the ground that man was in a fallen state. He rather seems to base it on the fact that man is a sinner; and that fact made more conspicuous by the searching character of that law which was written by the finger of God upon the two tablets of stone. Had the Mosaic institutions been intended as a remedy for the sin of man introduced by the fall of Adam, Moses would no doubt have expatiated on this view of the matter. The fact that he claims no such work as part of his mission, clearly proves that he leaves that to be undertaken by some one else. This is the work of the 'prophet like unto Moses.'

The question for you, then, to consider is—Does the previous history of man, individually and collectively, as given in the Bible, necessitate such a work as that I have, in my last letter, shown the Christ's to be?—and that in its two-fold aspect; first, his appearing as 'a man of sorrows,' dying for sin, rising from the dead, ascending to heaven; and second, appearing a second time to set up the kingdom of God, and to establish righteousness over the earth. In other words—Is the gospel adapted to the condition of man? Is the remedy suited to cure the disease?

In his letter to the Romans (v. 16), Paul says: 'I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth: to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.' He believed in the adaptation of the gospel to the wants of man. But as he was speaking primarily to those who had believed the gospel, and I am viewing the matter from a different stand-point, I will only glance at his reasoning, to illustrate the question, Wherein is the gospel adapted to man? If you will read from the 18th verse to the end of the first chapter, you will find a description of the heathen world which is a reflex of the wickedness of Sodom and Gomorrah, Egypt, as well as of the nations of Canaan whom God expelled to give place to the children of Israel. Then you have in chap. iii. 1-18 a description of what Israel had become under the law of Moses, which he sums up by saying: 'There is no fear of God before their eyes.' He then makes the appeal: 'Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God.' This is the condition of all men in the sight of God; 'for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God.'

These two last passages give us a true picture of the moral and spiritual state of all mankind in the sight of God. The gospel of His Son was designed to deliver them out of this condition, both in its penal and moral consequences. Paul gives in few words the state of the case. 'By one man sin entered into the world, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned'—(Rom. v. 12). I have said enough to serve as a back-ground to the picture.

In my last letter, I pointed out that, besides preaching that Jesus is the Christ, and that he died for sin, the apostles also testified to his resurrection. This brings him before us in the character he claimed for himself—'I am the resurrection and the life.' They made offer of everlasting life to all men upon condition of belief in him as the Christ, and obedience to him as Lord or Master. The first blessing they received was forgiveness of their sins, according to the declaration of Jesus to the eleven after his resurrection. 'Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem'—(Luke xxiv. 46, 47). If you examine the discourses of the apostles, you will find that the application is directed to repentance for remission of their sins. Without this element, the gospel would be a misnomer, and not adapted to man's condition as described in the Bible—a sinner. Without a free pardon from God, man must remain without hope of deliverance.

I wish your particular attention here to the proof of this part of the gospel. We have it first in the preaching, and afterwards in the epistles. Peter urged the Jews in these terms: 'Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord'—(Acts iii. 19). As this reads, it seems to put forgiveness into the future—when times of refreshing shall come. But it may be rendered 'so that times of refreshment may come.' And is it not a natural consequence of forgiveness, that one should be refreshed? If you examine the cases of conversion recorded in the Acts, you will find that the new disciples were 'filled with joy,' 'went on their way rejoicing,' etc. On another occasion, Peter told the Sanhedrim: 'Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved'—(Acts iv. 12). Here forgiveness is embraced in the wider terms 'salvation' and 'saved.' But you must observe how the apostle places the emphasis upon the name of Jesus. He does the same in the house of Cornelius. To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins'—(Acts v. 43). And so Paul: 'Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses'—(Acts xiii. 38, 39). This is the first occurrence of the term 'justified' as an equivalent for foregiveness of sins—a mode of speech you will often find used by this apostle.

These examples will suffice to show you that the apostles preached to all men repentance and remission of sins in the name of Jesus.—Alex. D. Black, in Messenger of the Gospel.

Solution No. 2.

Who are God's two witnesses? "But now thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, fear not," etc. Isa. xliii. "Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled," etc. "Let them bring forth their witnesses," etc. "Ye are my witnesses saith the Lord," etc. "I, even I am the Lord, and beside me there is no Savior," etc. "Therefore, ye are my witnesses saith the Lord, that I am God." Chap. xliv. "Yet now hear O Jacob, my servant, and Israel whom I have chosen." "Fear ye not, ye are even my witnesses. Is there a God beside me, yea there is no God I know not any."

C. HARTMAN.

THE RESTITUTION

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 15, 1882.

Special Notice.

Address all business letters and make all orders payable to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana." It creates confusion and causes delay in the transaction of business of the office to have orders made payable to the Editor, or business matter addressed to him personally, so please confer a favor by sending as above directed.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Texas.

THE Association has decided to retain the present Editor for the coming year. We shall try to do our best for all our patrons, and we implore the divine blessing to rest upon us, and ask the prayers of all our brethren. Our time has been so completely taken up with the meeting that we have not had the time to read the letters and communications that have come to hand for a few days past. As our meeting is still in progress we must ask still further indulgence. As soon as possible we will attend to both letters and other matters.

As a result of our Conference Meeting so far, it was our privilege to immerse four young ladies on Monday last. From present indications we think that some more persons will become persuaded to yield the obedience of faith before our meeting shall close, we must defer many particulars for the present. May God bless the proclamation of the gospel of his dear Son to those that may hear concerning life through Christ, and his coming Kingdom. To save some from this untoward generation, and in these last perilous times, demands special effort on the part of all lovers of the Redeemer. The Church is doing its last work.

WE have just received the October number of a periodical in the French language, published at Geneva, Switzerland, entitled, L 'Ami D'Israel—"The Friend of Israel." It is a small quarterly "Devoted to intelligence concerning Israel in our days, and to news relative to evangelization among them." Also a tract entitled, "La Succession des plus Aptes Disparu la Bible"—"The survival of the fittest, according to the Bible." The kind reader is E. Petavel, D. D. of Geneva, to whom we have been sending some numbers of THE RESTITUTION. We notice that a portion of "Mrs. Davis Journal, and an article from Brother Cabegrove have been translated into this number from THE RESTITUTION. Many thanks to Dr. Petavel.

Communications.

ARKANSAS NOTES.

There is a great passion and eagerness of men seeking after gold. "And there is gold and a multitude of rubies." But then to speak plainly, and out everything short, is not God the gold we ought to seek? We know a good man said of God "He is my Rock," and I think we can say, He is my gold Rock.

Some of the seekers after gold are uncouth men. They are poor and rough and unlovely. They have no distinguished ancestry, no patent of nobility, no great natural nobleness, or power of understanding or learning, or wisdom; but they are intense and earnest and busy in gold getting. So many who seek after God, are in some things inferior and second rate. They are not highly accomplished or highly gifted, but they are earnest and honest and single-minded. They want one treasure, and that is a Person—the intelligent, benevolent, powerful and wonderfully good unseen Person, the Personal God. They may know but little, but they know they need and desire the greatest good that is God. This is their one peculiar eagerness, and distinction and understanding. They are great seekers, and their distinction is in the eagerness of their seeking, and the object they seek.

I know many people are seeking after doctrines and sometimes they may well seek; but this is not the highest quest. No! God himself is the highest. Nothing short of this will do. Many roam over the universe after good—but the Lord himself is the true universe: and as for any universe aside from him, though we may say it is surely filled by him, yet rather may we say, It is contained in him. Do we talk about the mystery of God? Do we say he is incomprehensible? I will tell you of an incomprehensibleness, and that is a universe of grand and grandly ordered, and wonderful worlds, moving in majesty, and having no Maker or Master, no Author or Projecter. So we will take the mystery with thanksgiving and [illegible] and [illegible] heart, the mystery to love and adore—the Maker and Manager of things.

We are very sorry in all our experiences of imperfect attainment, that we have not more concentration of mind on the Greatest and Best, by which I mean constant thoughtfulness and constant consciousness of God, restfulness and resting in him. The mind is too evasive, too fugitive. Some trouble or distress intrudes, but yet by a happy singularness of God's wisdom, by a force of necessity, though at first a little separated from God by some care, or pain, or plague, this very sorrow compels us back with augmented strength to our refuge.

Satan overdoes his work, overreaches his mark. The thing is meant from injury or destruction only works for our comfort and salvation. Troubles quicken our footsteps toward our Help, and apprehension of calamity gives energy to our apprehension of God. What many Christians want is a greater craving for, or faculty—staying with, on the Mighty. Now this is perfected also exceeded. We must ask further indulgence. As soon as possible we will attend to both letters and other matters.

Coming to God is something done; it is an act of the will. It is a decision however unseen or instantaneous and a decision obeyed. A succession of these decisions form themselves into a law of the mind, and a law of life. These decisions so instinct established, and the judgment of what is right and best, together with the yearning of desire, and the pressure of necessity, sweetly evangelize to establish the character of God-seeking. God-seeking tends and advances to God staying, and all this notwithstanding there are the regrettable and regretted follies and foolishness of our nature in things the they thought and acts, temptations or tendencies) that we wish ten million miles away.

When our motions tending to God and seeking for him increases in the enhanced practicableness and comfort of coming to him, and communion with him, we find a fixed law put anew into force and fruit bearing, and that is the law of habit, and growth both is the habit and its satisfactions of compensation. Inertness of ease of doing right thing, by persistence and repetition, is a satisfaction.

But I am not affirming or denying how often or expressly God otherwise than by laws, exalts, or lets be exalted, his children's character, and he affectionately loves his children. He does surely give grace, gives his Spirit, imparts influence and virtue, but he does not often give miracles of sudden joy, for sudden joys and extraordinary joys may not be safe. How many are sufficiently sure they can bear raptures without some peril?

In things of grace, and growth in grace, there is the law of condition, the condition of time. Is not then time precious? The mind resting in God, not once or twice only, not rarely and briefly, but often and long, finds itself invigorated, because it has contact with the rock and key of strength. It goes to God, ponders him, refers to him, appeals and at last to him, and how precious is the time given in which this can be done. At best there are losses by imperfection of faith, but yet there is a certain power of "redeeming the time," by that quickness and busy spirit of seeking, that importunity of prayer, which has accrued from the painful remembrance of opportunities lost.

I am not astonished if faith exclaims "Lord, most wonderfully!" If it is no wonder that we should desire that he were come "Wonderful, should make his praise glorious, by incessant activities of his Spirit in us. The exactness and the diamond hardness, the unwillingness of unbelief: the questioning—how these disorders of heart need subduing! How much needs to be transformed! Today as I was thinking of God's goodness to those who inquire of him, I thought surely we are not as ready to be raised up to greater elevations, as he is ready to raise us. Strange faultiness, and almost customary of hesitation to be led and helped as God would lead and help. Let us have done with it. We need ointment and medicine—inworking of God's wisdom, to change and take away this strangeness. Repentance may be none the less real and inherent because not half self detected.

It is Nov. 6, and Monday night. What peace to this Arkansas wood! The cricket is companionable with the peacefullest of chirps. The stars are still and shining in the kindest and mildest of night skies, wherein no cloud fleece is seen slowly drifting—traveler in heaven—solitary and purposeless. Let us thank God for many blessings. Quietness, simplicity, contentment, health, food, appetite, digestion, labor and rest; these are things to be thankful for.

THE RESTITUTION has much that is interesting in relation to the wonderful land and people, that is read with relish. An article that covers nearly one side of the paper may possibly have interest enough to justify its length, but two or three column articles are anywhere welcome, if apt and pat to the time, and to prophecy and geography, and evolutions we intelligently look for across the sea, where are coming the conflicts and curses and glories of grave and great and inspired prediction.

There is just one terrible hour for Jerusalem coming, according to Zech. xiv. 1, 2. Who will write immediately on that topic? Will not some veteran take a pen and give a little delineation of their prophecy—a little amplification, explanation and localization, and fill a little vacancy?

C. COLEGROVE.

Selections.

THE KINGDOM TO COME.

During the first three centuries of the Christian era the expectation of Christ's return and the establishment of his kingdom on earth with Jerusalem as its capital and centre, was entertained by all true Christians. It was the orthodox faith, and was founded on Luke i. 32-33, which relates that the angel Gabriel informed the Virgin Mary that she should have a son and call his name Jesus and "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." And the words of Jesus to his disciples, "Ye are they that have continued with me in my temptations; and I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me. That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Luke xxii. 28-30. And on the parables of Christ which illustrate the aspects of the kingdom to the time and means of preparation for it—to the conditions and qualifications of heirship—and to its hidden and manifested states with its growth and perpetuity; all of which show that the kingdom which was ready to be manifested according to the Israelitish national covenant at his first coming in the flesh, was not then manifested on account of the unbelief and unfitness of Israel for it, and remains in its hidden state until a nation of redeemed and sanctified ones shall be born unto God by the word of truth, and prepared for it; and then he shall come again in his glory, and manifest his kingdom.

So when after his resurrection the disciples asked him, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom unto Israel?" He replied, "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath reserved in his own power or right. But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto all the uttermost parts of the earth." Acts i. 6-7. By which we learn that the time of its manifestation was not revealed and as he had previously told them the gospel of the kingdom must first be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations: and after his ascension, while the disciples stood and looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold two men stood by them in shining apparel which said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 10-11. The grand truth here announced is that this same Jesus shall come again. He has not done with the earth, and so abandoned it forever. No, he comes to take possession of it and govern it forever, hence the Father says to the Son, "Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Psa. xi. 8.

Hence we find the kingdom particularly associated with the second coming of Christ. When he comes it comes. And when the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory. The throne of his glory will be the throne of his father David, which God will then give him; and sitting upon that throne judicates that he will reign in his kingdom. The crucified malefactor saw nailed on Jesus' cross the accusation, "This is Jesus of Nazareth the king of the Jews;" and believing it to be true, he said, "Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Paul, in 2 Tim. iv. 1, says: I charge thee therefore before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." And, again, 2 Tim. iv. 18, "And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom." Thus the coming and the kingdom were expected at the same time: and looking for the one they looked for the other also. And when they prayed, "Thy kingdom come," they also prayed for the coming of Christ.

This kingdom is the same that was given to Adam in the covenant of works, when God made him a little lower than the angels, and made him to have dominion over all the works of his hands and put all things under his feet. And when Adam, by transgressing the covenant, forfeited the kingdom and dominion, it was promised to Jesus Christ, who became a second Adam, and in due time being incarnated, obeyed the law and brought justification unto life upon all men. Hence Paul says, "But unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come whereof we speak; but one in a certain place testified, saying, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man that thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels, thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the work of thy hands, etc. But now we see not yet all these things put under him. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor by his resurrection from the dead and ascension to the right hand of God, in pledge and preparation for his future dominion as the second Adam.

This is the same kingdom which under the second Adam was promised to the Israelitish people in natural flesh, as its heirs by the covenant of works made with them at Sinai; but which they also, like the first Adam, forfeited by transgression; but will be given to the saints of God, who being of faith, are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

This is the same kingdom which was given to Solomon, the son of David by natural generation, on condition of his obedience to the commandments of God; but which he forfeited by his disobedience and idolatry; and which shall be given to Jesus Christ, the Son of David by incarnation, through a Virgin of the house and lineage of David.

It is a kingdom which has held its preliminary and mysterious phases in the Adamic grant: Melchizedeck type; and the Israelitish theocracy; but yet awaits its full development and manifestation at the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, who in his own time will show that he is the only and blessed potentate, King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

In praying for this kingdom to come, you pray for every thing in connection with it. You pray for the furtherance and success of the gospel in taking out of the earth a people for the name of the Lord. You pray for all ministerial and missionary labor, for the conversion of sinners from Satan to God; for the edification and sanctification of all the believers in Jesus Christ.

In thus praying you pray for the restoration of Jewish nationality, which must precede the coming kingdom; you pray for the coming of Christ in power and great glory, and for the resurrection and translation of his saints, that they may be glorified together with him. You pray for the new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness; for the removal of the curse under which creation now groans; for the age of purity and bliss; when there shall be no more sin, no more sorrow, no more pain, and no more death; when truth shall spring out of the earth and righteousness shall look down from heaven.

"When the night with the right and the truth shall be!
And the what may to stand in the way.
Then day the world shall see."

O, if we had faith to look not at the things that are seen, but at the things that are not seen: If we could look forward into that glorious kingdom, our eyes should see the King in his beauty and the saints in their glory, and the nations in their gladness, and the earth in its bloom. If we could penetrate into the final result—a holy universe quickened to joy by the pulsations of eternal love—we would pray this prayer more fervently, more devoutly, more earnestly. We should, like Latimer, one of the old English reformers, say, "Let us, therefore, have a desire that that day may come quickly: let us hasten God forward; let us cry unto him, day and night, "Most merciful Father, thy kingdom come."—Prophetic Times.

"Now if we be dead with him, we believe that we shall also live with him."—A. J. Gordon.

The Departing Comet.

One evening last week Professor John K. Rees read a paper on the comet of 1882 before the New York Academy of Sciences, in which he said it should be termed Gould's comet, since Professor B. A. Gould, of Cordova, was the first to see it. He read extracts from letters from Professor Young, of Princeton; from the director of the Dudley Observatory, in Albany; from the director of the National Observatory; and from Messrs. Chandler and Wendell, of Cambridge, Mass., and he concurred with Mr. Chandler in combatting Professor Proctor's theory that the comets of 1813, 1880, and 1882 are identical, and that the comet now vanishing from view will return within six months. According to Mr. Chandler's computations, which are based on all the observations thus far made at several points, the comet of 1882 will not return in less than four thousand years. The comet, as seen from the Cape of Good Hope, transited on the 17th of September last, and at the instant of its entering the atmosphere of our sun it was 1,600,000 miles from the surface of the sun. The comet's tail, which was only 100,000 miles long when first seen, has since lengthened to millions of miles, and as this vast body crossed the sun's disk in two hours, the enormous velocity with which it travels may be conjectured. As its light was visible until it touched the edge of the sun's disk the inference is that the light is not borrowed from the sun, but that it is the comet's own incandescence. Touching upon other celestial visitors, the lecturer said that the comet of 1843 approached within 300,000 miles of the centre of the sun, or within 70,000 miles of the sun's circumference, and that it must yet plunge into the sun and be absorbed. The lecturer threw upon the screen representations of a number of comets and then a star shower such as is seen once in thirty-three years, and the next of which will be seen when the earth passes the track of a star shower in 1899. These shooting stars are meteors from disintegrated comets, and the meteorites that fall to the earth come to us from interstellar space. In conclusion, the lecturer said that all the suns of the universe have comets circulating about them, and that the universe is as full of comets as the sea is of fishes.

The River Nile.

The river begins to swell in the upper Nile in April. The rise reaches Cairo early in June, and increases for about three months. The White Nile supplies the largest volume of water, but that of the Blue Nile furnishes the most fertilizing material, which is a thick alluvial deposit. The accumulation of this mud for a series of years has raised considerably the average surface of Egypt. Authorities estimate that at Elephantine the rise has been nine feet, and at Thebes seven in 1700 years, or about four inches in a century. The rise is not the same in all parts of the country. In the confined space of the Nile Valley above Cairo it is greater than in the Delta, where the surface widens out, and the channels are numerous.

The usual rise of the Nile at Thebes is 26 feet, and at Cairo about 24 feet above low water-level. When it reaches 20 feet at Cairo, as it does occasionally, the overflow causes great damage: when it falls short of 18 feet, the harvest fails and a famine is the consequence. The rise is carefully noted by the nilometer, a square well or chamber, with graduated pillar, located on the island of Rhoda, about a mile above the city of Cairo. This nilometer is believed to have been built in the early part of the ninth century. When the water approaches the height suitable for irrigation, its progress is proclaimed every morning by government criers in the streets of Cairo. The nilometer stood in the time of the Pharaohs at Memphis.—Journal of Education.

Well Said.

The following, from the N. Y. Times, we can heartily commend to our readers, as a good way to meet many modern infidel cavillings. It contains sound sense:—

"It is always a waste of time to try to prove a negative. It would puzzle us, for example, to try to prove that there was never a child born with sixteen heads and no body, the heads arranged like the points of a star around one common central neck. We couldn't even prove that in the Dark Ages there was not a large population of that sort of sixteen-headers in the Mountains of the Moon: but we don't really believe there was anything of that sort. And that is our position about a good many of these Bibliosceptifics conundrums; this one, for instance, from a Pennsylvania reader:—

"How do you meet the arguments of those who claim that Adam was not the first man? I have met with some who say they believe the above to be true. Is there any work which will assist in replying to the above when those who claim it fell back on scientific reasons, etc., to support theory? Any information on above will be thankfully received."

"We can't see any 'argument' in the 'claim' that 'Adam was not the first man;' so, of course, we don't try to 'meet' it. It is our opinion that Adam lived very early in the history of our race. If anybody knows an earlier man than he, let him bring him on. As our correspondent says, 'Any information on above will be thankfully received.'"

Serious Salvation Army Rioting.

On Monday night, a few weeks ago, the Salvation army agitation reached its climax in Dunfermline. A large body of the Army attempted to walk in procession under the leadership of the Rev. Jacob Primmer. In Kirkgate they were met by an enormous crowd, who attacked them fiercely, making free use of stones and bricks. The conflict continued for well nigh an hour, when the Salvationists reached the hall with torn garments and bleeding faces. The crowd afterwards fell foul of the police, and a desperate struggle ensued, in which several constables were badly injured. Some of the ringleaders in the fray were taken into custody, but the police were completely overpowered, and had to leave the rough masters of the scene, keeping the High-street and Guild Hall-street in a state of tumult for a long time. Yesterday morning a meeting of the magistrates was held to consider what should be done in the circumstances. It was resolved to refuse the Salvationists any further special police protection, and to inform them that if they walk in procession it will be at their own risk.

Britain and Egypt.

The sudden and complete overdrow of the army of Arabi leaves Britain for the moment sole master of Egypt, and it would appear probable that circumstances may compel the British occupation of the country to be prolonged for some time to come for order's sake. It is not a little remarkable how, in spite of the avowed inclinations of the British Government, the "force of events" has bit by bit brought about such a result. The disappearance from the sphere of action of the jealous French power and the corresponding increase of British influence are not the least surprising features of the matter. We are not called on to approve the British action in Egypt; but, allowed and over-ruled by divine wisdom, it cannot but have a great influence upon the future of that country, and perhaps also of Syria and all the ancient East. What the result will be we do not venture to predict, but further developements will be watched with great interest.—Glasgow Messenger.

True Humility.

A member of a congregation, talking with his pastor was indulging freely in this strain: "What a poor, short-coming creature I am!" The minister sighed and said, "Indeed you have long given me painful reason to believe you." Whereupon his companion, being taken at his word, replied in a tone of anger: "Who told you anything about me? I am as good as you. I shall not come to hear you anymore, but go somewhere else." And so he did. As an example of true humility, it has been remarked, that in A. D. 59, soon after St. Paul's conversion, he declared himself "unworthy to be called an apostle." As time rolled on, and he grew in grace in A. D. 61, he cried out, "I am less than the least of all saints;" and just before his martyrdom, when he had reached the stature, of a "perfect man in Christ Jesus." In A. D. 65, his exclamation was, "I am the chief of sinners." The boughs and branches of trees which are most richly laden with fruit bend downward and hang lowest.—Living Church.

Islam, Christendom, and Judaism.

Mr. Laurence Oliphant, in the Nineteenth Century for August, thus concludes a survey of the present turmoil in the Mahometan world and the relation of the Jews to the Eastern Question: "Three great religious forces of the world find themselves face to face, two of them armed and equipped for the fray, and determined to test the value of their views of moral and material progress by the arbitration of the sword; and the third, feeble in outward seeming, scattered, unarmed, and despised by both, yet prepared, when the way is cleared for them by the crash of rival creeds, to rise from their ruins inspired with a new-found vigor, and prove to the world that, if the final solution of the Eastern Question involves the doom of Moslem, it opens up his future destiny to the Jew."

News Items.

ST. PETERSBURG, November 13.—A telegram from North Chinsk states that a prairie fire on the Mongolian frontier has extended seventy square miles and consumed many Cossack outposts and villages.

VIENNA, November 13.—The examination of the persons arrested for participation in the late riots shows it was chiefly the work of Socialists and anti-Jewish leaders. Twenty-five thousand bills with anti-Jewish inscriptions were seized by the police who are preparing a list of implicated jurors for expulsion from the country.

CAIRO, November 13.—The native population in the Delta is in great distress on account of the failure of their chief means of sustenance, the rice crop. Unless aid is given them by the Government it is feared many deaths from starvation will ensue.

REDHOUSE OBSERVATORY, PHELPS, N. Y., November 13. Professor Brooks reports the observation of a magnificent auroral display early this morning—the grandest in many years. A vast brilliant arch illuminated the landscape, equal to the light of the moon in its first quarter, and was followed by immense streamers and waves of light projected with startling velocity from the horizon to the zenith. Great meteorological disturbances may be expected.

CONSTANTINOPLE, November 14.—The Sultan today held a levee to celebrate the 1,300th year of the Mohammedan calendar, which, according to the predictions of the soothsayers, will give the world a new prophet of Islam. A new revelation made public by the astrologers assures the Sultan that he himself is the Mahdi or new prophet of Islam. The celebration of the mystic solemnities is so universal that business is at a standstill, and the streets are given up to processions and religious festivities.

Work for Jesus.

Work for Jesus, work now, work all the time. Let him be always in the heart, be first in the affections, have the first place in the life. He is more than life to us. Let us draw closer and closer to him. Let us each and every one renew our vows of consecration, for the day is nearer than when we first believed, it hasteth greatly. O I feel like saying to all of like precious faith:

"Come let us renew our journey prayer,
Roll round with the year,
And never stand still,
Till the Master appear."

The work of God is our work. Let us be about the Master's business. Make it our business as till Jesus comes.

S. ROXANA WIXOM.

The Swiss season has ended as it began, in bad weather. So wet a September Switzerland has never known in the memory of man. Seven feet of snow before the Rhine Glacier Hotel. 100 tourists snowed up at Zermatt, every Alpine pass either obstructed by earthslips or swept by avalanches, thousands of fruit trees broken by the snow as if they had been blasted by lightning, thousands of sheep lost on the mountains, and all before the middle of September, are phenomena portentous and unparalleled. And the rain has been something fearful. In twenty-four hours the lake of Pfeffikon, easton Zurich, rose twenty-nine centimetres, and in the same space of time the rainfall, as recorded by the pluviometer, was at the rate of seven litres (say fifty quarts) to the square metre.

A fortnight ago a vulture was seen hovering over the city of London and now and then perching upon one or another of the tallest buildings. A member of the same tribe was caught on the rocks near Cork Harbor in 1813, and in 1326 one was shot near Kilve, on the shores of the British Channel. Those three vultures are the only specimens of their race which are known to have visited the British Isles for several centuries.

Covetousness cracks the sinews of faith, numbs the apprehension of anything above sense; and, only affected with the certainty of things present, makes a peradventure of things to come; lives but unto one world, nor hopes but fears another; makes their own death sweet unto others, bitter unto themselves, brings formal sadness, sceptical mourning, and no wet eyes at the grave.—Sir Thomas Browne.

An infidel said, "There is one thing that mars all the pleasure of my life." "Indeed!" replied his friend, "what is that?" He answered, "I am afraid the Bible is true. If I could know for certain that death is an eternal sleep, I should be happy; my joy would be complete. But here is the thorn that stings me, this is the sword that pierces me—if the Bible is true I am lost forever."

Poetry.

REFLECTIONS.

FANNIE WILLIAMS.

What though the road be long, and dark, and dreary;
And clouds, and tempests, thicken all the way.
What though our feathers prove false and hopes are blasted;
And shattered be our every earthly stay

What though we long have hope'd and watched, and waited;
To see the dawning of redemption's day.
When toil, and care, and pain and sorrow
Shall have forever passed from earth away.

While we can tread the paradise of flowers,
That fell from His dear lips in tenderest love,
"I will return when all things are made ready,"
"I must go to my Father's mansion above."

We need not fear, nor weary even while waiting,
We know at the appointed hour he will appear.
We'll count the way-marks as we journey onward;
And still keep pointing on to every hour

Still casting down each fondly cherished God,
Subduing every thought of vile and pride,
Looking by faith to see the heavenly Bridegroom
Coming to claim His own, the faithful bride.

Communications.

"HE LIVES IT."

These three words were dropped from the lips of a man in Newark, N. J., about forty years ago, when a person living in that city was spoken of. The one who uttered these words, was, I think, a man making no pretension to Christianity. But he knew the person he spoke of; and he simply, in so few words, witnessed the professor's daily walk and conversation. The testifier emphasized on the first word, He lives it. Doubtless the utterer had seen enough of professors to cause the emphasis. However unpalatable Christian conversation may be to those who "care for none of these things," yet such can see the difference between lying and truth—between fraud and honesty. And when day by day they observe a man talking, acting, living as though he did "care for these things;"—now and then a little word will drop when nominal Christians are talked about; such as:—I know one man who is no hypocrite; W—— does as he professes. Seen and read people are, and at times truth will out unexpectedly.

The writer's own acquaintance with him who "lived it," was short indeed; but short as it was, "he lives it," appeared right words for him. It was before the disappointment of 18..I that I heard the words "he lives it." And after the disappointment, after he had acted as a man truly believing that the Lord would come on the "tenth day of the seventh month," from his own mouth I heard the words, "I am ready to go to the stake, if need be." Long years has he been under the sod, but his faithfulness is not forgotten, some who knew him being his survivors. What a treat it is to remember a true professor! Obituaries have been published of many, read by thousands who never saw the departed ones; while some who had seen and known them could not truthfully have written as the obituaries read. Intimacy discloses what in many instances would be sadly detractive of obituary portraiture. "He lived it" may truly be said of here and there one; and, "He lived it not" may truly be said of many. Worldly adversity, if endured year after year, proves to the sufferer the reality or unreality of profession. The sufferer may suffer for conscience sake; and instead of being on this account regarded, may meet with neglect, with blame, reviling, and persecution. How lacking professors cheat themselves! What reward some might receive from God if they did as Jesus commands! But alas for them, they sound their own trumpets, and often with deceiving sound. So not only do they cheat themselves out of the reward promised to the secret doer of good, but they incur wrath through their hollow boasting.

What a turning up will there be one day! "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether good, or whether evil." See also Rom. ii. 16; xiv. 10-12—more Scriptures might be referred to. To such as have experienced "fights of afflictions" over and over again, and are still experiencing them; to such as have had to "give the back to the smiters," when slanders, misrepresentations, yea, cruelties, have been inflicted, and perhaps still inflicted, we say to these, hold fast! Continue steadfast, enduring; honor God by trusting in him, spite of false brethren, spite of scorn, continued poverty and privation, or whatever else you may have to bear. Among false ones be thyself true, and in due time it may be said of thee by One higher, higher inconceivably than mortal man, "He (or she) lived it."

H. Hayes.

A silver coin, made in the time of King Cyrus, of Persia, is in the possession of Charlotte (N. C.) man. Cyrus ruled about 550 years before Christ, so the coin is, in round, nearly 2400 years old.

To the dear brethren of like precious faith:

I left my home and dear family the 13th of September, en route for Adaline, Ogle Co., Ill., to hold a few meetings before the conference, by request of Brother G. M. Myers. I held three nights meeting at Adaline; held meeting on Sunday at Brother Pypers, and three nights at Lanark with the brethren, and the next Sunday at Brother Geeson's. Then stayed over at the conference.

There were some brethren from Iowa. Had a good meeting. From there I went again to Lanark; had meeting one night. From there, in company with Brother Myers, we commenced meeting at East Plum River. Brother Myers was with me a part of the time, till he was obliged to leave. I continued over two Sundays. On the last Sunday one of Brother Mitchel's daughters obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered and was buryed in Plum river. At the close of the forenoon meeting that day Brother R. Chown came after me to go to West Plum River to hold meeting for two weeks. There is only three in the little town at that place that holds the like precious faith. Brother Chown and Sister Nelson, the mother of E. O Nelson. There are others that believe but have not obeyed. Brother and Sister Chown and Sister Nelson are the faithful ones.

At this meeting I formed the acquaintance of our old faithful Brother and Sister Russon House. They are both quite feeble, but firm in the faith. May God bless them, and keep them, and gather them into his everlasting kingdom. While at Lanark, Adaline, East Plum River and West Plum River, I met some whose names I have seen many times in THE RESTITUTION. The Reamers of Lanark, Dr. S. I. Jacobs of Adaline, Brother S. P. Reuer of East Plum River, and Brother Mitchel and others; I can't remember all of the names. May the dear Lord preserve them. The dear ones at West Plum River have many opposers, but they stand firm.

I took leave of the dear ones at West Plum River on Nov. 1, for Brother Levi Clarke, at Twingrove in Green Co., Wisconsin. Our worthy Brother, R. Chown, hitched up his team and brought me here, some thirty-five miles. I had been with him over two weeks, and it was hard to part with him, but so is this present life. I expect to stay here two weeks, and if any of the brethren in Wisconsin, Iowa or Illinois wish me to visit them, I can do so, as I intend, the Lord willing, to spend my time this winter in preaching the word. If any write to me up to the 15th of this month, write me at Twingrove, Green Co., Wis., in care of L. P. Clark, but after that write to Lanark, in care of G. M. Myers, till further notice. Since leaving home I have had many good meetings. To God be all the praise.

J. S. Hatch.

Conference Report.

Conference met at Severance, Kan., Oct. 21. Brother Myers missed connection, and brethren Clover and Orom preached the first discourses. After brother Myers came he did most of the speaking except one discourse by T. E. Adams.

During the meeting four intelligent persons were baptized. The meeting commenced with good audiences, increasing until it closed. The meeting was a success and will long be remembered. Some five or six others are now about ready to obey.

Visitors attending: Brother and sister Lyon of Holt co., Mo., brother and sister Shirey of Andrew co., Mo., brother Saylor of Brown co., Kan., brother and sister Miller of Topeka, Kan., brother T. E. Adams of Jefferson co., Kan., sister Williams and husband of St. Joseph, Mo., brother and sister Pearson and brother and sister Jones of White Cloud, Kan., brother and sister Buckle of Atchison co., and sister Vickery of Colorado.

The meeting closed after breaking the loaf.

Yours In Hope.

J. P. Bitner.

"Brethren, Pray for us."

Paul, after desiring that his Thessalonian brethren comfort themselves together, that they edify one another, that they esteem those over them in the Lord, and that they live in the daily practice of all the Christian graces, giving thanks in every thing, closes up with the touching request that "They pray for him." And so we, dear household of faith, desire your prayers. We want fruit for our labor. We greatly desire that some be brought to the light and knowledge of the truth through us, and that this may be so, we want to live in all things as God requires, holy and unblamable before him

J. L. and S. B. Weaver

Selections.

THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER AND ATHEISM.

Bishop Fraser preached yesterday morning at Emmanuel Church, Oldwaldwistle. His Lordship drew a parallel between the building of synagogues and the religious thought of Christ's and the Apostles' time, and the churches, chapels, and schools of our own time, and the religious activities at work at the present time as manifested in building churches, schools, etc., and the religious publications. The religious publications were countless and their circulation enormous. He wished he could believe it indicated a proportionate activity of real religious life, and that our people were purer, honester, more truthful, more righteous. But though people might read their religious tracts and others The Wise Cry, they might never go out of their way to do battle against those devils that were tempting them. Then they had side by side with all that religious activity of the printing press, and of religious thought which was stirring the hearts of many people, a terrible phenomenon to contrast with it. By the side of that—he could not help calling it, for it was so to a large extent—holy and ineffective religionism, which kept people's mouths at work in mere talk, but did not touch their hearts and convert their lives, there was a terrible conflict with atheism and infidelity and godlessness. If anybody thought the national virtue, and he hoped they had some sense of the value of our people being sober, temperate, pure, chaste, honest, and truthful, which was what he meant by national virtue—if anybody thought that national virtue could be maintained and kept alive by the teaching of atheism, they could not know some of the things that atheism had done. They could not know, as he knew, because he had been obliged to see it and read of it; they could not know the terrible moral poison under such names as "The Fruits of Philosophy," and "Elements of Social Science," which were being sold and propagated, and corrupting the whole atmosphere of social life. He was told the "Fruits of Philosophy" was largely in the hands of the young, by both clergy and Sunday school teachers, and if the young were following its precepts they were corrupting their whole moral life. One of the most daring disseminators of these publications was now being prosecuted before the Lord Mayor of London, whether wisely or not he could not say; it would certainly give the publication more notoriety and increase its sale. He had a copy of it sent to him yesterday only—who from he could not say—and to make it more talking with the public it was headed, if he remembered right, "By a Freethinker now being prosecuted for blasphemy." If the conscience of the nation would of itself reject this moral poison, and say "I will have nothing to do with this abominable literature," he should have some hope for the future of his native country. He would admit that Christianity had its difficulties, and there were points on which they might desire, if they could have had their choice, that the revelation had been fuller and more clear, just as they might desire that as the days passing over them now with all the grass cut were less rainy and more sunshiny; but they could not control those things, which were ordered for them by One whom they believed to be wiser and whom they knew to be stronger than themselves. And so because there were difficulties in Christianity he hoped they would not give it up. Why God sent the rain when they wanted the sunshine, why He sent or permitted the pestilence when they wanted to enjoy life and health, he could not tell; but to call upon him to believe that this wonderful universe, with its varied courses and wonderful controlling mechanism, these worlds upon worlds in space, until he was lost, and his mind and brain became dazed in the contemplation of them—to ask him to believe that all those things came by chance, and that he himself, with all the wonderful faculties with which God had endowed every human being, was developed by protoplasm from a germ without any designing providence of God governing him, was asking him to believe what to his mind was absurd and impossible. And so because there were difficulties in his faith which he could not explain he was not going to accept the infinitely greater difficulties of the creed of atheism; for it did not make the misery of life easier but a thousand times more difficult to say there was no God, no Christ, no Holy Spirit, no soul, no life beyond; and it he had one conviction in his mind that was deeper than another—and he only wished he could live in a more constant and habitual sense of it—it was that there was a God, and that he was responsible to Him, and that he would have to give account of himself after what the world called death, and that this kingdom to which he belonged was a kingdom of righteousness. His Lordship concluded with an appeal on behalf of the new enlargement.

THE INSIDIOUS DESTROYER.

There is a remarkable phenomenon connected with insect life which has often occurred to us, mind while meditating on the subject of preparedness for a future state, as presenting a curious analogy.

Most persons know that every butterfly (the Greek name for which, it is remarkable, is the same that signifies also the soul.—Psyche) comes from a grub or caterpillar; in the language of naturalists called a larva. The last name (which signifies literally a mask) was introduced by Linnæus because the caterpillar is a kind of outward covering, or disguise, of the future butterfly within. For it has been ascertained by curious microscopic examination, that a distinct butterfly, only undeveloped and not full grown, is contained within the body of the caterpillar; that this latter has its own organs of digestion, respiration, etc., suitable to its larva-life quite distinct form, and independent of, the future butterfly which it encloses. When the proper period arrives, and the life of the insect, in this its first stage, is to close, it becomes what is called a pupa, enclosed in a chrysalis or cocoon (often composed of silk; as is that of the silk-worm which supplies us that important article), and lies torpid for a time within this natural coffin, from which it issues, at the proper period, as a perfect butterfly.

But sometimes this process is marred. There is a numerous tribe of insects well-known to naturalists, called ichneumon-flies; which in their larva state are parasitical; that is, inhabit, and feed on, other larvæ. The ichneumon-fly, being provided with a long, sharp sting, which is in fact an ovipositor (egg-layer), pierces with this the body of a caterpiller in several places, and deposits her eggs which are there hatched, and feed, as grubs (larvæ), on the inward parts of their victim. A most wonderful circumstance connected with this process is, that a caterpillar which has been thus attacked goes on feeding and apparently thriving quite as well during the whole of its larva-life, as those that have escaped. For, by a wonderful provision of instinct, the ichneumon-grubs within do not injure any of the organs of the larva, but feed only on the future butterfly enclosed within it. And consequently, it is hardly possible to distinguish a caterpillar which has these enemies within it from those that are untouched. But when the period arrives for the close of the larva-life, the difference appears. You may often observe the common cabbage-caterpillars retiring, to undergo their change, into some sheltered spot—such as the walls of a summer-house; and some of them—those that have escaped the parasites—assuming the pupa-state, from which they emerge butterflies. Of the unfortunate caterpillar that has been preyed upon, nothing remains but an empty skin. The hidden butterfly has been secretly consumed.

Now is there not something analogous to this wonderful phenomenon in the condition of some of our race? May not a man have a kind of secret enemy within his bosom, destroying his soul — Psyche — though without interfering with his well-being during the present stage of his existence; and whose presence may never be detected till the time arrives when the last great change should take place?—Every man should reflect whether this may not be his case; remembering that it is in his power now, through the help that is promised, to detect and destroy those secret but deadly enemies within him.—Archbishop Whately.

ANCIENT FLOWERS.

Amelia B. Edwards writes to the Academy the following in regard to one of the most interesting discoveries of antiquities which have been made in recent times:

Several of the royal mummies discovered last year at Dayr-el-Baharee were, it will be remembered, found garlanded with flowers, these flowers being for the most part in so perfect preservation as the specimen plants in a "Hortus Siccus." M. Arthur Rhoné, in a recent letter to Le Temps, has described the extremely curious way in which these garlands are worn. They consist of the petals and sepals of various flowers, detached from their stems, and enclosed each in folded leaf of either the Egyptain willow (Salix vitellina) or the Mimosops Kummel Brown. The floral ornaments thus devised were then arranged in rows (the points being all set one way) and connected by means of a thread of stitched fibre woven in a kind of chain stitch. The whole resembles a coarse "edging" of vegetable lace-work. Among the flowers thus preserved are the bright blue blossoms of the Delphinium orientalis, or larkspur; the blue lotus, or Nymphæa cærulea; the white, or Nymphæa lotus, with pink-tipped sepals; the blossoms of the Nerium Ægyptiacus; and the orange-hued flower of the Carthamus tinctorius, or safflower, so largely employed as a dye by the ancient inhabitants of the Nile valley. The dried fruit, as well as the dried yellow blossom of the Acacia Nilotica is likewise preserved; and mention is also made of the blossom of a species of water melon now extinct. The foregoing are all interwoven in the garlands in which the mummy of Amenhotep I. was elaborately swathed. With others of the royal mummies were found fine detached specimens of both kinds of lotus, the blue and the white, with stems, blossoms, and seed pods complete. Still more interesting is it to learn that upon the mummy of the priest Nehsonsi, maternal grandfather of King Pinotem II. (XXIst Dynasty), there was found a specimen of the lichen known to botanists as the Parmelia Perforatorum. This plant is indigenous to the Islands of the Greek Archipelago, whence it must have been brought to Egypt at, or before, the period of Her-Hor Dynasty (B. C. 1100 or B. C. 1200). Under the Arabic name of "Khola," it is sold by the native druggists in Cairo to this day.

These frail relics of many a vanished spring have been arranged for the Boolak Museum with exquisite skill by that eminent traveller and botanist, Dr. Schweinfurth. Classified, mounted, and, so to say, illustrated by modern examples of the same flowers and plants, they fill eleven cases—a collection absolutely unique, and likely ever to remain so. The hues of these old world flowers are said to be brilliant as those of their modern prototypes; and, but for the labels which show them to be three thousand years apart, no ordinary observer could distinguish between those which were buried with the Pharaohs and those which were gathered and dried only a few months ago.

The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times. Palestine and the Jews; their Persecution by Russia, etc.

A striking passage in reference to the Jews occurs in Isaiah x: 22: "For the Lord of hosts shall make a consumption even determined in the midst of all the land." This prediction may well occupy our attention at a time when the Eastern Question and the renewed persecution of God's ancient people are the prominent topics of the day.

By the phrase, "in the midst of all the land," we understand all the world in general. At the appointed time, which will be, I presume, in a few years, a fine fever with respect to the return of certain people to Palestine will possess all men—a fever that will spread itself out in all parts of the world. It is determined upon already in the counsel of the Divine mind. A perfect mania will possess the nations, and the general topic of conversations, in a very few years from to-day, will be Palestine, its glories and its advantages. This emigration fever will rage most violently among the Jews; then it will take hold of other races and nations; for the prophet Isaiah assures us that God will gather others to Him beside the literal seed of Judah and of Israel. The exertions of the Church, the forces of the nations, are hastening on the preparatory conditions of this great consumption. Very soon Jerusalem will become pre-eminent. Salem will stand once more, lifting her head from the dust, and, standing with majesty among the nations of the earth, she will again be the glory of all lands. Many men are ready to ask how this consumption will be brought about; and because they are not now interested in any great degree they rather doubt the matter. Neither their doubts, nor anything any difficulties that they can see in their mind just now, will stand in the way of Him who reigns in the heavens, who will, in His own good time, bring His own purposes to pass. The result God will bring about. It is often very difficult beforehand to say by what means God is going to produce certain things, what means he will adopt to bring about certain events. The great point for us all to settle is, is this thing to take place? The signs of the times seem, I think, in some degree, to forecast this great event. Think of the beautiful imagery of the Savior, "We see the fig tree putting forth its leaves, and ye know that summer is nigh." So, also, when certain things are fulfilled, do we know that other things must come to pass. The signs of the times indicate very clearly that the period of this consummation is not very far distant. The method and enthusiasm attending upon such a work we may form an idea of by looking in our own times, and, in times past, at similar movements. Twenty years ago no man could have predicted the enthusiasm that rages through Canada—touching Manitoba. There was not a man who had prescience enough to see that that part of the Dominion would take possession of homes, of hearts, of minds, of interest, from one end of the Dominion to the other. The land was thought to be barren, the climate uncongenial, and no one would suppose that he could leave the fair fields and lakes of the province of Ontario and go to that far-off land. But we seen how soon a rage is created, how soon a consumption can be started. Now this is an evidence of what can be done if men can only get up an excitement or fever upon any point. You cannot reason, and men become subject to the law of impulse, and follow out the line of that interest. Another example we may take from the famous crusades. No one living in the tenth century could for an instant have forecast the terrible enthusiasm that prevailed among the people and nations of the earth in the eleventh, twelfth, and part of the thirteenth century. You would not suppose it possible to get up a fever among people that would cover 250 years. Yet there was a fever got up among the nations, a tide of enthusiasm which levelled the distinctions between king and subject, prince and beggar, rich and poor, old and young, learned and ignorant, good and bad. Of every nation and race men came, generation after generation, to fight the Mussulman, reclaim Palestine, and restore Jerusalem. A fever covering 250 years! Eight times was this crusade fever kindled, and kindled successfully. Nor was there a man of any station or calling but yielded to the passing impulse, and gave his hand and countenance to the effort. Now, when we think of all that, it is easy to conceive how another purpose, might easily come into force. And who started these great crusades? Peter the Hermit, a man who had retired from the world, a man who had little concern with its temporal or commercial interests. But he went in his rags, and leaning upon his crutch, crying through the cities, "Jerusalem must be redeemed! Jerusalem must be redeemed!" setting fire to the people, until it took hold of the very boys and girls in the streets. And an army of boys, from ten to fifteen years old, numbering not less than 30,000, was formed, and set out to Palestine, to perish by the way; and every highway was strewn with the dead bodies of these enthusiasts.

Now, this has taken place in this world, and, as I have said, it covered a space of 250 years, and took hold of all the nations of that time. Louis IX., aided by Edward I., worked hard in these crusades. Nations and races joined together in one tremendous mass, and the records of their sacrifices, marches, battles, and sufferings seem to us beyond credence. Now, remembering that these are historical facts, can we not easily take in the great consumption, determined upon in the midst of all the lands, at which the Jews will return to their native land? At least we can see how inspiring a subject Palestine is, and what enthusiasm it can raise. There is no part of the earth that Russia, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, or England would give more to possess than Palestine. It is the objective point of all aggrandizement. It is the effort of Russia to reach Palestine. She may go round about as she chooses, but her design, her aim, is Jerusalem. England's manœuvring, England's strategy, at every other part of the Empire, is to surround Palestine. Germany is looking to Palestine; France is exceedingly jealous of Palestine; and Bonaparte's prediction will be true, as he said, "Whoever can take Jerusalem, and keep it, will finally rule the world." And there is no doubt in my mind but that it is the key. As it is the key to the centre of the earth; so it will be the key to universal conquest.

Between the crusades and the coming consumption there is, however, I think one remarkable difference. The crusade, of course, was an enthusiasm started and maintained by war. The coming consumption, however strange it may appear, is to be void of war. It is to be a consumption of God's appointment. The other was begun by man, and carried on by man. This consumption will be without war, without strife, and it will be chiefly taken up by the English nation. And now, is it not strange that the English nation will not take part in the next great continental wars that are speedily coming on? Of course, people say, dangerous ground! No more dangerous than it has been at other times. The other nations will go to war, and before long they will struggle with each other. England will come again as she came in after the last war, to seek peace for them. She will act a price for that peace. What did she ask the last time? Cyprus, and a protectorate over Turkey in Asia, which includes Palestine. She is already the protector of Palestine. When these nations, like worried dogs, shall be torn and bleeding, weak, weary, and exhausted, and come together to settle their grievances, England, strong, having been preserved from the war, will again step in and dictate terms of peace, and she will ask Palestine as the price, as her spoil, and it will be given her. So this consumption is to come to pass, and the Jews be collected from the four wings of the heavens and returned once more to their Promised Land.

The next European war will create a great and bitter prejudice against the Jews. It will be made still greater by the simple fact that they now have the sinews of war in their hands. There is not a nation in Europe that can go to war, except England, unless the Jews say "Yes." In that respect the Jew is the sovereign dictator of every nation in Europe, except England, and they can forbid war, because they have the sinews of war in their hands. They have four-fifths of the capital of the whole of Europe, and you cannot get men to kill each other, without hate, unless you pay them a good price for it.

Thus, because they are the traders of Russia, because they are sharp enough to get the better of their German friends in money matters, the Russians and Germans hate the Jews. And when they see they are entirely mortgaged to them—body, soul, throne, and country to the Jewish race—they will be willing at once to concede to the Jew the rights of individuality, of sovereignty, or independent national existence. They will be glad to let the Jew go out to his own land, into Palestine. The very debts that they will incur will make them more ready and willing to go; but at the same time they will hate the Jews more and more. And so we can see the events at the present time are very much on that line. A shrewd observer cannot fail to be acquainted with what is transpiring. You say, "How they are punishing them!" What a terrible punishment!

We have no idea in Canada or America that one hundred thousand people should be smitten unto death in the most violent, outrageous, atrocious, and devilish manner that it is possible for men to invent—murdering men, tearing little children limb from limb, ravishing women, burning houses, scourging the people, pursuing them, and driving them off, like a herd of Texan cattle, at the point of the bayonet, firing their homes and turning them adrift without aught to cover them—and that taking place, too, in the nineteenth century, while you and I are here; and we get these reports from a country where all news is suppressed, so that on proper authority the thing is ten times worse than we ever hear. One might ask why this is so, why there is such a prejudice against the Jewish brethren? It is necessary in view of the desired end. The Jew will stay among the nations as long as he can make money and get rich. When all not their faces against him, and legislate him out of personal rights, the Jew will be ready to turn his face to the ancient land of his fathers. It is an unfortunate necessity that these things should occur to make him long for a land of his own to be at rest; and it is as necessary for us to take his part in sympathy.

THE JEW CANNOT GO IN HIS OWN NAME.

You see the Saxons are beginning to be the protectors of the Jews. Sympathy is rising like a tide in the Saxon heart. In England and in the United States meetings are being called, and you will see that the British Ministry will be hoisted from its place of power, unless they take hold with a stronger hand against Russia. Then there will require to be another power, less sympathetic with Russia, that will be content to pay for the protection of the Jews, and England will become their protector.

You may ask, "Do the Jews take any knowledge of this?" The Jews throughout the world are getting keenly alive to this question; their papers are now discussing it, and a great change is taking place in the Jewish mind on these points.—Dr. J. Wild.

(To be Continued.)

OBITUARY.

Died—In Otsego Co., Mich., Oct. 11, 1882, H. J. Isham, of typhoid fever, aged 72 years.

We laid him away under the power of death to await the resurrection morning. He was a preacher of the kingdom of God, not a professed preacher, but like Paul he taught the truth in the markets and in every place where an opportunity presented. He has been a believer in the near coming of Christ since 1842.

Mrs. H. J. Isham.

Poetry.

PALESTINE.

J. G. WHITTIER.

Blest land of Judea! thrice hallowed of song,
Where the holiest of memories pilgrim-like throngs
In the shade of thy palms, by the shores of thy sea,
Or the hills of thy beauty, my heart is with thee.

Blue sea of the Galilee!—in my spirit I hear
Thy waters, Gennesaret, chime on my ear;
Where the lowly and Just with the people sat down,
And the spray on the dust of his sandals was thrown.

Beyond are Bethulia's mountains I see,
And the desolate hills of the wild Gadarene:
And I pause on the goat-steeps of Tabor to see
The gleam of thy waters, O dark Galilee.

There down from his mountains stern Zebulun came,
And Naphtali's king, with his eyelrolls of flame,
And the chariots of Jabin rolled harmlessly on,
For the arm of the Lord was Abinoam's son!

There sleep the still rocks and the caverns which rang
To the song which the beautiful prophetess sang,
When the princes of Issachar stood by her side,
And the shout of a host in its triumph replied.

Lo, Bethlehem's hills—like a prayer rise to view,
With the mountains around, and the valleys between;
There rested the shepherds of Judah, and there
The song of the angels rose sweet on the air.

And Bethany's palm trees in beauty still throw
Their shadow at noon on the ruins below:
But where are the sisters that hastened to greet
The lowly Redeemer, and sat at his feet?

I tread where the twelve in their way-faring trod;
I stand where they stood with the Chosen of God,—
Where his blessing was heard and his lessons were taught,
Where the blind were restored and the healing was wrought.

Oh, here with his flock the sad wanderer come—
These hills he trolled over in grief are the same—
The fountain where he drank by the wayside still flow,
And the same airs are blowing which breathed on his brow!

And throoded on her hills she Jerusalem yet,
But with dust on her forehead, and chains on her feet;
For the crowns of her pride to the mocker hath gone,
And the holy Shechinah is dark where it shone.

But wherefore this dream of the earthly abode
Of humanity clothed in the brightness of God?
Were my spirit but turned from the outward and dim,
It could gaze, even now, on the presence of Him!

Not in clouds and in terrors, but gentle as when
In love and in meekness, he moved among men;
And the voice which breathed peace to the waves of the sea,
In the hush of my spirit would whisper to me!

And what if my feet may not tread where he stood,
Nor my ears hear the dashing of Galilee's flood,
Nor my eyes see the cross which he bore at him to bear,
Nor my knees press Gethsemane's garden of prayer.

Yet, Loved of the Father, thy Spirit is near
To the meek, and the lowly, and penitent here;
And the voice of thy love is the same even now
As at Bethany's tomb or on Olivet's brow.

Oh, the outward hath gone!—but the glory and power
The Spirit surviveth the things of an hour:
Unchanged, undecaying, its Pentecost flame
On the heart's secret altar is burning the same!

Selections.

JERUSALEM.

JERUSALEM, Aug. 9, 1882.

Mr. Cummings: Dear Friend:

I commence this letter from the most interesting spot on earth; the famous city of Jerusalem, standing upon four hills; and yet the hills and mountains around are higher than the city itself. "As the mountains are round Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people, from henceforth even forever." (Ps. cxxiv. 2.)

The four hills on which the city stands are as follows: Mount Moriah, (the southeast quarter), Mount Zion, (the southwest quarter), Mount Akra, (the northwest quarter), and Bezetha, the new city, (the northeast quarter.)

The Tyropœon Valley separates Akra from Bezetha, and Moriah from Zion. The city is surrounded by a wall, from 20 to 80 feet high, and averaging about ten feet thick. It was built by Sultan Suleiman, in the year 1542, 340 years ago.

The ancient city of Jerusalem is buried in rubbish from 2 to 85 feet deep. Opposite the northwest corner of the Temple enclosure, I have been down a shaft 75 feet to the bottom of the Tyropœon Valley; also, opposite the southwest corner, near the Dung gate, 85 feet; and at the southwest corner of the wall, I went down a shaft to the foundation stone, 75 feet below the surface.

Just level with the ground is a stone in the corner of the wall, 38 feet and 4 inches long, by 8 1-2 feet deep, and 7 feet in width. About 50 feet north from the corner are several stones much larger. They form the spring of the arch which spanned the Tyropœon Valley and once connected the Temple with the upper city, Mount Zion.

"So Aristobulus' party was worsted and retired into the Temple, and cut off the communication between the Temple and the city by breaking down the bridge that joined them together."—Josephus, Wars of the Jews, Book, I. 7, 2.

The west and north walls of the Temple enclosure are inside the city, but the south and east walls are the same with the present city walls. At the southeast corner I have been down a shaft 75 feet to the foundation stone; and just opposite the northeast corner of the Temple enclosure, about 120 yards south of St. Stephen's gate, I went down a shaft 135 feet below the surface of the ground to the foundation stone; and I still have a piece of that stone. The city wall at this place is about 40 feet above the surface of the ground, making 175 feet from the foundation to the top.

"Now therefore the king laid the foundations of the Temple very deep in the ground, and the materials were strong stones, and such as would resist the force of time"—Josephus, Ant. of the Jews, Book VII. 3, 2.

The stones 40 or 50 feet below the ground are from 20 to 38 feet long, and about 7 feet square. The outside edge and ends are bevelled, and show every sign of Jewish masonry. The joints are so close that one could not put a thin knife blade between them. There is no doubt but the eastern wall stands upon its ancient foundation, especially that part of it which encloses the side of the Temple.

I will here give the size of the present Haram enclosure. The south wall is 922 feet from east to west. The eastern wall is 1530 feet, the western 1601, and the north 1042 feet long. According to Josephus the area of Solomon's Temple was between 600 and 700 feet square; that is, if we reckon the cubit at 21 inches. But one writer says that a Jewish cubit was 7 1-2 hundredths, which would very nearly agree with the length of the southern wall.

There is no doubt in my mind but that the rock over which stands the Mosque of Omar, called es Sakerah, is the identical side of Solomon's Temple, the spot where Abraham was ready to sacrifice his son Isaac. (Gen. xxii.) It was that mountain upon which King David afterwards made preparations to built the Temple; the site of the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite. "And David built there an altar unto the Lord, and offered burnt offering and peace offerings." (2 Samuel, xxiv. 18—25.) "Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord in Mount Moriah, where the Lord appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared, in the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite." (2 Chron. iii. 1.)

"Now this Temple, as I have already said, was built upon a strong hill. At first the plain at the top was hardly sufficient for the holy house; and the alter for the ground about it was very uneven and like a precipice. But King Solomon, who was the person who built the Temple, built a wall to it on its east side.... the lowest of which was erected to the height of three hundred cubits, and in some places more; yet did not the entire depth of the foundations appear, for they brought earth and filled up the valleys."—Josephus, Wars of the Jews, Book V, 5, 1.

The above are but few out of many references I might give; but these are sufficient to identify the side of the Temple.

I suppose there is no spot on earth that has been so strictly guarded as the Haram el-Sherif, (the noble Sanctuary,) to prevent the Jews and Christians and all unbelievers from even entering any part of the enclosure.

In 1818 Dr. Richardson was permitted to make a hasty visit through the Mosque, under an efficient escort of soldiers. This was in return for medical services rendered to some of the dignitaries of the Haram. I have heard of several persons who paid from thirty to forty pounds ($150 to $200) for the privilege of spending a few minutes inside the enclosure, besides being obliged to go through the Mussulman form of prayer. But for several years travellers have been admitted on payment of a certain fee; and now the fee is very small; that is, when an order is applied for through any Consulate except the American which is the only Consulate that charges any fee for an order into the Mosque. If we apply at the American Consulate for an order to visit the Mosque, we have to pay fifty cents to the Consulate and one frank for each passenger, besides the extra bakshish (presents) to the Sheiks of the Mosque, and the soldier and also to the cavass who are obliged to accompany each party that visits the place. If we apply to any Consulate except the American, for an order to visit the Mosque, there is no regular fee. The Consul grants the order free of charge and the party gives whatever it pleases to the Sheiks (Chiefs) of the Mosque, and the soldiers and cavass who accompany it.

Mount Moriah is indeed an interesting spot to visit; for as we enter the Mosque, under its dome, we have the real Rock before us. It was here that Abraham was ready to offer his son a sacrifice to the living God. It was here that David built an altar unto the Lord. It was here that Solomon built that Temple which was designed by the Almighty himself. It was here that our Savior when only twelve years old was found sitting in the midst of the Doctors both hearing them and asking them questions. (Luk. ii. 42-46.) It was from this place that Jesus drove the money changers. (John ii. 15.) It was here, also, that Judas came and brought the thirty pieces of silver which he receives for betraying our Savior. (Matt. xxvii. 3-5.)

The Moslem tradition concerning this rock is, that when their Prophet ascended to heaven it actually started with him; but in response to the great Prophet's prayers, the Angel Gabriel was sent to prevent the mount from going up, and so firm was the angel's grasp that the impression of his hand and fingers are to be seen in the rock yet. So rapid they say, was the Prophet's flight through the heavens; that although he had several conversations with Moses and others, when he was in heaven, he returned in time to prevent the falling of a silver urn, which the wing of Gabriel happened to strike as he mounted on high. Such are a few of their legends concerning this marvelous rock.

The Mosque of Omar is indeed a grand building—I think much grander than any of those in Constantinople. A more graceful dome than that on the Mosque of Omar is nowhere to be found. The main body of the building is a true octagon of sixty-seven feet on a side. It has 56 windows of colored glass. Just above the windows are extracts from the Koran in very large Turkish letters.

From the Mosque of Omar, we go to the Mosque El Aksa, which stands in the southwest corner of the Haram enclosure. It was built by the Emperor Justinian about the middle of the sixth century, and dedicated to the Virgin. Just in front of this Mosque, on the north, is a large cistern which receives the water that comes from Solomon's Pools. This is supposed by some to be the site of the Brazen Sea. "Solomon also cast a brazen sea, the figure of which was that of an hemisphere.... Now this sea contained three thousand baths."—Josephus, Ant. of the Jews. Book VIII, 3, 6. "Also he made a molten sea of ten cubits from brim to brim....And the thickness of it was an handbreadth and the brim of it like the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies, and it received and held three thousand baths." (2 Chron. iv. 2-5.)

The Mosque El Aksa is 272 feet long, by 184 feet wide. The arches of the three middle compartments are filled in with columns. The interior is supported by 45 columns; 12 are common stone, and 33 are marble. In the northeast corner of this building is a portion allotted to women, surrounded by a wall. In this building is a long arched room, called Jamia Omar, (Mosque of Omar.) According to tradition, it was in this room that Omar first prayed after he took the city.—Rollo Floyd in Sye-to-Come Herald.

---

[A short time ago a Baptist minister of Belleville, Ont., wrote an essay on the Sabbath (advocating the common received view) which was published in the Ontario a newspaper of that city. The publication of the article referred to originated the letter below and others to follow.]

THE SEVENTH OR SABBATH DAY.

Editor of the Ontario:

"Why do Christians keep the first, instead of the seventh day of the week, as the Sabbath?" An article under the above heading appeared in the Ontario of the 2nd inst. With your permission, I would like to offer a few objections to the reasons brought forward for the change. In the first place, the writer classes all seventh-day Christians with Jews, and calls them Judaizers, because they adhere to the letter of the Fourth Commandment, which he ought to know if he is a Bible student, that the Sabbath is not a Jewish institution, having been given more than two thousand years before the Jews came into existence. Christ says. —"The Sabbath was made for man (not the Jew only) and not man for the Sabbath."

After quoting the commandment the writer says: "The stress of the commandment is laid upon the Sabbath or first day, and not on the Seventh day of the week." The commandment plainly says, "but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." How he can write the above after quoting the commandment seems strange. He says:—"It (the commandment)enjoins six days of labor and one of rest, instead of constituting six days common and one holy." The commandment says. "Wherefore, the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it," which means, one day, the seventh, or Sabbath, was blessed and made holy. Now, who are we to believe, the Bible or the writer of the above article? He again says.—"We are distinctly told to remember the Sabbath, not the seventh day of the week, as such to keep it holy." How any man in his senses and having the commandment before him, can write such nonsense, is beyond my comprehension. The commandment says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath." If, according to this man's argument, the first day or Sunday is meant, then the Jews, if they kept the commandment at all, must have kept Sunday. He makes an effort to straighten out the above by saying: "Now, I am not in this trying to make it appear that the seventh day was not to be kept" a little before that he said "the stress of the commandment is laid upon the Sabbath or first day and not on the seventh day," which is a plain contradiction. He quotes Col. ii: 16, 17, and applies it to the Sabbath of the decalogue, for a careful reading of the passage it is easily seen that Paul is speaking of types; the ceremonial Sabbath being of that order and classed with meat and drink new moons, etc. The Sabbath was never a type, having been instituted at creation, before types and shadows were needed. The writer admits that the seventh day is called the Sabbath in the New Testament, but says the Christian was not under obligation to keep it, and where is he, I would like to know, commanded to keep the first day or Sunday. Christ kept the Sabbath, the Apostles kept it, the early Christians kept it. The Sabbath is embodied in the law, and Christ taught the observance of that law, Matth. xix, 17, James ii. 10, 11. "The Christian is not bound by the letter of the Fourth commandment"—He might with just as much propriety teach that the Christian is not bound by the letter of the command, which says: "Thou shalt not steal." He again quotes from Rom. xiv, 5 & 6, Paul in this text evidently does not refer to the Sabbath of the Lord, it never being left to man to choose the Sabbath for himself, which would make any and every day in the week a Sabbath. God is not the author of confusion. He says: "The fourth commandment is not a complete revelation." We would like to know when and where it has been completed. It is in Sunday keeping which was engrafted into the Christian system from paganism in the early days of the apostacy, and nowhere mentioned in the New Testament? If a day should be kept as a memorial of redemption, then the day on which Christ was crucified offers greater claims the first day of the week—"in whom we have redemption through his blood," Eph. i—7. He says: "The first day of the week was signalized by our Lord's frequent appearing to his disciples. We have only one record of Christ's appearing, after his resurrection, to his disciples, on the first day of the week, and that was on the day of his resurrection. He tries to make out that "after eight days" (he quotes it "on eight days after"), means the first day of the succeeding week. Any school-boy could tell you that instead of falling on the first it would reach to the second or third. If the example of the disciples meeting on the first day of the week to break bread as recorded in Act xx—7, constituted a Sabbath, then the example of the Apostolic Church at Jerusalem is sufficient to make every day in the week a Sabbath. Acts ii—42—46. The Apostle John speaks of the Lord's Day," but does not apply it to the first day of the week. Christ calls himself Lord of the Sabbath. The writer admits that there is no direct command to keep the first day of the week, and that the fact amounts to less than nothing. "Why do ye also transgress the commandments of God by your tradition"—Matt. xv, 3—7. He says: "What of the observance of the seventh day until Sinai?" Let him read the sixteenth chapter of Exodus, which comes before Sinai, and see. We have neither the word nor example of Christ of keeping the first day of the week. God made man on the sixth day of creation, which was man's first day," therefore the seventh was his second, which the writer tries to make his first, and that is one of his reasons why we should now keep it as a Sabbath.

The paper on which we have made the above criticism was read by Rev. A. Turnbull before a meeting of the Ministerial Association, they deeming it of great value and importance.

SABBATH KEEPER.

A typographical error made Mr. Turnbull say: "The stress of the commandment is laid upon the Sabbath or first day, and not on the Seventh day of the week." The commandment is plainly says, "but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." How he can write the above after quoting the commandment seems strange. He says:—"It (the commandment)enjoins six days of labor and one of rest, instead of constituting six days common and one holy." The commandment says. "Wherefore, the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it," which means, one day, the seventh, or Sabbath, was blessed and made holy. Now, who are we to believe, the Bible or the writer of the above article? He again says.—"We are distinctly told made to prove that the Jewish Sabbath is binding on Christians. I call it the Jewish Sabbath, because the Jews were the only people who were ever required to keep it holy. "Sabbath Keeper," asserts that does not prove) that the Sabbath was "given more than two thousand years before the Jews came in existence," which I deny, and ask "S. K." for the chapter and verse to prove it, and until then I shall insist that the Jews were the first and only people ever asked to "keep the Sabbath day holy." I am well aware that in Gen. Chap. ii, it is stated that "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it." The reason given why He sanctified the seventh day is "because that in it He rested from all his work." It will be noticed here that God did not command man to observe it or keep it at that time, nor any other time until the Jews were brought out of Egypt, then the Jews only were required to keep it, notwithstanding the fact that several other nations were in existence. I agree with "Sabbath Keeper" when he says that we have neither the word nor example of Christ for keeping the first day of the week." The fact is that Christians were never required to keep any one day holy more than another. As I understand it, Christians should be good every day of the week. The Christians met together on the first day of the week to break bread, etc., but they did not keep the first day holy as the Sabbath was to be kept; at least there is no scriptural evidence to that effect. The Sabbath was included in the law given to the Israelites which law was never given to the Christians by Christ. Christians were even to love their enemies, and if so, would not steal or do anything else that would harm another individual: for if a Christian would do harm to another he could not love him, and consequently would be breaking one of Christ's commandments. "The law was a school-master to bring us unto Christ" (not beyond Christ). Gal. iii, 24. "But after faith is come, we are no longer under the school-master." Gal. iii, 25. Paul tells us in Rom. x. 4, that Christ is the end of the law, for righteousness. The Sabbath, then, being a part of the law, it is plain that the observing of it ended with Christ, especially as neither He nor the apostles ever commanded Christians to keep it. "Sabbath Keeper" says that the early Christians kept the Sabbath, but omits to quote Scripture to prove it.

Yours, etc.,

TRUTH SEEKER.

Letter Drawer.

By invitation I attended the Ohio Advent Christian Conference, which convened at Millville, Hocking Co., Ohio, on the 19th inst. It was about the 12th annual meeting. It was composed of some able ministers, who represented a number of able congregations. The eldership, sent as delegates from the churches, were kind and zealous. I was invited to take part in their deliberations, and was called upon to do more than my share of public speaking. My treatment was truly Christian. The brotherhood of Millville deserve commendation for their hospitality.

That Conference was another demonstration that persons differing on many points in the word of God, can harmonize in Christian spirit. Why should we not give to others the same liberty that we claim? We were a unit on the great central truth, the advent, and the preparation necessary to meet the Savior in peace. We diverge in our views of the future subjugation, and the disposition of the world's population, especially relative to God's purpose towards the Hebrew race. I once stood where Adventists now stand relative to that ancient people.

Before 1843 I reasoned thus:—Messiah comes in 1843. The Jews cannot return before that time; therefore there can be no return of the Jews; and consequently no promise in the Bible of a future return. So we taught, and filled the Scriptures with conditional promises. I well remember when Brother Joseph Marsh, of Rochester, N. Y., published his little pamphlet on the "Age to Come." I was residing at Boston, Mass., preaching to the Chardon Street church. Two parties immediately sprang up, hostile in feeling, and diverging in practice. Our journals took sides in the contest, and an alienation of brotherly love was the result. Freedom of Bible investigation ceased. Such results are injurious to Christian progress. Names of reproach excite prejudice, and prevent investigation. We should search the Scriptures for truth, not for victory. We are commanded to grow; not in grace only, but in knowledge. Let us not fetter Bible investigation, either by indolence, or by the presumption that we know it all. Let us have the truth, and the love of it. Let us not call each other names that will prevent a free investigation of the Scriptures relative to the future.

J. P. WEETHEE.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:

Thinking it is possible that some of the readers of our paper may wish to know what I am about, therefore I write. First, I have attended to my own affairs, and let other people's alone.

During the month of August, in company with Mrs. Lyon, I visited my brothers in Southbridge, Mass., the place of my nativity. Had joyful greetings with my relatives, and all my old associates of every name—sect. Spent one Sunday with pleasure to myself and all present.

Spent one Sunday in North Windham, Conn., where I labored some when I was a Baptist preacher. It was good to greet old and new friends. Some of them came ten miles to hear me. Some footed it four miles to hear me. Subjects—in the morning—"The purpose of God in the creation and formation of the earth." At 2 p. m.—"The Bible true, Ingersol or infidelity the judge." At the memorial supper in the evening at Brother Chamberlins. Visited Brother Cady and family who was one of the deacons of the First Baptist Church in Ashford, when I was pastor. With him I spent one day in calling upon many of the surviving members of the church and society, and their living offspring. Joyful greetings I met with them all. I also visited the graves of most of those who were resting in the dust, many of whom I immersed. Sad did I feel. But I believe they will live again to die no more.

Spent one day and a half at the Advent camp-meeting in Springfield, where I had a pleasant interview with an old friend, with whom I labored and associated when I lived in Conn. On our way home we visited Mrs. L's relatives in the city of Auburn. Stopped over Sunday and preached to a good congregation in the hall occupied by the Advent church. Subject: "The Bible true, Ingersol or infidelity the judge." Had a strong invitation to come again.

I have spent three Sundays with the Brethren at Norwich and Sweasburg, Ont. Had some blessed good meetings. Immersed four into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. Ate the memorial supper on each Sunday. But it is sad to think that some who appeared to be deeply interested in the truth, have gone to all appearance. Have spent two Sundays with the church at Penthill. Had a good time in presenting what I believe to be the gospel—the plan of human redemption and the obedience thereto. Some of the brethren, with myself are deeply interested in the Palestine movement. Judah's restoration has commenced! So I believe and so I preach. Fraternally.

R. V. LYON.

---

Please announce to the brethren that F. G. Williams and S. H. Rice, of this place, would like to meet with the brethren anywhere within 100 miles of Northfield, Rice County, Minnesota; at suitable times during the coming winter, for the purpose of giving lectures on the subjects which most interest us. We are well supplied with charts illustrating prophecy, the Great Pyramid, history, etc.

Brethren wishing to make arrangements please address either of us at this place. It seems to us that much greater effort ought to be put forth to enlighten the world concerning fulfilled prophecy, and subjects relating to the kingdom of God. We know our weakness, but feel willing to do what little we can. Will the brethren lend a helping hand by notifying us of such places as they think will give us a hearing—this is all we ask.

F. G. WILLIAMS.

---

Various are the means by which religious societies raise money to pay expenses, but for novelty some of our country churches take the lead. A few nights since people who attended an entertainment at a church in one of the outlying districts found that on the programme was a negro minstrel performance from the pulpit platform, and all the audience, but an occasional sour-visaged Deacon, seemed to enjoy it. Friday, to help along the struggling church at N. Blandford, a considerable number of young Westfield business men accepted an invitation to a hunt in that mountainous region, the losers to pay at the rate of $5 a head for the supper to follow at the church. After supper in the vestry the audience were invited up into the church for a concert. There a long walk occurred, and at last the minister explained that it was intended to charge 10 cents admission, but from negligence it had not been done, so a collection would be taken before the concert opened. This was done, and the count proving satisfactory the performance proceeded. When the Westfield folks left, at about 11 o'clock, preparations were being made for a dance in the vestry with a country orchestra of a violin and accordion.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Age to come not a heresy," "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. C. C. Wendell. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? where is it? By J. H. Paragon. A. M., author of "Homilies of Unity," "Theological Fellowship," etc., etc., with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constitutes the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now exciting such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 800 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION Plymouth, Ind.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic the Sinaitic, the New and the Davidic covenants; their duration and relationship to each other. By H. M. Myers. 270 pages, bevel cloth, price $1.

The Truth Set Free; or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Silas Henn. 96 pages, price 35c.

The Hope of Future, or the Second Advent of Christ, by Silas Henn. 48 pages, price 15cts.

Material Immortality; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a re-assertion of the old Bible view of material immortality, lost by birth but to be given by G. H. R. Crozier. 16 pages, price 10 cts.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, what is he? by Dr. J. H. Thorne, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 3, 1882, put into tract form.

The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public, social and family worship. By H. M. Myers, Peter Sects.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—By A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a work found in this paper, neatly printed. Your subscription is a sufficient guarantee to the worth of the work. Price only 20 cts. each. Send to this office for them.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, on receipt of published price. Address as below:

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PLEDGE, suitable for total abstinence. 1. The temple. 2. The casting out Moneylers of Christ, by Silas Bastian. In 1000. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man. 6. Thoughts for Children. 7. The Two Advents. 8. What is Beliefism. 9. The Restitution Age. 10. Destiny of the Wicked. 11. Baptism. Ten copies 25c., or assorted packages of 100, 35c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 20c.; 50 for 35c.; 100 for 60c.
Can You Believe? A series of 31 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in our list.
The State of Man in Death. Contains no abstract of proof-texts.
The Age to Come Not a Heresy. By H. V. Reed.
Life and Death. A concise statement and comparison of the two views of three terms, namely: The Hades and Hell.
Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Macgruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
25c. each; or 35 for 50c.
Is It Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? R. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.
The Scriptures and Salvation. H. V. Reed. Contains an account of the threefold gathering of the Seventh Church, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; or 50 for $2.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Heyl. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 10 for 35c.; or $2 for 1c.
The New Birth. Female Police.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.
The Kingdom of Jesus. Joseph Marsh, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 6 for 25c.; or 30 for $1.
Witchcraft Described; or, the Wiles of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; or 35 for $1.
The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 10c.
A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. Price 10 cents, or 75 cts. per dozen.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of York. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.
The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with a review of the future movements and destiny of the Germanic, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A most invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 176 pages, cloth, 75c.; paper 50c.
God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and clear statement of the leading theme of Bible history. Our brethren will find this just the thing to lend and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.
Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness, John Dilworth. Price 10 cents.
Hymns of the Advent, in the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by Charles C. Baker. Mr. Baker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of psalms. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is to be a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 50c., cloth 80c.
The Eclectic Hymn Book, a collection of hymns and songs adapted to public and family worship, compiled by C. H. Myers and John Arnold. 30c. each.
The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson. Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word for word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.
The different readings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words therein literally translated, or rearranged in the common version so as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.
New improved edition on larger paper, 884 pages, cloth $4.50, Library binding $5.00.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association,

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
W. TUTTLE.....Vice President.
E. K. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
A. R. UNDERWOOD.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
W. TUTTLE, E. K. BARNHILL,
I. O. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HAGSTAD, B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETJEN, H. V. REED,
WILEY JONES, S. WILSON,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 22, 1882. NO. 44.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the doctrine of "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortalized saints joint heirs with him in the power and glory of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

The Term Sons of Love.

I purpose to show in this article that the term "love," as used in the Scriptures is the embodiment of a principle or law. Dr. Mark Hopkins, in his book "Love a Law," has taken the ground, as a metaphysician, that there is such a rational, controlling or guiding principle as "a law of love," and that it is silently but surely asserting itself in the Christian world. Other able metaphysicians have, like Dr. McCosh denied this postulate and are still denying it. the latter class asserting that love of any sort is merely one of the phenomena of the feelings, and that the intellect so called is not involved in these phenomena, that the will controls all intelligent action, and that the feelings are not and cannot be made responsive to the touch of volition; as to the "natural man" this reasoning is in accord with universal experience and common sense.

But I purpose to show that the "love" of the Scriptures has to do with enlightened reason and a regenerated state of the individual, in which state, the processes metaphysical, although singular, are not the same.

The natural man (ψυχικος ανθρωπος) cannot apprehend spiritual things (πνευματικα). If the processes of the mind and heart were the same and the concepts and percepts of reason were reached by the same avenues of approach, this statement could not be true forsooth. And stranger than all! would it be, were this not true, that the Scriptures, from Genesis to the Apocalypse, should always and invariably use this one term αγαπη to express "regenerate love." Then how strange Paul's famous chapter on this kind of love (translated charity) would sound, in the light of anything but a law or principle of action. He says "love (αγαπη) is long-suffering, is beneficient; love envieth not; love boasteth not itself, is not puffed up; is not indecorous, seeketh not its own, doth not provoke, thinketh not that which is wrong, doth not rejoice in iniquity, but doth rejoice along with the truth."

Is there not involved something more than feeling in such virtues as are here expressed? Do they not imply the highest intellectual processes of thought as well as feeling? One must know how to be beneficient before he can exemplify beneficence intelligently. One must have been well trained in the school of reason, not to think or reason badly. For this is what Paul means in the passage "knowest to know," "thinketh not that which is wrong."

In a word the teaching of Scripture is that the natural man in following his instinctive natural ways is following the instincts and impulses of a perverted nature. He feels wrong and reasons wrong in this perverted state, and in proportion as he is a natural man is he actuated and controlled by these perverted instinctive feelings and impulses rather than the cooler dictates of reason.

Moreover while the guidance of judicial reasoning, even though infallible and perverted, is preferable to the blind impulse of passion, yet we are clearly warned that the natural man cannot by reasoning as a natural man find out God or his ways.

Again, when God says to the natural man, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy mind and with all thy purpose of mind, and with all thy strength, and thy neighbor as thyself," could he make the ground of obligation any broader in any possible way? Observe the necessity that inheres in the "thou shalt." Shall what? Love? But our metaphysical theologian says that love is an instinctive impulse, and can't be made to drive in the harness of the will. Love whom? God and neighbor.

But the skeptic says there is no God, and moreover, if I believed there was one, and he was such a person as theology depicts him, I could not by any possibility love him, although I might fear him. And who is my neighbor? Christ says the one whom you see needs your helping hand, even though he be your mortal enemy. Your love must be the regard for your neighbor which the good Samaritan exemplified.

Is it not apparent, my reader that the love God is speaking of and must be something more than the untamed instincts of the natural man? Is it not the word that epitomizes and expresses the exemplified purpose of the whole natural man, body and life tamed and harnessed to the chariot of God's all-wise and beneficient will? Is not "the love that worketh by faith, the practical, tangible, utilitarian outward exemplification to the world of "The New Covenant" whereby we have mutually and severally agreed to become partners and co-workers with God in his great field of beneficience, namely the world?

Did God say of you or to you, my Christian brother, when you were yet "in the shadow of death" and "the bonds of iniquity," I cannot love such as one; my feelings do not go out instinctively toward such objects, and my will cannot coerce my feelings to love you? No. What saith the Scripture? "God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us."

Now this is the kind of love that Paul is speaking of in that chapter on "charity" so-called, and this is the kind of love that God's commandment requires and necessitates, and this is the kind of love that worketh by faith, and this is the word used when the Scripture saith "God is love."

Does any love that is merely an exponent of feeling satisfy such requirements as these? Does anything short of a law or intelligent principle of action controling the whole man satisfy these demands? If not can we do less than assert the fact of this law as one of the phenomena of the regenerated state of mind and heart in faith? And what would be the difference between the two states of the individual man? In the one, the natural man, we see the physchological phenomena of the reasoning faculties, man's highest gift in this natural life, subject to or at least constantly biased by the impulses of his emotional nature. he these impulses right or wrong. Instead of the intelligent judicial faculty of reason controling and guiding the feelings according to an enlightened understanding, we see this God-given faculty a blind and ignoble slave of mere sentiment.

In the other, the spiritual or regenerate man, however, we see this judicial faculty in man saying to all that belongs to him in his organic life, to himself in a word, as God hath said unto him, thou shalt and thou shalt not, and pride and passion and ignoble lust and every inordinate desire bear and become subject in a finite obedience to the will of the enlightened reason. The feelings say I hate. The enlightened reason says Thou shalt not only not hate, but thou shalt love, and then shalt exemplify this love by doing good. But I do not desire so to do. Be still, ignoble slave, or die! Love is the law of my realm and under a God of love I am a King of righteousness. Yea, and this royalty must be asserted. Strife do you say? Of course there will be strife. Yea, mortal combat. For, it's death to you or to those ignoble impulses of the old nature that have ruled over you from your birth, and this is our victory, namely, the utter walk by faith, yea, the faith that worketh by love. But how can faith work by love unless love be an enlightening, discriminating law of action?

I purpose now to show that the very word itself, in its etymological meaning signifies and touches this truth. The word αγαπη is a verbal noun, from αγαπαω, a collateral form of αγαμαι, both meaning "to regard," but the former being commonly used in the sense of "the love of regard." Now the love of regard, the love of complacency, every metaphysician knows is not an instinctive emotion or a phenomenon of the feelings alone. In other words is not an instinctive objective impulse going out naturally toward the object which calls it forth? as for instance the mutual instinctive love of the sexes for each other, but is a subjective state in which the reason rules and the impulses of the heart respond to the mandates of its royal master; as for instance the reason says to the good Samaritan, there is a brother man who is in need of your helping hand. Let us help him. Let us regard this need of our brother, and the heart and all that is within him says Amen, we will. You see the concept of reason precedes and directs, yea, commands the heart or feelings.

The priest and the Levite were natural men and exemplified the way of the natural man. The Samaritan was a regenerated man, and exemplified the way of the regenerated man, or "the spiritually minded" man. The natural love, you perceive, is selfish and therein differs from "the love of regard," or as it is sometimes styled "the love of complacency," which is unselfish, seeketh not its own.

But to our definition. These two verbs αγαπαω and αγαμαι have as their common primitive stem or root αγα or ἀγ the difference of breathing being merely dialectic and euphonic. Now ἀγη the noun, means awe or reverence, and ἀγιος the adjective, means reverent purposes, and in a derived sense when applied to God or holy beings, actually holy beings, the word for "saint," and being frequently applied to God himself, as "be ye holy as I am holy."

The saint is set apart to be holy, and in God's good time will become holy, although in this mortal state holy only in promise, that is, he is expected to regard himself and is to be regarded in his servant relation to God as set apart for this purpose which is to be perfected in and on him.

The reader will perceive that the idea contained in αγα the root of this word love or αγαμαι is reverent awe or regard for a superior being, and when we speak of a love which brings man into a relation with God as this superior being, the intrinsic meaning of this love must be the regard for this Superior Being which thus inheres in the word.

The reader will thus come to understand the significance of such Scriptural injunctions as these, "If ye love me keep my commandments," "Love not in word but in deed."

This love of regard you perceive implies duty or obligation, in fact primarily rests upon obligation, and will continue so to do as long as we are in this imperfect finite state, and until "we arrive at the measure of the fullness of an adult age in Christ Jesus."

I have shown that according to the general teaching of the Scriptures of the Old and New Covenant, the love therein enjoined cannot be considered merely an emotion or sentiment, because God at the mouth of his servants not only exhorts but commands us to love and exemplify it. But God's commandments are laws addressed to man's reason. "Come let us reason together," saith he. Moreover all obedience to commandment or law must from the very nature of things, rest upon a sense of duty or obligation, and the sense of duty or obligation must necessarily be preceded by a concept of what the duty requires, and the mandate of duty must necessarily be executed by the will under the guidance of reason. Therefore, so far as this love is an emotion or sentiment it is and must be subject to the dictates of this controlling reason, which I have styled in man "the royalty of righteousness," and which in a previous paper I have shown is clearly taught in the Melchisedek type.

I have shown also that the signification of the words αγαμαι and αγαπαω in which God's commandment is couched touches the same truth etymologically. What more remains to be proved? I exhort you therefore to become conformed unto this law "by the renewing of your mind." For we who thus have been renewed or regenerated "have the mind of Christ," and our thoughts and purposes are being conformed unto the thought and purpose of him who has promised "to be in us to will and to do of his good pleasure.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Notes by the Wayside.

Oct. 31.—Taking leave of the friends in Concord I wended my way to Manchester, where I spent two nights and one day as the guest of Bro. Tropethor, one of God's noblemen; attended the social meeting of the Adventists who have a fine Chapel and an earnest Christian Pastor. I had liberty in witnessing to the truth.

I next visited Nashua and from there to Lowell Mass. I proceeded to Miller Hall at the earnest request of Sister Reed of Concord. At this place I made the acquaintance of Br. and Sr. Spinney an aged couple who are waiting for the Kingdom of God. Br. Spinney is a faithful watchman, giving the gospel every season for which he has been ordained by those who should take up his hands. He has preached the gospel twenty years, forty years, proving all things and holding fast that which is good. He and a little company of gospel believers have a nice Chapel where they hold services every first-day. This is the only congregation that I have found in New England that preach a live gospel.

I also formed the acquaintance of Br. S. H. Athens, a devoted Christian, and a kindly gentleman, whom God has raised up to proclaim the glad tidings. He is an honest investigator and an earnest defender of the truth. It is truly refreshing to meet kindred souls, for few there are that are willing to be led into all truth.

I had the privilege of speaking in the name of Jesus morning and evening of Sunday. Nov. 5, to an intelligent congregation who manifested their interest by urging me to tarry with them the following week and speak "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus," but my health would not permit. I was very much exhausted after my effort. I would say to my friends that in some respects my health is better, but there is a difficulty that is very troublesome, which manifests itself directly after a special effort. I very much fear that it will seriously interfere with any protracted effort that I may have contemplated the coming winter. Let the saints pray for me. I am still waiting for the coming One. More anon.

C. C. RAMSAY.

[If Br. Ramsay on his eastern tour expects to pass through Philadelphia, will he please correspond with George F. Work, 1812 North 12th St.]

Selections.

The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

Palestine and the Jews; their Persecution by Russia, etc.—No. 2.

The London Standard, of a recent date, remarks; "It is interesting to notice the way in which the Jews, scattered throughout the world, are beginning to turn their eyes toward their own land. Palestine is not altogether a place to please a capitalist, but yet even such keen financiers as the Jews are busy buying it up. The Jewish Chronicle reckons now some 18,000 Jewish brethren in Jerusalem alone. It is said they are not a desirable population to maintain, yet £60,000 is sent over from England to help these people maintain themselves. The occupation of Palestine by a people who have retained an indestructability as a race, while they have learned a complete cosmopolitan character during those eighteen centuries—a nation at once European in education and Asiatic in origin—would be by no means a bad arrangement. It might not be impolitic on the part of the European Powers to assist in placing so influential a people in so important a position, and would solve what, before many years, will be the vexed question among the nations—namely, the territory of Syria." Now, you might ask one of the Jewish brotherhood in Toronto here, and probably he would not know as much about it as I do, because he is not as much interested in the prophecies as I am. He is interested in doing business; he knows his own line of thought remarkably well, but he does not know the line of thought that runs in this direction. A man's eye is keen in the direction his interest lies.

A commercial man looks at events as they will affect commerce; an intellectual man as they will affect education; a missionary as they will affect religion and the Church; and a Jew simply as they will affect him as one of a race, and commercially. He and I have the same privilege; but he is, like others, so thoroughly wedded and welded into a certain line of interpretation of prophecy that he cannot get out of it. Still, I have the privilege. As a blind man who has had certain events described to him as they happened is said to be the best witness to a person outside of those events a better judge of us than we are of ourselves, at a thousand points.

Some time ago the Hour Of ... had an article, which accorded to these no other destiny, for Palestine but to ... in a state of ... Syria will soon be the highway between the East and the West and the old trade will revive. Old cities will revive and new ones will be built; the old time will come back, and the steamer will run in the track of the caravan. Syria will be a place of trade; but the people who are pre-eminently the traders of the world, will they be there when the coming change takes place? The country wants capital and population. The Jew can give it both. Has not England a special interest in permitting their restoration? It would be a blow to England if either of her great rivals got hold of Syria. Her mighty empire, which reaches from Canada in the West to Calcutta and Australia in the Southeast, would be cut in two. England does not want any new territories, but she must see that they do not get into the hands of rival Powers. She must preserve Syria to the Syrians. Do not the dictates of policy exhort her to this course?

"The Jews exist, the spirit is there, but the external form, the cementing bond of union, is still wanting. A nation must have a country; the old land and the old people! We see strange things nowadays. May not this be one of the notable signs and resurrections of the present day?" I have made you these quotations so that you can see that I have the clearest heads, the best brain and thought of the Jewish world on my side. We can all see how necessary it is that the Jew should be willing to return, and that we should be willing to let them go. We should learn a lesson from God's providence of old in the land of Egypt, when even those Egyptians who were unwilling to let His people go took off their rings and stripped off their earrings and jewelry, and brought their money out from their hiding-places, and gave to them, and said, "Begone!" and actually did all they could to help them on their way. And the time will come when, laying our hand on the Jew leaving Toronto, we shall say, "God bless you, my friend! I am glad you are going to Palestine." That is what the Egyptians said. They were glad they were going to found a separate nation themselves. The ransomed of the Lord will return to Zion, with songs of rejoicing and gladness of heart. Do you know what the Jews do now at the close of the Feast of the Passover, and have done for the last 1800 years? At the close of that solemn day's services they take each other by the hand and say, "Good-bye; we meet at Jerusalem next year." They did so here in Toronto last year, and will do so again next year. They will as surely meet in Jerusalem some year as they have carried out the idea. They say, "Good-bye; we meet in Jerusalem next year;" and they will say it until they do. Ah, brethren of Judah, some of your children, I believe, will live to realize this long-expected blessing. The outlines of history are fast filling in, and you will ere long be placed in your own land, with the accumulated experience of centuries to guide you to duty and labor. Your wanderings will soon cease, and in your own land your children will acknowledge the Savior which you and your fathers have not seen as yet, to accept Him. You ask how will all this be brought about? It will be brought about, as was the great deliverance in the land of Egypt; it will be brought about by God's own purpose. "For thus saith the Lord, It shall come to pass that they shall say no more, The Lord God which brought us up out of the land of Egypt, but, The Lord God liveth which brought us from all countries whithersoever He had scattered us, and placed us in our own land"—that is, they will forget the deliverance from Egypt, and say, "The Lord God which brought us from all countries," etc. And the latter will be as true as the first; and when will it be? God has determined this great consummation, and it must take place. When you think that we are in the nineteenth century, one could hardly imagine that Russia would be permitted to act like it has, and alienate herself from the rest of the earth; and yet in past time we did the same by this people, and we shall have to pay to get them back in their land. We have murdered them and robbed them. Why, even some of the jewels that our Queen wears in her crown were stolen from these Jews, and never a cent paid for them. There is not a nation to day that is not travelling in such wealth as many days gone by except the United States. Of course, ourselves being part of England, we make like part of the blame.

THE PERSECUTIONS OF THE JEWS.

When Christianity became the dominant power in Rome, then the Jew began to suffer; and from that moment to this, in the presence of that gospel which speaks peace and good will to men, he has been nothing but a butt and a reproach, and object of reviling and a subject of persecution. God forgive the Christianity of the past! In olden times Jews were put to death if they by any means, even by accident, endangered the life of a Christian. If a Jew was passing along a street, and a Christian should happen to stumble and hurt himself, the Jew was burned because the Christian stumbled. The Jews were forbidden, by a council of four hundred and fifty bishops, to pray for a good harvest, for it was held that if a Jew prayed for a good harvest there would be sure to be a bad one. God bless those bishops who had no more sense than that!

Then again, if you take the saints, St. Ambrose, for instance; he stands forth the cry, "Burn the Jews! burn the Jews!" Then St. Augustine, whom we follow so kindly, he says that the Jews should not be received into society, or recognized upon the streets. The Bishop of Alexandria persecuted them to the death. The emperor Justinian, in the sixth century, in his wonderful code of laws, which are the basis of our laws, actually deprived the Jews of citizenship and personal rights. Rome, when it had gained its power, was not more tolerant. Pope after Pope, bishop after bishop launched their anathemas against the Jews. They were forbidden to receive over the necessaries of life. It was under penalty of the Inquisition that a Roman Catholic supplied bread to a Jew, even if dying of hunger. I am glad that I do not belong to a church that lived a long time ago. I would rather start a new one. I would have no connection with a church that has come up from the past, wading through blood, and fire, and ignorance. Then you come to our Henry VII., who mortgaged the whole of the Jews to his brother, the Earl of Cornwall, to raise money, when he had expended his own in prodigal carousing, and was hard up—and he the head of a church, too! Then his successor, Edward I., drove them all out of the country, and deprived the man who had brought them in mortgage of his property. He passed a law that all who should remain after All Saints Day, in 1290, should be hanged, if found in any part of the land. And so you can go on through all the nations, Germany, France—both guilty—and Spain, which is the most guilty of all the nations. Think of the 800,000 homeless Jews that were driven out, and no nation durst, at that time, open a door to receive them, and they perished miserably by the way. Is there to be no compensation for all this? Are the Jews to have no reward? Are they to be always outcasts, wandering over the earth? And yet all their sufferings may be traced to this—they prayed the prayer, "His blood be upon us and upon our children." Oh, that they had a clasp on their mouths when they asked that for their children! But it has been upon them, has it not? If you, free-thinker, if you, man that disbelieves the Bible, if you want a proof of an answered prayer, the bloody lines and tracks down the centuries tell you that one prayer, at least, in God's Word has been terribly answered. Has it not? And your fathers have helped to answer it.

There are two things that a man cannot put together. A man cannot believe in the existence of a Jew, and at the same time deny the existence of a Providence. I will test any man in Toronto on that. There is not a man—free-thinker, hard thinker, close-thinker, good-thinker, or bad-thinker—but who, if he believes there is a Jew in existence, must also admit the existence of Providence. The Jew is such an anomaly, such an exception. You cannot talk about a Jew as you would about a Frenchman, a Russian, a German, Spaniard, or Saxon. Will you tell me why a people who were from six to nine millions thirteen centuries ago, are just that number to-day? Will you demonstrate to me, by any common or ordinary method of reasoning, how a people could remain static for 1800 years? No other people ever did so. This people could walk upon their native earth, but could not put down a foot of it. Now, you can give no reason for these things, except the one I have given. What is it God said? That they should be wanderers, without national life, without government or king, until he should return them to their own land. And this has been true for 1800 years anyway. Has not it? Do you not see that what he has been telling you about them is true? And he says there is to be a great consumption in the land—that is true also. There is to be a great consumption, in the providence of God, and they are to be gathered together. They will be persecuted, until they say in their sorrow, "Let us go to our own land."

We shall be glad to see them go, my brethren, to that land which is theirs of right. We may argue as we will, and get up meetings to discuss the question of Jewish persecution, but I am myself under the impression that the time is now near for the call to go forth, as the cry is said to have run like an electric shock through the French when Bonaparte gave out his first proclamation, "Frenchmen, come home!" And so God will cause these wandering ones to come home, and they will hear the call and return in peace to their ancient land, as we all wish they may, for, being brethren in Christ, we cannot wish any one, whether Jew or Gentile, aught but the freedom that we ourselves enjoy, and a happy rest when life is done. God bless them and care for them! Amen! —Dr. J. Wild.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At Eagle Creek, Stark County, Ind., Nov. 12, 1882, Anna D., wife of Josiah Shultz, aged forty-three years.

Sister Shultz leaves a husband and four children, with many friends to mourn her loss, but they sorrow not as others that have no hope, for Sister Shultz was among the first at Eagle Creek to take a stand for the truth. She was ever faithful to her calling, hence the little church deeply feel the loss, it is the first broad that death has made on us. May we all be admonished to faithfulness by this dispensation. On Monday, Nov. 13, we laid her away to rest in a full assurance of soon coming up in the first resurrection. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, to a large congregation from Job xiv. 14.

H. L. CARTER.

DIED—Sept. 30, 1882, Rosberry Celser Smith, born Feb. 21, 1854, aged 28 years.

Brother Smith was baptized by the writer in 1875, from which time he lived a consistent Christian. He suffered quite a while, took it patiently till death released him from his suffering.

JOHN FOCHT.

Christopher North never said a truer or wiser thing than this, in his "Soliloquy on the Seasons:" "Turn from the oracles of man—still dim even in their clearest responses—to the oracles of God, which are never dark. Bury all your books when you feel the night of skepticism gathering around you; bury them all, powerful though you may have deemed their spells to illuminate the unfathomables upon your Bible, and all the spiritual world will be as bright as day."

Truth is immortal; the sword cannot pierce, fire cannot consume it, prisons cannot incarcerate it, famine cannot starve it.

Communion with Christ is the life and delight of all true Christian people.

THE RESTITUTION

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Nov. 22, 1882.

Special Notice.

Address all business letters and make all orders payable to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana." It creates confusion and causes delay in the transaction of business of the office to have orders made payable to the Editor, or business matter addressed to him personally, so please confer a favor by sending as above directed.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Treas.

Some deferred articles in our next. As this is our fourth paper for the month, our next will bear date, Dec. 6.

Our time and attention have been so pre-occupied that we must defer a contemplated account of our late meeting here in Plymouth.

We shall use every effort in our power to make the paper instructive on the fulfillment of prophecy. Mrs. Davis, by a card says she will write again soon. We hope our friends will try to increase the number of subscribers on our list. The work of the church in proclaiming the gospel and circulating papers elucidating prophecy is almost completed. This dispensation now nears its close.

If we mistake not, it is for each local congregation—or ecclesia of believers—after a careful study of God's Word, to decide about the course they must pursue in regard to the communion and whom they will have preach for them. We notice that there is a solemn interest felt in some of these things in other lands as well as in our own. We rejoice that a correct knowledge of the Gospel and its requirements is becoming more general.

NOTES OF WARNING.

The time has most certainly come for the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ to not only acquaint themselves with the teachings of his word, but to conform their lives to its requirements. Among the crying sins of these last perilous times legalized adultery, as a result of divorces granted by courts of law, is one of startling enormity and frequency. The evil has become so common that not only church members, but even ministers, who are under most solemn obligations to teach and practice the requirements of God's word are to be found on the black roll of crime, and catalogued by inspiration as those who shall have no part in the kingdom of God. In the works of the flesh that preclude from God's kingdom adultery heads the list in Gal. v. 19, "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, etc."

At present we can do no more than to give the article below, which we take from Messiah's Herald, and which appeared some months ago in that paper. Notwithstanding some very pointed communications already printed in THE RESTITUTION, some have insinuated that we were non-committal, and even disposed to condone iniquity of this sort to save our paper. We now most distinctly reply to all charges of this kind, that if THE RESTITUTION cannot live without condoning crime, let it die. The Lord would have no further need of the paper. Read the article and ponder it well.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

Dear Bro. Orrock:—Are you willing to ask in your paper the following questions and comment upon them?

1. What is Christ's and the Christian's doctrine of divorce?

2. When a person has been for other causes than the one Christ names, divorced from one mate and married to another, should that person be continued in a Christian church?

3. Should individual Christians "keep company" with such persons?

4. Should a pair so married repent of their sin, what is their duty?

There are excellent people who say, "We cannot part now—we are married." Must they, then, continue in legal adultery, and under the condemnation of Jesus Christ, because they have entered that life? A great deal of teaching is now needed on this subject, as the chief business of our courts seems to be divorcing people; and turn which way you will, you are confronted by divorced and re-married parties. It has become absolutely confusing. Are we to obey Jesus Christ? or may his rulings be set aside, if our supposed "need" be very great?

AUGUSTA BROOKS.

So. Yarmouth, Mass.

From the way in which our correspondent concludes her note, and an article from her pen on "Marriage" which we find in the Free Methodist of August 24., we judge that our views of the matter in question are substantially the same as her own. Our answer to her interrogatories as numbered would therefore be in brief this:

1. Matt. xix. 9, "Whosoever shall put away his wife except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery, and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery." See also Mark v. 32. "This," says Albert Barnes, "is now the law of God. This was the original institution. This is the only law that is productive of peace and good morals, and the due respect of a wife, and the good of children. Nor has any man, or set of men, a right to interfere, and declare that divorces may be granted for any other cause. Whosoever, therefore, are divorced for any cause except the single one of adultery, if they marry again, are, according to the Scriptures, living in adultery. No earthly laws can trample down the laws of God, or make that right which he has solemnly pronounced wrong." That circumstances, such as brutal treatment, habitual drunkenness, long-continued neglect to provide the comforts of life, etc., may justify separation (for a season at least), we do not question; but only one cause for actual divorce is recognized by the Christian's lawgiver. It became after marriage one becomes a Christian the unbeliever chooses to separate, the Holy Spirit through the apostle Paul says, let him or her do so; but that does not dissolve the marriage relation between them and give the believer license to marry. See 1 Cor. vii. 10–17. The Rev. John Wesley had a trial of this kind, being unhappy in his marriage relations. Of her he says of his wife: "She repeatedly left his house, but was brought back by his earnest importunities. At last she seized on part of his Journals and many other papers, which she would never afterwards restore; and taking her final departure, left word that she never intended to return. Who then can wonder, that after all this he should only observe, Non eam relinqui, non dimitto, non revocabo. 'I have not left her; I have not put her away; I will not call her back.'" Mr. Wesley must have lived many years after this "final departure," having outlived his wife a few years; but he remained unmarried.

2. 1 Cor. v. 13 is applicable here: "Them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among you that wicked person." "Though the church has nothing to do with 'those without,' it must endeavor to keep clear of the guilt and reproach of those within" (Henry.) "The evils proceeding from the multiplication of divorces and from the marriage of persons divorced for some other reason than the one specified by our Lord, are so alarming that we hesitate not to say, that both churches and ministers should clear themselves of all responsibility in the matter. The churches should discipline members who become divorced for any other than the scriptural reason, members who marry with persons so divorced, and ministers who marry them" (Williams.)

3. 1 Cor. v. 11 answers this: "But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat." If any man "called a brother" in Christ is known to belong to any one of the half dozen classes of sinners here named, we are not to associate with him in such a social way as to give the impression that we connive at his guilt or fellowship his course.

4. Their duty is to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance," which so far as we can see must include proper arrangements for separation and continence ever afterwards. "Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" "Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God."—Rom. vi. 1, 2, 13.

"The freedom of some," says the Rev. Wm. Jay, "is the freedom of the herd of swine, that ran violently down a steep place into the sea and were drowned." "There is a God of equity sitting in the heavens, and this thing is going to become straight by and by" (Moody.) But as God has put into our hands the criterion by which we are to be judged in the last day (John xii. 48), we had better not wait till then to be straightened out. Better judge ourselves now and come into harmony with the divine will, even if it should cost a "right hand" or a "right eye," than be condemned with the world at last.

The great grave in which the remains of the four hundred victims of the terrible fire at the Ring Theatre at Vienna were buried was visited by fully half a million persons on All Saint's Day. A tragic affair occurred in connection with this event. A German lady, Frau Patter, of Gotha, whose son perished in the flames on the terrible night of the 8th of December last, and who had since lost her only daughter, came to Vienna, and was among the crowd who visited the tomb of the Ring Theatre victims. On returning to her hotel in the afternoon, overcome with grief and despair, she shot herself. Her remains were interred in the common grave containing the ashes of her son.

Communications.

Report of Stockholders Meeting.

PLYMOUTH, Ind., Nov. 11, 1882.

The Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association met as per stated time of Constitution. Brother D. T. Halstead was chosen Chairman, and Brother J. L. Wince Secretary. On call of stock it was found that a majority was represented.

Reports were then made by Treasurer, Secretary, and Business Agent, showing as follows: Oo1and Nov. 11, 1881, $459.71, received to this date $2900.00, total receipts $3365.71. Expenses $3273.27. Balance in treasury $92.44.

The meeting proceeded to elect a new Board of Directors, resulting in the election of R. S. Dwiggins, W. Tuttle, I. G. Roberts, Robt. Railsback and E. K. Barnhill. A resolution of thanks was voted Brethren Chaplin and Underwood for their able and satisfactory management of THE RESTITUTION and business of the Association; also a resolution to use our best efforts to place THE RESTITUTION on a self-sustaining basis.

The Board of Directors organized by electing R. S. Dwiggins President, W. Tuttle Vice President, E. K. Barnhill Secretary, A. R. Underwood Treasurer. Brother S. A. Chaplin was retained as Editor for another year, and the contract for printing and business management of THE RESTITUTION was re-let to Brother Underwood.

E. K. BARNHILL, Sec'y.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $360. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

R. S. DWIGGINS, President.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12, 1882.

To whom it may concern wadeth greeting:

Brother Samuel Wilson in his letter in your paper of Nov. 8. has touched a sympathetic chord relating to the churches East. We have long felt that we were not doing our whole duty as believers of the gospel of the kingdom of God. Question, What more is to be done, and can we and will we do it. That our work is not yet done is clear, and that but little time remains to finish the work the Master has put into our hands is also clear; and that we need order, system and arrangement, and above all union and a firm belief in the fundamental doctrines of the gospel of the kingdom of God. As we now are, broken, scattered and disjointed, we are a weak people.

What can be done? In union there is strength. Our first choice would be a Conference of the Churches, to meet at a central point and take action as to the best method of doing the most good. If this is not thought feasible at this season of the year, let each church appoint one or more delegates, empowered to act for the body, to meet at a definite time, to arrange and set in order the work to be done, and advise the best means for its accomplishment.

The field is large and already ripe for the harvest. Just think of Washington, the capital of our nation, with 200,000 people, and not a believer of the gospel of the kingdom of God except the old pilgrim and his two daughters. Then again, look at Baltimore, where there ought to be hundreds, united and strong, doing battle for the Lord of hosts—a few fragments, broken, scattered and peeled, each contending for his fun, and some very weak fams at that.

We cry out, Who will come over to our Macedonia and help us? If what we have written does not meet with favor, please give us something better. Let our words and actions be accompanied with sound judgment, strong faith, and a fixed purpose to do our whole duty acceptably to our Master, who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light.

Dearly beloved, the work before us calls for united, energetic action. Our Master is soon coming, and will require a strict account of our stewardship. It will be blessed if we are found hard at work with the harness on, and are able to say, Here Lord is thy pound; it hath gained ten pounds. Well done. This answer will outweigh worlds. Let us strive for it, and have administered to us an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

Yours in the blessed hope.

NEWELL BOND.

LEAVE ALL!

"Be ye ready." Besides cautioning his disciples against indulgence of appetite, our Lord warns us to take heed that cares or anxieties of this life do not rob us of our uninterrupted readiness for the Master's call, which may be heard when it would seem to our supposition the most improbable moment. It may be while engaged in a business transaction, and this perhaps with a man whose craft and dishonesty tries your patience to the utmost of endurance; or it may be while travelling on foot or in train; or in the stillness of night, or while the tempest is raging: it may be at this or that moment; but come when or where it may, let us be ready, no matter in whatever situation or circumstance we may be found ready at the moment to leave all, looking not back! Seldom are three-score years and ten reached, or nearly reached, by any man or woman without vicissitudes, or at least memorable changes, having been experienced. Perhaps for several scores of years has there been an almost unbroken struggle with adversity. Oh! how many, many times would deliverance have been hailed during that protracted portion of life; but deliverance was deferred. Then, it may have been, a change came; matters of life were less arduous; and here was a test—is the longing for the Lord's appearing as it was when the hardness of obtaining food and raiment pressed so severely, and integrity was so sharply and so severely tried? Oh! to be ready in each and every change and condition of life, in the right state of mind. No matter how affairs may be, let us be at any moment ready, yea, joyful to leave all without a look behind.

H. HYDES.

"A Free Table"—Is It a New Departure.

The letter of your correspondent, J. F. Belleby, of Baltimore, urging a "free table" and partaking of "the common hospitality of Christ," in the communion of the Lord's supper, contains a bold and startling proposition. In view of such an invitation to the disciples, to forsake "the straight and narrow way" for the beaten and "broad way which leads to destruction," may we not pause in alarm and ask "what next?"

In the humble judgment of the writer, now an aged disciple of more than three score years and ten, this remedy to prevent or cure "the division that afflicts the church," would be far worse than the disease. Divisions are not the most to be dreaded evils that can "afflict the church." To forsake and abandon the Word as our only guide is a far more serious calamity—a far greater sin. The advocate of "a free table," etc., would, perhaps, secure a peaceful communion, but it would be at the expense of purity, according to the divine word, which enacts the law that we must be "first pure, then peaceable," etc. Not such a "free table," who will "examine himself" and "so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup." True, divisions are bad things in themselves, yet they become, in God's wisdom, the means of purging and purifying the otherwise corrupt body, according to Paul who writes "There must be heresies (sects, divisions) among you, that they that are approved among you may be manifest."

But where let me ask your intelligent correspondent, does he find authority for converting the Lord's table into a free table? Have we any right to make or to prescribe rules of admission or exclusion from his table? Our wisdom is to conform to his rules already for our admonition. Does Paul recommend a "free table" and a "common hospitality" to all in saying, 1 Cor. x. 21, "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils. Ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and of the table of devils." What concord hath Christ with Belial? What part hath he that believeth with an infidel.

JOHN MARK.

Selections.

To the Honor of His Name, Words spoken at the "Breaking of Bread."

The only symbolic ordinances appointed by the Lord, are Baptism and the Lord's Supper, or, as we say, the "breaking of bread." Both are very simple and significant.

It is about the latter I wish now to speak—afraid that, notwithstanding our regular observance of it each first day of the week, its meaning and importance are not always realized.

On the object, significance, and suggestiveness of this ordinance. I do not intend, at present, to discourse particularly. I would rather fix attention on what is its major idea—THE HONOR OF THE LORD. "Do this," said He, "in remembrance of Me." Other purposes are served by it; hallowed associations and considerations grow out of it, but these are accidental and subordinate to its grand purpose—the remembrance of Him. Our chief thought when observing it should be the honor of His name. And when the love of Him is uppermost in our minds, intelligently guided, the honoring of Him will be paramount in our thoughts while observing His ordinance.

And, yet, is not this ordinance more thought of, and spoken of, as a matter of "fellowship"—as an expression of fraternity, an acknowledging of each other as children of God—than as a celebration of the memory of our Lord and Savior, "whom having not seen we love?"

Fellowship—community of thought, feeling, and purpose, these, necessarily, are among those who intelligently unite in this commemorative act. All who thus join in it, profess by their action to be one in celebrating the memory—in honoring the name of the One Lord. They all join in thanksgiving for the loaf and the cup. Hence the Apostle Paul—appealing to the consciences of the saints at Corinth—says: "The cup of blessing (or thanksgiving) which we bless, is it not a communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not a communion of the body of Christ? seeing that we, who are many, are one bread, one body, for we all partake of the one bread." (1 Cor. x. 16, 17. R. V.) But while this is so, the ordinance may be observed in isolation of thought from all others except HIM for whom we do this in remembrance. Yea, indeed, it seems to me that the highest honor is given to Him, and the greatest good received by ourselves when, in doing this, the thought of Him and the love of Him spans the firmament of our whole mind and hearts. And if each individual partaker has thus his thoughts concentrated on his Lord and Savior, will there not be a real communion—a genuine fellowship between each and all of them?

The apostle, doubtless, so viewed the matter—so looked at the proper observance of this ordinance as the common, united action of individuals, each of whom acted for himself, and was, personally, accountable for his own action in the matter, and not for those who joined him in observing the memorial rite, when he wrote: "Whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup: for he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh judgment to himself."

Yes, we have come, each one for himself, to eat of this bread and to drink of the cup, in remembrance of Him. We gladly do so for the great love wherewith He loved us. He has washed us from our sins in His own blood, and has made us kings and priests unto God, and His Father.

Surely this is a most fit meeting-place for all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth; and who desire to honor Him by doing this for a remembrance of Him.

Why should we come between this memorial rite and any one who gratefully seeks to observe it—who, though in darkness on many things which we see clearly, yet is in no doubt of the truth, that Jesus the Son of God loved him, and gave himself for him; and who is anxiously desiring to honor his Lord in all things?

Let us, at least, now gather our thoughts around Him whom we have met to honor—meditating on His gracious words, His generous deeds; His fidelity, patience, meekness, gentleness, His victory over death, His presence as our High Priest in the heavens, and His coming again to receive us unto Himself, that we may be with Him for evermore.

May our fellowship be, indeed, with Him; and the mind that was in Him be also in each of us! May the memory of his love for us lead us to love each other with pure hearts, fervently, till we are like Him as He is!—H. Leing, in the Messenger.

Science and Revelation.

Much has been said of late years about the conflict between Science and Revelation, whereas there is no conflict between them. The contest is between the conclusions of scientists and the interpretation of Revelation. Both of these are often erroneous, and not seldom opposed, and the recollection of past discomfiture should beget a becoming modesty in the champions of science, as well as the defenders of Revelation.

Not only is the world indebted to Science for many valuable discoveries, but also the Church for the correct interpretation of certain passages of Scriptures. While frankly acknowledging their obligation to Science, Christians need never fear that it will succeed in destroying the Bible or in disproving its claims to a Divine Revelation. Future discoveries of Science may compel the modification of present theories about the physical universe, they can never shake the blessed facts of Atonement and Redemption by and through Jesus Christ. Any discovery of Science, demonstrated to be true, will be found to harmonize with Revelation, however it may conflict with popular interpretation of Scripture. And yet timid Christians are sometimes much disturbed by the startling claims of noisy scientists. Notably this has been the case in regard to the theory of Evolution. This theory has never been universally accepted by scientists, and as long as it is a disputed theory Christians are not called upon to accept it as true. Let the scientists settle the question, and whatever the issue the Word of God will be sound and unbroken. No claim of the present time seems so directly to contradict Scripture as did the Copernican theory, and yet every believer in Inspiration accepts it to-day. Such will be the case in the future of all claims of Science made good. But it does not appear that the claims of the Evolution theory are about to be established. Sir John Lubbock in his recent book on "Ants, Bees, and Wasps" seems to have hit the theory a pretty hard blow.—Ky. Church Chronicle.

Two storms raged here and over a large portion of this continent yesterday. One was patent to everybody; a cold, driving rain-storm—in some places a snow-storm—which made street travel difficult and disagreeable. The other storm was invisible in its effects except in the telegraph offices. But it was the more widespread and remarkable of the two. It crippled the Atlantic cable for hours, and interrupted telegraphic communication all over this country and Europe. It was the greatest electric storm that has swept the globe in recent years, exceeding in the intensity of its effects, even the great electric storm of last April, which, it will be remembered, was accompanied by magnificent displays of the Aurora Borealis. The earth yesterday was like an enormous electric magnet in full activity. Whether there was any connection between the general atmospheric disturbances and the electric storm we cannot say, but scientific men have satisfied themselves that such electric disturbances as those witnessed yesterday have their origin in the sun. At the time of the April electric storm the sun was greatly agitated, and the effects of the disturbance in the solar orb were visible from the earth. Vast chasms opened in the surface of the sun, and one in particular was so immense that it was visible without telescopic aid as a black spot on the shining disk of the sun. In this great spot or chasm tremendous disturbing forces were seen to be at work. Precisely the same conditions now prevail in the solar orb. It is giving evidence of great agitation, and for a few days past a spot fully equal to the largest spot seen in April has been visible upon its surface, evidently undergoing great changes. A drawing of this spot, made on Thursday, shows that it is even more complicated in its details than the great spot of April. It may seem very wonderful that the effect of electrical or other disturbances in the sun should be felt upon the earth when the two bodies are separated by a distance of some 92,000,000 miles. But this appears less surprising when we reflect that the sun is removed from us only a little over 100 times his own diameter. Place an orange, three inches in diameter, 25 or 26 feet from the eye, and you have a graphic illustration of the distance of the sun, as compared with its size. Imagine that the orange in the centre around which a floating speck, which would represent the earth, is revolving, subject to the controlling power of its attraction and warmed and lighted by its rays, and there is no difficulty in supposing that intense electrical activity in the orange would be felt by the speck revolving around it. Every year additional evidence is obtained of the complete dependence of the earth upon the sun in ways which were undreamt of in the past.—N. Y. Sun, Nov. 18.

News Items.

PARIS, November 20. — Several Legitimists in the Department of Vendee have received threatening letters from Anarchists. A dynamite bomb has been thrown into the house of one of the legitimists. Two more persons accused of being Anarchists were arrested at Lyons yesterday. Two men were also arrested yesterday at St. Etienne on a similar charge.

November 22.—Thirty persons were drowned and a cargo of Black Sea grain lost by the foundering of an English steamer on the coast of France yesterday.

Thurlow Weed, the famous and aged journalist and politician of New York, died this morning, aged 85. He was one of the most remarkable men of his time.

EGYPT.

Suleiman Daoud was examined before the Prosecution Committee at Cairo, November 15. He admitted that he gave the order to fire Alexandria, but alleged that he had received peremptory orders to do so from Arabi Pasha.

Baker Pasha's reorganization of the Egyptian army has so far progressed, that 1,000 men have already been sent to Soudan. He finds it difficult to get troops to go, and desertions are numerous.

FRANCE.

A naval expedition is fitting out at Toulon for Madagascar, which France is determined to annex to her dominions.

In consequence of the treaty concluded by M. de Brazza, the French gunboat Sagittaire will shortly be dispatched with orders to proceed up the Congo River.

The Emperor and Empress of Russia are recovering from their fear of the Nihilists. They were heroic enough to drive through the streets of St. Petersburg last Sunday in a open sledge and review a regiment of guards.

The auroral display of Friday night was almost unexampled in magnificence at many points west. At Omaha and Cayenne "the illumination rendered the night almost as bright as day." At St. Paul, the sky was of blood red color, the display being grand and fearful. The aurora was also brilliant throughout the Pacific Coast region from San Diego, California, northward.

A Jerusalem correspondent writes that viticulture is from year to year gaining ground in southern Palestine. Near Bethlehem, especially, large tracts which some years ago were allowed to lie waste have been laid out as vineyards; and in Jerusalem there is a European vintner, an old resident, whose frequent boast it is that the wines he makes appear at the table of the German Emperor.

Books and Periodicals.

The November number of Wilford's Microcosm has come to hand. Judging from the only two numbers that we have seen, it is a journal well calculated to interest thinking minds—even though not agreeing with some of its articles. Hull & Co. Publishers 23 Park Row, New York. $1.00 a year.

The Phrenological Journal for December is before us. This well known periodical still amply sustains its well-earned reputation as an instructor in whatever pertains to the best interests of humanity. An illustrated article on Racial Characteristics as exhibited in the Mongolian type of the human species is one of value. Fowler & Wells; 753 Broadway, New York. $2.00 a year.

"A Collection of Thoughts; or a Key to Scripture," is a volume of nearly 500 pages which we have not as yet found time to read. From a glance at some pages we are disposed to think we shall be pleased with many things in this volume. More hereafter.

Our Rest for November is a good number. An article on the Great Pyramid by the editor will explain many features of this wonder of the world to all who have not had the advantages of reading books on this monument of antiquity. Most of our readers are well acquainted with this serial.

FREE-WILL OFFERING.

| | |
|---|---|
| Mrs C Palmer | $ 1 00 |
| Mrs R S Dwiggins | 2.00 |
| H F Gallagher | 5.00 |
| Mrs Margaret Woodward | 5.00 |
| S A Chaplin | 1.00 |

Poetry.

THE MASTER'S TOUCH.

HORATIUS BONAR.

In the still air the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble beauty lies unseen:
To make the music and the beauty, needs
The master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.

Great Master, touch us with thy skilful hand:
Let not the music that is in us die:
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us: nor let
Hidden and lost, thy form within us lie.

Spare not the stroke! Do with us as thou will:
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred:
Complete thy purpose that we may become
The perfect image, thou our God and Lord!

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 7.

Prelude—Ottoman or Turkish dynasty, what is it?—Its origin—Before the Crusades—During the Crusades—From the Crusades to the fall of the Greek empire—From the fall of the Greek empire to the hour of God's judgment—Area of the Mohammedan empire.

Prelude.—Wild beasts as symbols. In John's vision of Satan's triple empire, Rev. xvi. 13, the three elements of which it is composed, are 1. The dragon; 2. The wild beast; 3. The false prophet—three kingdoms in one empire. Satan's empire is, therefore, a trinity of empires. Why should the Deity use a wild beast to symbolize a body of civil rulers? Why not use a literal term? God has his reasons, which to us, seem wise. 1. Symbolic language is more general and comprehensive. 2. Literal spoken languages are constantly changing; symbols are the same in all ages. Daniel's metallic image and his four wild beasts and the stone convey the same thoughts now as when seen by Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel. 3. Symbolic language is vastly more comprehensive. It is miniature history. In the life of a wild beast, extending over a few years, you have the life of an empire reaching through as many centuries. 4. The acts of civil empires among men and races, resemble those of wild beasts within the circles of their dominion.

How do we distinguish between the life of a beast and his dominion? ("As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away, yet their lives were prolonged for a season and a time." Dan. vii. 12.) In the divine mind there is a distinction. What is it? On a certain territory, distinctly defined, and separated by legal boundaries from all other lands, is erected a government administered by certain rulers. Within this territory that nation lives, moves, and has its being; this is the boundary of their habitation. Acts xvii. 26. All the power exercised beyond these God-fixed limits, is their dominion. Universal empires extend their dominion over the world; this is taken away. Three of those empires had their dominion absorbed by the fourth monarchy. The fourth monarchy wears the universal diadem till he comes whose right it is. Rev. xix. Hence the fourth monarchy is an element in Satan's triple empire, and his recruiting officer, and adjutant general is an unclean spirit like a frog. It will be seen (Rev. xvi. 13) that the frog-power is not limited to France, nor to Egypt, nor to Greece; neither are these wicked spirits, like frogs confined to any one country, but like those noisy little creatures, live in every land. Cosmopolites, citizens of the world, sent out on a special mission, it is true, yet, at home everywhere, that they may exercise a controlling influence over all classes. (More of the frog power in its proper place).

Ottoman or Turkish dynasty.—What is it? Whence came it? Before answering these questions, it is well to notice again a remarkable distinction between the Arabian and Turkish dynasties. The Arabian dynasty was composed of two elements, civil and ecclesiastical, the ecclesiastical predominating, the throne behind the altar. Mahomet was first a priest; then a royal high priest. Such were his Caliphs (successors) till subjugated by the Turks. Under the Turkish or Ottoman dynasty, there was, at first, a partial separation of church and state; the Sultan, after many years, assuming pontifical powers. During every period, however, the throne (civil power) has ruled the altar. Since the Mohammedan is a religious empire, its present dynasty is unnatural and the tendency is to the restitution of the ancient order. Hence every false prophet among the Mohammedans aims at the subversion of the Ottoman dynasty, and the restitution of the supremacy of the Arabian [illegible]. This will appear as we [illegible] in the Ottoman history.

These remarks will, perhaps, answer the first question.

2. Origin of the Turkish dynasty.—A Turki a name world-wide and proverbial. It is a family name, a name appropriated to a people once called Scythian shepherds; having their origin at the foot of Altoun Tag, the Golden Mountain, at the summit of Central Asia. Leaving the body of those wanderers, let us trace one family, and confine our remarks to one member of that single family—Sejuk, a native of Turkestan. He was a horseman from early youth, as were all his people. Who could have predicted that the grand son of this wild Scythian, would turn Mohammedan and become the proud Sultan of that mighty empire?

Sejuk, for a daring came, fled from his country with his followers, and they became disciples of the Koran. Conquering Eastern Persia, the Turkmans made choice, by lot, of Togrul Beg, the son of Michael, the son of Sejuk, for their king. Sejuk with Michael his Son and took the care of his grandson Togrul Beg, who, at the age of 15 years (Sejuk being 107 years old) was declared Sultan, in the royal city of Nishabur. Persia was soon conquered. Media soon fell before the Sultan's arms. Togrul's conquests extended to the Euphrates where he met the Greek forces, and demanded tribute of the emperor of Constantinople. The Turkish nation then embraced Mohammedanism. Togrul Beg was a zealous follower of the Koran. So were his nephew Alp Arslan, and his nephew's son Malek Shah. He offered five prayers per day and fasted two days in each week, and built a mosch in every city before he erected any palace. He had also great reverence for Mohammed's successors, the Caliphs.

Cayem, the Caliph of Bagdad, named Togrul Beg the Seljukian Sultan, his temporal vicegerent over the Mohammedan world; took his sister (Togrul's) into his harem, and finally gave his daughter in marriage to the Sultan. Thus were the two dynasties united. The Sultan was the head of the civil power, while the Caliph exercised supreme power in the church.

2. Second Sultan.—Togrul was succeeded by his nephew Alp Arslan, whose name was pronounced in the Moslem prayer after their Caliph's in all the mosques. Alp Arslan crossed the Euphrates and attacked the Greek empire with myriads of Turkish horse, extending their line 600 miles from Taurus to Arzeroum, sacrificing 150,000 Christians to the Arabian prophet.

Passing south and west, the Sultan with his son Melek, carried the holy war toward Egypt and Constantinople. After three campaigns the Turks were driven by the Greek emperor across the Euphrates. Alp Arslan, in person, with 40,000 horse drove the enemy before him, though numbering 600,000 men, defeated the Greeks and made their emperor his prisoner. Western Asia submitted to the Sultan; 1200 princes or the sons of princes, waited before his throne, and 200,000 soldiers marched under his banners.

He then turned his arms against his own country (Turkestan) and fell by the hand of an assassin. On the tomb of the Seljukian dynasty are these words, "O ye who have seen the glory of Alp Arslan exalted to the heavens, repair to Maru, and you will behold it buried in the dust."

3. Third Sultan.—Malek Shah.—The eldest son of Alp Arslan (Malek Shah) succeeded him. He was, by the Caliph, made the commander of the faithful; he being the first prince, not Arabian, that had the honor of that title. Malek Shah was the greatest monarch of his age. The Seljukian dynasty (Turkish dynasty of the Arabian empire) spread over more of the world's surface than the empires of Cyrus, and of the Caliphs in the zenith of their glory. His dominion extended east to China, north to Stumerkand, west to Georgia and the vicinity of Constantinople, and south over Syria and Jerusalem, and included the spicy groves of Arabia Felix. His immense army of horse, (these employed in hunting being 47,000) were in constant motion, visiting in person, twelve times, all parts of his empire. Colleges, mosques, and other institutions sprang up over all his dominions.

The unity of the empire ceased with Malek Shah, he dividing it among his four sons—forming as many Sultanies. Four Sultanies of the Turkish dynasty. These divisions were located as follows: 1. Persia, located east of the Euphrates. 2. Kerman, one of the eastern provinces of Persia. 3. Syria. 4. Roum, or New Rome, situated in Asia Minor. It had been the Greek empire of Asia, extending from the Euphrates to Constantinople and from the Black Sea to Syria. This was in its location, one of the most dangerous to the existence of the Greek empire in Europe. There were other Sultanies of later date, but these four were the most noted. Two were east of the Euphrates and two west of it.

The river itself formed the axis of the Turkish empire during many centuries, though it originated east of the Euphrates, and, during the Roman greatness was confined principally to that side of the river, and it was also driven across the Euphrates during the Tartar invasion, and also by the Crusaders. From the origin of the Turkish dynasty it was under the Seljukian Turks from A. D. 1035 to combination of all the fragments of the Seljukian sultanies under Othman, or Othman the Ozmanian Turk A. D. 1299. The Turkish dynasty of the Mohammedan empire, has, therefore, had two reigning families, the Seljukian and Ozmanian Turks, the latter of which still reigns over the Turkish empire. The second tribal family (Ozmanian) dates back to Othman the father of the Ottoman empire, or the present dynasty of the Mohammedan empire.

Our remarks on the rise and history of the Mohammedan empire have been protracted for several reasons: 1. We aimed to identify that empire with the false prophet of Rev. xvi. 13, where it is said, "I saw three unclean spirits (come) out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet." It is conceded that the dragon and the beast symbolize two empires under the control of religions hostile to pure Christianity; viz. Paganism and Apostate Christianity. These empires gather against Christ, two classes of enemies only. But Satan's empire is a triple empire, containing three classes of enemies. A single glance at the Eastern world will disclose the fact that 180,000,000 of Christ's enemies marshal under another banner, that of a false prophet, which can be no other than Mohammed. Since he lives and commands through the Koran—he being dead yet speaketh.

To demonstrate this identity we have followed the history through its Arabian dynasty, into its Turkish dynasty, and have shown to what manner the second dynasty succeeded the first; that the power of the Caliphate still exists, that the Altar still rules the throne. In Satan's grand army or war-empire are three divisions including the forces of the whole world, Papan, Apostate Christian, and Mohammedan. We are now prepared to introduce some thoughts relative to Egypt—its past, its present, and its future.

J. P. WESTHEE.

Selection.

SOMETHING OF A SERMON.

"What must we do to be saved?" is the text which Mr. Ingersoll chose for his lecture last Friday evening, (the 10th). This is the question that was anciently propounded to Peter on the Day of Pentecost by the convicted multitudes, who by miraculous means were persuaded that they had rejected and crucified their promised Messiah and "King of Israel." Another miracle was afterwards wrought in Philippi, the "chief city of that part of Macedonia," in the terrible slanking of the old prison where Paul and Silas were closely confined so that "the prison's doors were opened and everyone's bands were loosed." The jailor sprang to the inner prison, and trembling fell down before Paul and Silas, and said "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" Their answer was, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Peter's answer was similar, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," and as many as received his word gladly were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them, 3,000 souls, "and the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Just before his ascension, he commanded his apostles to go and preach the gospel to every creature, adding, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," etc. Notice, Christ and his apostles did not say believe the gospel and be baptized and you are saved, but shall be saved every time. Thus the faith and repentance and obedience is one thing and first in order, and the salvation is something else and afterwards. Mr. Ingersoll and a certain class of modern Evangelists are agreed that salvation is now, in the present life, although they differ in respect to what it is, whereas the Bible teaches that it is yet future to all who shall "endure to the end." "He that endureth unto the end the same shall be saved" (Matth. 24). The best Christians are only "heirs of salvation" in this life (Heb. 1 14). The heirship always precedes the inheritance—that is beyond this life. Paul writes to the Romans, "For now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. (Rom. 13 11). Paul and his brethren had no idea that they were already saved, and yet they were probably as good Christians as we have now. Paul declares in the 1st Chapter, 16th verse, "I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also, for I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" it. If the gospel is preached and believed, it thereby becomes the power of God unto a future salvation. Peter (1st chap. 5th verse) declares to his brethren, "who are kept by the power of God (the Gospel) unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." Salvation will not be revealed till the last time. Salvation is the Christian's hope, therefore future. Paul writes to another church, "putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation, for God hath not appointed us to wrath but to obtain salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Thess. 5. 6). It is impossible for us to hope for salvation or anything else after we have received it. But you ask, does not an Apostle say, "ye are saved?" Yes, but the present tense is often used for the future in all books. Read that or any similar passage along with Romans, 8th chapter, 24th verse: "For we are saved by hope." For what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for; but if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." We are shown in the previous verse when the promised salvation will be received and what it will consist of. "We are waiting for the redemption of the body." Hence Christ is called "the Savior of the body." The redemption of the body, or its salvation can only be effected by a resurrection or change to an immortal life. But some one may say, "I supposed it was the salvation of an immaterial, immortal soul that needed to be saved from a hell of eternal misery to commence at the death of the body. The Bible ignores any immortal soul, or endless misery of it. It does speak of saving the life, but it is the life of a resurrected, immortal body. "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your soul." (1 Peter, 1 9.) This salvation is not till the end of faith. Compare this with Mark 8 35, "For whosoever will save his life (this life) shall lose it (the future life,) but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel, the same shall save it," (in the future.) Here the same original word (Peeuche) is translated life that is rendered soul in the other passage, and should be rendered life in both and by the new version is rendered life in the next verse, "What shall it profit a man to gain the whole and lose his own soul," forfeit his own life, the eternal life. Paul writes, (Heb. 10:39,) "We are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them who believe in the saving of the soul." Here the same word, translated soul is translated life in the words of Jesus just quoted. Hence salvation rescues from perdition or eternal death and gives the eternal life of a spiritual, incorruptible body at the resurrection of the just. "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." "So Christ was offered to bear the sins of the many, and unto them that look for him, he will appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Salvation then cannot be obtained until "the second appearing of Christ." Then he will save by calling from their graves, all who have done good unto a resurrection of live eternal, all "who have done evil to a resurrection of condemnation." No eternal life or condemnation till the resurrection. "Many of them who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life," (Dan. 12 2.) No everlasting life till, by the trump of God and voice of the Archangel, the dead Saints shall be aroused from their death sleep to everlasting life. The Bible rebukes the theory of eternal sin and suffering, but warns against losing eternal life, and being involved in the "second death," which will be eternal, (see Rev. 22-5). How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" "At first spoken by the Lord," "confirmed unto us by them who heard him," "God bearing witness both by signs and wonders."—E. Hoyt, in Evening Leader, Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE SABBATH DAY.

Editor Ontario:

DEAR SIR:—With your kind permission I would like to reply to "Truth Seeker's" letter in your issue of the 9th inst. In the first place, he wants proof that the Sabbath was given more than two thousand years before the Jews came into existence. In Gen. ii. 2 3, we have the account of the making of the Sabbath. For whom was it made? Christ answers, "for man." And it for the Jew only, why was it made so many years before their time, and why did not Christ say the Sabbath was made for the Jew? It was evidently made for those who were living on the earth at the time, and their descendants. The book of Genesis being a record of events which were all in the past when it was written, and the parties being all dead to whom it related, it was not necessary that it should contain a code of laws. But it is noticible that as soon as the record reaches the time of the author—Moses—both laws are immediately written out in full, the moral law first and the law of ordinances immediately after. "T. S." says: The fact is that Christians were never required to keep any one day holy more than another. "And they returned and prepared spices and ointments, and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment," Luke xxiii. 56. Here is a record of the followers of Christ—Christians—keeping the Sabbath. Paul in Acts xxv. 2, says he kept the law, and as the Sabbath is a part of the law he must have kept the Sabbath.

"T. S." says the "law was never given to Christians by Christ." Christ is not a law-giver and never claimed that honor. He repeatedly said that he came not down from heaven to do his own will, but the will of the Father—John v. 30 and vi. 38. Christ taught love to our neighbor, which is to be found in the last six of the moral precepts, which "T. S." calls one of Christ's commandments. Christ also taught love to God, which embraces the first four, the Sabbath being one of them. He quotes Gal. iii. 24 to prove the law is done away with. The law shows us we are sinners and need pardon through Christ, "but after faith is come" we are no longer under the law, but keeping it. In Rom. x. 4 Paul says that Christ is the end of the law for righteousness. This cannot mean that Christ put an end to that law, as end does not always mean termination. It is frequently used as meaning the object of a thing, as James v. 11, "Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord." This certainly does not mean that the Lord died in the days of Job. James means to say: "Ye have seen the object of the Lord in the afflictions he brought on Job." See also 1 Tim. i. 5. God rested from his labors on the seventh day, blessed and sanctified it, placed it in the moral law, which was kept by patriarchs and prophets for thousands of years. If the first day of the week is to become the Sabbath in its stead, such a change would be very important, and should be plainly stated in the Scriptures.

SABBATH KEEPER.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

Editor Ontario:

DEAR SIR:—In your issue of the 14th inst. there appears a reply to my letter on the above subject, in the Ontario of March 9th. In the first place, "Sabbath Keeper" reiterates that the Sabbath was given more than two thousand years before the Jews came into existence, but fails to show where we are to find it stated in the Bible that it was given to any one at that time, or any other time, until it was given to the Jews. I now ask him again for the chapter and verse where it is so stated. I admitted in my last letter all that he proves when he quotes Gen. ii, 2, 3, viz: That "God sanctified the seventh day, because that in it He rested from all His work." But it is nowhere stated that Adam was required to observe it. I think "S. K." will find that the word "Sabbath" is never mentioned in the Bible until we come to where it is stated that it was given to the Jews. "S. K." quotes where Christ says the "Sabbath was made for man," as proof that it was generally observed before the exodus. This may be satisfactory proof for "Sabbath Keeper," but I hardly think it will be for your readers. It appears to me that if the Sabbath had been made for one "man" or one nation, it would have been made for "man" all the same, and the quotation will apply in that sense just as well as to apply it to mankind universally. Consequently, if it was made for the Jews only, it was made for "man." Christ wished it to be understood that, instead of man being made for the Sabbath, the Sabbath was made for man. It is distinctly stated in Exodus xxxi, 17, that the Sabbath was to be a sign between God and the Israelites. But there is nothing said about the other nations standing in the same relation to God. It can be shown that the Gentiles were not even offered salvation until the Jews rejected Christ and the Apostles. See Acts xiii, 46. Paul says they "had no hope, and were without God in the world," Eph. ii, 12; Rom. ix, 55. When I stated that Christians were never required to keep any one day holy more than another, I wished it to be understood that I meant Christians as a church after Christ's resurrection and before Pentecost. Any one reading my letter could see that I referred to the fact of their "meeting together on the first day of the week to break bread, etc.," which of course was not done until after the crucifixion of Christ. I believe that the law was in force until the crucifixion of Christ, and that Christ sanctioned the keeping of it, but that it ended with Him, as Paul says: It was "nailed to the cross" (Col. ii, 14), and that Christ was the end of the law of righteousness." Rom. x, 4. I will now not only prove that the law was not binding on the Christian Church, but I will also show that the law referred to by Paul included the Ten Commandments, and consequently the seventh day Sabbath. That the Ten Commandments were included in Paul's discussion of the law will be seen by referring to Rom. ii, 21, 22, and Rom. vii, 3-7. I think I have now identified the law, that Paul was discussing to be that containing the Ten Commandments, including the Sabbath. I will now show conclusively that it was not binding on the Christian Church, nor Gentiles. The Gentiles "had not the law." Rom. ii, 4. "Until the law, sin was in the world." Rom. v. 13. This shows that there was a time when the law was not in the world. Paul says plainly in continuing his subject, that we (himself and other Christians) are not under the law." Rom. vi. 14. "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me (Paul) free from the law of sin and death." Rom. viii, 2. "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day . . . . or of the Sabbath." Col. ii. 19. The word "days" following the word "Sabbath" in this passage, is in italics, to show that it is not in the original. I therefore, end the quotation with the word "Sabbath." This passage shows that the keeping of the holy days and the Sabbath was included in Paul's discussion, and consequently was part of that which was "nailed to the cross." No doubt the law was a very good "school-master," but on account of the "weakness of the flesh" no one could get eternal life through it, as they could not keep it. We are now "justified by faith," Rom. v. 1, for "by the deeds of the law no flesh shall be justified." Rom. iii. 19, 20 and 28. "S. K." quotes Acts xxv. 8 to prove that Paul kept the law, but I fail to see it so stated there. He admits in effect here, that to prove that Paul kept the law, would be proving that he kept the Sabbath, which is my line of argument exactly, and consequently as I have demonstrated that the early Christian Church did not keep the law, I have proven that they did not observe the seventh day as a Sabbath. Thank you, "S. K." for admitting that much. He next says that "we are no longer under the law but keeping it." This appears to me to be a contradiction of terms, but as he asserts that we are no longer under the law, I think he has given away his whole case, according to his own showing. That is one way of supporting a lame cause. "S. K." must mean that although he is not under (or subject) to the law he is keeping (observing) it notwithstanding. "S. K." mentions "both laws" as if the Bible taught there were two distinct laws given to the Jews, but the Bible makes no such distinction. He also says that Christ was not a law-giver, but Paul says "fulfil the law of Christ" therefore "S. K." must be mistaken. By inserting the above in your valuable paper you will greatly oblige,

Yours, etc.,

TRUTH SEEKER.

How to Preach.

Make no apologies. If you have the Lord's message, deliver it; if not, hold your peace. Have short prefaces and introduction. Say your best things first, and stop before you get prosy. Do not spoil the appetite for dinner by too much thin soup. Leave self out of the pulpit and take Jesus in. Defend the gospel, and let the Lord defend you and your character. If you are lied about, thank the devil for putting you on your guard, and take care that the story shall never come true. Let your beard grow. Throw away your cravat. If you do not "want to break," make your collar an inch larger, and give your blood a chance to flow back to the heart. Do not get excited too soon. Do not run away from your hearers. Engine driving-wheels fly fast with no load, but when they draw anything, they go slower. It takes a cold hammer to bend a hot iron. Heat up the people, but keep the hammer cool. Do not brawl and scream. Too much water stops mill wheels, and too much noise drowns sense. Empty vessels ring the loudest. Powder don't shoot. Thunder don't lightning. Lightning kills. If you have lightning, you can afford to thunder; but do not try to thunder out of an empty cloud.

Do not scold the people. Do not [illegible] the faithful souls who come to meeting rainy days because of the others who do not come. Preach the best to smallest assemblies. Jesus preached to one woman at the well, and she got all Samaria out to hear him next time. Ventilate your meeting room. Sleeping in church is due to bad air oftener than to bad manners. Do not repeat, saying, "as I said before." If you said it before, say something else after. Leave out words you cannot define. Stop your declamation and talk to folks. Come down from stilted and sacred tones, and become a little child. Change the subject if it goes hard. Do not tire yourself and every one else out. Do not preach till the middle of your sermon buries the beginning and is buried by the end. Look people in the face, and live so that you are not afraid of them. Take long breaths, fill your lungs and keep them full. Stop to breathe before the air is exhausted. Then you will not finish off each sentence-ah with a terrible ga-sp-ah, as if you were dying for air-ah, as some preachers do-ah, and so strain their lungs-ah, and never find it out-ah, because their friends dare not tell them-ah, and so leave them to make sport for the Philistines-ah!

Inflate your lungs. It is easier to run a mill with a full pond than an empty one. Be moderate at first. Hoist the gate a little: when you are half through, raise a little more: when nearly done, put on a full head of water. Aim at the mark. Hit it. Stop and see where the shot struck, and then fire another broadside. Pack your sermons. Make your words like bullets. A board hurts a man worse if it strikes him edgewise.—The Outlook.

MARRIED.

STEVENS—DENNY—At the residence of the bride's father, Nov. 2, 1882, near Packerton, Kosciusko Co., Ind., Mr William Stevens and Miss Angeline Denny.

May heaven's choicest blessings rest upon this young couple, who, being active believers in the Restitution, have chosen each other as helpmeets—not only in the ordinary affairs of life—but as helpmeets in the highest and noblest sense in which it is possible for human beings to assist one another.

COMMUNICATED.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will speak as follows:

Saturday before the first Sunday in December at Delta, O., as Bro. David Bliss may appoint.

Friday before the second Sunday in December at Ransselaer, Ind.

Saturday before the third Sunday in December at Shoals, Ind., as Brother Stewart may appoint.

All of above meetings to continue over following Sunday.

JOHN BOOHE.

TAKE NOTICE.

By an error on the part of our pressman, we have on hand an extra lot of our four-page tracts, and persons wishing tracts to distribute should avail themselves of this opportunity at once. There are are four kinds: "Can you believe," "Age to come not a heresy," "State of man in death," and "Life and death." We will send postpaid 50 copies of these tracts for 20c., or 100 copies for 35c.

We have also just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend," on the covenants of promise, by Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. Single copies 10c., seven for 50c., sixteen for $1.00.

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1883.

More people have read The Sun during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read, and like The Sun for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for humankind; the events of the day and miscellany, the wisdom, the philosophy, the comedy and folly, the solid sense, the enjoyable nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at present revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs The Sun makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the candidates as well as about the small fry, in the face of discount as plainly and flatly as the case warrants, supported by general approval. The Sun has absolutely no purposes to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that The Sun is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No organization of men is powerful enough to be spared from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robeson ism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the Sun attacks and will continue to attack like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolies, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that The Sun is the best religious paper ever published, because its Christianity is unbridled with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed, because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor. A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers enjoy nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of The Sun discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the Sun, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before. If you do not already know the Sun, you will find it to be a [illegible] all human activity, a storehouse of [illegible] products of common sense and [illegible] a gateway for the easy admission of [illegible] a sentinel for gracious deeds [illegible] a scourge for wickedness [illegible] an unceasingly good friend [illegible].

[illegible] TERMS TO MAIL SUBSCRIBERS.

[illegible] cash subscriptions the issues sent by mail, postpaid, are as follows:

DAILY (with Sunday), $6.50 a year, with Sunday edition, $7.75.

SUNDAY, [illegible] a year, $1.20.

WEEKLY, [illegible] a year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues, and special departments of [illegible], agriculture, [illegible], [illegible], [illegible],

Poetry.

WAIT PATIENTLY FOR HIM.

FRANCES R. HAVERGAL.

God doth not bid thee wait,
To disappoint at last!
A golden prophecy, fair and great,
In precious pledge is cast.
Soon shall the morning glow
The dark horizon o'er,
The heart's desire shall flow
Then, and not before:
"Wait patiently for Him."

The weary waiting time
Are but the needful pearls,
Love patiently to thine alms
That shall illumine worlds.
Trust Him to time thy voice
To bless with scepter:
His "Wait" shall prove to be "Rejoice!"
"Wait patiently for Him."

He did not bid thee wait,
Like drift-wood on the wave,
For fickle chance or fixed fate
To ruin or to save.
Thine eyes shall surely see—
No distant hope or dim—
The Lord thy God arise for thee:
"Wait patiently for Him."

Selections.

WHERE WAS PARADISE?

In the Nineteenth Century magazine for October, under the title of "The Site of Paradise: an Ancient Problem solved by Modern Scholarship," attention is called to a remarkable book recently published in Germany by Professor Friedrich Delitzsch, of Leipzig (son of the famous Hebrew scholar and commentator, Professor Franz Delitzsch), in which he claims to have identified the geographical position of the Garden of Eden, partly by the aid of recent explorations among the inscriptions of Assyria and Babylonia.

"The precise district in which Professor Delitzsch considers the Garden of Eden to have lain was that portion of BABYLONIA which lies immediately north of the city of Babylon, between the Tigris and the Euphrates, which formed respectively its eastern and western boundaries. Its limits on the north may be indicated by a line drawn from Bagdad on the Tigris across to Akkad on the Euphrates, while a similar line, parallel to the former, stretching from Babylon on the Euphrates to the Tigris, would designate with sufficient accuracy its southern boundary.

"This district of Babylon was anciently termed Kar-duniash, the park or garden of the god Duniash. Kar-duni-shi is once, as Professor F. Delitzsch points out, written in an inscription of Assurbanipal, Gin-dun-i-sha, where the non-Shemitic word Kar is changed into the Shemitic gina, garden. He observes that Sir Henry Rawlinson was the first to suggest that the biblical Gan-Eden (Garden of Eden) was probably a transformation of this very word Gin-duniash. . . . .The compound Kar-duniash signifies 'the garden of the lord of the lands.'"

Professor Delitzsch does not build upon this name as distinctly proving anything to his purpose, nor upon the equally suggestive name which Babylon itself seems to have occasionally borne, viz.: "Tintira, which signifies grove of life, or fountain of life, or possibly tree of life." But if his geographical researches into the matter are at all to be trusted, these singular appellations, may be taken as corroborations of his theory. The district referred to seems also to have been formerly famous for garden-like beauty and fertility, traces of which are still to be seen, amid present desolation, in clustering palm groves and other relics of past luxuriance.

The identification of the lands and rivers mentioned in Genesis ii. 10–14 has long baffled the curiosity of scholars. Nor has the intelligent understanding of the matter by ordinary readers been helped by the unfortunate rendering of the land of Koosh or Cush in verse 13 as the land of Ethiopia! The land of Havilah has been supposed by some to be Hindustan, and thus minds have been puzzled over the locality of a garden watered by a river which afterwards separated itself into the streams of the Ganges, the Tigris, the Euphrates, and the Nile! Although this might not stumble the mind of Josephus, or cause trouble to mediæval allegorists, it is little wonder if modern readers should give the whole thing up as a hopeless enigma, if not an unreliable fable.

It is now claimed that by Professor Delitzsch's theory "the geographical correctness of the writer of Genesis has been clearly demonstrated."

About the identity of the Hiddekel with the Tigris there has never been much doubt, but it is now established beyond a question. "In the cuneiform inscriptions the name of the river is Idiklat or Diklat," while "the old Persian form, found in the Behistun inscription is Tigra." Professor Delitzsch claims to have found the Pishon and Gihon also; the former in the once "celebrated navigable canal Pallakopas," which branched off from the Euphrates near Babylon and discharged its waters at last by a channel of its own into the Persian gulf;" and the latter in the Shatt-en-Nil, "another arm of the Euphrates which led from Babylon itself, and after passing by the ancient city of Erech" (one of the cities of the original land of Cush—see Gen. x. 10), "ultimately discharged its waters again into the main stream of the Euphrates." The name Gihon he claims to have recovered in the Nar rivery Gaghamde, by which name this great canal or branch-river is mentioned, along with the Tigris and the Euphrates, in a clay tablet recently discovered.

"The book of Genesis represents the Garden of Eden as having been watered by a single river. The statement correctly describes a remarkable feature of this district of Babylonia. While other parts of that country to the south are, to a certain extent, watered by the Tigris as well as the Euphrates, the district specially referred to is exclusively irrigated by the Euphrates. Large water-courses, afterwards transformed into canals, but which seem originally to have been natural arms of the Euphrates, conducted a considerable portion of its water from the higher level of that river into the bed of the Tigris. From these, as chief arteries of irrigation, smaller water courses, such as those alluded to by Herodotus, spread the water all over the country. It appears, too, that the classical historians long ago called attention to this interesting hydrographic peculiarity of the country. Arrian says that of the streams which enclose the district of Mesopotamia, the Tigris is of less importance than the Euphrates, because the arms or canals of the Euphrates in great numbers convey their water to the Tigris. The fact that the Euphrates, at its entrance into the Babylonian plain, flows from a higher level than the Tigris, and that it contributes much water to the Tigris, has also been noticed by modern geographers. . . . .Hence it was geographically correct to describe the Garden of Eden as watered by a single stream, if that Garden of Eden is to be identified with the district of Kar-duniash, near Babylon. And if the writer of the book of Genesis had that special locality in view, he was fully justified in regarding the Tigris as it flowed forth from the plain of Babylon as itself an important branch of the Euphrates."

The land of Havilah, according to Professor Delitzsch, was that "portion of the so called Syrian desert bordering on the Euphrates, and extending from the Persian Gulf on the south, northwards almost as far as the city of Babylon." This territory was bounded along its whole eastern side ("encompassed") by the stream Pallakopas, which he identifies with the Pishon, and he adduces evidence from ancient historians and from recently found Assyrian clay tablets, to show that "the three products for which the Havilah of Genesis was remarkable were in ancient days to be found in this country.

Further researches may modify or disprove Professor Delitzsch's theories; yet again they may tend to confirm them. There is satisfaction, however, even in the possibility that he may be right. The fact that such an ancient geographical description of the Garden of Eden can be made, even at this late date, to tally with the peculiarities of one of the most fertile and well-watered districts of the acknowledged "cradle of the human race," goes far to show that there is nothing mythical or intately improbable in that description. The identification of any particular site for the Garden of Eden is, after that, perhaps of very secondary importance.—H. B. Strong in the Messenger.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION FROM ANOTHER SOURCE.

New York Herald.

THE SITE OF PARADISE.

Dr. Friedrich Delitzsch, Professor of Assyriology in the University of Leipzig, has given his time and labor to the identification of the region in which was situated the Garden of Eden. In the October number of the Nineteenth Century the results of Dr. Delitzsch's investigation have been briefly summarized by the Rev. Charles H. H. Wright, D. D.

CONFLICTING OPINIONS.

Before proceeding to state the views of Prof. Delitzsch it may be well to mention the different and in some cases conflicting opinions which have been held and which are still held in regard to the site of the Garden of Eden. By some, as is well known, the whole story of the garden and of the fall is regarded as allegorical. Generally, however, scholars have professed to understand the story literally, and to take it for granted that the writer or writers meant it so to be understood; but they have never agreed as to the historical reality or even the geographical position of Eden. Josephus saw nothing absurd in the opinion that the Pishon was the Ganges, and the Gihon the Nile, and that Eden lay between. With slight differences of detail a large number of scholars have concluded in favor of Kornah, in Babylonia, a place near the Persian Gulf; others, again, are in favor of Armenia, near the sources of the Tigris and the Euphrates; others, again, would locate the Garden of Eden near Damascus; while others—and among this last many German scholars—have sought the cradle of the human race in Bactria or Cashmere, or in the region lying immediately to the north, a part of which to this day bears the name of Audyna, or Garden. There are many who hold that the deluge must have completely altered the physical character of the region, whatever it was and wherever it was, and that any attempt to fix the locality must end in failure, or what is little better, mere conjecture. Then, again, by some of the most advanced scholars of the day the universality of a deluge at so late a period as the time of Noah is greatly doubted; and, according to this school, the physical changes on the planet have been comparatively trifling since the date of man's appearance.

THE BIBLE ACCOUNT.

The second chapter of Genesis states that "the Lord God [Jahaveh Elohim] planted a garden eastward in Eden," and that He placed the man whom He had formed in order "to dress [till] it and to keep it." "And out of the ground made the Lord God [Jahaveh Elohim] to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil" (Genesis ii., 8, 9, 15). The Garden of Eden is accordingly referred to in a later chapter of the same book (Genesis xiii., 10) as "the garden of the Lord" (of Jahaveh), and the same expression is used concerning it in the second part of Isaiah (li., 3). It is similarly described as "the Garden of God" (Elohim) in three places in the book Ezekiel (xxviii., 13; xxxi., 8; and xxxi. 9); in the last quoted passage the article occurs before the name of God (Elohim). The language of Ezekiel conveys the impression that the garden in question was in existence in his day, for he represents the Almighty as saying: "I have made him [Ashur or Assyria] fair by the multitude of his branches, so that all the trees of Eden that were in the garden of God envied him" (Ezekiel xxxi., 9). The translators of our authorized version here, indeed, introduced a gloss into their translation of this passage by the insertion of the word "were"—printed, however, in italic to denote that it is not to be found in the original Hebrew. But the context of the passage shows clearly enough that the gloss is erroneous, and that the clause ought to be rendered, "All the trees of Eden that are in the garden of God [Elohim] envied him." The writer of the book of Genesis professes to give a minute description of the locality of the Garden of Eden. His words are: "A river went out of Eden to water the garden, and from thence—[i. e., after passing out of the garden]—it was parted—[it parts itself]—and became into four heads" [became four arms or branches]. The fact must be borne in mind, noticed long ago by Dr. W. Aldis Wright in his article on Eden, "Smith's Biblical Dictionary," that the word translated "went forth," which occurs in this description, is used only in reference to a river descending downward from its source. The four arms, or independent streams, into which the river which watered the Garden of Eden was divided after passing through that paradise are minutely described by the writer of the book of Genesis: "The name of the first is Pison [Pishon]; that is it which encompasseth the whole land of Havilah [lit. the Havilah], where there is gold [or the gold] and the gold of that land is good; there is the bdellium and the onyx stone. And the name of the second river is Gihon [Gihon]; that is it which compasseth the whole land of Cush" (the authorized version contains here a gloss translating "Cush" by "Ethiopia"). "And the name of the third river is Hiddekel; that is it which goeth toward the east of Assyria" [more correctly rendered with Knobel and Kalisch, "which flowed before Assyria"]. "And the fourth river that is Euphrates" (Gen., ii., 11–14).

SOUTHERN BABYLONIA AND ARMENIA.

Much importance has always been attached to the supposition that the site of Eden was in southern Babylonia, in the location of the Shatt-el-Arab. But Delitzsch shows that the Shatt-el-Arab had no existence in early times. Pliny states expressly (vi., Sec. 130) that the Euphrates originally discharged its waters into the Persian Gulf, and Ritter (as quoted by Delitzsch) observes that in the time of Alexander the Great the mouths of the Tigris and the Euphrates were still separated from one another by the distance of at least a good day's journey. The delta at the head of the Persian Gulf is distinguished for its rapid growth. It increases, according to Loftus, at the rate of one mile of land in seventy years. According to Sir Henry Rawlinson its growth was far more rapid in ancient times, when it probably grew at the rate of one mile in thirty years. The city Charax was founded by Alexander the Great on the sight of the present Mohammerah. But in the days of Alexander that city was only 2,000 paces from the sea. In the time of Julia II., as Delitzsch notes in his appendix, that is about 1 B. C., that city lay inland fifty, or indeed 120, Roman miles." A more conclusive proof is, that the delta at the embouchure of the Tigris and Euphrates was in the time of Sennacherib a sea which ran inland far beyond Mohammerah. Into that sea, formed in the cuneiform inscriptions Nar Marratum, or the salt-water stream, the Euphrates and the Tigris discharged their waters independently of one another, without uniting in one common channel. The cuneiform inscriptions speak of a great naval expedition which Sennacherib made against Elam, in which he transported his army over this arm of the sea in large vessels in order to attack the army of Elam at the city of Nagitu, situated on the opposite coast, a few miles north of the spot where the river Ulai (the Pasitigris) discharged its waters into this sea—that is, nearly opposite to the modern Busra. The Southern Babylonian hypothesis cannot be sustained. The only other hypothesis of any consequence is that which locates Eden in what we now call Armenia. This the Professor easily disposes of. Independently of the many difficulties which beset the attempt to make out the various lands mentioned by the Hebrew historian, the fact that neither the Araxes nor the Kyros can be regarded as a continuation of one and the same stream with the Euphrates and the Tigris is fatal to this theory. The same may be said of the hypothesis which, identifying the Araxes or the Kyros with the Gihon of Genesis, seeks to discover the Pishon in the Phasis, now the Rion, on the borders of the ancient Colchis, separating it from Armenia. The Phasis, moreover, has no connection whatever with any of the other rivers. Still more hopeless, perhaps, was the attempt to connect the Oxus, called by the Arabic geographers by the name of Gaihun, with the river of Paradise of the same name (the Gihon). The Oxus, which now flows into the sea of Aral, was anciently considered to have flowed into the Caspian, but its sources are far removed from those of the Tigris and Euphrates.

THE TRUE SITE.

The Garden of Eden is considered by Prof. Delitzsch to have been situated in the land of Babylonia, in that special district in which the waters of the Euphrates and the Tigris approach nearest to each other. This statement he supports by a number of very strong it not absolutely invincible arguments. He finds arguments in the character of the population, in the product of the country, in the name which still clings to the country. The ancient name of the district was Kar-Duniash—the Garden of the Lord of the Lands. The precise district in which Prof. Delitzsch considers the Garden of Eden to have lain was that portion of Babylonia which lies immediately north of the City of Babylon, between the Tigris and the Euphrates, which formed respectively, its eastern and western boundaries. Its limits on the north may be indicated by a line drawn from Bagdad on the Tigris across to Akkad on the Euphrates, while a similar line, parallel to the former, stretching from Babylon on the Euphrates to the Tigris, would designate with sufficient accuracy its southern boundary. The Book of Genesis represents the Garden of Eden as having been watered by a single river. The statement correctly describes a remarkable feature of this district of Babylonia. While other parts of that country to the south are to a certain extent watered by the Tigris as well as the Euphrates, the district specially referred to is exclusively irrigated by the Euphrates. Large water-courses, afterward transformed into canals, but which seem originally to have been natural arms of the Euphrates, conducted a considerable portion of its water from the higher level of that river into the bed of the Tigris. From these, as chief arteries of irrigation, smaller water-courses, such as those alluded to by Herodotus, spread the water all over the country. The Professor has no difficulty in identifying the Pishon with the celebrated canal Pallakopas, and the Gihon with Shatt-en-Nil. Thus at last—if the conclusions arrived at are not ultimately upset by some new investigations in the extensive cuneiform literature which has recently been unearthed—the geographical correctness of the writer of Genesis has been clearly demonstrated.

Youths' Column.

Birth of the Baby.

[The following lines were dictated by a young lady who, for several years has been unable to sit up or to hold a pen.]

Welcome art thou, tiny stranger,
Great the joy thy advent gives;
Not a fairer bud of promise
Nor a sweeter baby lives!

Coming in the bright mid-summer,
When the earth is gay with flowers,
May of thou little one treasure
From the fairest flower of flowers!

May the fair, the future years be,
Flowering o'er thy dainty brow—
Make thy life-work one of beauty—
Shower love's rose on thy head.

Give thee gifts that will not vanish
On the shining wings of youth:
Give thee gentleness, and wisdom,
Give thee purity and truth.

Which shall fill thy life with brightness—
Like a light-ed brightness seems;
And in making others happy
May thy happiness be found!

May a Power than fate far higher
Shield thee from all pain and woes—
Keep thy tiny feet from slipping
In the paths that they must go.

Fill thy heart with joy and sunshine,
Keep or free from all alarms—
As thou art while sweetly sleeping,
In thy mother's loving arms.

On the Queen's Business.

A telegraph-office had recently been opened at a village post-office. The school-master had been applied to by the postmaster to recommend a trustworthy boy to carry out the telegraphic messages. He soon selected young Robert as a boy who could be thoroughly trusted, not only for his integrity, but also for his civility, activity, and careful attention to orders.

"That boy have I trusted with important messages, and have never known him to loiter by the road when told to be quick. He is the son of a widow, too; and he has deservedly gained the worthy character of being a good lad to his mother."

This recommendation from the schoolmaster was enough, and the youth was soon attired in the Queen's uniform, and entrusted with the responsible post of delivering the various telegrams received in the course of each day at the office.

Whenever he crossed the village common on Saturday afternoon, he was usually solicited by his old schoolfellows to join in a game of cricket; but without slackening his quick step he would pleasantly call out, "I am on duty—on the Queen's business."

Sphiers as Aeronauts.

If you anchor a pole in a body of water, leaving the pole above the surface, and put a spider upon it, he will exhibit marvellous intelligence by his plans of escape. At first he will spin a web several inches long and hang to one end while he allows the other to float off in the wind, in the hope that it will strike some object. Of course this plan proves a failure. He waits until the wind changes, and then sends another silken bridge floating off in another direction. Another failure is followed by several other similar attempts, until all the points of the compass have been tried. But neither the resources nor reasoning powers of the spider are exhausted. He climbs to the top of the pole and energetically goes to work to construct a silken balloon. He has no hot air with which to inflate it, but he has the power of making it buoyant. When he gets his balloon finished, he does not go off upon the mere supposition that it will carry him, as men often do, but he fastens it to a guy-rope, the other end of which he attaches to the island pole upon which he is a prisoner. He then gets into his aerial vehicle, while it is made fast, and tests it to see whether its dimensions are capable of bearing him away. He often finds that he has made it too small, in which case he hauls it down, takes it all apart, and constructs it on a larger and better plan. A spider has been seen to make three different balloons before he became satisfied with his experiment. Then he will get in, snap his guy-rope, and sail away to land as gracefully and as supremely independent of his surroundings as could well be imagined. Mr. Green stated that he had repeatedly witnessed such notions by spiders, and that he feels convinced that it is reason, with which the Creator of all things endowed the animals, that enables them to free themselves from their prison.

Letters to a Nephew. No. 6. Part II.

My Dear Son:

Turn now to the epistles addressed to those who had believed the gospel. The proof here afforded is of two kinds. First, in such passages as 1 John ii. 12: "I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake"—where the apostle directly tells the disciples their sins have been forgiven. See also Eph. i. 7; Col. i. 14; ii. 14; etc. Another class of proof is derived from such passages as that I have already quoted from Rom. i., where Paul is speaking of the gospel more in the abstract. He had said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ," etc.; and he gives particular reasons in these terms: "For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith." The "righteousness of God here is just what in other places is termed justification or forgiveness of sins; any one may see by his reasoning in chap. iv. 3-8: "For what saith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin." The apostle's meaning plainly is, that the righteousness of God by faith, and justification by faith, are both equivalent to remission of sins by faith. Jesus taught the same truth when he said: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. vi. 33. Our own righteousness is as filthy rags—like the fig-leaves of our first parents, a poor invention compared with the spotless robe provided for the sinner by him who is "the Lord our righteousness."

Thus far, then, you will see that the gospel is adapted to the needs of man as a condemned sinner, and also as a sinful being. It meets his case—first, as an actual transgressor, by offering him free forgiveness; second, as a sinful creature, by affording him the most powerful motives to obedience, by not only granting him a free pardon, but in making him a joint heir with Christ of a glorious inheritance; and thirdly, by inspiring him with the hope of ultimate deliverance from the penal consequences of sin—namely, death, in being raised up from the grave to share with the Christ in that dominion, and glory, and kingdom to be established upon the earth at the coming of the Lord.

This desirable position was, in the first century, attained by faith, as the various passages I have quoted clearly show. But what assurance can we have that our sins are remitted, or that we are "heirs of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love him?" Where is there any testimony to that effect?—for without the testimony there can be no faith. Although many profess to believe that men are justified by faith alone, yet if put to the test, none believe it. All must admit that men must ask the forgiveness of their sins; for it is written: "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." And again: "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

But I must leave, for the present, this question of confession as practiced by the first disciples, and will conclude this letter by making a comparison between the Jews of the first century and us of the present generation. We, like them, have been brought up, as it were, under the law, in a country possessing a so-called national religion; and are very apt to think ourselves better than the heathen; in short, to be, like the Pharisees of old, self-righteous. We have a notion that the ignorant heathen, and the unbelieving Jews, and especially those who, in their wickedness, put Christ to death, need to be converted; but that conversion is not needed now by us who are in a sense born Christians. But this is very deceptive reasoning. Take the case of a young man brought up in the knowledge of the one God and Father in heaven, and who knows all that I have been endeavoring to set before you concerning what God has revealed in his Word; who knows all about sin and its consequences, the coming kingdom of God, the forgiveness of sins, life in Christ, etc., and yet appears to be altogether indifferent and undecided in regard to the claims of Jesus upon his allegiance and service. Think you not that such indifference would wound the loving heart of Jesus as keenly as when he was actually nailed to the cross, and pierced by the Roman spear? Is it not "crucifying the Son of God afresh, and putting him to open shame?" Do not imagine, my dear son, there can be any neutral ground here. Neutrals are regarded by Christ himself as enemies. "He that is not with me is against me;" and this holds as truly now as when he was on earth.

There is need, then for urgency in coming to a decision, while yet there is room for repentance and turning to the Lord, and that as really in your case as in that of the Jews who, in their ignorance, crucified the Messiah. There is the same mercy to obtained, and his blood is sufficient to cleanse from all sin. But in order to do so, it must be applied. Be assured, ere it be too late, that all indifference and indecision is "doing despite to the spirit of grace," and jeopardizing your obtaining a glorious inheritance that faileth not away. Hoping that you may be saved from all such apathy, and that you will be moved to give that attention to this great subject which it really merits, both from its great claims and the everlasting consequences it involves, and that the Lord may open your eyes to see these things in their true light, I remain your affectionate father.—Rev. D. Bleak, in Messenger of the Gospel.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingill, A. M., author of "Heaven Real Indeed," "Theological Triumphs," etc., with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now existing such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 300 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Two Seeds—and the Two Intelligences. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Sinaitic, the New and the Davidic covenants: their duration and relations to each other. By H. M. Myers. 320 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth set Free; or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Silas Hume. 80 pages, price 25c.

The Blessed Future, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Silas Hume. 48 pages, price 15c.

Material Immortality; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact statement of Bible views of conditional immortality, not by birth but by grace. By O. H. La Chapelle. 16 pages, paper cover.

The Word made Flesh; or Jesus Christ, what is he? By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Re-Union" of July 3, 1875, put into tract form.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—By A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a book bound in cloth of 432 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee to the worth of the work. Price only 75 cts., each. Send to the office for them.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent or postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE READING. Suitable for the Distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ. 3. Eternal Life. 4. The Immortality. 5. The Kingdom of God. 6. Nature of Man and Theocratic for Children. 7. The Two Advents. 8. What is Religion. 9. The Restitution Age. 10. Destiny of the Wicked. 11. Baptism. Ten copies 25c., or assorted packages of 100, 25c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 10c; 50 for 25c; 100 for 50c.

Can You Tell Us? A series of 30 questions. We consider it's the best tract to circulate in our list.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

The Age to Come not a Hereay. By H. V. Reed.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two sets of these terms, together with Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Magruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or 25 for 40c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? H. Wharton.

Signs of the Times. H. Hosier, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed.

Contemplate the Future Glorious gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 12 for 30c.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 10 for 35c, or $3 for $1.

The New Birth. Jonas Peirce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which Is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

THIRTY TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 75 for $5.

The Restitution, or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidences upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 20c.

A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. Price 15 cents, or $1 a dz., per dozen.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Archdeacon of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A most invaluable 60 page pamphlet of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 128 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Ellicott. Price 10 cents.

Hymns of the Advent, in the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by Charles C. Barker. Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Carleton Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 60c.

The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson. Containing the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with literary, explanatory and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are correspond to the common version so as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition and larger type, 800 pages, cloth $5.00, library binding $6.00.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
S. S. SWIGGINS.....President.
W. TUTTLE.....Vice President.
E. K. DARNHILL.....Secretary.
A. B. UNDERWOOD.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
W. TUTTLE, E. K. DARNHILL,
J. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HALSTEAD. B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE. H. V. REED.
WILEY JONES. S. WILSON.
A. D. MARBURGER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 6, 1882. NO. 45.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS!

THE RESTITUTION advocates the due restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouths of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 8.

Prelude.—God, the ruler of the nations, is now to live them into that order and position which they will occupy at the beginning, and during the age of subjugation.—Egypt.—Its origin.—Its locale.—Physical aspect and character.—Its past.—Its antiquity.—Monuments.—Its testimony to the Hebrews.—Their judgment.—Its restoration.

Prelude.—Time moves swiftly upon the wings of its own inherent restlessness. The universe, with its complicated machinery, wheels within wheels revolving, is operated by an agent of restless power, marshaling the empires and states into line, preparatory to the conflict of the nobleman with his Risen adversary.

Ever since the fall, the star of empire has taken its course towards the west. Henceforward the star of empire will appear in the east, having described the zone of human domination. The golden beams of a new day-dawn betoken the approach of the sun of righteousness. That day, among whose shadows we are now walking, has a morning of tempest, a noon of peace, and an evening of storm; a reign of subjugation, covering Christ's official reign, succeeded by the endless joint reign of the Father and Son.

The world is exceedingly worldly; "eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage." This extreme national greed must result in conflicting interests, bringing about severe contests for supremacy. Secular governments follow the laws of Mammon, rather than those of God; hence the origin of those collisions now so conspicuous in the eastern world.

Nations themselves have one motive to action; God, their supreme ruler, quite another. While the nations are striving for supremacy, the Deity is over-ruling and shaping their movements for the introduction of his Son's domination. The approaching struggle has a religious as well as a civil aspect. What religion shall predominate? What ruler shall put on the universal diadem? Who shall be the King of kings, and Lord of lords?

When Christ, the nobleman, having received the kingdom returns, (Dan. vii. 13, 14) he finds the territory of his inheritance occupied by his enemies, ready to dispute titles. They marshal under three standards: those of the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet. Hence the morning of that day will open with a subjugating war—the reign of subjugation; for he (Christ) must reign till he (Christ) hath put all enemies under his (Father's) feet. 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26. To Christ every knee shall bow. Isa. xlv. 23; Ph. ii. 10; Ps. ii; Rev. xi. 18; xix. 11-21 describe the morning of that day; Ps. lxxii. its noon, and Rev. xx. 8-15 the evening of the reign of subjugation. Many questions arise which claim attention: 1. What are the chief hostile nations? 2. What position does each nation occupy in that conflict? 3. Where will be the chief battles? 4. If on the mountains of Israel, why? 5. What will be the condition of that land at that time? 6. Is the land of Israel the sanctuary that is to be cleansed? 7. What is that cleansing? 8. Are not the beast and the false prophet or the Western or Latin nations first, then the Mohammedan empire, and last the dragonic nations, overthrown? Rev. xix and xx.

Egypt.—(Greek Aigyptos). A brief outline of the past history of this remarkable country and people, with their present state, will aid in the investigation of their future; for, with their future we are concerned. Egypt has had many names: 1. Land of Ham. They showed his wonders in the land of Ham. Ps. lxxv. 27, because it was peopled by Ham. 2. The land of Misraim, the son of Ham. Misraim is a dual, and is supposed to represent two parts of Egypt, Upper and Lower. 3. Arabic name of Egypt is Misr, red, (as some say) black mud, from the color of the soil. 4. "Rehab," (symbol) the proud, Lower Egypt, Isa lx. 9. Land of Hebrew bondage. 5. The Egyptian hieroglyphics were written Kem or Kemee, "black," from the blackness of alluvial soil. 6 Northern Region—Ta-Mehuri and T. Tenen, the northern region. Each region for a time had a different crown. Under the Greeks and Romans there were three divisions. It was called the bed of the Nile, since its waters, when high, cover all the surface that is cultivated—5,626 square miles. It was also called the child of the Nile, since that river produced it. It was the granary of the Greeks and Romans, also of the ancient world. Its supply of corn brought the Hebrews into Egypt. Egypt is a valley on each side of the Nile, which has no branches for 600 miles, (as it never rains); shut in on the west by the Lybian mountains, and on the east by the Arabian mountains.

Amou, the Arabian, the lieutenant of the Caliph Omar, who conquered Egypt A. D. 640, thus describes it. "O commander of the faithful, Egypt is a compound of black earth and green plants, between a pulverized mountain and a red sand. The distance from Syene to the sea is a month's journey for a horseman. Along the valley descends a river (the Nile), on which the blessing of the Most High reposes both in the evening and morning, and which rises and falls with the revolutions of the sun and moon. When the annual dispensation of Providence unlocks the springs and fountains that nourish the earth, the Nile rolls his swelling and sounding waters through the realm of Egypt; the fields are overspread by the salutary flood; and the villages communicate with each other in their painted barks. The retreat of the inundation deposits a fertilizing mud, (6 inches in a century) for the reception of the various seeds; the crowds of husbandmen who blacken the land may be compared to a swarm of industrious ants; and their native indolence is quickened by the lash of the task-master, and the promise of the flowers and fruits of a plentiful increase. Their hope is seldom deceived; but the riches which they extract from the wheat, the barley, and the rice, the legumes, the fruit trees, and the cattle, are unequally shared between those who labor and those who possess. According to the vicissitudes of the seasons, the face of the country is adorned with a silver wave, a verdant emerald, and the deep yellow of a golden harvest."

Omitting the things of Egypt, common to other countries, brevity requires us to narrate simply its peculiarities. In the geological ages, Egypt was, at first, only a rock trough, six hundred miles long from the falls at Syene to the sea, the southern end of the trough being at the falls, the lower end opening into the delta—the stone channel had no delta. At the bottom of this stone channel flowed the Nile; the average width of this trough was 15 miles; its sides 1000 feet high on the east, and 600 on the west. Such a stone channel did God make Egypt. To fit this trough for living organisms, this rock channel had to be furnished with a soil. That soil had to be brought from a distance. Far to the south were rich alluvial treasures in the lands now called Ethiopia, Soudan, Abyssinia, Nubia, including equatorial and central Africa. All central and northeast Africa were to contribute of their mineral and alluvial treasures to supply Egypt, and to recover from the sea her immense and magnificent delta. Particle by particle, through a series of unknown ages, has this infinitely varied African soil been wafted by one vast river-system (the Nile and its tributaries) into the valley of Egypt. The waters from Victoria Nyanza, 2 deg. south of the equator, and at an elevation of 3,800 feet above the Mediterranean, with their tributaries; the waters of Albert Nyanza, named, between the lakes, the Victoria Nile; the waters of its tributary, Bahr-el-Gazal from the west; the waters of its second tributary, the Giraffe; the waters of the Sobat tributary from the east; the water of many smaller tributaries that flow into it before it reaches Khartoum. The waters of the Abai and the Blue rivers, with their innumerable branches, that have their sources in Abyssinia, (the White and the Blue Niles uniting at Khartoum); the waters of the Athara, (called Bahr-el-Aswad, the black river, as it carries down it the principal portion of mud (black) and slime that manures and renders productive the valley of Egypt), contribute their substance to this remarkable valley.

Thus did God make Egypt; first fashioning its rock-structure, and, after that, through a series of years, furnishing it with all things necessary for the home of innumerable living organisms. God has made Egypt, as a country, what it now is. Who can deny its divine origin? Volney, the infidel, saw Egypt and described it in the following sentence: "To describe Egypt in two words, let the reader imagine on one side a narrow sea and rocks, on the other immense plains of sand; and in the middle, a river flowing through a valley of a hundred and fifty leagues in length, and from three to seven wide, which, at the distance of eighty leagues from the sea separates into two arms, the branches of which wander over a country where they meet with no obstacles, and which is almost without declivity."

To those who believe in the earth's creation, the hand of the Creator is visible in the location, construction, and in the peopling of Egypt. Let us consider these points. What is peculiar about its location? Place before you the connected maps of Africa and Asia. Mark the relative position of the Egyptian valley. Where can be found its similitude? Located in the extreme northeast of Africa, it forms what might be called the extreme southwest of Asia. Which continent has held supreme power over it during the most years? Ethiopia held possession of Egypt forty years. What other African state has claimed the valley of Egypt? What Asiatic empires, including northern, central, and western Asia, have not, at times, been Egypt's conquerors? Shem has claimed for centuries the land of Mizraim the son of Ham. The valley of Egypt faces the great eastern world; and, in the present state of African civilization has but little to do with her own continent.

Since the civilizing of Europe, and the discovery and the peopling of the New World, Egypt's location has become remarkable. It is, and must continue to be, the world's inn, on the great national highway between the great west and the great east.

Should Africa yield to civilization, and all our modern improvements spread over that sable continent, what then would be the position of Egypt? What valley has such soil, such a river, such a system of irrigation, such suns, such winds? What valley has ever had such a peculiar construction. Located at the foot of a system of inclined plains, down which flow the waters of half a continent, wafting in their bosom that which makes rejoice the hearts of millions of our race.

We have said nothing relative to its vicinity to the land of Israel. This will be noticed when we speak of the land and nation of Israel. There are three countries, which, in the future, seem to be intimately associated. Egypt, Israel and Assyria; but as this has to do with the people of those lands we cannot now speak of these matters. We have noticed the country; we shall next describe the people.

J. P. WEETHEE.

THE PATERNITY OF JESUS, AND THE LINEAGE OF MARY FROM DAVID.

A worthy brother, far away, writes me an earnest request to notice this subject, and give proof of Jesus' fatherhood, as well as his lineage from David through Mary, his maternal ancestor.

1. The general language of both Testaments is harmonious and emphatic. We trace the promised Messiah through Abraham to Judah; and thence to David. "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David, Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne; for the Lord hath chosen Zion, this is my rest forever; here will I dwell." Psa. cxxxii. 10-18; Psa. lxxxix. Isa. ix. 6, 7.

2. "God raised up unto them David to be their king, and St. Paul said of this man's seed hath God according to promise, raised unto Israel, a Savior Jesus." Acts xiii. 22-37. "What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he? Answer: The Son of David!" Matt. xxii. 42-45. "Who was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, but declared the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead." Rom. i. 1-4.

3. "The voice from heaven," at his baptism and also at his transfiguration said, "This is my beloved Son! Hear ye him!" Matt. iii. 17; xvii. 1-9. "His only begotten Son." 1 John iv. 9.

4 The language of Jesus himself is in the same strain. In John xiv. he speaks of God as his Father, dwelling in him and doing his works, etc., over twenty times. Note. This testimony should suffice to every believing heart; for a doubt on this point questions the veracity of all these witnesses. It doubts "the record that God has given of his Son." 1 John v. 10, 12.

5. It is not needful to dwell on the organization of Jewish families, so that a son's wife or daughter's husband was regarded as son or daughter inasmuch as the record is plain and demonstrative without these particularities.

Gabriel said to Mary: "Behold thou shalt conceive and bring forth a Son and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David!"

Now please stop! Whose father David? It was this foretold Son to be then born of the Virgin Mary and "called the Son of the Highest." Note, All mortal fatherhood is thus ruled out, by the facts of the case and the terms of the record!

Furthermore to avoid all misunderstanding, Mary asked the angel: "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? He answered, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also, that holy one who shall be (genomenon) born of thee shall be called the Son of God!" Luke i. 31-35.

Now observe; as Mary was the maternal (and only immediate human) ancestor of Jesus, she alone was the link in the ancestral line, by which he became heir to the throne of his father David; she being recognized and employed as the honored daughter of David, the king!

The Davidic paternity through Mary, is thus authorized and recognized and asserted as demonstratively as his divine Sonship, or Messiahship! Amen.

There are no two ways about it. It is for us to believe, or utterly fail. John iii. 16-21.

6. But Jesus was to be "tempted in all things like as we are, yet without sin! For it behooved him in all things to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." Heb. ii. 6-18. This purpose required that he should have been brought into family, social and public relations. Hence God ordered Joseph to take "Mary his espoused wife," and Jesus was thus born into the family state—"was subject unto them; increased in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man" Thus Joseph was indeed his father in Jewish law; and by the special ordering of God. For Joseph was the head of that household! Luke ii. 4-33. But once more.

7. A mere human fatherhood would have started Jesus only on the lower plane of our fallen nature and out of harmony with the miraculous plan of redemption and in contrast with his revealed constitution as our Savior, who said: "Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not; but a body thou hast prepared me! Lo I come, (it is written of me) to do thy will O God!" Heb. x. 1-9.

Ah brother, beloved, "He is such an high priest as became us; holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made (genomenos, Gal. iv. 4, generated) higher than the heavens." Heb. vii. 22-28. No man or angel has been so constituted!

Some are said to deny (so far) "the only begotten of God the Father;" who has in his generation and his life, his death and resurrection—his ascension and official position! yea, in all things the pre-eminence."

But, if I see at all, such undermine and subvert (so far to themselves) the very foundations of the living temple of the living God, in our world! "However the foundation of God standeth sure. The Lord knoweth them that are his." Blessed be his great name forever.

Please accept this as a loving admonition, awakening all aspects, and aiming to confess Jesus in the plenitude of his personality, his truth and grace and glory. Amen.

J. B. COOK.

P. S. The doubting disputer as to Jesus' divine fatherhood should remember that "the old man is to be put off in himself," that gospel obedience buries "him in baptism into Jesus' death, wherein also he is risen with him." Rom. vi. 2-8; Col. ii. 12; iii. 1-4. Hence "he saith, ye must be born again." John iii. 3-5; Titus iii. 5; 1 Peter i. 3-23.

Thus as no natural father makes his child "the Son of God;" so it could not have availed to constitute "the only begotten Son of God!—The Messiah, Heb. x.—The Lord from Heaven; the Father of the everlasting age!" Isa. ix. 6, 7; 1 Cor. xv. 45-55. No, no; the very thought involves an arrant presumption! It ignores human corruption on the one hand, and the plan of redemption by Christ, on the other. Such facts should suffice of themselves to settle the case.

J. B. C.

ARKANSAS NOTES.

THE RESTITUTION is edifyingly full of good things, things timely and interesting, relative to matters of magnitude, and among them is something about the wonderful people, the Jews. I would not hint that thorough Christians are not wonderful and peculiar, for they are, but as Christians ourselves, by God's grace, we never cease, nor ought to cease to wish well to our Israelitish brothers. Questions about the Jews and Jerusalem, will come to the front. What we want, is, to think aright and understand aright, about them, in this time of vicissitude, of surprise, of interest and expectation. What shall we think, what shall we do? These are every day thoughts and queries. We know surely, God will restore them to the grand and good land, grand and good in promise, and the desolations shall be repaired. More than one or two or three, are thinking about this. Affairs are interesting. The old land is rising to prominence in public view. The rains are reappearing. Rail roads are projected. Jerusalem is growing. Germans, English, Americans and Jews are going to Palestine. The land has been carefully and scientifically explored and surveyed and mapped. A new society for colonization, is announced from Boston. England, our national mother is stretching out her hand to Egypt, to Cyprus and to Judea. Letters of hope, and almost entreaty, come from Jerusalem. There is electricity in the atmosphere. Some time, and doubtless soon, a nation shall be borne in a day. Isaiah calls aloud "Ho to the land shadowing with wings," and I remember, R. C. Shimeall calls this the United States, though some say, it is England. The swift ocean steamers will surely cut the blue billows of the great seas, on business that concerns the brotherhood of Jacob's people and posterity, and the steam-giants will show sloping pillars of smoke, and carbon plumes, to mark their majestic journeys, as they plough the deep, to carry a "present to the Lord of hosts." The old prophets shine in their glorious predictions, pictures of blessing to come to God's thus, they are gorgeous and generous, they are rich and beautiful and benignant. The images sent through the empty space of centuries, at last have found their screen, or are likely to strike the canvass of fulfillment, directly. The terrible calamities, the threatenings, the judgments, the darkness of old days, actually heighten the coming glory by contrast. God's love shines sweetly relieved against the past of darkness and trouble. He who for a small moment was stern and afflictive, has the great heart of tenderness never-theless, and the abundance of compassion are irrepressible. And fixed purpose adds itself to great compassion, and these two allied, will overcome and prevail. Ezekiel and Jeremiah and Isaiah are stately in their paintings of the coming era of world-wide calm and joy and prosperity. The minor prophets add their beautiful delineations. The men of God's choice, who wrote these wonderful things, come nearer to us now. They are greater and better and nearer than ever. They are the great sages of the world, the wise men of former generations, and lengthening centuries, whose words reach far down to the days of clicking electricity, and thundering trains, and knowledge a hundredfold increased. And what am I to do? What is my duty? Have I a part in these grand transactions?

Such are some of the thoughts that thoughtful men are thinking, and woman also. Now is the time when enthusiasm should be wise, and desire should be instructed, and sympathy and longing should be discreet, and energy be well directed, and faithshould be efficient and fruitful, but not make unprofitable haste, so it seems to me. Intense watchfulness and wisdom from the Author of revelation himself are most needful. Here are grave questions on which the best and most competent and experienced writers may now dissent to profit. Yes, questions, I say.

For example, will the now nearing probable return of Jews to Palestine, be merely introductory? Will it, or rather will it not be, in unbelief as to the Messiah. Is there danger of some grave national error of a false allegiance, amid the times of transition, excitement and novelty that may impend? What is the "bond of the covenant" that the prophet speaks of, into which they are brought? Is it on the whole, prudent and justifiable to go to Palestine, and to go now, to buy land there, to encourage emigration and settlement there? How near or possible, or likely, may be experiences of adversity there, or how clearly does inspiration of any kind, inspired writing, or special inspiring influences represent colonization and residence there, as now expedient or obligatory? When occurs the trouble to Jerusalem of Zech. xiv.? Ought "watchers", writers, correspondents, and such as believe and look for grand events, to go there, and write letters and reports of the country and people and events, write industriously and faithfully, to keep all who love the land and people of promise, continually posted? Such are almost irrepressible thoughts and queries. Perhaps the wisest, if ever, ought to write what they think, on these topics.

One thing, I think we need. We need far more manifestly, God's inworking of love in us, his cheering, renovating and blessed power in us and for us. Who will not say amen, to that? We must be gentle and patient, seeking and praying to be Christ-like. I suppose we ought to have the martyr weakness of true saints, not astonished at the possibility of martyrdom, but never uselessly or foolishly or gratuitously making ourselves martyrs.

I wish to speak in praise of THE RESTITUTION, 1. for prompt insertion of articles, as a rule; 2. for judicious selection of articles, as a rule; 3. for so large an exclusion of ominous advertisements; 4. for refraining from excessive entreaties for pecuniary aid; 5. for a kind and wise spirit in the management. (I seldom correct a mistake under the heading of erratum, relying on the reader's sense to correct for himself. However, for once, where last week appeared the following "repentance may be none the less real and inherent, because not half self-detected," it should be "the need of repentance.")

Two fugitive, but I suppose important thoughts, may be added. First, if we are wronged, let us be forgiving. And I want to mention with emphasis the need of an ever forgiving spirit, or ever ready to forgive; since, otherwise, we might be found in a dilemma. The wrong doing friend might even confess his wrong and ask pardon. Suppose then, the unforgiving spirit is master, what then? It is clear therefore that forgiveness should be ready, nay, it may even be an accomplished fact in the mind and heart.

Again, as I have been reading daily, aloud from God's word, I have said this; "when a man has written carefully and truly as he might; written for edification; would he be glad and encouraged to hear somewhere, though unseen himself, his page read aloud with interest by some friend in the hearing of some other friend?" Doubtless. So when we read God's word, let us remember God is present to hear, and to hear his own true and truly uttered words. Let us believe he is pleased to hear them read, and that he is honored by the reading. This makes, or helps us who read, to be glad and careful and serious and appreciative. We do well to have God for our companion, friend-listener, a listener who is attentive and sympathizing. This lends dignity to life. It makes even solitude social, or loneliness luminous. It puts intelligence in a place where we are, first and least, our own intelligence in remembering that God is present; and again what is far more and better, God's own intelligent dwelling among us by faith.

C. COLEBROVE.

FROM "THE CHRISTADELPHIAN," OCTOBER 1882.

Note to "A. N."

"We have no sympathy with any movement among friends of the truth, which tests the truth as a subject of 'investigation.' Those who are only at the stage of investigation ought to keep their efforts to themselves instead of publishing them to the possible embarrassment and mystification of those who already see clearly. We hold the truth to be a thing that has been thoroughly discovered, a thing therefore to be disseminated and applied and not to be perpetually debated about. Those who do not see this are not of the truth, but of its doubters or investigators. They may be honest enough, but they stand on a totally different platform from those, who, having attained to full assurance of faith, live to preach the truth and serve the truth, and love nothing so little as this everlasting tinkering at its foundations."

Editor Restitution:

The foregoing is an exact copy of a note to "A. N." in the Christadelphian. The body of people represented by the Birmingham periodical consider all outsiders who are not themselves. It certainly cannot be wrong to look for good fruits where such attainment is openly declared. I have not taken the pen in hand to say much; yet what I am about to say may better be said than not: for naught but plain truth do I mean to say.

Since leaving America I have taken the Christadelphian part of the time, and the magazine always interested myself and wife during the time we received it. Having become acquainted with some members of ecclesias—this is the word they use—we became intimate with them, and we treated them as brethren and sisters in Christ, though our non-assent to all their tenets prevented communion with them.

It is no pleasure for me to say what is fact about those we became acquainted with; this is, the fruits of the spirit were so plainly lacking that we became disgusted. Cases of distress among themselves evidenced the absence of the sympathy, the love, which characterize genuine Christianity. Profession and practice were not united. I am able, however, to tell what is gratifying:

Considerable time passed without the Christadelphian being seen in our house; when a person lent us a copy, and afterwards several. In one of these (July No. Page 809) I found the following notable words from the pen of P. R. Shuttleworth:—

"The greatest and most dangerous enemies to Christ are those who pretend to be his friends, but are not faithful to his doctrine.

They are unfaithful who from any motive of personal interest would weaken the point of a doctrine or soften it for the gratification of their natural feelings, or for fear of hurting the feelings of the enemy, and so affecting their popularity with him."

On reading these pointed words and thinking of what we had seen and known of Christadelphians, I wrote to the writer and telling him facts, I asked him if Christadelphians were not "the greatest and most dangerous enemies to Christ." He promptly replied and I again wrote; and he again replied and replied well. I have now reason to believe there are living members among the sect, and faithful stewards, too. I also will express my appreciation of the periodical, which abounds with excellence. Recently a "Pocket Epitome of the Commandments of Christ" has been issued, which will be prized by those who love "in deed and in truth." If you have not seen this Epitome, Bro. C., I would say, write to Birmingham and get one, or better many.

H. HEYER.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Dec. 6, 1882.

SOME acknowledgements of books received and notices deferred to a future number.

SUBSCRIPTIONS are beginning to come in in quite an encouraging manner. We hope an effort will be made to make our paper fully self-sustaining. Let us all work with this end in view.

A LATE letter from Jerusalem, written by Mrs. Davis, an article on Matt. xxviii. 19, by Prof. Gardner, a letter from Br. John Foore, a communication from Br. Samuel Wilson, of Philadelphia, and some other pieces are set for next week.

THE TRANSIT OF VENUS.

On the day bearing the date of the present issue of our paper, Dec. 6, a celestial phenomenon occurs that is important from the fact that observations accurately made furnish data for determining the distance of the sun from the earth. This astronomical event is a transit of Venus across the disc of the sun as beheld from the earth. The first transit recorded as having been beheld by any human being was observed by a young English astronomer, Jeremiah Horrox, Dec. 4, 1639. He himself had calculated the time of this phenomenon and confidently predicted its occurrence. He was Curate of a church at Hoole, a small village in England. The transit, as he had calculated, would take place about 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, but he commenced his observations at noon on Saturday, and resumed them on Sunday, keeping uninterrupted watch, excepting the time necessary to attend divine service twice, and was rewarded for all his toil and anxiety in being permitted to witness the wonderful sight which he had so long anticipated, and for which he had been laboring in preparations for eight years.

In 1769 another noted transit occurred that was very carefully observed by Rittenhouse at or near Philadelphia and by Capt. Cook at Tahiti, one of the Sandwich Islands. The parallactic angle obtained from observations made at this time was determined at 8.5775 (seconds). From this angle the distance of the sun was computed to be something more than 95,000,000 of miles.

In 1874 another transit occurred and the angle of parallax was determined from observations made upon it at 8.3879 (seconds), which would give the distance of the earth at something over 91,000,000 of miles. The distance, as deduced from the Great Pyramid, is 91,840,000. We feel an anxiety for an accurate determination of this parallactic angle as we believe that the distance of the earth from the sun, when accurately determined by astronomy, will be the same as given by the Pyramid's symbolization. From observations made on the planet Mars, the parallax was placed at 8.95, and the mean distance of the sun at 91,328,064 miles. This calculation has the authority of Leverrier, and was placed in the British Nautical Almanac. From observations made on this same planet by Prof. Newcomb, of the Washington Observatory, the parallax was found to be 8.848 seconds, and the distance of the sun 92,800,000 miles. For preservation we give the following little table of the times of the transit of Venus:

| | |
|---|---|
| Dec. 8, 1631. | Dec. 4, 1639. |
| June 5, 1761. | June 3, 1769. |
| Dec. 9, 1874. | Dec. 6, 1882. |
| June 7, 2004. | June 5, 2012. |
| Dec. 10, 2117. | Dec. 8, 2125. |

We take the following from Watson's Annals of Philadelphia, as a historical note of some interest to our readers:—

"The Declaration of Independence was read publicly, on the 8th of July, from the platform of "the observatory" before erected there, by Rittenhouse, to observe the transit of Venus. Capt. Hopkins, who read it, belonged to the Navy. It was about twenty feet high and twelve to fifteen feet square at fifty to sixty feet south at the house;* and fifteen to twenty feet west of the main walk. It seems to have been occasionally used as a stand for public addresses, it being referred to by Stansbery in his militia poem."

*The State House—Independence Hall.

MEETING AND PARTING.

Like all other assemblies on earth the meeting at Plymouth is now numbered with the events of the past. How wonderful would be the history of the church if everything that has occurred at all times, and in all places, were fully written out. With what absorbing interest we follow the narrations given in the Acts of the Apostles as Luke rehearses some of the scenes that took place in the eventful life of Paul, the chosen ambassador to the Gentiles. How impressively has he portrayed one scene in his ministry that transpired at Miletus. Though this city had a historical and poetical renown as the "Mother City" of numerous colonies, yet its earlier history of more than 500 years before the apostle's time has not made the "first city founded in Ionia, and the mother of many and magnificent cities in Pontus and Egypt, and in all parts of the world,"* so famous as the sublimely solemn events of a single day, when Paul met the Ephesian Presbyters in this old harbor city of the primeval Axia. From some unexplained cause the ship, in which the apostle was making his voyage, was detained at Miletus, and thus a sufficient time was afforded to send to Ephesus—about 30 miles distant—for those elders whom the Holy Spirit had made overseers over the flock of Christ in the idolatrous city of the goddess Diana. The summons was received and obeyed with alacrity and delight. A journey of a day seemed as nothing with the prospect before them of meeting their loved friend and heaven-sent instructor once more.

They finally meet together—a little company of believers in strange contrast with the multitudes of pleasure-seekers that often crowded the unhallowed places of amusement—to hear the final discourse of the divinely-inspired preacher. As he calls up the glad gatherings and tearful associations of the days gone by, his inimitable pathos makes the vanished past once more almost a present reality; and the echos of warning, admonition, and solemn exhortation, that had been heard in the synagogue, in the school of Tyrannus, and from house to house, seemed to resound anew in their ears, and to mingle with the impassioned utterances of the care-worn traveler, as he now delivers his last message to a weeping assemblage in words of such tenderness and affection, that they, in turn, have echoed and re-echoed through the waning centuries, and whose sweet thrilling cadences will never die out till they blend with melodies from the harps of the redeemed.

But time flies, and imperial duty calls the apostle to a renewal of the contest over the unfinished part of the course that yet stretched between him and the crown gleaming with stars, held forth in the hands of the righteous Judge at the end of the race. Although his tear-filled eyes could plainly discern the fore-doomed bonds and afflictions, yet beyond them all loomed up the visions of "an exceeding great and eternal weight of glory." To this bright inheritance of the saintly ones, he points his sorrow-smitten hearers—tells them that the farewells here shall be more than compensated with the rapturous greetings there—tells them that ministering labors of love, and all sacrifices made for Christ's feeble flock shall result in a richness of eternal blessedness—and then he kneels down with the weepers and implores God's protection both for himself and the agonized company whose wailings of out-bursting grief neither Christian faith nor fortitude could for the time restrain. They weep sore—they cling to the apostle and fall upon his neck—they kiss him again and again†—and sorrowed most for the words that foreboded that they should see his face no more—that countenance upon which they had so often gazed with love-inspiring admiration. The final moment comes—they accompany him to the ship—its sails are spread to the wind—and as the white-crested billows multiply their moving ridges between the bereaved waiters on the shore, and the departing bark, the hand of the apostle waves the last signal of the final adieu, and the broken band disperse to their homes like mourners from the funeral of one loved and lost in death.

Other partings with the great apostle were scarcely less sorrowful. In the Proseuchа, by the river's side, Lydia hears the gospel proclaimed by this apostle—the Lord opens her heart—the truth spoken is earnestly embraced—and she is immersed. Shortly afterward the minister of Christ is violently apprehended and dreadfully lacerated by the orthodox lictor's rods, and thrown into the dungeon, that, through miraculous intervention, the jailor might hear the life-message from the lips of the tortured and blood-smeared prisoner—and he, too, believes and obeys the gospel.

But soon, and soon indeed, the apostle forever parts company with these, the first converts to apostolic preaching in Europe. Their pathways of travel will never cross each other again in this world, and the next meeting is at the resurrection of the just. Many a time since have sorrowful partings and sadly-spoken farewells thrown darkly shaded pictures upon the history-pages of the church of God.

To return briefly to our meeting at Plymouth, we may say that an unusual influence seemed to rest down upon the assembled congregations, and some hearts were opened to receive the truth. On Sunday evening, Nov. 12, one young lady came forward as a candidate for baptism. On Monday, the next day, three more came to join the first, as companions in the obedience of faith. With these four young females we repaired to the river's side and buried them into the likeness of the Savior's death, and raised them up from the watery grave to walk the narrow way of life. But a scene most deeply impressive awaited us on Thursday. A young woman who had been confined for months to her room by insidious disease, and whom death was likely to remove at no distant day to the house appointed for all living, —who had heard much about the life-giving Redeemer—about redemption through his blood, the remission of sins—about his soon coming—about his everlasting kingdom—about the resurrection from the dead—about the glorious restitution of all things spoken of by all God's holy prophets—had long been desiring to be immersed into Christ before falling under the power of the last enemy. To the unbelieving world it seemed wantonly perilling the life of the poor invalid to immerse her in the waters of the cold river; but she said come life or death, she wanted to be baptized, and baptized in the river.

At the hour appointed for her baptism a cold November rain was falling, but we placed herein an easy arm-chair, and she was borne to a carriage, and thus conveyed to the vicinity of the water; then she was re-placed in the chair and, by the brethren, born down the sloping declivity to the river's brink, and the chair and its weak invalid occupant placed at the water's edge; then we helped her forward a few steps into the river—surface roughened by the falling rain drops—and placed the fragile form, wrapped in the baptismal robe, under the chilling waters, then helped her back into the chair, and, with a comfort thrown around her, she was borne up the bank to the carriage, and taken back to her home, to rejoice that her confiding trust in God had brought her the sweet peace that flows from faith and its obedience and a better state of physical comfort than she had been enjoying before her baptism; and her triumphant hope now is that if death should soon come she will die in the Lord, and sleep in Jesus.

Like meetings in the early days of the church, our meeting has closed, and we have bid our dear brethren and sisters farewell. Some came from a distance, and as we met on this occasion, we shall meet no more in this world. But our hope is that we shall soon meet one another, and the saints of all ages in the kingdom of God. Our prayer is that the Lord will revive his work, deepen our purity, enable us all to be more devoted, and more willing to labor and sacrifice for his cause till we are called to sleep in death, or to meet our soon-coming Lord. We must be like Christ in our tempers and dispositions if we would be like him in the physical likeness through the resurrection. May we all meet in God's kingdom.

†An inscription quoted in the life and Epistles of St. Paul reads: "Miletus boasts itself as 'primum in Ionia fundatum et matrem multarum et magnarum urbium in Ponto et Ægypto et undique per orbem.'"

†Καταφιλειν: In ver. 37, denotes to kiss affectionately, and in the imperfect tense, as used here, continued action—they kissed him again and again. A German author speaks of this whole scene as a "most simply natural, beautiful, and captivating picture." His exact words, as quoted are: "Welche einfach schoene und ergreifende Schilderung." With our meagre knowledge of this language we translate as above.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR, WITH ADDENDA.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 20, '82.

My Dear Mr. Chaplin:

I am glad that you have been re-appointed editor of THE RESTITUTION. I congratulate the readers of the paper as well as yourself. I enjoy reading it. I have been so busy since my return from Europe, and in such poor health, that I have not been able to send you any contribution. I hope to do so now and then. I am pleased that Dr. Petavel takes an interest in it, and that he is translating some of your articles. I tried to prevail upon him to send you an occasional article of his own; I hope he will do so. I got a letter from him last week saying that the trial of Mr. Byse, of Brussels, had resulted in his condemnation, and that his church had voted about unanimously to stand by him, and to break away from the Synod, and that Dr. Petavel had offered to go to Brussels and engage in missionary work there in connection with the new church. I trust something important will grow out of this new movement. I am watching the progress of events in the Orient with much interest and expectation. It seems that the beginning of the end, for which we are all looking, can not be far off. We are getting out a new edition of my work, "The Life Everlasting." I thank you for giving it so conspicuous a notice in your paper.

I remember the pleasant evening I spent with you while you were here, and the excellent sermon I heard you preach. Would hope to see you again, but cannot expect this unless you come this way.

Yours in the faith of the gospel,

J. H. PETTINGELL.

Our object in giving this friendly private letter, with its kind expressions of appreciation—which we wish were much better deserved—is to prepare for some further account of the progress of truth in Europe, as its progress has been originated and advanced by the zealous labors of such men as Mr. Byse, Dr. Petavel, and others. The additional explanatory facts are gathered from a letter written by Dr. E. Petavel to Mr. Pettingell, the writer of the above letter, since his return, and which we find published in the Bible Banner of November 23, 1882. As to Mr. Byse, he is pastor of a church in Brussels, and the Synod, which had jurisdiction over his church, cited him to trial under the charge of heresy, or unsoundness in faith, in regard to immortality, and, perhaps, some other matters, as baptism, etc. In his defense, he showed that even their standards of faith admitted that man was not immortal by nature. But the trial resulted in his condemnation as stated in the letter to us. The Synod, it seems, were disposed not to expel Mr. Byse on condition that he would hold his peace, and not preach his convictions of truth, as he had been previously doing, but to these terms he nobly refused to assent. It then became a question whether his church would stand by him, and uphold him in proclaiming the truth. As some better idea may be gained regarding the progress of truth in Europe, we append a re-publication of a part of Dr. Petavel's letter:

GENEVA, Switzerland, CHENE BOUGERIES, Oct. 27, '82.

My Dear Mr. Pettingell:

Your favor dated the 25th ult. came to hand, and we were glad to learn that you have safely reached your home, although after a very rough passage. Please receive our hearty thanks for the expression of your affectionate feelings. We also cherish the memory of your visit to us as a blessing of our Heavenly Father, who sent us two of his dear children as messengers of his love..... It will give us great pleasure to hear from yourself and your good work. Occasional notices of your noble book will also interest us. Now that the time has come for the newspapers to review it, they must not be allowed to remain cowardly silent about it. . . . .

Meantime the crisis of our friend, Mr. Byse, has nearly come to an end. By a solemn and decisive votation on the 23d inst., the five-sixths of his flock have pronounced in his favor and against the synod, thus severing their connection with the latter. I was so delighted that I wrote to Mr. Byse, quoting Psalm cxxiv., and offering my services as a deacon, an offer which he has accepted most cheerfully; but I have a year to settle my affairs here. The sale of this property may prove difficult, on account of the present depression of affairs in Switzerland. But where there is a will there is a way, as the proverb goes.

I want to enter afresh the mission field in order to see how our more Biblical principles work, both as to baptism and as to conditionalism. A practical demonstration of their truth ought to be added to their theoretical presentation on this continent.

I thank God, however, my stay of seven years at Geneva will leave a mark after my departure. The names of Messrs. Brocker, President of the Evangelical Society, Chaponnière, the editor of the Semaine Religieuse, who has recently spoken out, like Mr. Lyman Abbot; Chatelain, our most active evangelist; Cholay, Conlin, Galapin, Schaub, Jequet, Miltondorff, Malan, Vodos, Thomas, Walther, and Miss Gaussen* are all names of leaders, who have more or less publicly adhered to conditional immortality since my arrival in this city. They are known as the elite of the evangelical party in the Protestant Rome.

But I ought first to have thanked you for the beautiful Wendell's New Testament. It is a most valuable reference book which I keep close to my desk, and which will serve as a constant memento of your Christian love.

You will be sorry to learn that, since you left I have lost a dear brother of mine, who died from paralysis on the 14th inst. He was a doctor of medicine, and had given no evident signs of conversion, but was generally liked on account of his genial qualities. I found some comfort in Isaiah lxv. 8. (See commentaries. Fausset, for instance.) I believe God will not ultimately reject a human being until he is entirely "rotten."

I had another comfort the very day of my poor brother's funeral. I was presented with a new book entitled, Au Declin de la Vie, by Ad Schaffer, D. D., with an introduction by a corresponding member of the French Institute. The author endorses conditional immortality, and his essay, being a very cleverly written one, promises to spread a precious truth in the highest literary circles in our French speaking countries.

I remain, my dear Mr. Pettingell, yours very faithfully,

E. PETAVEL.

It is pleasing to note that as honest and talented men are led to embrace the truth relative to human destiny—that immortality is conditional, and that eternal life is only through Christ—they are also led, at the same time, to embrace immersion as the ordinance so wonderfully symbolizing our entrance into everlasting life through the resurrection from the dead. The precious truths of the gospel and its expressive ordinances are indissolubly joined by the Great Head of the church. The belief of the truth leads to the obedience of faith. In regard to the work, "The Life Everlasting," we subjoin two or three personal notices from eminent men and scholars. Our readers will no doubt be surprised at the statements of these noted men in regard to the true source of immortality. Truth will assert its supremacy sooner or latter. The book is kept for sale at the office of THE RESTITUTION. We, in turn, congratulate the talented author that he has been enabled to produce a book worthy of the commendations that it has won, not only from persons of literary prominence, but also from distinguished conductors of the press. We hope he will soon find himself able to contribute something on the great life-theme for THE RESTITUTION. The notices are:

"I have begun to read your book with much interest, and sincerely hope that its truly joyful message may reach many hearts—the message that God is love, and that in him is no darkness, no cruelty, no injustice! I cannot but think that the time is rapidly approaching, when ministers will not be ostracized or subjected to discipline for holding the views expressed in your book, and that this will enable the latent doubts of many to ripen into distinct convictions."—C. M. Butler, D. D. Prof. in Episcopal Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, Pa.

"It is a powerful argument for conditional immortality, and will take its place in the foremost rank."—Rev. James R. Danforth, Pastor of Central Congregationalist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

"This book, by its manifest scholar-like thoroughness, will not fail to be the American standard authority on the argument which it represents, as Mr. White's book is the standard in England. It is a high satisfaction, on which I congratulate you, to have done the best thing of the kind."—Leonard W. Bacon, D. D., Pastor of Congregationalist Church, Norwich, Ct.

"If I believe in the hopeless doom of incorrigible sin, and also in the undimmed glory of a perfected kingdom of love, I must believe in the annihilation of the incorrigibly wicked. Yes, that would be the logical conclusion. If I thought that logic were a glass that reveals the secrets of eternity, I should believe in this as the final doom of unrepented sin. As it is, I can only say that I think this is a probable doctrine, more probable, by far, than the doctrine of endless sin and suffering.....That immortality is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ; that man is mortal and must put on immortality; that only he can put it on who becomes through Christ a partaker of the divine nature, and so an inheritor of him 'who only hath immortality;' that eternal life is life eternal, and eternal death is death eternal, and everlasting destruction is destruction without remedy or hope of restoration—this is the most natural, as it is the simplest, reading of the New Testament."—Lyman Abbot, D. D., in Christian Union.

*Miss Gaussen, as we learn, is a daughter of Dr. Gaussen, author of the celebrated work, "The Plenary Inspiration of the Scriptures."

About the strongest temperance lecture of the season is the recent statement of the keeper of the New York Morgue that four-fifths of the five thousand bodies that reach the city dead house there every year are sent there by drunkenness.

A storm of scalding that sets in in the morning, and lasts till night, has about as good effect on childhood graces as a hail storm has on young plants.

Letter Drawer.

BELLEVILLE, Ont.

Editor Restitution:

Last Sunday, November 12, one more soul living in this city, put on Christ by being baptized into him and into his death that he might be in the likeness of Christ's resurrection. This brother's name is Thomas Gardner, late a member of the Methodist church in good standing. He is only 19 years old, but very intelligent in the Scriptures, "which are able to make one wise unto salvation through faith." 2 Tim. iii. 15. Such being the case why the necessity of Methodist revival meetings and the rest of the processes connected therewith to "convert souls." There is a wide difference between Methodist conversion and Bible conversion. There is no likeness whatever. The Bible says "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."

Yours in the one faith,

A. ROBINSON.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:

My wife read to me your article of endorsement of the divorce question. I can see no flaw in the argument; on the contrary it seems sound as well as timely. All Christians are called to let their light shine; but it does seem to me, that in no especial manner should those who are recognized teachers of the things, such as constitute us a religious body, be extra careful to maintain—not simply profess—good works. "By their works shall ye know them," is good wholesome counsel. May grace be given you to sound the alarm, that the unwary fall not into the footfalls of these latter days. We need divine aid—Lord grant it.

GEO. W. YOUNG.

Exegetical.

Ecclesiastes viii. 8.

No man hath power over the (ruach) wind, to retain or shut up the wind; neither is there power in the day of death (viz., to prevent it), come when it will. Neither is there dismission in war, because no one knows when it will be ended. Neither shall wickedness deliver its masters, because the success of wicked men is absolutely precarious, and their unjust acquisitions are oftentimes taken from them.

The design of the royal preacher here is plainly to represent the uncertainty of all things; and our translators have quite mistaken the sense of the verse." — T. Wemyss' Biblical Illustrations.

Sententions.

Vain confidence is the forerunner of shame.

There is no sin we can be tempted to commit, but we shall find a greater satisfaction in resisting than in committing.

One quiet example of saintly living has more power in any church, or in any community, than the loudest talker there about entire consecration.

Truth and purity, like so many gems in the life and example of the good man, cannot but shame and condemn error and vice in others.

Home is more dear,
O Lord, by every passing day;
Home is more dear
By every prayer I pray.

Science is but a mere heap of facts, not a golden chain of truths, if we refuse to link it to the throne of God.—Frances Power Cobbe.

A Christian's experience is like a rainbow, made up of drops of the grief of earth, and beams of the bliss of heaven.

O God, my sins are manifold: against my life they cry,
And all my guilty deeds foregone up to Thy temple fly.
Will Thou release my trembling soul, that to despair is driven?
"Forgive!" a blessed voice replied, "and thou shalt be forgiven."—Bishop Heber.

In your temptations go to the promises. They are the branches the Lord has hung over the water, that his half-drowned children may take a grip of them, without which they will go to the bottom.

Why do we heap huge mounds of years
Before us and behind,
And scorn the little hours that pass,
Like angels on the wind?

Each turns to us a small, sweet face,
And seeks to hold us dear,
Because it is so small a face,
We'll all not see it clear.

And so it turns from us, and goes
Away in sad disdain;
Though we would give our lives for it,
It will not come again.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—BY A. MALGNE, M. D.—

This is a Cloth Bound book of 178 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee as to the worth of the work. Price only 50 cts. each, mailed to this office for them.

Irresolution.

Irresolution is a fatal habit; it is not vicious in itself, but it leads to vice, creeping upon its victims with a fatal facility, the penalty of which many a fine heart has paid at the scaffold. The idler, the spendthrift, the epicurean and the drunkard are among its victims. Perhaps in the latter its effects appear in the most hideous form. He knows that the goblet he is about to drain is poison, yet he swallows it. He knows—for the example of thousands has painted it in glaring colors—that it will deaden all his faculties, take the strength from his limbs and the happiness from his heart; oppress him with disease and hurry his progress to a dishonored grave, yet he drains it. How beautiful, on the contrary, is the power of resolution, enabling the one who possesses it to pass through perils and dangers, trials and temptations! Avoid the contraction of the habit of irresolution. Strive against it to the end.

On the northern bank of the river Tyne, England, runs that great wall of stone, with its stations, outposts, and mile castles which imperial Rome, under the sway of Hadrian, erected to protect and defend her conquests. Within easy access from Newcastle, miles of that famous barrier, surviving the storms and tempests, the civil commotion and neglect of fourteen centuries, may be followed, as, over crag, moor, and fell, it pursues its course from the Solway Frith to the German ocean. Newcastle was one of the stations on the wall, named—after the bridge that linked it to the opposite shore, and in honor of its Pagan founder, Hadrian — Pons Ælii. The history of Roman occupation is written hereabout on innumerable altars, centurial stones, coins, pottery, and implements of war and husbandry, which plough and spade have brought to light and local sagacity has preserved for the benefit of posterity.

Modesty and merit are a handsome couple.

Business Department.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Address all business letters and make all orders payable to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana." It creates confusion and causes delay in the transaction of business of the office to have orders made payable to the Editor, or business matter addressed to him personally, so please confer a favor by sending as above directed.

A. R. KNICKERWOOD, Treas.

Inasmuch as a number of our patrons have complained that they do not understand the marks on the mailing labels, and cannot tell how their subscriptions stand, we this week send notices to some who are in arrears. We hope all who receive them will examine their accounts and if any error has been made, notify us at once and it will be rectified. These notices are sent out as a matter of information, and to ask the friends of THE RESTITUTION to continue their efforts in its behalf. Please renew as promptly as possible.

BUSINESS AGENT.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $360. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription, at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions and the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. There are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor, I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they especially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you, and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

H. S. DUTCHINS, President.

FREE-WILL OFFERING.

| | |
|---|---|
| Mrs C Palmer | $ 1.00 |
| Mrs H A Swearingen | 2.00 |
| H S Dutchins | 5.00 |
| Mrs Margaret Woodward | 5.00 |
| S A Chaplin | 4.00 |
| Jane Hallsbach | 1.00 |
| Hale Hallsbach | 1.00 |
| Mrs N H Russell | 1.00 |
| Mrs T E Parker | 2.00 |
| Isaac W Young | 2.00 |

Poetry.

THROUGH LIFE.

We slight the gifts that every season bears,
And let them fall unheeded from our grasp
In our great eagerness to reach and clasp
The promised treasure of our coming years:

Or else we mourn some great good passed,
And, in the shadow of our grief shut in,
Before the larger good we yet may win,
The offered peace and gladness of today.

So through the chambers of our life we pass,
And leave them one by one, and never stay;
Not knowing how much pleasantness there was
In each, until the closing of the door
Has sounded through the house, and all is gone,
And in our hearts we sigh, "Forevermore."

Selections.

The Survival of the Fittest--Problems of a Future Life.

The first or introductory sermon upon the doctrine of a future life was delivered last evening by J. F. Wilcox to a good audience at the First Christian Church, Oakley avenue, corner of Jackson street, it being the intention to continue them every Sunday night for several weeks. The gentleman selected as the text for discourse: And ye will not come to me that ye might have life.—John v. 40.

The controversy concerning a future life is as old as literature, if not as old as the race itself. From the earliest ages the sorrowing have risen up in the face of their dead and asked in the language of Job, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Walking by the light of revelation, the Jewish mind had its answer ready in the affirmative; but, taught only by the phenomena of death, which man only shared with all other living things, the Gentile nations have ever been in doubt. Deep thinkers among them have always perceived that the problem of the present life could not be solved without granting a future one, and hence the controversy is probably coeval with the existence of sin and death.

Yet the doubters have always been in the majority, for appearances are immensely in their favor, and from the first weeping mother who sat in the dust at the feet of her murdered boy to the last bleeding heart which this hour throbs in anguish over its dead, despair and doubt are the first guests who come to the house of mourning.

In the time of our Savior this despair had become well-nigh universal, and had invaded even the Jewish mind so that one of the most numerous sects among them—the Sadducees—boldly denied the existence of the supernatural or the possibility of a future life. Nearly 400 years before the birth of Christ, Socrates had sought to introduce into Athens the Egyptian philosophy of the immortality of the soul. This was contrary to the popular opinions, as he himself testifies, and in consequence he was accused of corrupting the Athenian youth, and unjustly condemned to drink the fatal hemlock. His opinions, however, did not perish with him. Plato became the most eminent of his pupils, and gave a scope and prominence to his philosophy which has endured to the present time. Zeno, the founder of the sect of the Stoics, embraced his philosophy, and his disciples were, in the time of Christ, its principal advocates among the Greeks and Romans.

The opposing doctrine, however, retained its supremacy. The controversy had soon after the time of Socrates developed a distinct school of philosophers, of whom Epicurus was the most celebrated, and after him Lucretius, the Roman, who were in the time of Christ the most numerous and popular, and whose philosophy of despair was aptly epitomized by Paul in the sentiment quoted from some of their writers: "Let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die." It will be observed that this controversy was upon the simple question as to whether man was or was not immortal; whether each and every member of the race had by nature an undying principle within him, and was, therefore, destined by his Maker to the enjoyment of a future and an endless life, or at death perished like all other living things. The Platonic philosophy as represented by the Stoics, maintained a future life for all by virtue of the immortal soul which all possessed. The possession of this the Epicureans denied, and hence rejected a future life for any and taught that at death all perished like the brute. Between these two schools of philosophy Christianity stepped and laid its friendly hand upon both. And while it indorsed neither, it admitted that both had some truth. It taught a new doctrine, of which neither had conceived; it taught a future life for the good alone; and that not by virtue of the possession of an immortal principle in themselves, but as God's free gift to the believer in Christ, to be obtained or bestowed in God's good pleasure by a resurrection of reliving in bodily form of the real man who had died. To the Stoics it said: "What you affirm of all men we affirm of the good alone—they shall live again." To the Epicureans it said: "What you affirm of all men we affirm shall happen only to the bad; they shall perish. To both it said, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust."

Be it remembered that the Apostles of our Lord used the exact language of both these Greek schools. When they said that the unbeliever and the vile should "perish," should be "destroyed," should "die," they used the exact Greek words which the Epicureans employed when they announced the fate of the whole race. Did the Apostles mean to teach by the use of these words that the unbeliever should live forever, indeed, as Plato taught, but in pain? In the language of a very forcible writer on this subject, Henry Constable: "Did the Apostles teach the doctrine of Plato in the language of Epicurus?"

This, I think, can be clearly established, was the true character of the controversy in the time of Christ and the apostles. The claim of Christ as the true life-giver was urged in the face of both opinions; the Jews of both schools—the Pharisees and Sadducees—rejected those claims, and the complaint of our text: "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." The Pharisees who arose soon after the Babylonish captivity had imbibed the doctrine of the soul's immortality from the heathen, although they still, to some degree, believed also in the Bible doctrine of the resurrection of the body, and would not therefore come to Jesus for a life they held they each possessed in himself, while the Sadducees—the Epicureans of the Jews—would not come to him for a life they did not believe possible.

But the Christian doctrine of future life did not long remain the simple and vigorous thing we have depicted. With the entrance into the church of multitudes of Platonic philosophers came also their philosophy, and gradually Christianity became encumbered with a double scheme, one of which must always be superfluous. If it was declared that all mankind had a future life because all had an immortal part which survived death, the inquiry at once arose: Why then the resurrection? If all live and go at once to their reward for what purpose are their bodies to be raised? On the other hand, if the dead are to be raised to life again then they are dead until raised, hence natural immortality cannot be true. Out of the clash of such opposing systems have arisen all the controversies which have afflicted the church with schism and false doctrine to this day. Upon the Pagan doctrine of the immortality of the soul the Papacy and following it the Protestant sects have reared a vast and contradictory mass of doctrines and practices which thinking men the world over have vomited out of their mouths.

I solemnly declare that it is my most firm conviction that the doctrine in question is today what it has always been, the fruitful parent of error and skepticism and the principle obstacle to the progress of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in the world. To it may clearly be referred the origin of most of the dreadful errors and practices both of Paganism and the Papacy, as well as the various other falsehoods and humbugs which have from time to time appeared in the world to add to the affliction and ruin of mankind. But I would now call your attention to the similarity of the present status of this old controversy to its condition in the time of our Savior as we have depicted it. Two antagonistic systems are now, as then, engaged in a relentless warfare. A daily increasing multitude following the lead of such scientists as Darwin, Huxley, Spencer, Tyndall, and others, have fallen into doubt and despair of a future life; and we have in the modern Agnostics or Utilitarian school a revival of the old Epicureans. On the other hand, nearly the whole mass of the Christian sects, backed by Spiritualists and a host of anti-Christian "isms," earnestly maintain the doctrine of the soul's inherent immortality, while now, as then, a feeble few also bearing the Christian name are seeking to lay a friendly hand upon both, and offer to each Christ Jesus, our Lord, who declared "I am come that ye might have life." As one of these, I am profoundly convinced that in this doctrine of immortality, based upon character developed by means of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, will be found a solution of most of the moral problems, which vex mankind, an antidote to its principal errors, and cure for the most of its ills. With a profound confidence, too, in its ultimate victory over all opposing theories based upon the omnipotence of truth, I have determined, as God shall give me utterance to urge upon my fellow Christians and fellowmen an investigation of the ground upon which it rests. These proofs I shall examine as fully as I am able in the course of these meetings, and as truth is fearless I invite the assistance of candid criticism at any time during or after each discourse, either on the spot or through the press, believing that adverse criticism will only cause the truth to shine the more brightly.

And now in the remainder of the time at my disposal tonight I desire to define more fully this doctrine which is now, more than at any period since the Reformation, urging itself upon the attention of mankind. What is it then? Nothing more than that the virtuous alone shall live forever. Surely the virtuous alone are fit to live forever! The virtuous alone are fit to survive the extinction of death. This is the doctrine of the survival of the fittest. Emerson says in effect that he cannot imagine why men should so generally desire endless time—immortality—since the little they have hope hangs so heavily upon their hands. They have now more than they know what to do with, and their principal occupation is in inventing new ways of murdering it. Why should they then pine for so much time that their effort to kill it would be absolutely hopeless? To what purpose, I would inquire, should a wise God bestow interminable life upon those who have wasted the three score years and ten he has given them here? Would a wise father bestow all his goods upon his profligate son, who had wasted all his own patrimony upon gluttons, drunkards, and harlots? Neither will God, who is wiser than men, intrust the "true riches"—eternal life—to those who have wasted his bounty here. This doctrine is only another form of stating the infinite wisdom and love of God. We live in a world of law—law administered in love and devised by wisdom, and one of the wisest of the regulations and most beneficent in its effects, is that death should follow so swiftly upon the heels of sin. When sin first came into the world, wisdom and love, as well as justice, hurried forward the angel of death to cut short with his relentless yet merciful sword its dreadful reign of misery and woe. So we find that a life of sin is a short one as a rule. "The wicked do not live out half their days." Dividing not only demoralizes and ruins the moral nature but debauches, weakens, and finally destroys the physical being. This law carried forward to a finality is that for which we contend. "Another world" about which so much is said is principally the creation of a fertile imagination. We shall never reside outside of the universe which God rules; and every part of it and during all time will be governed by the immutable laws which govern this part of it here and now. Another of these laws is that so often insisted upon by the Rev. Joseph Cook, but from which he draws most unwarrantable inferences—viz.: every act of our lives tends to fixedness or permanence of character. This is expressed in that terrible word "habit." The repetition of any act tends to a permanent condition of the mental, moral, and physical organs employed in it, and therefore to a state from which there is no retreat. Like all of the Divine laws which govern our being, there resides in it both good and evil. For by the same law both good and evil habits are formed. Now, it is pertinent to inquire if it would be either wisdom or goodness to endow any being with immortality before he had reached that fixed state of vice or virtue? Look around you upon the faces you see in the busy world. Scrutinize them as you pass along our crowded streets and ask yourself how many of them you would like to see about you forever. Upon thousands is the brand of vice as plainly as if printed in capitals. Lust leers out of the corners of their eyes, and avarice glowers upon you with the hungry eye of the wolf. Every form of vice and misery peers out upon you from behind the transparent masks that face you upon the streets. Vice leading down to deeper and deeper depths, and misery groaning in lower caverns of woe. Answer me. Is it wise to stamp all this with immortality? Is it merciful? Is it just? Look at them; they are breaking down. Their cheeks have lost their roses, the eye its fire; their steps are slow and feeble; their intellect has lost its strength. They no longer take pleasure in vice, and they have scarcely strength left to blaspheme. Inexorable law which links sin to death is hurrying them out of the world. Would you reverse that law and give to vice eternal vigor and to sorrow an immortal tooth? Better, a thousand times better, God's plan that "He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption," while he alone "who soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." Better far that "the wages of sin should be death, but the gift of God eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Paul most positively declares that God will render to every man according to his deeds, to them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality—eternal life. This places immortality or eternal life just where we contend it should be placed, as the reward of well-doing.—The Chicago Tribune, November 27, 1882.

Communications.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

Once more I resume my pencil in order to communicate with my friends scattered abroad. November 16 found me on my way from Exeter to Boston, the latter place being the centre of my labors for about nine years. I visited many old time friends and also many places that awake recollections of the past that the hand of father Time had well nigh obliterated. I visited old Harvard, which, by the way, has become a colossus; its library of about 300,000 volumes, embraces works by the most noted authors in every department of moral, mental and physical science. It is under the most skillful management and affords the student the means of obtaining the greatest amount of information with the least possible trouble. The memorial hall which has been lately added to the already numerous structures, is a beautiful edifice, erected for the purpose of furnishing meals to the students at the lowest rates, upon the following plan. A man is employed as a caterer who buys at the market, employs the cooks and waiters, and furnishes breakfast at 8 a. m.; lunch at noon and dinner at 5:30 p. m. At the end of each week the expense is divided by the number of students, which averages about $360 or $400 per week. The hall is embellished with sixty-seven oil paintings of presidents, senators, and eminent scholars. There are also sixteen busts of men like Plato, Socrates, Aristotle, Archimedes and others both of ancient and modern times. There are also seven large memorial windows representing in life-size the figures of the masters of ancient philosophy, astronomy and other sciences. There are also six hundred and twenty-five sittings furnished at fifty-one tables; it is an imposing sight, and the question will thrust itself upon the mind of the beholder, What is to be the future of this company of bookworms? Am I gazing upon presidents, senators, lawyers, doctors, ministers, thieves, beggars, murderers, gamblers, in embryo? Time alone can reveal the facts.

I next visited the Boston Public Library, which is open every day in the year except Sundays and the six legal holidays. The reading rooms are open Sundays from two until ten p. m. There are 297,737 volumes in the library building and 115,705 volumes in the branch libraries at the suburban towns that have been annexed to the city of Boston, making a total of 413,442 volumes, accessible to the reading public. Truly knowledge is being increased. Dr. Moon, of England, has presented 351 volumes and 200 sheets of printed matter in embossed type for the blind. The letters are raised upon the paper so that the blind can feel the letters with their fingers and thus read. Well, it is indeed a blessing to have eyes in the fingers if we have none in our heads. Dr. Moon has printed portions of the Bible in two hundred languages by this system.

I next visited the New England Electric Light Co's works. There are seventeen dinamos or generators which are run by an engine. The generators are speeded at one thousand revolutions per minute. Each machine requires ten horse power and furnishes lightning for ten carbon lamps of the Weston patent. I remained at the works until after dark, so that I might see the machines in operation. The street lines are positive and negative wires passing to and from the machines, forming a circuit. The lamps contain two sticks of carbon eight inches long and three-eighths of an inch in diameter, composed of charcoal and coal oil and compressed by hydraulic pressure. Two of these are inserted one above the other, the ends touching. The current passing through ignites the carbon at the junction of the two, causing a white light of the power of one hundred candles.

But I will not worry you with all I have seen, but will pass to tell you that Sunday, November 19, I had the pleasure of visiting the church that worship at Heard St., Chelsea, Mass. I saw many old-time friends, and I had the privilege of testifying for the truth. In the evening I wended my way to the church at the corner of 1nd Place and Shawmut Ave. This meeting is under the supervision of the World's Crisis, elder E. A. Stockman, editor of the above named paper, supplies the desk at present. I was invited into the desk and offered prayer, although I confess I was surprised at the invitation, since the Crisis either neglected or refused to publish a card addressed to the friends of the writer and sent to the Crisis as soon as he arrived in New England. It is possible that the card did not reach the Crisis; if so I am pleased to record the invitation as a token of fellowship; but if it did reach the office, then I must regard it as a stroke of policy, as the business agent of the Crisis who introduced me to the preacher, was heard to say that Ramsey was writing for THE RESTITUTION. Whether my writing for THE RESTITUTION had anything to do with the invitation or not I am unable to say. But I can say I was glad to be there; I enjoyed the meeting and was pleased to meet old friends. I also had the pleasure of meeting Br. and Sr. Hastings and tarried with the family one night. I found Sr. H. filled with the spirit of truth and growing in the knowledge of the same. It was blessed to listen to her while she portrayed the beauties of the future ages. She is ripening fast. I was strengthened by her childlike faith in the promises of God. Br. H. is doing the work of a Hercules, often preaching three or five times on Sunday, writing tracts and books, and managing his depository and writing for his paper. Surely his help must come from the Mighty One. May God bless his labors and set him a table in the midst of his enemies.

But I must draw this letter to a close and will just say in regard to myself that I am recovering rather slowly from my difficulty. I am unable to preach and it is something of a task to write my communications. I am unable to give any encouragement to those who have written me in regard to meetings. I think of starting for Chicago Wednesday, the 28th. I will get my mail at Floyd, Iowa, after this. C. C. RAMSEY.

THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT.

"Endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." Eph. iv. 3.

Dear brethren of like precious faith, I fear there is not that unity among us there should be. Since I left home on the 13th of September, I have visited several places, and I find the cause is in a languishing state; and when I enquire into the cause, the brethren tell me there has been such a lack of unity of faith on some points, and the brethren have become discouraged. Every brother that comes along to preach has some new hobby, and it has had the tendency to separate the body, in the place of drawing them together. And many of the brethren are not taking our paper, THE RESTITUTION. What a pity. There is such a need of all taking it. In the first place they need to take it to benefit themselves, and to help keep up the paper. And some say they quit because there was so much contention among our brethren on some points on which they differed. I intend what preaching I do to try and see how near we can get together.

Dear brethren our time to work is short; so let all apply our time and talent to the work of saving men and women in the kingdom, when the Lord comes. We want more of the practical teaching, and also the practical work. The right theory is to be taught, but theory without practice will not do. The farmer may understand the theory of farming, and yet without the practical part he can't raise corn or wheat. Also the doctor may have a good understanding of the human system, and of medicines, and yet if he does not put into practice what he had learned, he cannot make a living out of theory alone. And so in all branches of business, the theory and then the practice. So in Christianity, we want the like precious faith, then the practice. Paul says if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him. There must be self-denial, there must be contending for the faith; how much need there is for living faith in these last days. Let us all that go forth to preach the word, live more devoted to God and his cause. May the Lord help. I for one need the prayers of my dear brethren, and all the dear ones that I may be found faithful. We want more zeal, more earnestness, more determination on our part to persevere in the cause of our Master.

We are nearing the end of our lives, and the end of Gentile times. I feel as if I could not express myself as fully as I would like to, but I feel more than I can express. I see so much to do, so many to save, and so few to preach. I do feel burdened; we need more help in the field, and those that are in to work harder, and the Lord will reward in his time. Come, dear brethren and sisters one and all, give aid in every way you can. Let sinners know you feel an interest in their salvation, then they will take an interest in their own salvation. Let us be up and doing, for the time will come when we can't work. Strike, let every nerve and sinew tell on ages, toil for God. J. S. HAYOU.

P. S.—I will try and get some subscribers for the paper. Have failed so far—the old complaint: too much jangling among the preachers. What a pity. J. S. H.

Youths' Column.

God Bless the Little Children.

ELLIE E. DARE.

God bless the little children,
Wherever they may be!
Far out on the silent prairie,
Down by the sounding sea—
Like flowers in the crowded city,
Like birds in the forest free,
God bless the little children,
Wherever they may be!

Whether they walk in splendid homes
With satin-sandled feet,
Or wearily run bare-footed
Adown the busy street;
Whether they kneel at eventide
Beside a mother's knee,
Or lonely sleep in curbstone homes,
Still tenderly pray we—
God bless the little children,
Wherever they may be!

Saved in a Tree-Top.

After a great wind-storm in Texas, a storm that carried off the roofs of houses, tore trees out of the ground, and did a great deal of damage, some men started out to see if anybody was hurt. This is what one of them tells:

"It was near night, and quite dark in the woods, when they heard a cry. They stopped to look about and listen. They heard the cry again, and then they saw some dark thing up in a tree. A cradle with a dear little baby in it.

"The wind had blown down the baby's home. It had carried off baby, cradle, and all. The cradle was caught by the branch of a high tree. Then, the wind blew against it so hard that the cradle was wedged in a crotch of the tree. It was so fast that the men had to saw away the boughs to get it down. There was the dear baby, all safe and sound in its cradle-nest."

Our Influence.

The well known evangelist, Rev. E. Payson Hammond, recently related the following story: "A young lady preparing for a masquerade ball was before a large mirror, fitting upon her head a crown decorated with silver stars. Her little fair-haired sister climbed up in a chair beside her, and was pointing toward the crown, when the eldest sister asked what she was doing. 'Oh,' said she, 'I was just thinking of what my Sunday school teacher told us last Sabbath. She said if we were good and would lead some one to Jesus by our influence, that we would have stars in our crowns in heaven. How I would like to have a star in my crown!' This was all that was said. The sister went to the ball that night, but was very unhappy. Returning home, she went into the room where her little sister was sleeping, and bending over her she softly kissed her cheek, saying with a broken heart: 'Dear little sister, you shall have one star in your crown in Heaven.' Then, kneeling by her bedside, she gave her heart to Jesus." Young men, are you influencing any by your life and example that "Shall shine as the stars forever and ever?" Dan. xii. 3. —Y. M. C. A. Watchman.

Obeying Mother Pleasantly.

Harry had seen some older boys fly their kites from the tops of the houses; and he thought it would be nice fun if he could do so too. So he came to his aunt and said, "Aunt Mary, may I go up to the top of the house and fly my kite?"

His aunt wished to do everything to please him; but she thought it very unsafe; so she said, "No, Harry, my boy. I think that is very dangerous sort of play. I'd rather you wouldn't go."

"All right. Then I'll go out on the bridge," said Harry.

His aunt smiled, and said she hoped he would always be as obedient as that.

"Harry, what are you doing?" said his mother one day.

"Spinning my new top, mother."

"Can't you take the baby out to ride? Get out the carriage and I'll bring him down."

"All right," shouted the boy, as he put his top away in his pocket, and hastened to obey his mother.

"Uncle William, may I go over to your shop this morning?" said Harry one day at breakfast. "I want to see those baskets again that I was looking at yesterday."

"Oh yes, Harry," said his uncle, "I shall be very glad to have you."

"But I cannot spare you to-day, Harry," said his mother. "I want you to go out with me. You shall go to the shop another day."

"All right," said Harry, and he went on with his breakfast.

No matter what Harry was asked to do, or what refusal he met with when asking for anything, his constant answer was, "All right." He never stopped to worry or tease; he never asked "Why can't I?" Harry had learned to obey, and to obey in good humor.

The Sentinel.

"Mamma," said little Ernest Brooks, who was standing at a window overlooking a number of fields in which the young corn was beginning to show itself. "Mamma, I wonder why that rook sits so still on the very top of the highest tree in the row; I have watched it for ever so long, and it has not moved. Why does it not go down into the field where the others are?"

"Where is it, Ernest?" asked his mother. "Oh! I see it now: it is a sentinel."

"A sentinel, mamma; what is that?

"It is keeping a look-out, so that no enemy may approach the others. If any one came in sight it would call to those in the field, and then they would fly away before any harm could befall them."

"But, mamma, rooks cannot talk, so how can it tell the others?"

"They do not talk as we do, Ernest, but they understand each other perfectly well."

"Oh! look, look," cried Ernest at that moment, "the rooks are all flying away in such a hurry. Do you think the sentinel told them to go?"

"I cannot tell," answered Mrs. Brooks; "but very likely it did. Yes, now I can see the cause of their fright."

"Do you, mamma! what is it?" asked Ernest.

"There is a man coming across the further field, with a gun in his hand; perhaps if it had not been for the sentinel he would have shot some of the other rooks. The one you noticed on the top of the tree gave a warning note, and away they all flew as you saw."

"Now," said the little boy, "the man with the gun has gone past, and the rooks are coming on to the field again."

Soon after this, Mrs. Brooks told Ernest to sit down beside her, as she wanted to tell him something; and when he had taken his seat, his mother said:

"Do you know that every one has a sentinel, Ernest? Papa and mamma and you, my boy, and little sister, and every one else."

"But, mamma, where are they?" inquired Ernest looking round.

"Oh! you cannot see your sentinel, but you can feel it," replied Mrs. Brooks. "I think you felt it this morning. I hope you did.

"I do not know what you mean, mamma," returned Ernest.

"When you were so angry with your little sister, what did you feel?"

"I felt sorry afterwards," said Ernest.

"Yes! and it was your sentinel, conscience, that made you feel so. God has placed a conscience in your heart, and that is what I call your sentinel. It was that that called to you and told you that anger was trying to take you prisoner; but you did not listen to its voice; and then afterwards it upbraided you for not doing so.

"Suppose the rooks had not obeyed the voice of their sentinel, what would have been the consequences, do you think?"

"I suppose some of them would have been shot."

"Yes, most likely; and when you let any sin become the master of you, you are acting more foolishly than the birds would have done if they had refused to take their sentinel's advice, for no sin, however small you may think it, can gain a mastery over you without rubbing your heart of some of its purity. Sin leaves a stain behind it, wherever it goes. Think of this, my boy, and try always to listen to the voice of your sentinel, conscience."—Youth's Companion.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will speak as follows:

Friday before the second Sunday in December at Rensselaer, Ind.

Saturday before the third Sunday in December at Macy, Ind.

Saturday before the fourth Sunday in December at Shoals, Ind., as Brother Stewart may appoint.

All of above meetings to continue over following Sunday.

JOHN FOORE.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Sinaitic, the New and the Davidian covenants; their varying and reciprocal relationship to each other. By C. H. Myers. 192 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth Not Error; or a concise view of the Scriptural doctrine of immortality and future punishment. By Silas Hemp. 80 pages, price 15cts.

The Blessed Purpose, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Silas Hemp. 48 pages, price 10cts.

Material Immortality; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a compact defense and Bible view of material immortality, not by birth but by grace. By O. H. L. Crosier. 16 pages, price 10cts.

The World made Fresh; or Jesus Christ, who he is! By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 8 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1882, put into tract form.

Poetry.

EVENING TEARS AND MORNING SONGS.

FRANCIS RIDLEY HAVERGAL.

In the evening there is weeping,
Lengthening shadows, failing sight,
Silent darkness slowly creeping
Over all things dear and bright.

In the evening there is weeping,
Lasting all the twilight through.
Phantom sorrows never sleeping,
Waking slumbers of the true.

In the morning cometh singing,
Cometh joy and cometh light,
Wears the sun at length, bringing
Healing on his wings of light.

In the evening cometh singing—
Songs that never lie silent and
Angel sentinels, ever bringing
Tidings new with shine to shield.

Are the twilight shadows casting
Heavy gloom upon thy heart?
Soon, in radiance everlasting,
Night forever shall depart.

Art thou weeping, sad and lonely,
Through the evening of the days?
All thy aching shall be only
Prelude of more perfect praise.

Darkest hour is nearest dawning,
Solemn herald of the day:
Singing cometh in the morning—
God shall wipe thy tears away.

Communications.

THE SECOND DEATH, WHAT IS IT?

The second death supposes the first; and the phraseology used by the Revelator, every true Christian should clearly understand without comment. But as views yet conflict on the subject, further thought and reflection seem to be essential for its solution. The first thing necessary is to know what the meaning of the first death is. Is it possible that it can refer to individuality—all who have and are yet to receive the Adamic death? If so why should the Revelator assume the fact, that it is prior to the second death, and who locates the time before the commencement of the resurrection, and the establishment of the kingdom of God. It is distinctly said that "the wages of sin is death." Not two deaths, but one. But if any portion of the human family are to be instantly resurrected from the dust into being, and then have to die again, to fulfil this phrase, "second death," I ask how it can be that no one of the many writers of the Bible has even indicated anything of the kind, but one alone, and he only three times and then radically averse to this position.

The two deaths, each of which can have but one true and logical meaning, and directly referring to the two great catastrophes that the race of man is destined to incur; each one almost exterminates the family of man. Noah's flood of course is the first death, when he and his family only were saved. But the second death is at the great and dreadful day of the Lord, when the human family experiences the greatest tribulation that ever was or shall be. Matt. xxiv. 21; Mal. iv. 5. Christ compares this great day to that of the flood, and says, "And the flood came and took them all away: so shall also the coming of the son of man be," vs. 29. But this last death is not by water, but by fire; and to prepare our minds for the reception of the Revelator's truth, I will quote a verse of Mal. iv. :

"For behold the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." "But the day of the Lord will come, in the which the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." 2 Peter iii. 10. "The inhabitants of the earth are burned and few men left." Isa. xxiv. 6. "For as the new heavens and the new earth which I shall make, shall remain before me, so shall your seed and your name remain." Isa. lxvi. 22, see also lxv. 15; xxxiii. 12; xxviii. 22; Jer. xxv. 15–38. "And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire and brimstone." See Ezek. xxxviii.

These texts are only a few that support the general view of the subject. And the fire and brimstone that destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah stand as a monumental type, prefiguring the one that ends the Gentile supremacy from the hand of God. And is what the Revelator calls "the lake of fire and brimstone," and says it is "the second death." How clear then it is to all unbiased minds, that they who are swept from the stage of action by this fiery element, are those who live at the close of the age, and belong, or at least adhere somewhat to the great worldly Christian apostate power, wielded by the man of sin, in his persecution of the saints of God for three years and a half. See Dan. vii. 13–27; xi. 21–45. At the close of which the Armageddon battle comes off for decision of right and power, and the saints take the kingdom. See also Rev. xiv. 14–20; xvi. 13–21.

But why this great persecution, and its termination in this final battle, in which the saints of the most high use no earthly weapon, but take shelter under the wing of their leader's strength. See Rev. xix. 11–17; Isa. lxiii. 1–6. These truths must ere long be unfolded, that the people of God may have the key to understand the plan of the kingdom. This great apostate and opposing power to the doctrine and plan of the establishment of the new order of things and against which the ten kings make war (Rev. xvii. 14) must be destroyed. And the fiery element, or lake of fire and brimstone, is the weapon by which it is exterminated. And in its place the gospel kingdom comes, in which the resurrection of man can only come forth.

The Revelator gives a little catalogue of some of the characters thus destroyed. "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and all liars, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." xxi. 8. Let it be remembered that this gigantic transaction is before the time of the resurrection of man, or the establishment of the kingdom in which it occurs. How absurd then the idea that the wicked dead must rise first, and be made alive, and then have to die again, that this phrase, "second death," may have its prophetic fulfillment.

And let it be remembered by one and all, that this lake of fire has its location here on earth, and no where else. And of course it is here where the beast and the false prophet get into it as the result of their wicked persecution. See Dan. vii. 20–25; viii. 13; xi. 21, 33–45; xii. 1; Rev. xiii. 10, 10; xvi. 16, 20, 21; xx. 14. And no intimation whatever of their being taken from the earth to a locality where this lake of fire and brimstone never was nor never will be, only in the imagination of sceptics! The elementary principles of this lake, or fire and brimstone being in the hand of God, are as such eternal, and he unites them at his will, as a weapon of rebuke, chastisement and death on the wicked oppressors of his people, who aid and assist in the work of man's redemption.

The first, or typical exhibition of this weapon in the hand of God, seems to be in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah—"are set forth for an example suffering the vengeance of eternal life." See Jude. Now this is the same fiery weapon reserved for the destruction of the wicked at the great day—the Armageddon battle. And again it is brought into requisition at the close of the millennial reign, when Gog and Magog are gathered together to battle, the number of whom is as the sands of the sea.

"And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them." Rev. xx. 8, 9. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." vs. 14. Here we find this lake of fire, or second death, not only before the commencement of the first resurrection, or thousand years' reign of the Messiah, but also at the close of it. How impossible then to suppose that this death is one that individuals have to suffer; having once received one death, the wages of sin, and then have to be resurrected in order for this lake of fire, which is the second death, and perchance get into it like those already born and on the earth at this time. The only logical view of this lake-fire death is, that it is a scourge, destined by God to burn up the tares, the wicked of all mankind, and in their place come a righteous and heavenly generation. Then the race of man will be redeemed from death. ADEL HARRIS.

Selections.

THE SABBATH DAY.

Editor Ontario:

DEAR SIR:—"Truth Seeker" wants chapter and verse to show that the Sabbath was kept before it was given to the Jews. We know that the record we have of its being kept is in the 16th chapter of Exodus at the fall of the manna. As we said before, the book of Genesis was not a rule given to the patriarchs to walk by. It does not command men to love God with all their hearts. It does not prohibit idolatry, adultery, theft, etc. Who will say that the patriarchs were under no restraint in these things. We have shown by Christ's words that the Sabbath was made for man. The original means "the man," so it must have been the man Adam, he meant.

The Sabbath is not mentioned in the Bible from Moses to David, and will T. S. say for that reason it was not kept during that period of 600 years? He says that the Jews were the only nation commanded to keep the Sabbath. "And the sons of the stranger that join themselves to the Lord to serve him and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, everyone that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it and taketh hold of my covenant." Isaiah lvi. 7.

Why do Christ tell his followers to pray that their flight be not on the Sabbath day, at the destruction of Jerusalem, which occured 40 years afterwards, if the Sabbath was nailed to the cross as T. S. says?

To show T. S. that there is a distinction between the two laws we will make a few comparisons. The Moral we will call No. 1, and the Ceremonial No. 2:—

No. 1 existed in Eden before the fall.

No. 2 was given after the fall.

No. 1 was violated in the transgression which caused the fall, Gen. iii. 6.

No. 2 was given in consequence of that transgression of No. 1, Gal. iii. 19.

No. 1 relates only to moral duties, Ex. xx. 1–17, etc. No. 2 was wholly ceremonial, pointing to the promised seed, Heb. ix. 10.

No. 1 was spoken by God from heaven, Deut. iv. 12. No. 2 was spoken by Moses, Deut. i. 1–6.

No. 1 was written by God, Ex. xxxi. 18. No. 2 was written by Moses, Deut. xxxi. 9.

No. 1 was engraved upon stone, Deut. iv. 12. No. 2 was written in a book, Deut. xxxi. 24.

No. 1 was placed in the ark, Deut. x. 5. No. 2 was put in the side of the ark, Deut. xxxi. 26.

No. 1 was "right," "true" and "good," Neh. ix. 13. No. 2 was not good, Ex. xx. 25.

No. 1 was a law which if a man do he shall ever live in it, Ex. xx. 11

No. 2 was a law whereby they should not live, Ex. xx. 25.

How could these possibly be the same law?

No. 1 was perfect, Ps. xix. 7. No. 2 made nothing perfect, Heb vii. 19.

No. 1 Christ did not come to destroy: Matth. v. xvii. No. 2 he abolished, Eph. ii. 15.

No. 1 is to endure while heaven and earth stand, Matt. v. 18. No. 2 passed away when the seed came, Gal. iii. 19.

Of No. 1 Christ said: "Whosoever breaks one of these commandments and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven," Matt. v. 19. Of No. 2 the apostles said: "We gave no such commandment," that "ye should keep the law," Acts xv. 24.

No. 1 is "the law of liberty," Jas. ii. 12. No. 2 is a "yoke of bondage," Gal. v. 1.

No. 1 the apostles delighted in Rom. vii. 22. No. 2 was a yoke which could not be borne, Acts xv. 10.

No. 1 is not abolished but established by faith, Rom. iii. 31. No. 2 was abolished by the cross, Eph. ii. 15.

How could the same law be abolished and not abolished at the same time.

No. 1 is spiritual Rom. vii. 14. No. 2 is carnal Heb. vii. 16. Can the same law be both spiritual and carnal at the same time? Let T. S. answer.

No. 1 is to be kept with the faith of Jesus, Rev. xiv. 12. No. 2 is superseded by the faith of Jesus, Gal. iii. 19, 25.

No. 1 is the law by which the world will be judged, Jas. ii. 12, Rev. xii. 13, 14. No. 2 will judge no man, Col. ii. 16.

"Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God." 1 Cor. vii. 19. "This is the love of God that we keep his commandments." 1 John, v. 3.

We could give more texts to show the distinction between the two laws, and that the moral is still binding on Christians, but surely "Truth Seeker" will not need to seek any further, if it is truth he is seeking for.

"T. S." says, "It can be shown that the Gentiles were not even offered salvation until the Jews rejected Christ and the Apostles." We claim that salvation was offered immediately after Adam and Eve were turned out of Eden, and that Christ stood in the same relation to the fallen race that he does now. This is the only right view that can be had of the plan of redemption.

James says "faith without works is dead." What he means by works is the keeping of the commandments. Faith and works must go together. "The commandments of God and faith of Jesus." Rev. xiv.

We still maintain that Christ is not a law giver. God the Father is our law giver and Christ is our advocate. Jas. iv. 12. 1 John ii. 1. But if as T. S. asserts that Christ is our law giver, then who our advocate? Christ was a prophet or teacher like Moses. Deut. xviii. 15–18. Acts iii. 22.

Moses was not a law giver. He did not legislate but received words from the mouth of God and spake them to the people. Lev. xxiv. 11–14. Num. xv. 32–39. Like Moses in this respect, Christ did not legislate but taught that which the Father put into his mouth to speak. Deut. xviii. 18. John vii. 16 & viii. 28 & xii. 49, 50 & xiv. 24. Christ taught obedience to the Father's law. Matt. v. 17–19. Rev. xii. 14.

There is no contradiction in saying we are not under the law when we are keeping it. The law holds them only under condemnation who are breaking it. Those who keep the law are free.

The whole object of the no-law people seems to be to get rid of the Fourth Commandment, which is the only one of the ten that tells who is the giver of the law.

Mr. Editor, we fear we have now trespassed too much on your kindness, so will close.

SABBATH KEEPER.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

Editor Ontario:

DEAR SIR:—"Sabbath Keeper" says that when Christ mentioned that "the Sabbath was made for man" that it should read "the man," and that he meant Adam. Now S. K. cannot you see that this would spoil your theory entirely, because if the Sabbath was made simply for Adam we would infer that it was intented for no one else—not even Eve. I believe that when Christ said the Sabbath was "for man," that the language would apply to any portion of mankind who had been asked to keep it. The Sabbath was given to the Jews and it is natural to suppose they were subject to it until further notice. So that argument about the Sabbath not being mentioned from Moses to David falls to the ground. His quotation of Isa. xvi. 6 is not to the point, but is rather in favor of the view I advance as it only proves that strangers or individuals of other nations might join themselves to the Lord by going in among the Jews and observing their laws including the Sabbath. But this has no reference to outside nations. Num. xv. 16 says "one law....shall be for you (the Jews) and for the stranger that sojourneth with you" (the Jews). It is stated concerning the Sabbath that it was to be observed by the people it was given to (the Jews) and "by the stranger that is within thy gates." Exodus xx. 10. We would logically suppose then that the "strangers" outside the "gates" of the Jews were not required to observe that day. I have nowhere stated that individuals living with the Jews were not obliged to keep the Sabbath. What I said was, that no other nation were even required to observe it and "S. K." may "search the Scriptures" until the day of judgement and he will not be able to find one solitary passage to prove that any nation outside of the Jews were subject to the seventh day Sabbath is. The fact that strangers or aliens going in among the Jews to live were required to observe their laws is just what any civilized nation of to-day requires of aliens. "S. K." asks why Christ recognized that the Sabbath day would be kept 40 years after his death if the Sabbath was nailed to the cross." Answer. The bulk of the people who inhabited Jerusalem and surrounding country being Jews the Sabbath day would be in force among them at that time and has been kept by that people to this day. "S. K." might just as logically argue that we should offer sacrifices now seeing that the Jews kept that ordinance up for some time after the great sacrifice of Christ. He next quotes a number of passages of Scripture and classifies them to show that there were two distinct laws given by God (which I consider is the worst misapplication of scripture on record), but fails to quote one passage to the point. Let him find some Scripture that makes the distinction and classification that he does, then his argument will be worth something. Assertions prove nothing. The writers of the Bible when speaking of God's laws do not make the distinction that "S. K." does, therefore I infer he is wrong and that Paul and other Bible writers are right. Of course I am aware that the law of God was given at different periods in human history commencing with Adam, but not a word about the Sabbath being given to any nation except the Jews. "S. K's." quotations referring to what Christ said about the law viz., that he did not come to destroy the law but to fulfil it and that till Heaven and earth pass, one jot or tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled" destroys "S. K's." theory instead of supporting it. This language where quoted in full shows that when the law was fulfilled, it was to pass away. This passage and others teach that Christ came to fulfil the law (Math. v. 17) and he is the only person who did and thereby made it honorable by demonstrating that it could be kept. It then passed away legally, at the crucifixion and now we are "saved by grace through faith" Eph. ii. 8–8; Rom. iii. 24. "Faith is counted for righteousness" Rom. iv. 5. "Therefore by the deeds of the law no flesh shall be justified....but now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested....even the righteousness of which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all them....that believe" Rom. iii. 20–22. "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death," Rom. xiii. 8–10. In my last letter I demonstrated beyond cavil that the law Paul was discussing was that containing the Sabbath and that it ended with the crucifixion of Christ. "S. K." has not seen fit to even make an attempt at nullifying that argument for the reason that it is impossible for him to do so and stick to the Bible. There were several other points in that letter that "S. K." has not met, and the reason why he did not is obvious.

I will now take up his objections. He says what he calls law No. 1 was "right, true, and good." Answer, I believe that. What he calls No. 2, he quotes "was not good." I have looked at the passage he refers to, Ex. xx. 25, but find no such language there. The same will apply to his next point, Ex. xx. 11, and xx. 25. He next quotes that "Christ did not come to destroy the law," but if he had quoted the remainder of the verse, he would not only have done away with the law but also with his argument as I have shown on this passage above. He quotes No. 1 as "being perfect," (Isa. xix. 7), and No. 2 "made nothing perfect," Heb. vii. 19. Answer. The law itself was perfect but it made nothing else perfect. So one heading will do for your No. 1 and No. 2 here. He says that "No. 1 lasts while heaven and earth stand." Please be honest "S. K." the word does not say so. The passage simply states that nothing shall pass from the law till it is fulfilled. Christ says he "came to fulfil it," and I believe he did so. No. 1 will harmonize with No. 2 in this case and in all others you have quoted. Paul makes the law a unit all the way through and I guess he was right. What was said about the law before the crucifixion of Christ applied to the Mosaic dispensation, and that which was said about it by Paul after that applies to the Christian dispensation. If "S. K." would keep this in view he would not find it necessary to make two laws out of one. Space will not permit my taking up all his quotations, but the foregoing covers the whole ground. If "Sabbath Keeper" would take his Bible and read the connection to all his quotations he might get some light on the subject. In some cases a few words would kill his deductions and save a great deal of unnecessary writing. For instance, if he reads Paul's arguments all through he will see how "faith establishes the law" that has been "abolished." Where Paul says the "law is carnal," he has reference to the ceremonial part of it. The connection qualifies what Paul says here, but it is all one law with Paul; he says nothing about two laws. Paul calls it "the law" all the way through.

Hoping I will not have to trouble you again, Mr. Editor, I am,

Yours, etc.

"TRUTH SEEKER."

THE DISAPPEARANCE OF ANCIENT WALLS.

Very many of the cities of Palestine and the surrounding countries were celebrated for the strength of their walls. Among Phœnician cities Tyre was one of the most famous in this respect (Josh. xix. 25; Ezek. xxvi. 4; Amos i. 10), although, to appreciate this fact fully, we need to supplement the biblical record with what is to be found in the annuals of Assyria, Babylonia, and Greece. In Philistia we find that Gath, Jabneh, Ashdod, and Gaza were defended by strong walls (II Chron. xxvi. 6; Amos i, 7). Not much is said of the walls of Damascus, yet enough to show that they were the pride of its king (Jer. xlix. 27). If we go east of the Jordan, we find the fenced cities of Moab mentioned (II Kings iii. 19), and likewise others located in the country just north of Moab (Num. xxxii. 17). Some of the latter were built or, perhaps, rather rebuilt by the children of Reuben and the children of Gad, among which were Dibon, Jazer, Jogbehah, Beth-Nimrah, Beth-Haram, Heshbon, and Nebo (Ibid., verses 34–38).

To leave groups and to glance at individual cities, we find that the walls of Rabbath, of the children of Ammon, were noted for their strength (II Sam. xi. 20; Amos i. 14), and the same was true of this place in the Greek period, long after the close of the Hebrew records. Far in the north, just east of the Sea of Galilee, stood the city of the Aphek, whose walls were famous for having caused the death of no less than 27,000 Syrians, the enemies of Israel (I Kings xx. 30). What was the occasion of the falling of this wall? Was it by miraculous power, or was it the result of an earthquake, to which that region is subject, occurring at that particular juncture? Abel, or Abel-Beth-Maachah, northwest of Lake Merom, was likewise defended by walls which, in the revolt of Sheba, were besieged by Joab and the army of David. II Sam. xx. 15. Further south, in Western Palestine, nineteen of the cities of Naphtali are described as fenced cities as early as the days of Joshua. xix. 35–38. The walls of Bethsheau are mentioned as the place where the bodies of Saul and his sons were hung up by his enemies, after his defeat in Mount Gilboa. I Sam. xxxi. 10, 12. The walls of Samaria were of such strength that the city could resist a siege of great length and severity. II Kings vi. 26, 30; x. 2. Both the upper and the lower Beth-Horon were fenced cities, having walls, gates, and bars in the time of Solomon, who, indeed, built them. II Chron. viii. 5. The fenced cities of Judah seem also to have been numerous. Josh. x. 20; II Chron. xi. 5–10. Among which are mentioned Bethlehem and Hebron. We will close this list of walled cities by a reference to Jericho. The house of Rahab, who secreted the spies of Joshua, was upon the wall of the city. The wall, in a miraculous manner, was to fall down flat, when all the Israelites should shout and the rams' horns should be blown. This result followed, and thus the first conquest of the Hebrews on the west of the Jordan was complete. Josh. ii. 15; vi. 5, 20.

We will refer, also, to a few places that are mentioned by Josephus. The walls about some of these cities or towns were built or rather, rebuilt by Josephus himself. Others were built by Herod the Great and still others had existed from remote times. In Galilee there were Sepphoris, Gischala, Mount Tabor, Julia, Jotapata, Tiberias, and Tarichea. East of the Jordan there were Gamala, Seleucia, Sogane, and Gadara. In Judea there were Masada and Jericho, and opposite Jericho was Bethaeramptha, to which Herod gave the new name of Julias, but which was known in Joshua's time as Beth-Haram. From these lists, gathered from the Old Testament and from Josephus, we have purposely omitted the name of Jerusalem.

What has become of the walls that once defended the cities of Moab and Bashan, of Naphtali and Judah? Heshbon, which was fortified a second time by Herod the Great; but not a trace of these walls remains. Fik, the modern representative of Aphek, east of the Sea of Galilee, is a large village in ruins, with, however, some inhabitable houses. The ancient walls have disappeared. The same is true of nearly all the places that we have mentioned. About the old Tiberias there are still the remains of walls and the fortifications around the summit of Mount Tabor are still to be seen. The walls of Gamala are an exception to the general rule, for they are sufficient even now to convince one of their strength in ancient times. Beth-Haram of Joshua's time, the Bothaeramptha of Josephus, which Herod the Great fortified anew and renamed in honor of Julia, the wife of Augustus, is now represented by some very meager ruins and a few mounds, in which may lie buried important relics.

In some respects Jericho furnishes the best example of the disappearance of ancient walls. In the first place, there is no dispute about the locality; in the second place, the strength of the defenses of this city in former times is a well-known fact; and, thirdly, the entire absence of any traces of ancient walls is a fact that has been observed by thousands who have visited this locality.

I could give some suggestions as to the manner in which these walls have disappeared; but my object in this paper was simply to call attention to the fact of their disappearance in so many cases. It will be seen how the work of the explorer is complicated and rendered difficult. After all the evidence has been carefully gathered and is found to fix a certain site in a certain locality, some would-be critic appears and says: "But the place is entirely destitute of antiquities." This objection appears plausible; but it is often worthless and even absurd, as is readily seen in the case of Jericho. The using of ancient ruins as quarries and the removal of building materials from one locality to another are facts with which the explorer in Palestine soon becomes familiar and which seem to be more true of this country than of any other.—Selah Merrill, in the Independent.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Trilemma," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—clergymen, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now exciting such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 300 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION. Plymouth, Ind.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent, postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE READER. Suitable for wide-ill-circulation. 1. To Christ. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 3000 Baptists, in 1879. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man, and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Heathen. Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies &c., or assorted packages of 100, $1.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 50c., or 100 for $1, postpaid.

Can You Believe? A series of 20 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in any field.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

The Age to Come not a Heresy. By O. V. Reed.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, in both the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. U. Magruder.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
4c. each, or $3 for 100.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? H. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Selfite, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 10 for 30c.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 10 for 40c., or $3 for $1.

The New Birth. Jonah Pierce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D.D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 12 for $1.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned philologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 32 pages, price 10c.

A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Howard. Price 11 cents, or $10 cts. per dozen.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 80 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of Egypt, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 320 pages, cloth $1.25, paper 50c.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. H. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading features of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The natures of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 200 pages, cloth $1.

Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Dilworth. Price 10 cents.

Hymns of the Advent, in the spirit of a New Hymn Book, compiled by Charles C. Barker. Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. To all having the "Christian Psalmody" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 60c. cloth 80c.

The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson. Containing the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament for the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built, and with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 882 pages, cloth $5.00, Library Binding $6.00.

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1883.

More people have read The Sun during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has ever brought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read, and like The Sun for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for human kind; the events the deeds and mindeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at present revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs the Sun makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whales as well as about the small fish, in the face of dissent as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The Sun has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the Sun is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No combination of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Bourbonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the Sun stands and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the machinations of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public rebels.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the Sun is the best religious paper ever published, because its Christianity is undefiled with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed, because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding actively with the other half with undiminished vigor. A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers miss nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the Sun discovers one of its many other merits that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the Sun, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before. If you do not already know the Sun, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activities, a storehouse of the choicest products of common sense and imagination, a sanitary for the sense of honest government, a scourge for knavery and fatuousness of every species, and an unceasingly good investment for the coming year.

TERMS TO MAIL SUBSCRIBERS.

The several editions of the Sun are sent by mail, postpaid, as follows:

DAILY—Eight pages, a month, 55c.; a year, $6.50; with Sunday edition $7.75.

SUNDAY—Eight pages, $1.20 a year.

WEEKLY—$1.20 a year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues; an agricultural department of unequalled merit, market reports, and literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence make the Weekly Sun the newspaper for the farmer's household. To clubs of ten with $10, an extra copy free.

Address I. W. ENGLAND, Publisher.
The Sun, N. Y. City.

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. K. DWIGGINS.....President.
W. TUTTLE.....Vice President.
E. K. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
C. H. NORTHWOOD.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
W. TUTTLE, E. K. BARNHILL,
I. D. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. HALSTEAD. B. WILSON.
J. P. WESTFIELL. H. V. KEEP.
WILEY JONES. A. WILSON.
A. H. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 13, 1882. NO. 46.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
Payable in advance. Three and six months at proportionate rates.
Address, THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:
The Restitution adheres to the Scriptural interpretation of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalizing transition of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the simple repentance and thorough reformation preparatory to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

Editor Restitution:

The accompanying letter, requesting me to comment upon Matt. xxviii. 19, elicits this communication for your columns.

Tischendorff, who is the best and highest authority in matters of textual differences and variations in manuscripts, notes no variation in this verse except the insertion of the conjunctive adverb or which he omits as not found in the best. The difficulties and disagreements which have arisen in regard to this passage have their origin partly in mistranslation and partly in misinterpretation. There is a vast difference between baptizing "in the name" and "into the name." The first signifies by the authority of the person whose name is used, the other signifies the symbolic putting on of that which belongs to or inheres in the name, "into" which the person is so baptized.

This is clearly brought out in 1 Cor. i. 15, where Paul says "lest any should have said that I was baptized into my own name," (εἰς τὸ ἐμὸν ὄνομα). Again in 1 Cor. x. 2, "and were all baptized into Moses in the cloud and in the sea." Now what does this passage mean? A correct understanding of this passage will throw light upon the other. Who was Moses? The mediator of the law or of the covenant of works, or the supplemental covenant which was added to the covenant of promise because of transgression, was he not? Then in "being baptized into Moses" they were baptized into all that belongs to this covenant of law, were they not? It does not mean that they were simply baptized "by the authority of Moses." The act on the part of each individual is his ratification of the covenant or agreement which Moses, his federal head, has made with God for him.

Returning now to the passage in question, What does it mean to be baptized into the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit?" It means that the individual thus baptized does of his own free will and purpose ratify the new supplemental covenant of Christ the Mediator, of whom Moses was a type.

Moses came as a mediator of the law of works; Christ as the mediator of the law of love, which includes the law of works and fulfills its requirements. But why three names? Because it requires the three appellations to give the true relations of things, and it may be said that they are neither of them, strictly speaking, names. In the making of a covenant or agreement, there must necessarily be two or more parties, called in the language of law "the parties of the first and second part." Now remember that this covenant of which we are speaking, is preeminently a covenant of love. The party of the first part therefore, God, is very properly represented in the attitude of a Father, and the parties of the second part as children. Again as the mediator of the covenant of law Moses became a sacrifice to the sin of the people for whom he mediated and failed even himself to enter into the promised rest, according to law, and thus through sin showed the weakness and inefficacy of the law to save, and he too being a son of God in promise, we would expect to find as we do find the mediator of the new covenant of love or of grace, to be a sacrificial son of God, the Lamb slain from the founding of this order of things; not sacrificed for himself as well as the people as was Moses the antitype, but the sacrificial lamb without blemish as brought out in all the anti-Levitical types, fulfilling all the possible requirements of the covenant, and the legal heir therefore to all the promises under it. This Son and mediator we see standing in the formula used above, in the attitude of resigning or sacrificing of his own free will, even the life in which this blessed heirship inheres, because of the requirements of the law of love in his relation to the Father. In short, he resigns the life that would have given him the heirship of all that belongs to this order of things, because of the joy that is set before him, belonging to another order of things, the one temporal, the other eternal; the one physical or natural, the other spiritual.

The blood of this life thus poured out, therefore, becomes the necessary sacrificial ratification or sealing of this covenant of love, without which, legally speaking, no covenant would be valid, the object and office of it being, as with any other covenant, to give confidence and assurance to those interested in the fulfilment of its provisions; or in short, to give the greatest possible stimulus to rational faith.

"Being baptized into the Son," therefore, is being baptized into the understanding of what this appellation implies in all its reciprocal relations of duty, obligation and hope.

Thus far we have considered the parties to the covenant, namely God and his people, and the personal sacrificial victim provided, as was customary, by the party of the first part, and called both "the Lamb of God" and "the Son of God." This disposes of the first two appellatives in the formula.

We will now consider what it means to be baptized "into the name of Holy Spirit." What is Holy Spirit? What is Spirit? The word is used in three general senses in the Scriptures. In the sense of a certain kind of life that belongs to God and spiritual beings. In the sense of person, meaning the person or persons to whom this life belongs. In the sense of the peculiar power or ability which belongs to or inheres in this kind of life, and is revealed to us as being an attribute of these persons.

The same three general uses of the word meaning natural or physical life we find prevailing in the Scriptures, and these three general uses of these two terms for life we find in juxtaposition and contrast, and analogous the one to the other.

The Scriptures speak of the person or animal to whom this physical life belongs as a "soul," and of the person or being to whom this spiritual life belongs as a Spirit. The Greek word psyx is used to express the first, the Greek word πνευμα is used to express the latter. The Scriptures also frequently use the same Greek word psyx to express the abstract idea of organic life when the individual life is meant in contradistinction to the general life which may be said to pervade all animate existence, to express which concept the word psyx is used indiscriminately of both spiritual and physical life. The ability which belongs to physical life is limited and finite; the ability which belongs to spiritual life is vastly greater, and as belonging to God is revealed to us as being infinite.

The Scriptures also reveal the fact to us that there is a holy spiritual life and an unholy, holy spiritual beings and unholy. Moreover that we as physical beings and having by nature only physical life, may and do become subject to, and led by one or the other of these classes of spiritual beings, and that this leading may be within or without the pale of consequences.

Now the teaching of Scripture is very clear as to what the phrase "The Holy Spirit," as used in this formula and in other places in the New Covenant Scriptures means. John in his gospel (vii. 39,) says of it, οὔπω γὰρ ἦν πνεῦμα ὅτι Ἰησοῦς οὐδέπω ἐδοξάσθη. "For not yet was there Spirit, because Jesus had not yet been glorified." The passage has been tampered with and perverted in the King James version as well as in the Revision. John of course refers to the first outpouring of Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost under the new dispensation, as prophesied and promised.

The specific language of Luke in regard to this phenomenon, as given in Acts i. 8, is as follows: "Moreover ye shall receive the ability of the Holy Spirit when it hath come upon you." Again, Peter quotes from the prophet Joel in Acts ii. 17 as follows: "And it shall be in the last days, saith God, I will pour out from my Spirit upon all flesh," not "of my Spirit," as perverted in the Old and Revised. Then "The Holy Spirit" when spoken of as a person is God himself, and when he speaks of pouring out something from himself, is it another person, or his ability exerted spiritually, just as Luke designates it in the first passage above quoted from Acts? I understand it to be "the power of God unto salvation;" and when a person is "baptized into the name of the Holy Spirit," according to this formula of which we are speaking, I do not understand that he is baptized "in the name" or "by the authority" of a person called "The Holy Ghost," but that he is baptized into the life and ability which belongs to and is designated by this descriptive phrase.

In Acts viii. 16, we find Luke saying, οὐδέπω γὰρ ἦν ἐπ' οὐδενὶ αὐτῶν ἐπιπεπτωκὸς τὸ πνεῦμα εἰ μὴ βεβαπτισμένοι ὑπῆρχον εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ. "For not yet had there fallen upon any one of them, and they had only been baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus."

Again in chap. xi. we find him quoting Peter, as follows, in the 15th verse, ἐν δὲ τῷ ἄρξασθαί με λαλεῖν ἐπέπεσε τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον ἐπ' αὐτοὺς ὡσπερ καὶ ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ἐν ἀρχῇ. "And when I had begun to speak the Holy Spirit fell upon them even as also upon us authoritatively."

I feel therefore that men by nature has no spirit or spiritual life, but that he may receive it in the way of God's appointment, and become conscious of having thus received it as an "outpouring" from God, or as something that hath "fallen upon" him from on high, and given him an ability which he did not have by nature, and that a baptism into the name of the Holy Spirit is a baptism into the ability that this appellative phrase implies.

Moreover "the answer of one's spirit to God's spirit," I understand to be the consciousness of this new ability enabling us to truthfully and sincerely say abba or Father. That we do not receive the entirety of the Spirit while in this life is brought out clearly in many ways in the Scriptures, but with marked emphasis in the figure of "the earnest of the Spirit," ἀρραβών, which means the earnest money or bonus paid upon a contract as a pledge that the balance of the full sum will be paid in due season.

We have then in this formula a statement of God's relation to us and our relation to him as Father, and how this relationship is brought about, not by any physical "power or ability, but by my Spirit saith the Lord." "I will not leave you orphans," saith Jesus, in John xiv. 18.

CHAS. GARDNER.

---

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 3, 1882.

To the Churches and Believers in the East, Greeting. Dear Brethren:

At a meeting of the Church of God, worshipping at the N. W. Cor. of Arch and Thirteenth streets, Philadelphia, Pa., the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, There are in the east several Christian churches of like doctrine and practice with our own church, and,

WHEREAS, In the opinion of this church it is desirable that a union be formed of such churches as are in harmony in matters of fellowship and doctrine with the sentiments expressed in our Church Covenant, that they may work together in the common cause, be it

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed with instructions to confer with the various Societies of Believers in the coming and Kingdom of Christ in this eastern country, for the purpose of forming such a conference or union as may be mutually agreeable to the various Societies interested.

Believing that you are in faith with ourselves, and looking for the same blessed hope, we would request your earnest prayerful consideration of this matter. We are living in a time of most momentous import to all who are waiting for the kingdom of God. Daily the prophetic fig tree is unfolding its leaves, and we know that the summer is nigh which shall revive the sleeping dead and usher in the fulness of God's love.

In view of these facts, and also realizing that those who shun not to declare the whole counsel of God are indeed a "little flock," we desire the aid of your counsel and example as well as of all others of like precious faith with whom we can associate: and to this end would urge that you join with us in the formation of a union as set forth in the foregoing resolution. We know that "in union there is strength," and besides the encouragement and aid that we would individually receive from mutual counsel and intercourse, we might by our united forces perfect and carry forward some plan to spread the light of the gospel of the kingdom among those who are in darkness.

That you may clearly understand our position, we enclose for your information a copy of the Covenant of the church at Philadelphia.

If this matter meets with your approval we would suggest that you appoint a committee with power to act and send a reply to address given below, with any suggestions that you may have to offer; after which details can be arranged by correspondence, and a time and place selected for holding a meeting at which the union can be completed. For the church, your brethren in Christ.

SAMUEL WORK.
GEO. BARLEY.
GEO. F. WORK.
J. S. QUIMBY.
SAMUEL WILSON.

2910 N. 21st St.

---

COVENANT.

We covenant and agree that we will do all in our power to advance the cause of Christ, redeeming the time, because the days are evil; giving of our means as God hath prospered us; and making use of such talents as we have been blessed with. We will, as we have opportunity, do good unto all men, but especially unto them who are of the household of faith, so that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father in Heaven; and we will endeavor to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ. We accept the Holy Scriptures as our only rule of faith and practice, and Christian character as our only test of fellowship; and while we abjure creeds, and the right of Christians to sit in judgment upon the doctrines of one another, yet, we believe there are certain truths revealed in God's Word which are incontrovertible, and around these we rally as grand fundamental principles which form the basis of our faith and hope. Prominent among these truths are the following:

There is one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in all.

Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of the living God; who has abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, in that he died for our sins and rose again for our justification.

Man, by nature, is wholly mortal; and immortality is a gift of God to all who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, honor and immortality; to be bestowed at the coming of Christ through a resurrection from the dead.

The Lord Jesus is now in the heavens where he will remain until the times of restitution of all things which God hath promised by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. At the appointed time, which we believe is not far distant, he will return to earth with power and great glory as Judge of the living and dead; will send forth his angels and gather his elect; will assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth, and establish the kingdom of heaven, which shall never be destroyed; and through his wise and righteous government all nations will be blessed, sin will be overcome, and death itself destroyed.

Immersion in water is essential, as God's appointed means for the remission of sins, and the door into the church.

---

THE JEWS AND THE JEWS' WAILING PLACE.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 30, 1882.

The modern Jews of Palestine are divided into two classes, the Sephardim and the Ashkenazim. The former the wealthiest class. They are the descendents of the Spanish Jews banished from their country in the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, and of Charles the Fifth; hence the language they speak is a mixture of Spanish and Hebrew, called Judeo-Spanish. The Ashkenazim are a poorer set and come chiefly from Poland and Germany with a view of laying their bones with their fathers in the valley of Jehoshaphat. They are said to be better educated and to be stricter in their ceremonial observances than the Sephardim. Their dress is composed of a fur cap or turban for the head; a long gimbaz or tunic with sleeves, bound round the waist with a girdle, and extending nearly down to the feet: a jibbe or loose overcoat lined with fur and silk. The Rabbis are distinguished by a high cap, having a white scarf wound round the lower part.

Most of the Jews of Jerusalem being Ashkenazim are very poor, and it is really heart-rending to walk through their quarter and witness their sufferings; but strange to say we never hear a word of complaint from them.

The most interesting shrine of worship of the Jews generally, is at the wailing-place. This is at the foot of a part of the south wall of the Temple, which is still standing. The stones are of great size; some of them being three feet broad and fifteen long. There, on every Friday afternoon, about the hour of four, you will see many Jews and Jewesses weeping and praying. Well I remember the first time I went there seeing a lovely woman weeping in anguish, beating her head against the stones which she kissed at intervals as tenderly as a mother her infant child.

The sorrow of this poor woman touched my heart. I could exclaim with her, "How long Lord! how long!" The outburst of this beautiful woman still haunts me. There was no affectation in her grief. She was earnestly importuning Jehovah to bring back the captivity of his people, that Jacob may rejoice and Israel be glad. Dear sister! it was impossible to listen to her sobs, to witness her grief, or hear her tones of agony and deep sorrow without being moved to tears, and I really broke out into a wail with her. Thus to this spot the Jew comes from the ends of the earth, to weep and to pray. A firman has been granted to them by the Sultan to meet here unmolested. The sight is truly wonderful, and deeply touching, and is calculated to move the heart of the beholder. Within this cherished temple the Moslem walks in all the pride of conquest, whilst without the Jew sits upon the ground and keeps silence.

This morning Mr. Zaddler came to visit me. He is an American Jew who has just arrived. He came to thank me for the interest I have shown for his brethren in Jerusalem. He told me that he was moved upon by the Spirit of God to sell all his possessions and come to the Holy Land. He made his plans unknown to his wife, who began to oppose him. He finally told her that if she did not wish to accompany him, that he would provide for her future wants, and leave her to the care of the Lord. She answered him thus, "You believe in a present, and in a future world, do you not?" He answered, "Yes, I do." "Well," said she, "leave me the present world, and you may go to Jerusalem and have the future world;" and he came.

Last Sunday, the 22nd., there was quite a rainfall in Jaffa. We also had a shower in Jerusalem. The beautiful flowers are springing up everywhere. The flowers are wonderfully beautiful. Mr. Spofford said today, "this is the parlor of the world," and so it is.

I sent you by the last post a piece of embroidery. It is, as you will see, a view of Mt. Olives, with the tomb or pillar of Absalom, and St. James' tomb in the foreground. It is a present to you from a Jewess of Jerusalem; a slight token of the gratitude felt by those people for your many kindnesses. I hope you will have received it all safe.

A. E. DAVIS.

---

Editor Restitution:

At the request of Bro. Thomas Hughes of Sonora, Tuolumne Co. Cal. I went there and held a series of meetings in that mountain town.

The Baptist Church kindly gave permission to hold the meetings in their Church house. The meetings were well attended, and good attention given to the things spoken.

The minister of the Baptist Church, Eld. Sturdevant, exhibited a Christian spirit. Eld. Sturdevant took a lively interest in the meetings and kindly invited me to occupy on Sunday twice, in his stead, which I did. Others of that Church also, and some of other Churches and many who are not Church members gave evidence of their sincerity in search of the truth as revealed in the Scriptures.

I baptized five persons at the close of the meeting. I was favorably impressed with the town of Sonora, and much more with its citizens. I was never more cordially received by strangers: and I trust I may have the pleasure of meeting with them again at no distant time in the future.

I returned home from there on the 16th of November, and the evening of the 16th I commenced a discussion on the 7th day Sabbath question, with Eld. W. M. Healey, a preacher of that faith. We debated that question four evenings, and then debated the Kingdom question three evenings.

The discussion after the first night was held in a large Theater building, as it was the only building in Healdsburg large enough to accommodate the attendants.

I have never seen more interest manifested in a religious discussion than there was in this one. The questions debated were:

"1st. Do the Scriptures teach that, the 7th day Sabbath, or 4th commandment in the Decalogue, is binding and in full force upon Christians of the present dispensation?"

"2nd. Do the Scriptures teach that Christ and the immortalized saints, will reign over the nation of Israel restored, and also over the Gentiles, on the earth, one thousand years, between the 1st and 2nd resurrection?"

I negatived the first and affirmed the second. Pretty full reports were taken upon both questions, and especially the first. These, or rather a synopsis placed in dialogue form I will publish in pamphlet. Already many persons have spoken for copies. Would any of the friends East desire to read them? The cost per copy will be but a trifle, and if you think some can be sold there I will forward as soon as they are ready for you to dispose of. I believe they will fill a very important place in the tract list.

The seventh day Adventists are making very great effort to plant themselves permanently upon this coast. Mrs. E. G. White at present is making her headquarters at Healdsburg and Oakland Cal. She is apparently superintending the business in its various departments, and especially in financial matters.

Can any of the readers of THE RESTITUTION furnish me with a copy of her visions, between Dec. 1844, and 1850? I have some of the later visions (so called)

I expect to hold meetings at Lakeport and Kelseyville in Lake Co., and near Woodland, Yolo Co. Cal., in the near future. I have more calls to preach than I can respond to at present. I wish some of our preaching brethren from the East were here to help.

Please excuse, for I have written much more than I intended, when I commenced. As ever for the truth.

RICHARD CORNALEY.

---

Brevities.

Professor Palmer, who was murdered in the desert, together with Lieutenant Charrington and Captain Gill, has held the Lord Almoner's Chair of Arabic at Cambridge University since 1871. Mr. Palmer was the son of a schoolmaster and was born in Cambridge. In his youth he exhibited a remarkable aptitude for learning languages and devoted himself particularly to Arabic. He took his degree of B. A. at St. John's, in 1867, and owed a fellowship at his college to his proficiency in Eastern languages. Professor Palmer has been twice married and leaves a widow and family. Mr. Wright, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, writes to the London Times to say that Professor Palmer's last great work was the final revision of Henry Martyn's Persian New Testament.

The curious tract in which is reported the trial and condemnation of John James for high treason in 1661 is being reprinted. James, who was the second minister of the Mill Yard Sabbath-keeping Congregation, was evidently supposed by his accusers to be of the way of thinking of the "Fifth Monarchy Men" who, it was thought, were not convinced that the temporal reign of Christ was at hand, but were willing to hasten its advent by the destruction of earthly monarchies. That Sir Heneage Finch, the Solicitor General, could have anticipated any real danger from the words attributed, rightly or wrongly, to James is incredible, but it is equally certain that the unfortunate preacher was not only tried but executed, with all the barbarities that still attach by law to the crime of treason.

Chunder Sen, the leader of the Free Brahmins of India—an almost Christian sect, opposed to idolatry and caste—is a man of unusual attainments. He is a graceful orator, both in English and Bengalee, and a profound scholar in the philosophy and sciences of Europe. He has traveled much, having visited London and been presented to the Queen. Personally, he is of striking and handsome appearance, being more than six feet tall and in the prime of life. He is very wealthy and at his own expenses maintains a large church in Calcutta, and edits and publishes a paper, called The New Dispensation.

M. Louis Kossuth has written a letter to the Reform Club of England, in which he gives his opinion about the present state of affairs in Europe. The letter, which has excited wide comment, has this vigorous passage about the huge armaments of the Continent: "To see the social structure called states converted into as many gigantic barracks—the life sweat of nations drained to keep up with armies counted by myriads, these myriads in the best vigor of their youthful strength, abstracted from productive labor; all the soaring of human intellect made subservient to the profession of wholesale international slaughter and destruction—verily this is a condition so monstrous, at the same time so utterly intolerable, that unless some means are devised for bringing it to a stop, unless Governments are shocked in their head-long course toward exhausting the patience of their subjects by draining their life sweat for nourishing the insatiable Moloch of exorbitant armaments, it is absolutely impossible that the tottering structure of social organization should long escape the catastrophe of an almighty smash."

One of the pathways leading northeastward from Jerusalem, brought to light by the recent survey and laid down on the new map, is regarded by Mr. Treluawney Saunders as probably the one taken by King David in his flight from the city on the occasion of Absalom's treason. 2 Sam. xv. xvi. It is the track passing over the upper part of the Brook Kedron and the northern part of the Mount of Olives, to Anata, 'Alâ'it, and Wadi Farah. Among the well-known fastnesses of Wadi Farah David may have taken temporary shelter before he hurried on to the Jordan and Gilead. David's intention to take this route appears to have become known to Mephibosheth, who anticipated the entrance of David and his forces into the neighborhood of his patrimonial estate around Jeba (Gibeah of Saul), by sending a present, which the king met "a little past the top of the hill" (Olives), but which, however, the latter refused to accept, in consequence of eliciting from Ziba his master's intention to intrigue for the restoration of himself to the throne which his father had lost and for which David had to struggle. Possibly this rebuff became known to Shimei at Bahurim (Almit), and excited the anger which he displayed along the hillside, without regard to his own safety, as David went either toward Wadi Farah or toward Hizmeh. The latter seems more probable, because, while David's immediate object was shelter for the moment among the natural fastnesses of the wilderness, his destination, in the event of receiving unfavorable intelligence, was Mahanaim, in the north of Gilead. This temporary shelter might well have been found by him amid the rocks on the east of Jeba and south of Mukhmas, from which his former friend, Jonathan, had expelled the Philistines. This natural fortress lies three miles beyond 'Almit and fifteen west of the Jordan and provided with a direct and a main road to the fords. At this point he received the unfavorable advice to leave "this night, and pass quickly over the water" (2 Sam. xvii. 16, 21), and he accomplished the march before daylight. Had the more direct route to Gilead been taken, over Jordan at Ghr Damieh and the lower part of the River Jabbok, it could not have been completed in a night by any body of armed men, the distance being nearly thirty miles.—Independent.

RE
A. CHAPIN,
Plymouth, Indiana, Dec. 15, 1882.

FOR book, tract, and [illegible] we have not the space in this number. Will take space in our next.

WE have just received another exceedingly interesting letter from Jerusalem, giving an account of a visit of our American minister at Constantinople to the Holy City and his reception there. It is a piece of news of marked importance. Mrs. A. E. Davis is the writer.

BRO. Samuel Wilson of Philadelphia, furnishes an article for this number, and Bro. John Foore, of Kansas, gives a cheering account of the success of his labors. Both these brethren were at our Plymouth meeting, and both showed themselves to be in hearty sympathy with the brethren, and earnestly desirous of promoting the cause of our dear Lord, and they are both gratefully remembered by all who were in attendance.

THE piece of embroidery, mentioned in Mrs. Davis' letter, that was worked by a lady in Jerusalem—a Jewess—as a token of gratitude for the little we have been doing for her people, came duly to hand. Mrs. Davis will please assure the kind donor that her beautiful present was highly appreciated, and that she has our sincerest thanks for the view of the Mount of Ascension and contiguous places and monuments laboriously pictured in fine needlework.

THERE has been quite a favorable response to the request that has been made to send THE RESTITUTION as a present to some friend or friends for a period of time. If some hundreds of our brethren will take this course, they will both aid the paper financially, and at the same time, spread the knowledge of the truth, in regard to eternal life through Christ alone, as well as in regard to his near advent, and the establishment of his kingdom on the earth. For ourself, we propose to send two copies to persons in our own country, and one to Europe, and fully pay for all three. We shall thus do our friends a favor that they will appreciate, promote the cause of truth, and be just as well off financially at the end of the year. We fully believe that there are at least 500 of our patrons who can send the paper to one or more of their friends, and do it just as well as not. Come, brethren, make some New Year presents of this kind. Select some friend who will read our paper, pay for it, and send it out as your preacher of the glad tidings.

Letter from Europe to the Editor, with Addenda.

CHENE BOUGERIES, Geneva, Switzerland, Nov. 23, 1882.

N. A. Chaplin:

DEAR SIR:—I am so pleased with THE RESTITUTION—which you have so kindly sent me these last months—and feel grateful for it to yourself, and to our common friend, Mr. Pettingell, who recommended me to you.

After reading your periodical, I send it to my brother, the Rev. W. Petavel, Boveix, Neuchatel. He is the editor of L'Ami D'Israel. I have forwarded you a copy of the latter, where you may have found various extracts from THE RESTITUTION with due mention of their origin. Now I wish to become a regular subscriber and beg to inclose 10 shillings—about $2.50—for a year and extra postage. My brother gave a lecture on Tuesday at Lausanne upon "Israel, or God in mankind." Large numbers were present, and a discussion followed on the prophecies and the signs of the times. I quoted Mrs. Davis' reports in your paper. Number 42 just received—seems particularly interesting. I heartily adhere to the principles stated under the heading "To Correspondents." Believe me, dear sir, in Christian followship, Yours faithfully,

E. PETAVEL.

In our last paper we gave some account of Mr. Byse, a minister in Belgium, who has embraced the Scripture doctrine of eternal life through Christ alone, and, as a consequence, has yielded the obedience of faith by being baptized into the likeness of his death, by being immersed as the gospel requires. As to the literal interpretation of prophecy, as well as a literal application of the promises made to Abraham and his seed, the learned European writers and expositors are almost without exception Millennarians. They believe that Judah and Israel will soon be restored to Palestine, and that the nations will be blessed in the coming age of restitution. This is a reason why our paper meets with so favorable a reception by those in Europe who are looking for the soon coming of our Lord.

Concerning Mr. Byse we clip the [illegible] Independent, [illegible] RESTITUTION to him also as soon as we got his address in full. We shall watch the progress of the truth on the continent of Europe with interest, and advertise our readers accordingly.

The Synod of the Belgian Evangelical Church, which was held in Brussels last month, had an important heresy case on hand. The Rev. Charles Byse, formerly a Vaudois pastor, now of Brussels adopted in 1874, during a stay in London and attendance on the ministrations of the Rev. Edward White, author of "Life in Christ," the doctrine of conditional immortality. On his return to the continent, he became a prominent advocate of the doctrine, and translated Mr. White's standard work upon the subject into French. Mr. Byse has been pastor in Brussels two years. On entering upon his pastorate, he subscribed to the old Belgian confession of faith and was questioned about his peculiar views, which were well known. He promised to be prudent in expressing himself on this topic, and was accepted. Shortly after his induction, his translation of White's "Life in Christ" appeared, and caused much comment. Last spring he announced a course of lectures on "Conditional Immortality." He had spoken in strong terms of the importance of the doctrine and the announcement gave great offense. The matter came to the attention of the Synod, which at its duly meeting, passed a resolution declaring that the doctrine was contrary to the teaching of the Scriptures as understood by the church, and asking Mr. Byse to re-examine his theory, in the hope that he might see its error and abandon it. The controversy was transferred to the Brussels church, which was speedily filled with dissension. The pastor secured the adhesion of a majority and the war between the two factions was severe. Mr. Byse offered, if the Synod would repeal its resolution, to agree not to teach the doctrine from the pulpit; but the time for compromise was past, and the Synod, at its November session, decided to exclude Mr. Byse. Dr. E. de Pressense, as delegate of the Evangelical Churches of France, on being called upon for his views, urged the Synod not to proceed to this extreme. The doctrine ought, he thought, to be treated as belonging to the category of doubtful points, on which there should be liberty.

Letter from Chicago to the Editor with Addenda.

CHICAGO, Dec. 6, 1882.

Bro. Chaplin:

You will see by the enclosed slip that everything does not work as smoothly as I hoped in my new relation here. The most however I had a right to expect was the means of getting the truth before the public and that I shall succeed in doing either in this church or some other place. The opposition is really inspired by E. N. Lord who is an elder in the church and preaches every 4th Sunday and is very bitter. I do not doubt but I shall be compelled either to with draw or force them to expell me. But in either case I am firm in the hope that it will turn to the furtherance of the Gospel. I see you have republished my first sermon on the question of a future life and thereby widened the circle of its influence, thanks. My second was a serious indictment of the Immortal Soul doctrine, but the Tribune had no room for it. If you will publish it you can have it. My third has not yet been delivered and some of my congregation declare it shall not be in our church. Well perhaps not but the work will go on here nevertheless. God will open the way and provide a place never fear. I would be glad if you will furnish me with a list of prominent writers and preachers in Europe and America both the old names and the new ones who are converts to this doctrine so that I can use it in my work here. I had an interview with Prof. Swing a short time ago when he admitted the force of the arguments I offered and said that he had never examined the doctrine. I recommended Hudson's Debt and Grace and he agreed to get and read it. He read my sermon you printed and praised it highly. I do not now see how I am to proceede with this work or how I am to feed my family but—the Lord has never forsaken me and He will make a way for both I do not doubt. I hope to get more of my sermons in print here, but do not know if I shall succeed. J. F. WILCOX.

We give two extracts below, the first from the Tribune of Dec. 7, and the second from the Evening Journal of Dec. 9, 1882.

The blizzard was too fierce last night for many people to turn out to hear J. Fletcher Wilcox declaim against the doctrine of immortality at the First [illegible] Church on Ogden avenue. The discourse did not take place, but instead a quiet little prayer-meeting was held in the cosy little church. It is said that some of the leading orthodox members of the church have put their feet down, and declare that Mr. Wilcox shall not continue his series of sermons, in which he has been endeavoring to find a true bill of indictment against the good old doctrine of immortality. They want none of it, and if Mr. Wilcox cannot preach to them the pure New Testament Scriptures, he will have to find another rostrum from which to ventilate his peculiar ideas. Whether this was the reason the fourth discourse of Mr. Wilcox's series on "Problems of a Future Life" was not given last night, or whether it was simply "postponed on account of the weather," could not be definitly learned. Mr. Wilcox says he is simply preaching the Bible as he interprets it, and that many orthodox ministers are coming to believe, as he does, that there is no such thing as natural immortality. He quotes Dr. Lyman Abbot, editor of the Christian Union, as believing as he does, and also believes that Prof. Swing has a leaning that way.—Chicago Tribune.

ANOTHER HERETIC.

What is the matter with the Chicago clergymen that so many of them should become "heretics"? First came Robert Laird Collier, who left the Methodists and joined the Unitarians; then Bishop Cheney, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, inaugurated reforms until he got himself outside of what was considered by his orthodox brethren as a healthy religious organization. Next came Professor Swing, of the Calvinistic Presbyterian Church, and after Brother Patton got after him, he (Swing) found no rest until he stepped down and out. Then Dr. Thomas turned the Methodist denomination in the West topsy-turvy by his dissent from the established creed of the church, and by the promulgation of theories in regard to man's future destiny which were utterly inconsistent with the popular orthodox belief, and which provoked a controversy that ended in his exclusion from the fold. Now the Rev. Mr. Wilcox, of the Christian Church of the Disciples, is about to join the little band of brilliant heretics that is headed by Cheney, Swing and Thomas.

We all remember the deep religious agitation that was caused in the Western churches when these conspicuous Christian teachers "fell from grace," and were expelled from the sacred embrace of their respective denominations. It is also a notorious fact that all of these heretical clergymen are more popular to-day in Chicago, and have a greater following, than ever before, which goes to establish one of two things, namely, either that they are more in accord with public sentiment on what are regarded by orthodox people as vital questions than they were before, or that the mass of the people are mostly dissenters from the ancient faith, and are glad to welcome to their side teachers who are as "liberal" as themselves.

To the ordinary observer, however, the result of this heresy-hunting has proven that there is a wide-spread repudiation in the public mind of some of the views long held by all classes of orthodox believers, and it is clear that there must be a reconstruction and a restatement of religious creeds, and a relaxation from cast-iron dogmas, or the church must inevitably suffer for it. It goes without saying that all the orthodox churches in this country are full of good people of both sexes who are either outspoken in their disbelief of some of the cardinal doctrines of their own sects, or they give their consent to them with a mental reservation which is tantamount to an explicit denial of them. This is more particularly the case in respect to the condition of "the finally impenitent" after death, and there are few church members of the present day who have not discarded the cruel notion of a lake of literal fire or of an eternity of torment either for grown-up sinners or for non-elect infants.

This is the simple truth about the matter, and every intelligent person knows it. The question for the church to settle is whether or not it will allow a purely speculative belief or disbelief to weigh against correct living and high Christian character. The Rev. Mr. Wilcox declares that he has not believed in hell for twenty-five years, and that his congregation was well aware of the fact before he was called to fill its pulpit. He is neither better nor worse for his disbelief. Perhaps his congregation does not care much about his repudiation of the endless hell torment, if he only would keep silent about it, and let the church have the benefit of its restraining influence upon mankind.—Evening Journal.

THE COMMISSION.

Dynadhvitte gahpeiaeete ahwia ei Hoe, Baptitzontes autous eis to onoma tou Patros, kai tou Uiou, kai tou agiou Pneumatos.

Matt. xxviii. 19.

Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.—Received Version.

We have given the Greek text of Griesbach, who rejects the word from the original that is translated "therefore" into English versions. Bloomfield also rejects this adverb. The misapprehension of the meaning of this passage is mainly caused by employing the preposition "of" as the sign of the genitive case, which is made in the original by declining the words. This relation can be effected in English also by declension. The reason why translators have employed the prepositional sign, is, that the article, which occurs before the word name, can be some better expressed in this way. There is no word in the original that corresponds to the preposition "of." A word for word translation of the Greek above quoted—having due regard to tenses and participles—would be:

Having gone, disciple all the nations, immersing them into the name the Father's and the Son's and the Holy Spirit's.

The word "name" is made emphatic by employing the article in the Greek. This may be effectively done in English by printing this word in small Roman letters. The whole text would then be fairly and truly represented in English by translating it in the manner following:

Go ye, disciple all the nations, immersing them into the Father's and the Son's and the Holy Spirit's NAME.

There is no ambiguity, however; in the word for word rendering—Go ye, disciple all the nations, immersing them into the name the Father's and the Son's and the Holy Spirit's.

We will give some versions of this text, as rendered into other languages from the Greek, where no prepositional sign is employed to express the Genitive case, but where the literal construction of the original has been closely adhered to and followed. The Vulgate reads:

Euntes ergo docete omnes gentes: baptizantes eos in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti. A word for word rendering is: Going therefore, teach all nations; baptizing them in name Father's, and Son's and Holy Spirit's.

The Latin language has no article, hence the seeming difference as compared with a word for word rendering from the Greek. Transposing the rendering from the Vulgate into the English order of the words would give: Go ye therefore, teach all nations; baptizing them in Father's, and Son's, and Holy Spirit's name.

Beza's Latin version reads: Profecti ergo docete omnes gentes, baptizantes eos in nomen Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti. A word for word rendering of this reads: Having gone therefore, teach all nations, baptizing them into name Father's, and Son's, and Holy Spirit's. Changing to the English order we have: Go ye therefore, teach all nations, baptizing them into the name the Father's and the Son's and the Holy Ghost's. Transposing into English order we have: Go forth, then, instruct all people dipping the same—i. e. the instructed ones—into the Father's and the Son's, and the Holy Spirit's name.

The German follows the Vulgate quite closely. It reads: Darum gehet hin, und lehret alle Volker, und taufet sie im Namen des Vaters, und des Sohnes, und des Heiligen Geistes. This word for word is: Therefore go ye forth, and teach all people, and dip them in the name the Father's, and the Son's, and the Holy Spirit's.

This reads in the English order of the words: Therefore go ye forth, and teach all people, and dip them in the Father's, and the Son's, and the Holy Spirit's name, the words "im namen"—in dum namen—whichare in the dative case, are like the Vulgate "in the name." The accusative form—in den namen—or as several German critics render auf den namen, would be much closer to the Greek, as the meaning would then be "into the name."

The Low Dutch, or Holland Testament, has the following: Gaat dan henen, onderwijst al de volken, doopende in den naam des Vaders, en des Zoons, en des Heiligen Geestes. This is: Go then forth, instruct all the people, the same dipping into the name the Father's, and the Son's, and the Holy Ghost's. Transposing into English order we have: Go forth, then, instruct all people dipping the same—i. e. the instructed ones—into the Father's and the Son's, and the Holy Spirit's name.

Lastly we give the Swedish version of this text, which is: Gaor foerden-skull uk, och laore alle folk, och dooper dem i namn Fader, och Sons, och den Heliga Andas. This is: Go out therefore, and instruct all people, and dip them in the name Father's, and Son's and the Holy Spirit's. This transposed into English order would be: "Go out therefore, and instruct all people, and dip them in the Father's, and Son's, and the Holy Spirit's name.

We do not by any means claim to be at all well acquainted with the different languages that this particular text is translated into, as above given. A very limited idea of their construction of words is sufficient to know the collocation of these words in each one. The idea of this text is that we are baptized into an emphasized name. There is no more difficulty in apprehending the relation to a name into which we are brought by our baptism than there would be if that same relation were expressed by another word, as adopting into a name for instance. When we are baptized into THE NAME to which the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are relative terms, we too, are brought into a relationship to that one name to which the terms Father, Son, and Holy Spirit have their relation. To be baptized into Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, as mere word-terms, differs immensely from a baptism into the divine name to which these relative expressions refer. Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are not proper names, but words signifying that kindred connection arising from a joint participation in one common name. Our baptism is into this one name of which Father, Son and Holy Spirit are shown, by the Greek genitive, to be the possessors. It is by first getting into the name that we get into a relationship to the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit as the possessors of this one divine name. On our relationship to what is implied in the three words of possession we refer our readers to the able article of Prof. Gardner in this number of our paper. For the present—not to make our article too long—it only remains to show that we give the right construction to our text by a comparison with other passages of the same and similar grammatical form. One exactly to our purpose occurs in Luke. This evangelist says:

Os gar an epaischunthe me kai tous emous logous, touton o huios tou Anthropou epaischunthesetai otan elthe en te doxe autou kai tou Patros kai ton hagion angelon.

—Luke ix. 26.

A word for word translation is: "For whoever (may) be ashamed of me and (the) my words, this (one) the Son of (the) man shall be ashamed of when he shall come in the glory of himself, and of the Father and of the Holy Angels."

Now the very principle of interpretation that will educe an immersion into each relative term in the commission will necessitate three distinct comings of Christ in glory—once in his own glory, once in his Father's glory, and once in the glory of the holy angels. The Greek construction of these passages is exactly the same so far as the relation of the nouns in the genitive case is concerned—the pronoun standing for Christ, the Father, and the Holy Angels are connected with the word "glory," just as Father, Son and Holy Spirit are connected with the word "name." The teaching of Matt. xxviii. 19, is that there is one immersion into the one name of which the Father, Son and Holy Spirit are possessors, and the teaching of Luke ix. 26, is that there is one coming of Christ in the one Shechinal glory with which he himself, his Father, and the Holy Angels are all jointly connected. As our one baptism brings us to participate in the one divine name, as children of God, so our resurrection from the dead will bring us to participate in the one heavenly glory that invests our coming Lord.

If circumstances permit, we may pursue this subject of relationship to the divine name still further. One object in writing at this time is, to place the original of Matt. xxviii. 19, before our readers, with some of the more literal versions of the same. On the relation of the three terms, Father, Son and Holy Spirit to the one baptism we refer our readers again to Prof. Gardner's article, which we hope will be read with care.

Communications.

Editor Restitution:

Say to the brethren that I have just closed a meeting near Macy, Ind.—one of the best meeting since I left home. It was a time of rejoicing, long to be remembered; nine souls put on Christ by baptism. The number embraced two cousins, one sister-in-law, two nieces, three nephews, and one old neighbor. O, it was a time of rejoicing to me to see my friends obeying the truth.

Last night I met them all at the school house, and bade them farewell, perhaps no more to meet till Jesus comes.

This morning I shall have to part from my dear old mother—I expect no more to meet her in mortal flesh. Oh, brethren, I feel like saying, Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly! Then our suffering time will be over; then we can meet our dear ones that have fallen all along the line of battle.

I have only one new subscriber for the paper, but have the promise of more soon.

Today I start for Delta, O. Pray for me that no evil may befall me by the way, and that I may present the truth in its purity, so that men may see and obey from the heart. Let us show to the people that all that man lost in Adam will be restored in Christ. If we want eternal life we must work for it—we must be buried by baptism into Christ's death, and raised to walk in newness of life. This is an age in which God is taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name. This is a high calling. Let us all see to it that we walk worth of it.

May God bless our efforts here, and may grace mercy and peace abound in this neighborhood.

To my preaching brethren—Be sure and be husband to only one living wife, keep out of saloons and let card-playing alone, and keep yourselves unspotted from the world, and do all in your power to increase the list of THE RESTITUTION.

Yours in the One Hope.

JOHN FOORE.

SONORA, Cal., Nov. 12, 1882.

Editor Restitution:

A series of meetings was commenced in this place, on Thursday evening Oct. 26th and has continued uninterruptedly (except 3 evenings) up to this time, Nov. 12th. To say that we had a real good time, would hardly do it justice but let it suffice. Our Dear Bro. R. Corbaley has been our Evangelist, and I do say that he and I agree perfectly on the manner of presenting the word, and not attacking the sects, and to this plan and by God's aid we owe the present success. The Baptists after catechising somewhat, (because they had been deceived on former occasions by some, who professed one thing and preached different), kindly let us have the use of their meeting house, instead of becoming offended have really become interested, and are I think and hope, willing to learn. Invitations from the different members to Bro. Corbaley, from time to time have been held out, desiring his presence at their respective houses, to take tea or dine with them, and to ask questions and also give references where such and such passages occur, on the whole I think there really is some interest being taken. Now bear in mind this is new territory for the Gospel—good news, and it bespeaks well for this community. Bro. Corbaley is gladly disappointed, he did not expect to find such a hearty welcome, even their preacher has to surrender his position on some of the main points. I think he is honest anyhow, at least he seems willing to investigate, and so do several others, there seems to be a willingness on their part to investigate.

The weather throughout the meetings was good, the attendance was fair considering the political axe of election, which of course drew the crowd. Well Brethren, never shall we regret the day when Bro. Corbaley came among us. I never saw better attention paid than as on this occasion considering the first attempt, at preaching the Gospel in this place. Bro. Corbaley enjoyed good health, and on the whole has no cause to regret his visit to Sonora.

The authenticity of the Bible, the nature and destiny of the race, the Kingdom, the resurrection, the Signs of the Times etc., were each presented in that peculiar way that Bro. Corbaley has of doing, so plain and so graphic as would be futile for me to attempt to describe in this short letter, but those who have heard him know whereof I speak. Well dear brethren, isolated as we are from the body it has done us good I tell you, to see a live brother once more and now we can truly say from our hearts, thanks be to God from whom all blessings flow. He who never forsakes his people who trust in him. Our prayers have been answered and we rejoice, yea our cup is full to overflowing, pray for us brethren.

After the close of the meetings which was Sunday night, on Monday Nov. 13th five came out of the water after putting on Christ. Bro. and sister Ronner, Bro. Faxon and sisters Reeder. O how glad we are. I can safely say that they will be the light of the church as we grown in grace. To our brethren and sisters we say do not forget us, we are still true to the cause that we embraced six years ago. Children have been born to us in [illegible] that time we have had our trials and our misfortunes but still through all pain and sickness, we still hold fast and hope to do so to the end. Well friends I hope you will all prosper in the cause, watch, keep your lamps well trimmed, do not let the oil give out. Run well the race, be faithful to the end, and a crown awaits you at the end. I must close for this time. Hoping to hear from you all soon.

THOMAS HUGHES.

Jesus and his Attendants.

In the centre of all this (the Gospel History) is the figure of Christ. It is not a colossal form which dwarfs the other actors in the drama, or a prodigious force by the side of which ordinary human energy is lost, or an overmastering will whose resistless action compels submission and obedience, but it is an effulgence which extinguishes every other light. It is said that the sun at its highest makes all other flames cast a shadow. Now the Evangelists were so profoundly conscious of the luminousness of that Presence, that, to the reader of the Gospels, Christ appears always in the radiant garment and with the visage of his transfiguration. He is as the sun, in the splendor of which other luminaries are extinguished. The Humanity of Christ is never lost sight of. He is always Jesus of Nazareth but he is surrounded by an indescribable and mysterious clearness, which we seem to gaze on as the disciples did. In the simplest and most familiar acts of his life among them, he is with them, but not of them. Their relation to him are not those of a Rabbi to his pupils, but of men necessarily following and wondering at a Person who is wholly superior to themselves, whom they saw constantly, whom they reverenced profoundly, but whom, as they confess, they understood imperfectly. He taught as one having authority, and he spoke and acted with all the authority of his teaching. If the Christ of the gospels is a hallucination of the Evangelists, it is the most amazing and the most attractive conception which the imagination has ever formed. —Past of Tarsus.

Sir Moses Montefiore has reached his ninety-eighth year. Special congratulations were extended to him on his birthday, one corporate body holding a special meeting for that purpose. The venerable Jewish philanthropist himself marked the day in the manner now become familiarly and honorably associated with his name. He made the usual gifts of charity to a series of poor persons, whose number corresponded with the number of years he had lived.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will speak as follows:

Friday before the second Sunday in December at Rensselaer, Ind.

Saturday before the third Sunday in December at Macy, Ind.

Saturday before the fourth Sunday in December at Shoals, Ind., as Brother Stewart may appoint.

All of above meetings to continue over following Sunday.

JOHN FOORE.

The next Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Michigan will be held (the Lord willing) in the Weaver Hall at Hesperia, Oceana Co Mich. commencing Friday evening Jan. 12, 1883, and continuing over Sunday. Parties coming via Grand Rapids will take the Grand Rapids, Newaygo and Lake Shore R. R. to White Cloud. Leave Grand Rapids at 8:45 a. m. and arrive at White Cloud at 10:35 a. m. Thence with team to Hesperia. Those coming will please send a postal card the week previous to John S. Aldorman, Hesperia, so that conveyances from White Cloud may be provided. Those coming from other directions can obtain information regarding the route to take by corresponding with Brother Aldorman. Able speakers are expected to be in attendance and a cordial invitation to be present is extended to members of all denominations. HERBERT MILLER, Sec.

NEW BOOKS FOR SALE AT THE RESTITUTION OFFICE.

The Covenants and their relationship. A treatise on the Abrahamic, the Sinaitic, the New and the Davidian covenants: their duration and relationship to each other. By C. M. Myers. 200 pages, bound in cloth, price $1.

The Truth but Few: or a concise view of the Scripture doctrines of immortality and future punishment. By Miss Rann. 50 pages, price 50cts.

The Blessed Prospect, or the Second Advent of Christ. By Miss Rann. 50 pages, price 50cts.

Mortal Immortality; an appeal to thinking Christians. A brief refutation of the theory of natural immortality, and a temperate defense and Bible view of conditional immortality, not by birth but by grace. By C. H. E. Crosier. 18 pages, price 10cts.

The World made Flight or Jesus Christ, who is he? By Dr. J. H. Thomas, Pittsburgh, Pa. 4 pages, price 5cts. This is an article that appeared in "The Restitution" of July 5, 1882, put into tract form.

THE AGE TO COME

—EMBRACING SOME OF THE—

Things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ,

—AS WELL AS THE—

FUTURE AND ETERNAL AGE.

—BY A. MALONE, M. D.—

This is a Text Book of 192 pages, neatly printed. The author's name is a sufficient guarantee to the worth of the work. Price only 50 cts. each. Send to this office for them.

Poetry.

Early lines.

REMEMBERED.

A. T. NORTON.

Oh, that I might be remembered
When this weary strife is o'er,
And my feet have passed the borders
Of the dark and gloomy shore;
When my heart has ceased its pulsing,
When my lips are sealed for aye,
And my eyes are robed in darkness
From the glory of the day.

Oh, that some dear brother—sister
Might recall some word of mine
That had comforted and cheered them
On the way to life divine;
Or some plaintive snatch of music
That from them a tear had won—
Oh, that I might be remembered
For the good—if I've done!

When the golden bowl is broken,
And the wire of life is dry,
When the scroll of love and being
Add in common rain lie,
When a name of night I'm waiting
For the everlasting day,
Oh, that I might be remembered
By the pilgrims on the way!

Oh, that I might with the sunshine
To some saddened orphan heart,
Or the "blessed hope," so precious,
To the wildered breast impart,
Breathing of the "Land Elysian
Where we always walk where—
Oh, that I might be remembered
For the good that I have done!

Great and Sovereign Lord of Heaven,
At whose feet the thousands roll,
Thou my heart's deepest desire does know—
The sole travail of my soul;
On thy altar, let my offering—
All I am or hope to be,
Thine it is—O Father, take it,
Only bid me strive for thee!

Oh, for theatres to enliven hours and!
Oh, for strife to crown my crown!
Oh, for tired, sweet rest in glory,
When I lay my armor down!
Grant, O grant, when throne and kingdom
Shall be taken by thy Son,
That my servant be remembered
For the good that I have done!

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 9.

Prelude — God's relationship to the earth, its people, and its nations—Egypt—Past history of its people—Its dynasties—God's agency and his purposes—Its present position among the nations—Its civil and religious aspects.

Prelude.—That God (Elohim אלהים) created the earth, the Bible declares, "In the beginning God (Elohim) created the heavens and the earth." Gen. i. 1. That he reduced it to order, and furnished it for the abode of Adam and his posterity, is also stated. That he furnished a certain district in an extraordinary manner will appear from the following, "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man (Adam) whom he had formed. And out of the ground (of the garden) made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil. And a river went out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted and became into four heads." An excellent river system of irrigation; this system with the "mist" rendered the garden a paradise. If God has taken pains to fit up one spot for a special purpose, why not another? May not Egypt have been one of those favored locations?

God is also the Maker, Father, and disposer of the nations that have dwelt upon the earth; "God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." Acts xvii. 24–26.

That he has disposed of kings and crowns, as an arbiter, we have illustrious examples. i. "Son of man, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus: every head (was) made bald (by the constant wear of their helmets); and every shoulder (was) peeled (by carrying baskets of earth); yet had he no wages (the goods of Tyre being carried away by their ships), nor his army, for Tyrus, for the service that had served against it. Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon; and he shall take her multitude, and take her spoil, and take her prey; and it shall be the wages for his army. I have given him the land of Egypt (for) his labor wherewith he served against it, because they wrought for me, saith the Lord God." xxix. 18–21. No language can convey more forcibly God's claims to the property, and absolute authority over the nations; as he would not give what did not belong to him.

Nebuchadnezzar was lifted up by his great success, and said, Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty? After seven years of posture with the beasts, Nebuchadnezzar acknowledged that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men and giveth to whomsoever he will. Dan. iv. 30, 32.

That God formed and furnished the valley of Egypt in an extraordinary manner, we have fully shown. That he has disposed of its national dynasties as their supreme arbiter, is a matter of prophetic record, that will fully appear as we progress. That he has some great plan to accomplish in his government and disposal of Egypt, cannot be questioned. What it is, we think is, in part, revealed, and can be known.

Egypt.—Past history of its people.—We have described the land of Egypt. It now remains for us to pay some attention to the past history of its people. What races have dwelt in Egypt? What is its antiquity? We cannot go beyond the flood, as we there is no traditional sketch of Ante Diluvian Egypt. It was the period ascribed to the reign of giants, who perished by the waters of the deluge. The earth that now is, was divided among the three sons of Noah: Ham, the second son, taking Africa, the second in size of the grand divisions. Ham was not Noah's favorite. He committed an act that brought the curse of God upon a part of his posterity. He became a wanderer in the distant south, and gave birth to the race of black men, as his name (Ham) signifies black; also hot, since it is the same as the Egyptian word Kem (Egypt, which means hot as well as black.) His father's curse rested upon his son Canaan.

The history of the family of Egypt divides itself into ten periods; 1. Traditional; 2. Monumental; 3. Hebrew; 4. Babylonian; 5. Persian; 6. Grecian; 7. Roman; 8. Arabian; 9. Turkish or Ottoman; 10. And the period of Messiah's reign. Eight periods are finished; the ninth is now in progress; the tenth is in the future. The eight completed periods will be described very briefly, and only as they illustrate God's dealings with that family. On the ninth we shall be more particular. The tenth will claim special notice.

1. Traditional Period.—This period extends from the flood to the building of the first Great Pyramid, covering about one hundred and seventy-eight years. How soon after the flood Egypt was settled, is not definitely stated. The sons of Noah with their families continued in southwestern Asia, making use of one language. "And the whole earth was of one language and of one speech. And it came to pass as they journeyed from the east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar, and they dwelt there." Gen. xi. 1, 2. While they were building a city and a tower (Babel) the Lord confounded their language, and scattered them over the face of all the earth. It was then that Ham and his people journeyed to the south and entered Africa by way of Egypt, its northeastern extremity. The valley of the Nile, so luxuriant and attractive, caused them to pitch their tents there, on which account Egypt was called the "land of Ham;" and later it had the name of Mizraim, second son of Ham, as Mizraim had Egypt for his portion. Allowing 100 years from the flood to the confusion of tongues, and the dispersion, Mizraim's settlement in Egypt would be about B. C. 2230 to 2200. Mizraim founds the Egyptian empire B. C. 2188. Eighteen years later would begin the monumental period. Mizraim of the Bible is Menes of history. We are safe in saying that the first two periods cannot be reduced to chronological accuracy. Sixteen hundred and sixty-three years are assigned to the duration of the Egyptian empire, to its conquest by Cambyses, B. C. 526. This empire has many peculiarities. One in particular is worthy of notice. Mizraim originated its religious system. That most productive valley in the world, and the location of the seminary of the world, did become the first seat of debasing idolatry. Truly, "the world, by wisdom, knows not God." Mizraim's father (Ham) fleeted on the bosom of those waters sent expressly to destroy a race of corrupt rebels against the divine government. Ham was familiar with the works of his father Noah, and with the origin of the deluge. No doubt of Mizraim's knowledge of that great catastrophe, and, also, of their dispersion from the tower of Babel; yet with the clear and distinct knowledge of God's dealings with offenders, even back to Cain; and, with his hatred of Jireh, this son of Ham, this grandson of Noah, in a land fitted up by God as a second paradise, sets at once a system of idolatry, of the most degrading form! This is Egypt's first great national sin.

2. Monumental period.—Egypt is a land of monuments. Their public structures may be divided into two classes, those that exalted the living and those that were designed to perpetuate the memory of the mighty dead. Among those may be named the following: 1. Sphinxes are symbolic representation of Egyptian monarchs. Their heads were human, their bodies those of lions, which taught the lesson that kings should be wise and strong; wise as the educated priests, their teachers; and strong as the lion.

2. Obelisks were monuments of public squares, and other places of public resort. They were very numerous over the valley of Egypt, erected by their kings. They combined the cubic, at their bases, the prism as their shafts, and the pyramid as their summits. They were very ancient monuments, but not as old as the first pyramid.

3. The Labyrinth.—This monument was said to be more wonderful than the pyramids. It consisted of twelve palaces combined into one, with communications one with another, 1500 rooms, interspersed with terraces, were ranged round twelve halls, and discovered no outlet to such as went to see them. There was the like number of buildings under ground. These subterraneous structures were designed for the burying place of the kings, and also (who can speak of this without confusion and ritiout deploring the blindness of man) for keeping the sacred crocodiles, which a nation, so wise in other respects, worshipped as Gods."—Rollin.

4. The lake Moeris.—We describe this lake as one of the works of man, since it is artificial, being constructed by king Moeris, to supply the deficiencies of the Nile. When the Nile was too tall for a prosperous season, its surplus waters were drawn off into the lake; if deficient, the waters of the lake supplied this deficiency.

Its size was the wonder. This lake was 30 miles long, and 6 miles wide, and its average depth is 12 feet, in some parts 28 feet deep. It is connected with the Nile by a canal called, Bar-Yusuf (the river of Joseph). This lake was, when in the hands of the Pharoahs, plentifully supplied with fish. This revenue ($600 per day) was used to supply the queen's wardrobe and perfumes. The canal was over twelve miles long, whose great sluices to open and shut the canal and lake cost $55,000. The Egyptian kings filled the valley of the Nile with canals communicating with the Nile to supply water.

5. Pyramids.—Of these monuments there were about 70 in Egypt. They were all, perhaps, in their external form, imitations of the first, which is called the Great Pyramid of Gizeh, situated on the north bank of the Nile, near the ruins of Memphis, Lat. 30 deg. is the first; it is the original pyramid, and the most perfect. It was constructed in the reign of Cheops, whose name it bears. He was the first of the Khufu monarchs (hieroglyphic form of Cheops). Who constructed this pyramid? For what purpose was it erected? These questions are not readily answered. They are usually solved as follows: It was designed and constructed by Cheops. Some say that he built it to resist the encroachment of the Lybian sands, for granaries, reservoirs, for sepulchres or for astronomical purposes. The general view is that Cheops erected it for a tomb.

1. To the first question we answer, a. The plan or pattern is not the brainwork of Cheops. It is not a visible embodiment of his thoughts. The plan is further beyond Cheop's mental powers, than the tabernacle was beyond the powers of Moses. This will appear from the structure itself. b. The pyramid itself is a monument of science. Built into its very structure is an encyclopedia of physical science. It chronicles its own age (B. C. 2170); teaches its own origin; explains the object of its construction; and explains its parts from its base upwards. To the pyramidologist it is a comprehensive and wonderful text-book. Its system of astronomy is more comprehensive and more accurate than any modern system—than that of Vince, Newton or La Place. It is an outline of modern astronomy, and unlike any system of its own antiquity, whether Babylonian, Chinese or Indian.

J. P. WENTMAN.

A Little Letter to my Pastor.

Dear Bro. W.:—

So little have we been accustomed to hearing anything about eternal torture, your sermon last Sunday night was somewhat of a surprise to several of your hearers; myself among the rest. I sometimes have grave thoughts as to the rightfulness of holding up hell as a motive to embrace Christ. "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest" was sufficiently potent to convert the prince of persecutors to become the prince of Apostles. "Lovest thou me" was quite enough to cure Peter of his terrible fall. "We love him because he first loved us"; and not because of the prospect of eternal torture. I would not preach against it, but I would leave it just as the Scripture puts it, without comment.

You must admit that there is considerable ambiguity relative to the fate of the wicked. I need not point out to you the various terms and readings on the subject. Jesus is spoken of as the giver of immortality; but according to your sermon the wicked have it inherent in themselves. The tempter in the garden said, "Thou shalt not surely die" and so does the popular pulpit of our day.

Popery has built most of her costly cathedrals on her ingenious handling of this subject. I trust Methodism will never undertake to follow her example here.

"Behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy" etc., has no threatenings in it. The great theme of the blessed gospel is love. "Look unto me and be ye saved" etc. "As I live I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." Turn, turn, turn ye for why will ye die. No brimstone here. The above was suggested by hearing my Pastor discourse on the words "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment."

This letter I must tell you is the result of a careful reading of your excellent paper THE RESTITUTION.

ISAAC MCCLARY.

(The above shows that the leaven of truth is working in the denominational churches.—ED.]

Youths' Column.

The Little Beggar's Button-Hole Bouquet.

'Twas on a bitter Winter's day,
I saw a strange, pathetic sight;
The streets were gloomy, cold, and gray,
The air with falling snow was white.

A little ragged beggar child
Was running through the cold and storm;
He looked as if he never smiled,
As if he ne'er had been warm.

Sudden, he spied beneath his feet
A faded button-hole bouquet;
Trampled and wet with rain and sleet,
Withered and worthless, there it lay.

He hesitated, seized it with delight,
Stood still and shook it free from snow;
Into his coat he pinned it tight,—
His eyes lit up with sudden glow.

He sauntered on, all pleased and proud,
His face transformed in every line;
And lingered that the hurrying crowd
Might chance to see that he was fine.

The man who threw the flowers away
Never one half such pleasure had;
The flowers' best work was done that day
In cheering up that beggar lad.

Ah me, too often we forget,
Happy in these good homes of ours,
How many to this world are yet
Cold even of withered flowers!

—E. H., in Christian S. Mistletoe, for 1882.

The Lord's Way.

There is a beautiful thought expressed in Frances R. Havergal's little book, "Kept for the Master's Use"; it is this: "The Lord always makes the most of whatever is unreservedly committed to him." We make many mistakes and waste much trying to shape ourselves; but when we let him out, there will be no waste material.

And there is a joy in suffering with Christ. We can "rejoice in tribulation," and in the blessed "all things" that in our Lord's own way are working for us such lasting good. "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee."

Kiss me Good-by, Dear.

That is a phrase heard in the hallway of many a home as the man of the house is hurrying away to exchange daily labor for daily bread in the mart of commerce. Sometimes it is the wife who says it, sometimes infant lips prattle the caressing word, holding up a sweet flower face for the kiss that is its warm sunshine of life, and the strong man waits a moment to clasp his treasure and is gone; and all day he wonders at the peace in his heart; at the nerve with which he meets business losses or bears business grossness. The wife's kiss did it, the baby's kiss did it, and he realizes that it is not wealth or position or luck that makes our happiness, but the influence we bear within us from the presence of those we love!

Kiss me good-by! Oh, lips that have said it for the last time, would you ever ask again in those pleading tones for the kiss so tardily given? Would we not remember that the relation the flower bears to the universe is as carefully provided for as that of the brightest star; that the little action of a loving heart goes side by side with the deed of heroic worth; that love is the law of life; that the parting for a day may be the parting of a lifetime.

How many go forth in the morning
That never come home at night!
And hearts have broken
For kind words spoken
That can now never be right.

Make the air rich with kissed

Many tears have been shed over unkissed kisses—over those "dear as remembered kisses after death," but the time to kiss is the present. Kiss your children, man of business, before you leave home; kiss the mother of your children, and that dear old mother who sits in the chair by the window—no matter if her cheek is wrinkled, her heart is young—and then go about your day's work with a "thank God" in your soul that you have some one at home to kiss.

For though in the quiet evening
You give or the kiss of peace,
Yet it might be
That never for thee
The pain of the heart should cease.

Perfumes of the Bible.

Such is the honor in which frankincense is held in the Scriptures, that we place it at the head of our list.

It was the perfume that Moses commanded to be prepared for the use of the Ark of the Covenant. It was to consist in equal weight of frankincense, stacte, onycha, and galbanum, and if ever it was used for any but sacred purposes, the offender was severely punished.

This gum was one of the necessary things to the Levites when they wanted to re-establish the ritual of the law, after the second temple was builded. And Solomon, in his song of songs, speaks of the perfume of myrrh and frankincense, and afterward numbers it up among the precious trees and principal spices. It was brought too, on "that night when Christ was born," among the offerings to the Babe of Bethlehem, and St. John sees that the angel who burns incense before the elect "has much frankincense in his censer."

It is supposed by some writers that the fine frankincense was really olibanum, a gum that exudes from the trees. The true gum flowed from wounds made in the bark. It is only of late that these trees have been much known, but now large quantities are exported from Central India and Bombay. In the Hindoo temples it is still burned as incense.

Myrrh, so intimately connected with frankincense as one of the ingredients in the holy oil used for anointing the priests and various parts of the altar of the Tabernacle, was also employed in the purification of Esther and her companions in the palace of Babylon before being presented to the king. In the Psalms and the Songs of Solomon, myrrh is one of the chief spices and perfumes to which the purity of Christ's church is compared.

This makes it plain to understand why "the wise men from the East should carry it with gold and frankincense!" We remember, too, that at the close of that eventful life it was offered with wine as a soother of the terrible sufferings soon to be undergone, "but he received it not."

The last time we find it mentioned is in St. John, where Nicodemus brought "a hundred pounds weight of myrrh" to embalm the body of Jesus after that long agony was over, and it was wrapped with his body in a linen cloth and laid in the tomb. This gum, so highly valued by the ancients, is no longer used as a perfume, but rather as a tonic medicine, and with great success.

The myrrh-tree is small, with wood of a yellowish white, the bark smooth and grey in color, and the leaves imperfect, growing on very short stems.

The tree of the aloes is never alluded to in the Bible, only the gummy substance procured from it by making incisions in the bark and collecting the juices, or bruising the fleshy leaves. This liquid is set by for many days and carefully skimmed. When it becomes sufficiently thick it is laid in the sun to dry, and then packed in skins or boxes. Lign-aloes is used simply as a perfume, and it was this that must have been used by Nicodemus in his offering. Some species of aloes grow in desert places, and are like an oasis to the weary traveller, inasmuch as their long, thick leaves gathered around the stem hold rain and dew enough to furnish a refreshing drink. A superstitious value has long been attached to these trees, which grow in plenty near Mecca, and if one has made this pilgrimage you are pretty sure to find an aloe over his door, showing that he has been there, to say nothing of the good luck he believed it to bring. Many years ago they were suspended across the street to render it more fortunate. The leaf, which has a fine, straight fibre, after steeping and beating, becomes fit for ropes or the loom. Its chief recommendation, as in the time of David, is that it is a very valuable medicine.

The cassia was one of the principal spices which composed the ointment for the Tabernacle, and Paris speaks of it as a choice perfume as well as a precious merchandise of Tyre. This true grows in India, China, and the Eastern islands, and very closely resembles the true cinnamon in appearance and in the flavor of the bark.

Ezekiel, in his account of the precious merchandise brought to Tyre, groups together the cassia the calamus, and bright iron. The two first from Judea, and the iron the native Hindoos prepared in their small furnaces. This tree grows to the height of fifty feet, having a round pod, from ten to twenty inches long. This pod is subdivided by scales, separating the seeds that are embedded in a sweet pulp. These pods are taken whole, and heaped up and spread for many days. As a perfume it is greatly prized.

Anise is name but once in the New Testament, and then by Matthew, in telling the story of our Lord's reproof of the outward seeming and inward corruption of the Pharisees. It was a very common herb in every garden and used, whether green or dry, for every kind of seasoning or sauces. It grows wild in Egypt and Palestine, and was prized very greatly by the ancients though not much appreciated at the present day.

The Romans entered it to sweeten the breath, and to keep up an agreeable coolness in the mouth; and it is said they do to this day. Among Oriental nations this habit is still kept up.

Among the precious spices and perfumes to which wisdom is likened, is the aspalathus. From the root itself a sweet perfume, an ointment, is made, and if a rainbow should rest upon the bush, it was fully believed that the smell became surpassingly delicious. This Egyptian drug has had a great reputation, and is still used in various preparations, by the druggists.

The gum of bdellium is mentioned as found in the land of Havilah, "where there is gold, and the gold is good." We find it, too, in the book of Numbers as compared with manna which fed the children of Israel in the wilderness. It is very clear and white. Bdellium was offered in solemn sacrifices to the divinities of Rome, being first steeped in wine, which it was often used to flavor. Indian myrrh is one name given it, but there does not appear any tree from which it is myrrh exudes, while bdellium is produced in large quantities. Galbanum is mentioned as a component part of the incense of the most holy altar with onycha and stacte. This gum exudes from the stalks and branches of the plant. It much resembles asafœtida in its medicinal qualities and a good deal in its odor. It may seem strange that a gum having such a scent should have mingled with the holy perfume. Eastern nations did not agree with us in the matter of agreeable scents, and it may have assisted, as it mingled with the other ingredients burnt on the altar of perfumes, to keep down anything that was disagreeable in the Jewish sacrifices.

Onycha must have been some favorite gum or resin. The directions given in Exodus for preparing the perfume for the Tabernacle was to take sweet spices, stacte and onycha and galbanum.

Onycha is described by some writers as the product of a shell-fish, and so called from its shining somewhat like a man's nail. An old Dutch naturalist says the covercle of a certain kind of fish serves for the basis of an Indian perfume, and has that peculiar lustre like a nail. But the description of the onycha seems to imply a vegetable perfume. It is thought by some writers that gum benzoin is the true thing.

The spikenard of Scripture has long been forgotten, but to this day an ointment is made in which it is used in Upper Egypt to anoint the face and preserve the skin from the effects of the burning sun. It is remarkable for its agreeable odor, resembling cinnamon, given off by a root in burning.

The sweet cane of Isaiah is the same as the sweet calamus of Exodus and of Ezekiel. It, too, is placed among the sweet spices and perfumes of which the precious oil for the service of the Tabernacle was composed, and, when not used, the Jews were reproached by Isaiah for being brokenhearted. Though the name of sweet calamus has been handed down by the Greek and Latin botanists and physicians, and even to this day, though the sweet cane is used, the real calamus has never been positively ascertained. All that is known is that it is a small, sweet cane from a far country, very fragrant, and the aromatic oil which is obtained from it would give the odor of the costly perfume which Moses was enjoined to make for the service of the Tabernacle.

The number and variety of shrubs and trees yielding fragrant oil, precious medicine and admirable perfumes in all the countries of the Orient is very great, and they are probably not all perfectly known, notwithstanding the earnest search of modern botanists.

The books of the ancient writers are full of references to Indian odors and spices and drugs, and yet what the trees or what the efficiency of many of them, they do not tell us. The most we do know is that many of these spices and oils were made up into precious compounds, and in Bible times put up into boxes of onyx and alabaster and sold at fabulous prices.—N. Y. Observer.

Editor Restitution:

I will give further reports of my travels. I remained in Wisconsin from the 1st of November till the 20th. Had some good meetings. Stopped with Bro. L. P. Clark. Had some good meetings, notwithstanding the efforts of the sects to prevent it, they had possession of the Fairfield schoolhouse, and when they learned we wanted it they prolonged the meeting, and gave us to understand they would hold it as long as I was in the country. So we had two meetings at Bro. Clarke's, and two at Bro. Joseph Millers' with good results; for the brethren and sisters were encouraged to contend for the faith. We engaged the school-house at Ringrove, and held some meetings there, but some interferred and got us out of the house on the plea of repairing it. So we went to Monroe, the county seat of Green co., and held meeting about one week. The first night we held meeting at Bro. Nobles, then he engaged a house of the seventh day adventists, and we had a good meeting. The adventists were very kind to us and said the house was free to preach the truth in. While in the place I formed the acquaintance of Bro. and Sister Noble, Bro. and Sister McCully, and Bro. Bancof, and Bro. and Sister Bridge, and one George Bridge, a fine man, a believer but not obedient. But I think he will perhaps obey soon. I think there could something be done in the place if there was a protracted effort made there. Some time there seems to be a disposition on the part of the people to come out and hear. At Bro. Clarke's I got acquainted with old father Clark now about 88 years old, he used to preach some years ago. I found him firm in the faith and a man of strong mind considering his age, he can quote a good deal of Scripture, he once preached for the Campbellites some years ago. I left Bro. Clark the 20th enroute for Lanark. Bro. Clark took me to Dakota, and there I took the train to Lanark, met our dear brother Myers again, took supper with him, stayed over night with Bro. J. M. Clotfelter. I left there on the train the 21st for Adeline, where I now am, will hold meeting for a few days here, then return home. I have more calls than I can fill. I will travel for awhile in Ill. But intend to spend a part of the time in Ill., and Wis., and perhaps some in Iowa. I intend to spend all the time I can in preaching the Word. Love to all the dear ones.

J. S. HATCH.

Business Department.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Address all business letters and make all orders payable to "The Restitution, if worth, indicate." It creates confusion and causes delay in the transaction of business of the office to have orders made payable to the Editor, or to some matter addressed to him personally, so please confer a favor by observing as above directed.

A. R. CRADERWOOD, Treas.

To the Friends of "The Restitution."

The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION for the year just closed exceeded the receipts over $300. To repay this deficiency and secure means to publish the paper another year, we must raise, outside the regular subscription at least $500. To secure that amount, the Board of Directors have requested me to appeal to each subscriber to contribute at least one dollar extra. This is not asked as a donation, but brethren are requested to send names of persons to whom they wish the paper sent, with their contributions. And the paper will be sent to such persons in payment for the amounts sent by each.

There are a large number of brethren and sisters in different localities who are unable to pay for the paper, and who would be very glad of the privilege of reading it. These are known to Brother Chaplin, the Editor. I would suggest that brethren who have no one to whom they specially desire to send the paper, send their contributions to THE RESTITUTION office with a request that the paper be sent to some worthy Christian who will appreciate it, but who is unable to pay for it. In this way brethren will be able to gladden the hearts of many poor but honest good Christians, and at the same time help to furnish the means to keep the paper going.

The fund will be known as "Free Will Offerings." Let each reader of THE RESTITUTION make a small sacrifice, and contribute at least one dollar, always remembering that the many persons to whom the paper will be thus sent will thank and bless you and your Heavenly Father will reward you.

H. S. DWIGGINS, President.

FREE-WILL OFFERING.

| | |
|---|---|
| Mrs C Palmer | $ 1.00 |
| Mrs H S Driggins | 5.00 |
| J W Driggins | 5.00 |
| Mrs Margaret Woodward | 4.00 |
| S A Cargille | 4.00 |
| Jesse Holbrook | 1.00 |
| Cobb's Settlement | 1.00 |
| Mrs N H Goodell | 1.00 |
| Mrs C E Parker | 2.00 |
| Geo W Young | 5.00 |
| Mrs T J Elliott | 5.00 |
| W J B Lockhart | 3.00 |
| Mary Boyd | 1.00 |
| Andrew Spence | 1.00 |
| Ezra Flint | 1.00 |
| M S Hudson | 1.00 |

Poetry.

THE ROAD IS STEEP.

The path bestrewn with flowers,
The crowd's applause, ambition's tinsel joys,
The couch of ease, and pleasure's gilded toys,—
This portion is not ours.

Like Israel's ancient song,
Forth from the world's gay pageantries we go,
The desert's stern discipline to know—
There is our heritage.

Sorrow and toil not pain,—
These are the portal, and beyond their bar
The land we see not with our tear-dimm'd eyes,
Where they who serve shall reign.

Ours is the field of strife,—
The trumpet call, the foeman's dark array,
By night the fight, and the fight by day;
So we march on to life.

On, on, with tired feet,
We toil on ice-clad peak and burning plain,
Till the blest city of our rest we gain,
And walk its golden street.

Where hope is changed to sight,
Life's darkest sorrows from afar shall seem
Like the dim phantasms of a troubled dream
In the full morning light.

Selections.

THE EASTERN QUESTION—IS TURKEY SYMBOLIZED BY THE DRYING UP OF THE EUPHRATES IN Rev. xvi. 12.

The Eastern Question is at present exciting considerable attention. This has arisen partly from the financial condition of Turkey, and the insurrection of certain of its subject peoples, but chiefly from the part which Britain has taken in the purchase of shares of the Suez Canal, and other proceedings not exactly in harmony with the great powers of Europe. A few remarks on the place which Turkey is supposed to occupy in prophecy may not be without some use in the pages of the Rainbow.

For upwards of two hundred and forty years the generality of interpreters of prophecy have held that the decay of the Turkish power is predicted in this passage: "The sixth angel poured out his vial on the great river Euphrates. And the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared." Joseph Mede seems to have been the first to give this interpretation. It is contained in his commentary on the Apocalypse, published in 1632. Luther's view, published in 1534, was that it signified the exhaustion of the wealth and power of Papal Rome, the modern Babylon. And Pareus held the same view, published in 1063. Mede was the next commentator, and his view was adopted by the great majority of his successors in this department of Biblical study.

The late E. B. Elliott, in his Horæ Apocalyptiæ, who adopts the same view, says: "It is manifest that the same Turkish power is here intended that was described, under the sixth trumpet, as loosed from the Euphrates. Like the Assyrian power of old, when providentially employed to desolate Judah, it had overflowed from its Euphratean river-banks over Grecian Christendom. And now the Apocalyptic vision represented that its symbolic river-flood was to be dried up." But I fail to find in anything either under the sixth trumpet, or here under the sixth vial, the slightest allusion to a river overflowing its banks. In Rev. xvi. 12, it is simply the drying up of the water of the river that is described, and under the sixth trumpet the figure of an inundation is nowhere to be found.

But Mr. Elliott quotes a passage from Isaiah (viii. 7) to illustrate the Scriptural use of a river-flood to signify a conquering power. "Now, therefore, behold the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory, and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks," etc. But this is only the invading army of Assyria that is denoted by an inundation. This was fulfilled in the invasion under Sennacherib, so signally defeated. It is not a power making an extensive incursion into a distant territory, acquiring a new capital, and there fixing the seat of its government, as the case of the Turkish empire demands. We have in Jer. xlvii. 2, 3, a similar instance of invasion signified by an inundation: "Behold, waters shall rise up out of the south, and shall be an overflowing flood, and shall overflow the land, and all that is therein,..... at the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses, at the rushing of his chariots," etc.

The fact that the Euphrates runs through the Turkish territory is generally assigned as a reason for applying the symbol to Turkey; but I think it can be easily shown that the context points expressly to a different signification. It is also affirmed that a river is, in Scripture, used to symbolize an empire. The only instance of this I have seen is Rahab, supposed to be the Nile, signifying Egypt. But Rahab, according to Dr. Ritto, is a name of a flying 'sea-monster,' which is applied as an appellation to Egypt in Isa. li. 9; lxxvii., lxxxix.; Isa. li. (and sometimes to its king, Ezek. xxix. 3; xxxii. 3; comp. Psa. lxxiii. 31); which metaphorical designation probably involves an illusion to the crocodiles, hippopotami, and other aquatic creatures of the Nile."

We shall see, in looking into the apocalyptic scene, that there is nothing corresponding to an inundation, or a river overflowing its banks. It is the drying up of the bed of a river flowing naturally between its banks.

I may mention that many hold the literal sense of this passage. This derives an appearance of soundness from Isaiah xi. 15, 16, where there is evidently a physical drying up of the Euphrates predicted, in order to afford a passage for Israel from Assyria. But there is nothing to connect this prediction with what is depicted in Rev. xvi. 12. Besides other reasons, which shall be presented immediately, I would only mention here that the term "kings of the East" cannot, with any propriety, be applied to the gathering tribes of Israel. The context points to a metaphorical sense, which commends itself more to my judgment, and I request the attention of the reader to a few remarks thereon.

It seems to me that the interpretation which finds the Turkish empire in this prophecy, ignores the entire context of five chapters (xiv. to xviii. both inclusive). This portion of the Apocalypse shows that the grand theme of the prophecy is the destruction of Babylon, whatever that name may be found to signify. The river Euphrates bore a very important relation to Babylon of old, and it is surely no stretch of conjecture to suppose that here also an equally important relationship is intended.

But there is evidence of a more explicit character as to the closeness of this relation. The woman who is called, "Mystery, Babylon the Great," is described as "sitting upon many waters," and is expressly said to be "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Rev. xvii. 1, 18. This "sitting upon many waters" is the very style of the prophets in their description of old Babylon. Thus, in Isa. xliv. 27; xlv. 1, 2, in a prophecy concerning the deliverance of the Jews from the seventy years' captivity in Babylon by Cyrus, it is said, "That saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers; that saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, thy foundation shall be laid. Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him, and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut; I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight; I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in pieces the bars of iron." Again, in Jer. l. 35-38: "A sword is upon the Chaldeans, saith the Lord, and upon the inhabitants of Babylon, and upon her princes, and upon her wise men;.... a drought is upon her waters; and they shall be dried up." Also in Jer. li. 12, 13: "The Lord hath both devised and done that which he spake against the inhabitants of Babylon. O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness."

It is plain from these quotations, that the Euphrates is spoken of as "many waters," and that Babylon is described as dwelling upon (that is, beside) "many waters," just as we have it in the Revelation. It seems to be a Hebrew idiom to use "waters" in the plural in speaking of a large river. An example may be seen in Dan viii. 5–7, compared with x. 4–6. We have, therefore, in Revelation, a picture derived from Babylon on the Euphrates, and not a mere allusion to the river as an isolated object.

Another element of this picture is derived from the means by which the conquest of Babylon was effected, and by which a way was prepared for the kings of the east and their armies. Cyrus had besieged Babylon for two years, but the city contained so much food within its walls, that its inhabitants were sustained by the produce. He then resorted to stratagem. The Euphrates ran through the centre of the city. He opened up certain old channels which had been originally made for drawing off the superfluous waters in times of flood into an extensive artificial lake. He had his soldiers stationed at the northern side of the city, where it was entered by the Euphrates, and at the southern side, where the river left it. He gave orders that when the waters should subside to a certain point, admitting the passage of his troops, they should enter the bed of the river simultaneously at both points, and join their forces for a combined entrance. "Belshazzar was celebrating the annual festival of the god Bel, and was spending the night in revelling and banqueting; and Cyrus thought it a suitable moment to surprise the enemy, and take him unprepared. "The gates of brass," never open on any other occasion, had this night been left unclosed. The ascent from the river to the city was free, and invited the easy approach of the invader. Both parties met according to appointment at the gate of the royal palace, and surprising the guard of Belshazzar, instantly cut them to pieces. Thus by drying up the Euphrates, a way for the kings of the east was prepared, and Babylon was taken.

But what does Scripture tell us about "the kings of the east?" The prophecies already quoted leave no doubt in the matter. In Jer. li. 11 we read, "The Lord hath raised up the kings of the Medes; for his device is against Babylon to destroy it." Those "kings of the Medes" were Cyrus and Darius. Of the former it it written, "Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus" (already quoted). Again, "I have raised up one from the north, and he shall come; from the rising of the sun (the east) he shall call upon my name; and he shall come upon princes as upon mortar, and as the potter treadeth clay." Isa. xli. 25. On this verse Cobbin says, "Cyrus, by his father was a Mede; by his mother, a Persian. And his army consisted of Medes, whose country lay north, and Persians, whose country lay east, from Babylon." In Isa. xlvi. 11, Cyrus is thus spoken of: "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure; calling a ravenous bird from the east, the man that executeth my counsel from a far country." A different quality of this chosen one is referred to: "Who raised up the righteous man from the east, called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings." Isa. xli. 2.

It is worthy of note, that Media lay as much to the east as to the north of Babylon. Cyrus was the son of Cambyses, satrap or king of Persia, and of Mandane, daughter of Astyages, king of the Medes. He was nephew to CYAXARES II., who was otherwise called Darius the Mede, mentioned in Daniel. It was the Medes and Persians united who conquered Babylon, and "the kings of the east" may be said to be Darius and Cyrus, though there were other kings who had by this time been subjected to their sway.

In addition to these historical facts, which so exactly correspond with the scene depicted in Rev. xvi. 12, there are several other points of analogy which clearly show that the entire picture in the Revelation is derived directly from the conquest of old Babylon.

To show this more plainly, I put the quotations from the prophets and from the Apocalypse in parallel columns:

| | |
|---|---|
| Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken: the nations have drunken of his wine; therefore the nations are mad.—Jer. li. 7. | Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.—Rev. xiv. 8. |
| Behold, a people shall come from the north, and a great nation, and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. They shall hold the bow and the lance: they are cruel, and will not show mercy; their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride upon horses, every one put in array, like a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon.—Jer. l. 41, 42. | And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication. And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.—Rev. xvii. 4, 5. |
| Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed.—Jer. li. 8. | And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.—Rev. xvii. 16. |
| Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter it even to the end of the earth: say ye, The Lord hath redeemed his servant Jacob.—Isa. xlviii. 20. | Alleluia, O praise the Lord, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. And many things had he received up from the coasts of the earth. Therefore hear the word of the Lord, ye kings of the earth, and obey his voice.—Rev. xix. 5. |
| Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity: for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompence.—Jer. li. 6. | Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.—Rev. xviii. 2. |
| Thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever: so that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart, neither didst remember the latter end of it. Therefore hear now this, thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly, that sayest in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me; I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children: but these two things shall come to thee in a moment in one day, the loss of children, and widowhood: they shall come upon thee in their perfection for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments.—Isa. xlvii. 7–9. | Alas, alas, that great city, Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.—Rev. xviii. 10. |
| Their Redeemer is strong; the Lord of hosts is his name: he shall thoroughly plead their cause, that he may give rest to the land, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon.—Jer. l. 34. | Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues; for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.—Rev. xviii. 4, 5. |
| Shout against her round about: she hath given her hand: her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down: for it is the vengeance of the Lord: take vengeance upon her; as she hath done, do unto her.—Jer. l. 15. | How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire.—Rev. xviii. 7, 8. |
| Bring to the Lord God hath rewarded Israel.—Jer. li. 6. | Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her.—Rev. xviii. 20. |
| Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and the holy prophets and apostles; for God hath avenged you on her.—Rev. xviii. 20. | And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all.—Rev. xviii. 21. |
| And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus shall Babylon the great city be thrown down with violence, and shall be found no more at all.—Rev. xviii. 21. | |
| Sing, O ye heavens; for the Lord hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein: for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himself in Israel.—Isa. xliv. 23. | |
| And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates, and thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her: and they shall be weary. Thus far are the words of Jeremiah.—Jer. li. 63, 64. | |

This comparison places it beyond a doubt that the Babylon of Revelation is, in some important respects, analogous to ancient Babylon. And it is just as clear that the Euphrates of Revelation is related to the modern Babylon similarly to that of the Euphrates of history to ancient Babylon.

But what is of equal certainty and importance is the fact, that "the waters upon (or beside) which the woman (Babylon) sits," are identical with the Euphrates. It becomes an important question, therefore, What are signified by those waters? It is expressly intimated that the waters are "peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." This is a divine interpretation, as it shows that the waters are metaphorical. But if, as is made certain from the explanation just quoted, the waters are identical with the Euphrates, there is no escape from the conclusion that the Euphrates is also metaphorical. If this be so, then there is no ground for the literal sense of the drying up of the Euphrates, and the metaphorical drying up of that river must have a relation to the destruction of the apocalyptic Babylon, similar to that which the drying up of the literal Euphrates in the days of Cyrus had to literal Babylon. For, surely, if the Euphrates be metaphorical, Babylon must also be employed in the same sense.

The metaphorical sense of the river Euphrates is further confirmed by the vials and their contents. They are said to be filled with the wrath of God, which is poured from them on various objects, of which the Euphrates is one. But if the vials are metaphorical, and also the operations of filling and pouring the wrath of God, how can we escape the conclusion that the Euphrates is also metaphorical? And if so, is not the drying up, as well as the passage so made for the kings of the east, and the kings of the East themselves, also metaphorical?

What then is the thing signified? Is there any ground for the supposition that the Euphrates signifies the Turkish empire? Does the modern Babylon, assuming it, as Mede and his followers do, to be the Papacy, bear a relation to the Turkish Empire, corresponding in any way to that sustained by ancient Babylon to the literal river Euphrates? Can the explanation given of "the waters beside which the woman sits," be applied to the Euphrates as the symbol of Turkey? In other words:—Are "peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues," a fair description of the Turkish Empire. If so I am not aware of any reasonable grounds upon which it has been maintained.

On the assumption, however, that Babylon signifies the Papacy, might we not find a fitting fulfilment of the "peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues," in the nations of modern Christendom, so "called? Luther saw in the drying-up process, the exhaustion of the wealth and power of Papal Rome. Is there not something like this to be seen in the evident withdrawal of national support from the Papacy already begun in several continental countries?

But without insisting on this, or any other detailed exposition of this prophecy, I would suggest that it might be understood in a more general sense, similar to that in which the parables of our Lord are in most cases to be taken, namely, as designated to teach some particular lesson, details being subordinated to the main object, and not therefore to be taken as if every item must have a distinct meaning. The parable of the rich man and Lazarus is a case in point.

Applying this principle to the seven last plagues, denoted by the seven vials of wrath, which are preliminary to the destruction of Babylon, we have found that the last but one (the sixth), the drying up of the Euphrates, has a special bearing on ancient Babylon and the means of its conquest. In addition to this there is a certain resemblance of a general character between the seven plagues of the vials and the plagues which were inflicted upon Egypt, preliminary to the deliverance of the Israelites. This is further verified by the introduction of a scene from the deliverance of Egypt—just at the first infliction of the vial-plagues, namely, a song of victory, the song of Moses and of the Lamb, sung on (the shore of) a sea of glass (a smooth sea), by those who had gotten the victory over the beast. As John simply describes what he saw without in every case naming the objects, are we not left to infer that this sea was the Egyptian sea, and that the picture is derived from the Israelites singing their song of victory on its eastern shore, after their deliverance from Egypt? I rather think this is the view taken by Mr. Elliott.

It seems to me that the grand design of this part of the prophecy is, not so much to point out a variety of detailed events which should take place, but rather that a vivid picture of the certainty of the fulfilment of the divine purposes should be presented to the churches of the first century and onwards, in order to sustain them in the midst of persecution so clearly predicted.

At the same time, I have no doubt that the principal features in the prophecy, such as Babylon, the beast, the woman, etc., have a meaning. The fourth beast of Daniel vii. seems to furnish materials for the subsequent developements of "the kingdom of men." And possibly the very name Babylon in the Apocalypse is derived from the fact that the first phase of that kingdom was the Babylonish, which was represented by the first beast, and by the golden head of Nebuchadnezzar's image.

There seems also one reason for connecting the Papacy with the fourth empire, inasmuch as for upwards of a thousand years it actually possessed the city of Rome, the ancient capital of the fourth dominion.

In regard to Turkey being symbolized by the Euphrates, I think I have said enough to show that that interpretation is at least extremely questionable and therefore to be maintained with becoming modesty.

The decay of the Turkish power has been viewed as an important sign of the second advent of our Lord. But even assuming that Turkey is the power denoted by the Euphrates, and taking Turkish affairs at the very worst, it surely cannot be said to present greater urgency as a sign of Christ's appearing, than the repeated statements of Scripture that the Lord is at hand. Commentators hold that the sixth vial began to be poured out in A. D. 1820, that is, sixty-two years ago, and that as a consequence Turkey has been wasting away ever since. The decay of Turkey has thus been very gradual, and it should not be surprising, though proceeding at a corresponding rate, if a number of years should still elapse ere it be completed, notwithstanding recent excitement.

Then, again, it is the European portion of Turkey that is the scene of insurrection, and most likely to be first subjected to partition or extinction. Turkey in Asia may survive as the Ottoman Empire for years to come, as there is not the same reasons for desiring its overthrow in Asia as in Europe. And it is in Asia that Turkey comes more directly in relation to Scripture prophecy, seeing she has possession of the Holy Land, which forms part of the Turkish Empire.

But what evidence is there that the decay of Turkey is an event which immediately precedes the advent? Is not Rev. xvi. 12 followed by the "gathering of the kings of the earth, and of the whole world to the battle of that great day of God Almighty?" No one will affirm that this gathering has commenced, for, with the exception of Turkey, peace prevails almost everywhere at present. True, this gathering may begin even before the power of Turkey passes away; but from the sequence of events intimated in the passage, it is just as likely that Turkey will cease to exist before the gathering begins. Then the time such a gathering will occupy, and that particular stage of it—if not at its very close—at which the advent shall take place, are questions which require to be answered before the fall of Turkey can be of any practical use as a sign. And considering the attitude of the great powers of Europe towards each other, it is quite possible that the existence of Turkey may be prolonged in Europe for a considerable period.

The giving so much prominence to political events as signs of the Lord's coming seems to me to tend to the neglect of the repeated warnings given to watch because the time is unknown, and to say with the evil servant (in his heart), "My Lord delayeth his coming." We stand directly related, not to Christ's public appearing with his saints, but to that earlier and probably private meeting which shall take place at the resurrection when he comes, at the initial stage of his advent, to meet his saints. No foreknowledge of the events of that time and their order can give us notice of the resurrection, to which point all our watching should be directed—a watching not for signs, but to maintain the necessary character of those who wait for, look for, and love his appearing.—J. Cameron, in Rainbow.

A Fresh Blow at the Pope.

The rapid strides made by Italy in securing personal rights and in divorcing the temporal from the spiritual power are once more exemplified. The case in itself is one of trifling importance, involving merely a question of debt, but the principle involved is one of extraordinary importance, as the decision of the Italian courts which affirms it reduces the Pope in all temporal matters to the level of the Italian citizen, enjoying the same rights and liable to the same responsibilities.

The legal proceedings involved the jurisdiction of the Vatican. An Italian architect named Martinucci, who had been employed many years in making repairs within the Vatican, held a claim against the Papal steward or major-domo for work which he had performed. For the settlement of this and similar claims the Pope established something like a commission within the walls of the Vatican, but Martinucci, evidently fearing that he would not obtain justice before it, went to a secular court outside the Vatican and brought his suit. The Pope was represented by counsel, who claimed that the court had no jurisdiction over matters occuring in the Vatican, basing the claim upon the ground that the Pope has never yielded his rights as a temporal sovereign, and hence the State has no right to invade the sacred province of the Vatican. The court decided in favor of the Pope's steward so far as the mere debt was concerned, which is a matter of no moment, but it overruled the Papal counsel's plea of want of jurisdiction, which is a matter of vast moment to Italy, as it opens the Vatican to the sovereignty of the King in all temporal concerns. The case was thereupon appealed to the higher or Court of Appeal, where the Papal counsel made the same claim only to be defeated again, as the higher court affirmed the decision of the lower in the matter of jurisdiction.

The effect of this decision is to make the Pope and his household amenable to the civil laws within his own bailiwick of the Vatican, and against it he cannot plead the Papal guarantees, as he has always declared he never accepted them, basing his sovereignty upon inherent right, which is strong as a theory, but when it is brought to application must involve the question of force. As the matter of fact at issue—namely: the debt—was decided against the architect, no judgment can be enforced, but the principle remains, and in any future case which may come up, where a claim is proven, the Government can execute the judgment, by force if necessary, within the walls of the Vatican. It is not likely that such a decision will escape sharp and bitter criticism from Ultramontanes everywhere as a violation of the sanctity of the Pope and the prerogatives of his household, and renewed complaints from his Holiness of his imprisonment. It is likely also that the decision will involve a fresh quarrel between the King and the Pope, in which the former will have the advantage. There is not a court in Europe that would dare to incur the political complications which would ensue should it come to the aid of the Pope as against the Italian Government. Had the Pope accepted the guarantees, which the Government has always carried out until now, his case would have been stronger, as under those guarantees he was invested with the privileges of royalty within the territory of the Vatican. In refusing them, however, he has sawed off the limb on which he was sitting, and if, as he now finds himself, he is merely a spiritual sovereign in the view of the law he has no remedy unless he can bring force from without to help him. Whence is that force to come? What Power in Europe would dare to assail the principle laid down in the Italian law courts? Certainly not Germany, Austria, or England. France used to be the daughter of the church, but she was not then a Republic. Spain might at one time, but the days of Spanish power are over, and besides this, if she should protest or take any steps to rescue the Pope that act would make her a Republic. It is a little matter, the architect's debt, but it has shown that the world is slowly but surely moving towards the complete divorce of Church and State and that the old dogma of the divine right of kings to rule and of prelates to control temporal affairs has no longer vital power.—Chicago Tribune, Nov. 18, 1883.

Babyland for 1883.

The only Magazine in the world expressly for babies: only 50 cents a year.

No home where a baby laughs and coos can be complete without this dainty monthly. During the next year it will be more delightful than ever. It will have for models Jingles, and its twenty amusing stories of itty men and women, and its

LARGE, BEAUTIFUL PICTURES,

as heretofore, and will be printed in the same

LARGE TYPE

and on the same

HEAVY CREAM-TINT PAPER.

In addition, Mr. Bergen is preparing a novel series of illustrating

TWELVE FULL PAGE PICTURES

"WHAT BLACK EYES AND BLUE EYES SAW IN FOREIGN LANDS."

A beautiful

PICTURE ALPHABET

will run as a wee serial through the year.

Babyland is only 50 cents a year. Send the address of your baby, and the addresses of your baby friends, and specimens will be sent them.

D. LOTHROP & Co., Publishers.
32 Franklin Street, Boston.

THE LIFE EVERLASTING!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING. What is it? whence is it? whose is it? By J. H. Pettingell, A. M., (author of "Homiletical Index," "Theological Tri-lemma," etc.,) with a copious symposium, in which twenty representative men—ecclesiastics, laymen, professors, doctors, and scholars—of the various churches of Europe and America, unite with the author in giving their own views of the Christian doctrine of the immortality of man. The whole constituting the most thorough and exhaustive discussion of this question now existing; such general inquiry, ever published. Just out of press. 300 pages. Price by mail $2. May be had at the office of THE RESTITUTION. Plymouth, Ind.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE READERS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Gospels and Kingdom of Christ, by Sister Augusta, in 1878. 3. Immanuel, 1883. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Sowing of Wild Oats. Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Holiness. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 60c, or assorted packages of 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

Fifty cents per 100; 10 cents per 20c.

Can You Believe? A series of 33 questions. We consider this the best tract to circulate in our list.

The Second Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

The Apostasy and Restitution. By H. V. Reed. Life and Death. A concise discourse and contrast of the two theories on these points, by the Theological and Bible Index.

Human Governments and Politics. By A. B. Mauzy.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

Per hundred, or 25 for 25c.

Is it Right to Pray for the Success of the Enemy of Israel. R. White.

Signs of the Times. By Hon. W. Scotland.

The Searching and Unbending. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future the 6th gathering of the Nations, Israel and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

Per hundred, or 15 for 25c.

Resurrection and the Kingdom of God. E. Heath. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Christian Union. John A. Simonds.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

Per hundred, 25 for 25c; per 100 for $1.

The New Birth. Jacob Osborn.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Stimson.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.

Per hundred, or 15 for $1.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. M. Rex. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, compiled with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 32 pages, price 5c.

A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the Necessity of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David. Daniel Bancroft. Price 15 cents, or 75 cts. per dozen.

Future Punishment, its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Secretary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 300 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with the time of the future conversion and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work fascinating to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 112 pages, cloth 75c; paper 50c.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. H. Stephenson. Comprehensive and able statement of the leading points of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith are ably and clearly set forth. Over 100 pages, cloth $1.

Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness. John Edmunds. Price 50 cents.

Herald of the Advent, is the name of a New Hymn book, compiled by Charles C. Barker. Mr. Barker contributes to the book the "Hymns of the Morning" and "Hymns of Faith and Consolation of Angels." As an appendix he adds a selection of Favorite Hymns, whose music is on a two-cent card. Those using the "Christian Psalmist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 50c, cloth $1.

The Emphatic Diaglott. Benjamin Wilson Contains the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineate Word-for-word English Translation based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the various manuscripts together with Illustrative and expansive foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christendom have been built up; and which work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 834 pages, cloth $4.50, Library binding $5.50.

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1883.

More people have read The Sun during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first published. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been so widely and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read, and like the Sun for its following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in a concise form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for human kind; the events of the week and incidents, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at present revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs the Sun makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability (three hundred and thirty-three days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whales as well as about the small fish, in the face of clamors as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The Sun has absolutely no purposes to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the Sun is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that is resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robespierre and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the Sun regards and will continue to regard it as a mark for the interest of the people against the ambitions of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One even holds that the Sun is the best religious paper now published, because it is "decidedly irreligious." Still others declare that it is the best Republican newspaper printed, because it is already stripped bare of the rascals and of the rags, and is proceeding against the others in a most unblushed fashion. A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers are quite capable of understanding it, and in the world of thought. So every friend of the Sun discovers one of the many claims that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the Sun, you will observe that in fact it is a little better than ever before. If you do not already know the Sun, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of common sense and imagination, a missionary for the cause of honest government, a sanitary for sparing Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wicked-ness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

TERMS TO MAIL SUBSCRIBERS.

The several editions of The Sun are sent by mail, postpaid, as follows:

DAILY—Per a month, $0.50 a year, with Sunday edition $7.70.

SUNDAY—Eight pages, $1.20 a year.

WEEKLY—Also a year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues, an agricultural department of unequalled merit, market reports, and literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence make the Weekly sun the newspaper for the farm fireside. To clubs of ten with $10, an extra copy free.

Address I. W. ENGLAND, Publisher,
The Sun, N. Y. City.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DUGGINS.....President.
W. TUTTLE.....Vice President.
E. K. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
A. R. UNDERWOOD.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
W. TUTTLE, E. K. BARNHILL,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
D. T. BAILSTEAD. B. WILSON.
J. P. WEETHER. G. V. REED.
WILEY JONES. S. WILSON.
A. B. MAURUDEN.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 20, 1882. NO. 47.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortalized saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the kingdom of God, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

EGYPTIAN PHASE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.—No. 10.

Prelude—A step in advance—"Just one terrible hour for Jerusalem coming according to Zech. xiv. 12." What is it?—When is it?—Egypt's connection with period—First pyramid further examined—Were all the other pyramids and monuments erected after that of Cheops?—What made Egypt a land of monuments?—Purpose of God.

Prelude—A step in advance.—The Egyptian is but one phase (aspect) of the Eastern Question. It has as many phases as there will be principal nations occupied in the coming struggle. Among these the Hebrew phase (composed of Judah and Israel) will be the most prominent. But, in the revolutions that will unite the two nations, Jerusalem, their ancient seat of religion and civil law, and their future capital, will be a "burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it." Jerusalem is God's city. He claims it for his people. No nation was ever blessed in holding Jerusalem. It has always been to its Gentile conquerors a "burdensome stone." And such it is, and will be. The Egyptians found it such (see history). Jerusalem has had seventeen sieges. Two or three are yet to come. Four times it was razed to the ground. Six times, at least, its walls have been thrown down. A city of mountains and in the midst of mountains. (If what advantage has it ever been to a Gentile monarch? Could they answer from the dust, two words would express their experience, "A burdensome stone!" What gain was Jerusalem ever to Egypt Syria proper? How did she ever benefit Assyria, Persia, Greece, Rome or Arabia? What has she been, or is now to the Ottoman empire? "A burdensome stone!" What was she to Western Europe during the Crusades? To the Gentiles she has always been, what she was of old, "A rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and princes;" in other words "A burdensome stone!" Turkey now holds Jerusalem, but is it not "A burdensome stone?"

"Just one terrible hour for Jerusalem coming according to Zech. xiv 12." So speaks a very able and kind brother. Let us see. Zechariah, uttering the purpose of Jehovah, says, "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city." In Zech. xi. xii. and xiii., we have brought to view a long captivity; a siege of Jerusalem by the nations; their overthrow; the manifestation of Jesus of Nazareth to Judah and Israel; their mourning, conversion, and reign during Messiah's official reign of subjugation, or millennial reign. The morning of Christ's official reign (1 Cor. xv. 25, 26; Rev. xix. 11-21) opens with a siege of Jerusalem. Judah is victorious outside of the city. After this overthrow of the forces of the beast and false prophet, and the flight of the dragonic army, there is a pursuit of the pagan forces, and they are overthrown, and their leader—Satan, Rev. xx.—is taken prisoner. Here commences the 1000 years' peaceful (comparatively) official reign of Messiah.

During this official reign the earth, with its subjugated nations comes under the dominion of Messiah, while he fills his third office (regal). The earth passes through its preliminary change, becomes very productive, healthy and (outwardly) filled with an obedient people. This state continues through a series of ages, or during 1000 (prophetic perhaps) years. These are two parts of Messiah's reign of subjugation. It has a terminus, Zech. xiv.; Eze. xxxvii. and xxxviii.; and Rev. xx. 8, 9. Of this we shall give some thoughts in our next prelude. Let us now go down among the monuments of the Pharaohs.

The great pyramid continued.—It is impossible in our limited space to do justice to such a noble structure. We can walk about it; enter and examine its secret halls; can measure its chambers, uttering a vocabulary of interjections; but when we have fully ventilated our brain, it is only an ocean drop. Man's monuments can be comprehended, but when God plans and builds, who can understand it to perfection? Let us for a moment glance at the catalogue of pyramid lessons of science and religion. Here follows a very imperfect list:—

Problems of science: 1. Squaring the circle; 2. Cardinal points; 3. π proportion; 4. Sphericity of the earth; 5. Its movements on its axis and round the sun; 6. Its diameter; 7. Its density; 8. Its poles; 9. Its latitudes; 10. Its distributions of land; 11. Its temperature; 12. Its position in the solar system; 13. Its distance from the sun; 14. The nature and length of the precessional cycle; 15. Divisions of time; 16. Position of the stars when the pyramid was constructed; 17. Charts of chronology; 18; Charts of history; 19. System of weights; 20. System of measures; 21. Hebrew commonwealth, its commencement and duration; 22. The Christian time of beginning, its features and time of its close; 23. The incorporation of the solutions of these problems, with many others into the structure of the pyramid; 24. Perfection of the work; 25. Variety of tools necessary for such an edifice; 26. The vastness of the machinery for the erection of the building; 27. Its peculiar location; 28. Its form and size; 29. Its touchings are without error, either in their design or in their execution; 30. Could all these coincidences, with 70 others be accidental; that they so happened to be so quarried, dressed, and laid up as to solve such an encyclopedia of scientific problems? To suppose this, is to admit the truth of a more stupendous miracle, than its claim to a divine origin. Charles Latimer, civil engineer, says, "This structure explains itself to the millioneth part of a second." "There are three keys in the great pyramid, 1. The key of pure mathematics; 2. The key of applied mathematics; 3. The key of past, present, and future history. It is a book of Astronomic, Metric, Messianic, and Prophetic Science. It was built nearly 22 centuries (B. C. 2170) before Christ; 478 years after the flood, and about 80 years after Ham entered Egypt, soon after the formation of the Egyptian monarchy by Misraim (Menes) the son of Ham. Has this first pyramid a Hamitic, Shemitic, or a divine origin? By this we mean to ask, who conceived the model? Was it the embodiment of human or of divine thought?

The great pyramid was erected in the days of Joktan, and his 13th son Jobab (Hebrew translation, Father Job). This age of the world could not have formed such a model in any human brain, much less in an Egyptian brain. If a Shemite furnished the model, it was from one of the sons of Joktan (Jobab), at a time when human life was limited to about 200 years (such was about the number of Job's years). Tradition says that a shepherd fed his flocks there during its building and that he furnished the king (Cheops) the model. Job (this shepherd) obtained this model from God. God would therefore be its author.

For what purpose was it erected? God has revealed his design to his prophet Isaiah (see Isa. xix. 19): "In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord." It was built in that remote age, but was shut till the "time of the end" (Dan. xii. 4). With this sketch we close our notice of Egyptian monuments. Certain other events belonging to this period of Egyptian history deserve attention as illustrative of this family and their country. It covers the Hebrew sojourn and bondage, commencing with the building of the great pyramid B. C. 2170, and closing with their settlement in the land of Canaan, B. C. 1443, covering 727 years.

Hebrew sojourn and bondage.—This, from the second call of Abraham, in Haran, to their leaving Egypt under Moses, was a period of 430 years. Egyptian history, during this time, is quite obscure. We have a divine record of the chain of events that led the family of Jacob into Egypt, a glance at the 115 years of the severe Hebrew bondage, God's great judgments executed upon Pharaoh. But, as we are tracing Egyptian history, we shall confine our remarks to events that belong to that land, and which illustrate God's purposes towards that country.

1. We have seen that it was fitted for, and furnished, as a second paradise. 2. That it was made the land of intellect, of knowledge, and monuments. 3. That Jehovah had there erected his memorial pillar for future ages. 4. We shall now view that land as a divine asylum, a land of refuge, and, in those days, and since, the granary of the east.

Fragments of history, only, of those early times, glance at Egypt. To such we turn. God's special proprietorship over Egypt and over its management; over its laws and kings in ancient time we purpose to show, in order to aid us in explaining its present state and its future destiny. Abram's visit to Egypt in the time of the famine in Canaan is a striking illustration of such an ownership. The Egyptians, captivated with the beauty of Sarah, brought her into the harem of Pharaoh, (Egypt was not safe for beauty and virtue). "And the Lord plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues, because of Sarai, Abram's wife." Gen. xii. 17. As if God had said to Pharaoh, "Egypt is my farm. You are my tenant. I have sent my servant, Abram, to reside with you till the famine in Canaan is over. Treat him kindly as my special friend."

2. The most noted instance of God's claims over Egypt is seen in the Hebrew sojourn, bondage and deliverance. God's vision to Joseph excited the envy and hatred of his brethren. This hatred caused his sale to the spice merchants of Midian, who were going down into Egypt to supply the special perfumery of Pharaoh's harem. In consequence of which Joseph was sold into the family of Pharaoh. His position caused his imprisonment. In prison he has an opportunity of interpreting correctly two dreams. The reputation thus acquired brought him out of prison to interpret Pharaoh's dreams. These interpretations elevated him to a position of acting Governor of Egypt, with the control and disposal of seven years' productions of Egypt.

The severe dearth over all the east brought [illegible] Among these were Joseph's brethren; then his father, with all his substance, by invitation of Pharaoh (one of the shepherd dynasty who had conquered Egypt). This chain of providence is interpreted by Joseph: "Now therefore be not grieved nor angry with yourselves, that you sold me hither: for God did send me here before you to preserve life. For these two years (hath) the famine (been) in the land; and yet (there are) five years, in the which (there shall be) neither earing nor harvest. And God sent me before you to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance. So now (it was) not you (that) sent me hither, but God; and he hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt." Gen. xlv. 5-8. God gives Goshen (the Delta) to the Hebrews, where they continued till God had prepared another land for them, after the cup of the Amorites was full. Gen. xv. 16.

God's judgment of Egypt shows his proprietorship. The circumstances which called the Hebrews out of Egyptian bondage are quite familiar to the reader. We shall therefore, confine our remarks to God's dealings with Pharaoh (crocodile), his hosts, and with the land. God demanded of Pharaoh implicit obedience. On his refusal he began to expose him to his terrible judgments for his people's oppression. The ten plagues followed in quick succession, and the Hebrew exodus commenced. Pharaoh gathered his forces and overtook his slaves at the Red Sea. Pursuing them into the dry channel, made by Jehovah for his people, he was overwhelmed by the returning waters.

Thus ended the Egyptian bondage, and with it the monumental period. So far Egypt had exhibited the most extraordinary features. To this period in the world's history, it had been the queen of all lands. On account of its great fertility, it had drawn into its valley people of the three great families, those of Shem, Ham, and Japheth. Settled first by Ham and his posterity, it was conquered by Shemetic shepherds, who held it 260 years, during part of the Hebrew occupation; and, as a university, it was visited by many of the talented sons of Japheth. A peculiar land, held by a peculiar people.

J. P. WEETHER.

Editor Restitution:

I wish to submit to your candid criticism, a few thoughts that concern at least a few who love the Lord and desire to be found of him in peace at his coming. And let me assure you that what I write is not to provoke controversy, nor yet in a censorous spirit, but with a prayerful desire to occupy a position in relation to the present evil world that the Master will approve. We are living at a time that certainly demands a careful examination of ourselves. We believe the time is near when the wondrous change shall be wrought upon all the faithful ones, when the world's dark hour of judgment is just at hand, and as in the past dealing of God with the wicked nations a separation of God's people took place before the evil fell upon the ungodly, let us so consecrate ourselves to God that when the fearful judgments of a long-suffering and righteous God are poured without stint upon a doomed and Godless world, we may escape the evil.

Believing that the storm of God's judgments will soon sweep the wide world over, a question of deep and thrilling importance thrusts itself upon us, What relation do the saints of God sustain to the governments of earth? In order correctly answer the inquiry another question presents itself, thus: What relation do the governments of men sustain to the kingdom of God?

That there is a strong antagonism between them is susceptible of the clearest proof. They cannot exist contemporaneously; the kingdom of God when established will not assimilate with the nations of earth, but be built upon their ruins. Truly did Jesus say "My kingdom is not of this world." The elements that will be the ruling power in it are not of the world, the laws that will govern it will not partake of the "spirit of the world" in all [illegible] appointments it will be of heavenly origin.

Now is there a nation upon earth that recognizes the claims of God's dear Son to rule the world in righteousness? Does the boasted "land of liberty" in which our lot has been cast admit this claim? Let the message of his coming and reign be as earnestly and literally proclaimed in the capital of this nation as the Master urged it at Jerusalem and it will cost the proclaimer his life or liberty.

How can one read the doom of the nations of earth as forecast by the unerring finger of prophecy, without a shudder for the fate of those who, while professing to look for him whose right it is to reign, have formed an unholy alliance with them? Should the proclamation go forth today from the Son of God, demanding the submission of earth's rulers to his authority, every sword in this government would be unsheathed to oppose the demand. Can a house that is divided against itself stand? Does it not behoove the child of God to heed the injunction urged so strongly upon him by the inspired teaching? Was there ever a time in the history of God's people when this injunction was more needed? "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

While some may claim that the line of duty in regard to our relation to the governments of earth is not very well defined, we must insist that Instructions like this cannot be misunderstood—"abstain from all appearance of evil."

Now that which has even the appearance of evil, we must abstain from. What shall we say then of that which even the advocates themselves admit to be an evil of fearful magnitude? The wise man says "There is a way that seemeth to be right but the end thereof is death." Seemingly plausible reasons have been given why God's people should take part in political affairs, and perhaps one of the most frequent has been this, that political corruption has reached the point that unless pure men throw themselves into the arena of politics the country will be ruined.

To some this may seem good reasoning, but to the intelligent child of God instead of being right it is the way that leads to death. Let me illustrate the relation of the child of God to this great muddy pool of political corruption.

I once saw, while traveling along the Missouri river, a beautiful clear stream of bright sparkling water, that came rippling over its bright pebbly bottom until it leaped into the dark turbid waters of the Missouri. For a little distance it preserved its identity, but soon the little bright thread of silver water was entirely lost in the rolling flood of the great muddy stream.

In the language of the wise man—"Can a man take coals of fire in his bosom and his clothes not be burned? Can one go upon hot coals and his feet not be burned?" Can a man go into the race for office, as political affairs are at present managed, without degrading his manhood? Let those who have made the race testify. It is safe to say that at present no office of trust and profit can be reached without money being employed in schemes of corruption and dishonesty. Voters in every precinct now have a commercial value, and that ranges all the way from a drink of vile whisky to as many dollars as the vote will be considered worth to the aspirant to office. Certainly it requires no great penetration to see it is this not simply the appearance of evil, but the evil itself. [illegible] prudent man foreseeth the evil: "The like [illegible] saith the Lord, the [illegible] doth also [illegible] are [illegible] the putting away of [illegible] says the prefect to expel all Jews [illegible] great [illegible] royal boundaries.

I have spoken of [illegible] an alliance with the government, but this does not exactly express the idea. To see the position of each man who exercises the right of suffrage, it is necessary to know what it takes to constitute the government. A general definition of government is given by Webster as follows: "That form of fundamental rules and principles by which a state or nation is governed." [illegible] government of this country in colonial times, John Adams speaks of it as "That form of government founded on the natural authority of the people alone." This definition accords best with one given I think by Lincoln, i. e. "A government of the people, and by the people, for the people."

This is doubtless the true definition of the form of government now administered in this country. We may truthfully say that the government of this country is, in its operations, a great firm, and as in any other firm the act or acts of each individual member will be recognized as the act or acts of the firm. In the great political firm the people act through the organs chosen to represent them in legislative acts. Thus an act by a body of legislators thus chosen, becomes virtually the act of those who, by their votes, created this body.

To show the fearful responsibility that rests upon each member of this political firm, it is only necessary to look at the contract into which each member enters; it is this—an agreement that the majority shall rule, right or wrong. This may seem a little harsh, but it is only showing the full force of the principle.

To illustrate this, let the most infamous measure be submitted to the voters of a given locality, and if a majority of votes are cast in favor of the measure, the minority must abide the decision, regardless of the consequences that grow out of the measure that thus, by the voice of the majority, becomes a law.

When the submission measure, recently voted upon, and the majority declared against submitting the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of liquor to the vote of the people, the decision, right or wrong, was accepted. When the advocates of liquor shall have become strong enough to submit a measure to remove all restrictions from the liquor traffic, and make it as free from license as tea or coffee, no member of the great political firm would have any right, from a political standpoint, to object. Men of God might object to a policy that would swell the black stream of intemperance, send forth a mighty army of drunkards to curse society, and increase crime and wretchedness all over the land, but he that hath entered into the agreement that the majority should rule can not say aught against it.

With the child of God the question is not, What says the popular voice? but What says the divine law? It is by that law we shall be judged, and by that law that our lives must be governed.

I think I have now established the relation that the people of God sustain to the government of this country. That there is no such thing as harmonizing the two interests. That the position held by the people of God absolutely demands an entire separation. Now to show further the inconsistency of a child of God exercising the right of suffrage, I will show that it is by that act, and by no other, that a citizen of this country becomes a part of the government itself.

A person, whether native born or a foreigner, may comply with every requirement of the laws of this country, but unless he is a legal voter, he is not an element of the government. The foreign born citizen may hold property, pay taxes, and be held responsible to the laws of the country, but unless he becomes a legal voter he is not a part of the government. Hence it logically follows that the man who deposits his vote in the ballot box, does, by that act, become as really a part of the government as the member of a corporation becomes an element of that body by simply comparing votes in the [illegible] and [illegible] institution.

The St. Petersburg [illegible] masters, says the prefect [illegible] to expel all Jews [illegible] great [illegible] royal boundaries.

[illegible] ago when the "Bender Horror" was unearthed in Kansas, the whole country stood aghast at the recital of the bloody deeds that had been perpetrated by the Bender family. But all over this broad land can be found dens of [illegible] rival in fiendish cruelty the [illegible] Bender den. There the victims were [illegible] deprived of life and then robbed of what valuables they had with them, and then thrown quietly into the peaceful grave. Here the victim is robbed of reason, of manhood, of all that is noble in humanity, of good name, of wealth, and then instead of being thrust quietly into the peaceful grave, which would be a blessing not only to him but to the community in which he lives, he is turned loose upon society with the holy torch of reason taken from him, and in its stead all the fierce passions of his nature inflamed and maddened by strong drink. The work of horror has only commenced, it culminates perhaps in the brutal murder of a wife or innocent child, or the insane wretch pours out his blood as a libation to the god of intemperance by being mangled while in a drunken stupor by some passing train. Scenes like this are of such frequent occurrence that they scarce excite remark.

When the first news of the Bender Horror flashed over the land, men did not wait for the slow process of law to punish the guilty wretches, but crushed them as they would a nest of vipers, and no voice has yet been raised in condemnation of the men who thus struck terror into the hearts of evil doers. But how shall the father who has lost one son in the vile den of iniquity that boldly thrusts its impudent front in the face of society, how, we ask, shall he save the other? Shall a vigilance committee suppress the vile institution, that has not one redeeming trait to recommend it? Ah, no, this sink of iniquity, this cesspool of crime, this gilded house of death, has been created by the government, and is as much an object of [illegible] and protection as the public [illegible]. No, the Bender family could be swept away and the people rejoice, but these hideous human vampires that not only take blood from their helpless victims, but even rob them of intellect, will be sacredly guarded by the strong arm of the government that has the audacity to call itself "Christian!" "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." Paralyzed be the arm of such a government. Surely the judgment of a righteous God will be poured upon it!

Shall I be told that the government must do this to raise revenue? Does that prove that it is right? Does the end justify such unholy means? Did not the Bender family pursue their murderous calling for the money there was in it? Away with such heartless excuses, it is the price of iniquity, is money raised at the expense of widow's groans and orphan's cries, and this dark stain upon the nation's record can only be washed out by the blood of those who have placed it there. Another weighty reason why the people of God should not use the ballot, is that they are non-resistants, they cannot bear arms in defense of human governments. Can a man reasonably refuse to assist by force of arms the man whose office he has helped to create by his vote? Remember the bullet is intended to enforce the ballot. To vote for a man whose sworn duty it is to defend the government by force of arms, and then refuse to fight on conscientious principles is to say the least, very inconsistent. I am told that a Judge of the Supreme Court decided that the man who voted another into office was by that act placed under obligations to help by force of arms to sustain him in that office. Is not this a reasonable view to take of it? When war rears its horrid head again in this country, who ought to be exempt from military duty?

Now dear brother, I have tried to treat this subject in a fair Christian spirit. I by no means wish to hold a position that shuts me off from the sympathy of the brotherhood, and it is only from the strongest conviction [illegible] that it is my duty not only to [illegible] part in the political affairs of the [illegible] ernment, but to kindly warn others [illegible] the danger that I have both [illegible] I have made myself unpopular, [illegible] only with the world, but with [illegible] who ought to have bidden me God-speed in the noble work of trying to get the brethren to take higher, holier, purer views of the Christian life. Do we honor the grand rules of life as given by the Great Teacher, when we [illegible] the faulty human schemes [illegible] the world [illegible] a perfect character? God has given [illegible] rule by which to form a perfect character, what more do we need? No one can attain that high degree of moral perfection that God requires unless the perfect rule is followed. The world would gladly have us acknowledge the insufficiency of the divine rule by falling in with some human scheme for bettering the condition of society. Does not the world say: "O yes, the Bible gives some very good rules for the government of society, but they fail to accomplish the purpose, and we propose to bring about a reformation by some other means." "The words that I speak shall judge you."

J. F. WAGONER.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will speak as follows:

Saturday before the fourth Sunday in December at Shoals, Ind., as Brother Stewart may appoint.

All of above meetings to continue over following Sunday.

JOHN FOORE.

The next Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Michigan will be held (the Lord willing) in the Weaver Hall at Hesperia, Oceana Co, Mich. commencing Friday evening Jan. 12, 1883, and continuing over Sunday. Parties coming via Grand Rapids will take the Grand Rapids, Newaygo and Lake Shore R. R. to White Cloud. Leave Grand Rapids at 6:45 a. m. and arrive at White Cloud at 10:35 a. m. Thence with team to Hesperia. Those coming will please send a postal card the week previous to John S. Alderman, Hesperia, so that conveyances from White Cloud may be provided. Those coming from other directions can obtain information regarding the route to take by corresponding with Brother Alderman. Able speakers are expected to be in attendance and a cordial invitation to be present is extended to members of all denominations.

HERBERT MILLER, Sec.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Dec. 20, 1882.

From H. L. Hastings we have received a telling tract against infidelity entitled, The Inspiration of the Bible. It is a lecture delivered before the Sixteenth Annual Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of Massachusetts, and is an admirable and pointed defence of the Scriptures in a small compass. Price five cents. Address 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

For our next number we have—An article written expressly for THE RESTITUTION by Prof. Gardner on the Typical Teachings of the Old Testament—one sent by Br. Wilcox for republication, that appeared in the Chicago Tribune of Dec. 10, on the question—What must I do to be saved?" a letter from J. H. Pettingell, accompanied with an address by him translated from the French, entitled "To the Friends of the Belgian Evangelical Society," by Charles Byse, an article from "Blackwood's Magazine" on the Jewish question in connection with Palestine copied in the Glasgow Messenger, and a short though interesting letter from Mrs. Davis in Jerusalem.

THE following, in connection with other pieces appearing in THE RESTITUTION, goes to show that Chicago is the arena of theological combat at the present time. Old fossil errors are being weighed in the scales of truth and found greatly wanting.

SUNDAY SERMONS.

Dr. Thomas preached yesterday morning, Dec. 11, in the People's Church, on "the dark and unmerciful dogma" of endless punishment, the sermon being the third of a series in reply to Col. Ingersoll. He believed that Ingersoll was entirely sincere in his opposition to this doctrine, compared to which, says John Stuart Mill, "every other objection to Christianity sinks into insignificance." Dr. Thomas reiterated his assertion that Orthodox Christianity never affirmed any such doctrine, and proceeded to prove, in an exhaustive argument, that no such teaching was to be found in the Bible. In illustration of his statements he mentioned the case of the Rev. Theodore Clapp, of New Orleans, who was a firm believer in endless punishment. One day he preached a strong sermon in support of his views. At the close of the service a learned judge asked him to furnish one Hebrew or Greek text which [illegible] doctrine. After eighteen years' study the Doctor confessed that he could not find one text which fairly interpreted, taught the doctrine of the endless misery of human souls. From the study of the Bible alone he was compelled to abandon the doctrine, and preach a broader hope. Dr. Thomas said that if he had succeeded in making clear his belief that endless punishment [illegible] in the Bible, which was God himself bound by his own [illegible] disprove his facts and [illegible] of "never say another word against Christianity."

THE POPE A SUBJECT.

But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end.—Dan. vii. 26.

The day has gone by for the submission of kings to the Ghostly Head of Catholicism. Once a threat to lay a kingdom under interdict caused terror and consternation. Monarchs bowed to the will of the Pope, and his behests were the supreme law in Europe. The ten-horned monster was directed politically and ecclesiastically by the Episcopal horn at Rome. But Papal supremacy is at an end. Legal claims against the inmate of the Vatican can now be enforced by Italian courts of law. Such has been the recent decision in a contested case. We clip the following from exchanges. We are in the time of the end.

"We recently mentioned that the Court of First Instance had decided that the jurisdiction of Italian tribunals extends within the walls of the Vatican, though the Pope and the Law of Papal Guarantees seemed to hold otherwise. The Court of Appeal has confirmed this decision. The Osservatore Romano, the official organ of the Vatican, says of it:

Thus it has been declared, in the most definite manner, that the Pope in Rome is a subject; that his legal position is exactly on a par with that of any private person; and that the sovereignty and rights of the Supreme Pontiff, as regards the extra-territoriality of the Vatican, expressed in the famous Law of Guarantees, are nothing more than an artifice, the merest mockery.

French antagonism to the Church of Rome, and indeed, more or less to everything of an ecclesiastical or religious character, is becoming increasing manifest. A recent debate in the [illegible] French Chambers on Church Establishments revealed a dominant and deep-seated antipathy to the church. A resolution for largely reducing the salary of the Archbishop of Paris was lost only by a very slender majority. The sentiments uttered by many of the speakers in the debate must have been exceedingly offensive to the Archbishop and to all associated with him. This is only one of many rapidly multiplying signs of the times. Not only in France, but in England and other European countries, the way is being prepared for the development of Antichrist by the spread of scepticism and avowed atheism."

THE SULTAN INSANE.

[illegible]

If the Pope has been compelled to accept a seat on a subject's stool after having had the chair of royalty unceremoniously snatched from under him by the King of Italy, and thus be left to bewail a lost kingdom and departed glory, he can now comfort himself—on the principle that misery loves company—with the reflection that the Grand Turk occupies a throne so unstable that he must soon vacate it. The Moslem well knows that England has gone into Egypt to stay, and he realizes the magnitude of this calamity. How forcible the quotation from the prophet. The downfall of these great world powers is a premonition of the downfall of all enthroned tyrannies. The time rapidly approaches when all thrones must be vacated that the Divine One may wear the diadem of the whole earth.

An exchange thus speaks of the Sultan's present condition:

"The Sultan of Turkey is reported to be on the borders of insanity owing to the results of the Egyptian trouble, and to his consciousness that the Empire of Turkey is gradually being dismembered. A dispatch to the New York Sun says that the Sultan's mind has also been affected by the discovery of a plot to assassinate him. He is a prey to the most fearful fits of depression, becomes frantic in his terrors, wails and shrieks at his imaginary enemies, makes and unmakes ministers in twenty-four hours, and altogether presents a pitiable spectacle. His dread of assassination haunts him like a perpetual nightmare. He tells every one about him that he will meet the fate of his brother, and if his hallucinations do not carry him off it is quite possible he will."

The same correspondent [illegible] The English [illegible] ence of Raphoe, says, 'Should it [illegible] it would in a great [illegible] obscure the light of heaven, and put an end to a great part of the happiness and glory of the blessed."

But one other quotation, and this shall be from the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, whom we honor and regard as a most useful and serviceable man; but we call no man master. Listen to what he says: "Only conceive that poor wretch in the flames who is saying, 'Oh for one drop of water to cool my parched tongue!' See how his tongue hangs from between his blistered lips! How it excoriates and burns the roof of his mouth as if it were a firebrand! Behold him crying for one drop of water! I will not picture the scene." (I should say he had done so.) "Suffice it for me to close up by saying that the hell of hells will be to thee, poor sinner, the thought that it is to be for ever. That will look up there on the throne of God, and on it shall be written 'for ever.' When the damned jingle the burning irons of their torments they shall say, 'For ever!' When they howl, echo cries, 'For ever!'

"For ever! in waves on their rocks,
For ever! o'er their chalices
For ever! beneath in the fire,
For ever! over regions!"

One other extract, and that from a clergyman of the Romish Church, from whom, however, we should not expect much better. The gentleman is the Rev. J. Furniss, and it is contained in a book published for the "use of children and young persons." "See on the middle of the reddest floor stands a girl; she looks about sixteen years old. Her feet are bare. Listen; she speaks. 'I have been standing on this red-hot floor for years. Look at my burnt and bleeding feet. Let me get off this burning floor for one moment!'—The fifth dungeon is the red-hot one. The little child is in the red-hot oven. Hear how it screams to come out; see how it turns and twists itself about in the fire. It beats its head against the roof of the oven. It stamps its little feet on the floor. God was very good to this little child. Very likely God saw it would get worse and worse, and would never repent, and so it would have to be punished more severely in hell! So God in his mercy called it out of the world in early childhood!" I will read no more. You will see I am not exaggerating when I affirm that modern teaching is not that the "wages of sin is death," but that the wages of sin is eternal life in conscious torture.

Eternal torment! How easily we pronounce the words—how glibly they roll from the tongue. Did you ever try to realize what they mean? To be burning—to be alive in excruciating torments—for thousands and tens of thousands of ages, and still no further from release. But let us not lure ourselves in a crowd. When Sterne would bring out the horrors of slavery he individualized it—"let us," he said, "take a single captive." Let us do the same. We know that those who hold this terrible theory adopt certain palliatives, use certain apologies just to soothe the conscience. One good gentleman—Professor Bicks, who cannot give up the idea of man's immortality, yet shudders at this. He palliates it by supposing that in the course of many ages the wicked get used to the flames and have such a [illegible] sense of the divine justice that it will only be to them a kind of inferior Paradise. But the general feeling abroad is this—at least among the orthodox party. They believe that all children who die under seven are exempt from this terrible torture; they say that the age of responsibility begins at seven. It would be interesting to know and to inquire on what Scripture they base the thought. We know of none. Of course, their conscience would not allow them to endorse—indeed they could not—the sentiment of Augustine. "That infants departing from the body without baptism are certainly in damnation." But let us suppose a case according to their standpoint—let us take a "single captive"—a single child. Let us suppose a household where there are two children—a sister and a brother. The brother is the first born; and he has reached to within two months of seven years. Then some disease incident to childhood, or it may be a fever, strikes him down; and he dies on the verge of seven. Oh, happy child! He has passed at once into all the joys of heaven, had he lived two months longer, the result would have been very different, he would have been writhing and suffering in the flames of hell. That fever was his savior, and conducted him straight to heaven. But by and by the little sister, whose merry laugh, and smiling face, was the sunshine of home, she reaches the age of seven. Two months have hence elapsed when she is struck down by disease or fever, and in a few days or weeks she is no more. Oh, terrible [illegible] thought! Those brief 60 days have been fraught with a terrible eternity of anguish.

Let us suppose that thousands of ages have rolled away, and earth and its history are things of the long gone past. This eternally-tormented child is cast up to the surface of the burning lake. Listen! it speaks. "Oh God, have mercy, I was only seven years on earth, and for each year of earth-life I have had ten thousand years of burning. Oh, God! is it not enough? For three years I was but a baby, and for those three years of baby-life I have had thirty thousand years of burning. O, God! have mercy. My last memory of earth was my mother's parting kiss, her fond caress, her bitter tears, then the devils fetched me away and plunged me into this burning lake. Oh, God! have mercy." But again the surging billows dash over the shrieking and the shrinking form. And again the mocking anthem rises from the neighboring heaven, "His mercy endureth for ever." Can you believe it? God, if for one moment in our lives we had ever held such a thought of thee, oh, forgive us. Such, according to the popular theory is the desert of sin—embracing children from seven years old and upwards.

Part of a Second Letter from Chicago with Addenda.

CHICAGO, Dec. 12, 1882.

S. A. CHAPLIN,

Dear Bro.:—Yours received this morning, and I take just a moment to say, that I send you, with this letter, a copy of the Courier Journal:—Make what use you choose of its contents.

I am not at all discouraged at what has happened, but rejoice rather; because it has all turned out, as I foresaw it must, to the furtherance of the Gospel. Bigotry sought to prevent me from speaking to a paltry score or two, and, lo! thousands have already heard the good news for the first time, and thousands more are yet to hear it. O, it is grand—God be praised. O how my heart has burned within me, as I have looked upon the perishing multitudes falling in darkness and despair by the way-side. And I have cried mightily to God, and besought him to let his voice be heard, and his truth reach these perishing ones. I do believe his time has come to work. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. The minds of the people, as never before, are receptive to the truth. God has emptied them of the falsehoods of the past, and swept them clear of the cobwebs, and garnished them with all manner of learning—and now let us beseech Him to take up his abode in the temple his own hands have prepared. Yours full of hope, and rejoicing even in tribulation.

J. F. WILCOX.

The foregoing, though written as a private communication, nevertheless, serves as a better preface than anything we could write to the correspondence printed in the Louisville Courier Journal sent us, and which we reprint below. The re-action caused by a serious contemplation of the horrid dogmas of the creeds has precipitated many into cheerless infidelity, while multitudes of others are anxiously asking—What is the truth? The answer of the Life Giver is, that God's word is truth. This word declares that the wages of sin is death—even the soul that sinneth shall die. It is equally explicit in declaring that the gift of God is Eternal life, and that this life is in his Son. Science—falsely so called—may wrap itself up in the fig-leaf vestment of natural immortality, but revelation emphatically avers that life and immortality are brought to light through the Gospel.

A CASE OF HERESY THAT IS AGITATING THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, OF CHICAGO.

From the Courier-Journal.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—As Kentucky and the South have an immense number of good people professing the Christian, or Campbellite, faith, I feel sure they would be interested in a case of heresy which is seriously agitating the members of that denomination in this city. The trouble is located at the First Christian church, on the West Side, which has at various times been ministered to by quite a number of talented clergymen of this denomination. Some time since, this church called as its pastor, the Rev. J. Fletcher Wilcox, a man of no great pretensions in personal appearance, but a gentleman of unusual ability and earnestness. Everything went along smoothly until a few weeks since, when Mr. Wilcox began a series of Sunday evening lectures upon "The Future Life." These were reported in the papers, and threw the denomination here into immediate consternation. I called at Mr. Wilcox's residence, Avon Place, to-day, and the following is the substance of an interview upon the entire matter:

"I am not now, and never have been, until I became associated with the First Christian church of this city, a member of the Campbellite or Disciple church. My religious connection has been from the start with another people bearing the name of 'Christian.' They resembled the Disciples, in having no creed but the Bible, and in being Immersionists. A large number of them, however, were originally Disciples, both among the ministers and people, and are still what Alexander Campbell was, until his death, Millenarians. There are a few who still retain the religious simplicity of their founder, and really have, as they profess, no creed but the Bible. I supposed the First church, of this city, was one of them, and when called to it had no hesitancy in accepting. I have held, substantially, the views I now hold, and have preached them the greater portion of the time for the past twenty-five years. For at least ten years of that time I have been an Evangelist in the States of Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan and Indiana; have some years in succession traveled over 5,000 miles and preached over 200 times each year; during this time holding many debates with the champions of various religious and irreligious bodies—the last one with one Warren B. Hendricks, a Disciple minister, now pastor of Gen. Garfield's old church at Mentor, Ohio, the debate being held at Remington, Indiana, while Hendricks was pastor of that church and I was serving a church at Goodland. I came here five years ago to engage in business, but, like most ministers, without much capital, experience or information among business men, I failed with a large family to care for. I have since supported myself principally by my pen. I have never received a dollar from the First church, although I have served them for nearly six months; but have paid my own way by literary work.

"They were fully aware of my faith when they invited me to fill their pulpit, and the present controversy between us is unexpected by me."

How the trouble in the church began. "Its immediate inspiration is an effort on my part to present, in a connected series, what I believe to be the true teaching of the Bible on the subject of the future life. After delivering two discourses, both mainly introductory, I received a note from the Executive Committee, which includes George C. Christian, a prominent attorney, formerly of Kentucky, directing me to desist from preaching or taking any further public part in the services of the Christian church."

What the latest Chicago heretic believes. "Upon the doctrine of the future life, I hold what is commonly known as 'conditional immortality.' I deny natural or innate immortality, or what is generally spoken of as the immortality of the soul. Hence, I do not believe in the consciousness of the dead, or the eternal torture of the wicked; but I do believe that eternal life or immortality is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ, to those who, by faith, repentance and good works, are fitted to enjoy and make the highest use of it. In brief, my faith is the Darwinian doctrine of the survival of the fittest applied practically to men in this life and the life to come. I am not a discoverer or inventor of this doctrine. A multitude of honored names, both in Europe and America, indeed in all parts of the world, could be cited in earnest support of it.

An interesting grouping of noted authorities. "I may mention the names of the Rev. Joseph D. Wilson, rector of the St. John's Reformed Episcopal church, Chicago; Dr. Leonard W. Bacon, Norwich, Conn., pastor of the Park Congregational church, son of Dr. Leonard Bacon, of Yale College, maintains a future life by the act of God, or through a resurrection of the dead alone; Rev. George R. Kramer, pastor Independent church, Wilmington, Del., formerly of the M. E. church; Rev. A. A. Phelps, A. M., Rochester, N. Y., city missionary, a member of the Congregational church, formerly editor of the Bible Banner, and once a Methodist; A. N. B. Graham, D. D., Little Rock, Ark., pastor of the Arkansas Christian Conference and the State Christian Temperance Union; Prof. D. H. Chase, LL. D., M. C. church, Middletown, Conn.; Clement M. Butler, D. D., for many years rector of Trinity church, Washington, now Professor of ecclesiastical history in the Episcopal Divinity School, Philadelphia; Rev. W. R. Huntington, D. D., rector of All Saints church, Worcester, Mass., author of 'Conditional Immortality'; Henry Constable, London, Eng., author of 'Duration and Nature of Future Punishment, Hades, etc.; Rev. Edward White, minister of St. Paul's Chapel, London, Eng., and author of 'The Way Everlasting' and other works; Rev. William Leask, D. D., Congregational pastor of Maberly Chapel, London, forty-three years a clergyman, London editor of The Rainbow, and a score of works; M. W. Strang, Glasgow, Scotland, author of The Messenger, attracted from the Presbyterian church; Emanuel Petavel, D. D., Geneva, Switzerland; Charles Byse, pastor of Free Evangelical church, Brussels, Belgium, a learned Frenchman; Charles Renouvrier, among the most eminent of French philosophers, at the head of the French Criticist School; the late Rev. C. L. Hendrickson, pastor of the Baptist church, Jackson, Tenn., who has been in the ministry forty-two years, and pastor of leading Baptist churches at Philadelphia, Norfolk, Washington and Memphis; Rev. J. H. Pettingell, A. M., Congregational clergyman, formerly District Secretary American Board of Foreign Missions; the late Prof. C. Hudson, author of Debt and Grace, Christ our Life, Human Destiny, Critical Greek Concordance, etc.; Rev. H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., editor of The Christian, and many theological works; Oliver Spencer Halsted, ex-Chancellor of New Jersey, author of The Theology of the Bible; the late Prof. Ives, of Yale College; the late Rev. Wm. Preston, D. D., rector of St. Andrew's church, Pittsburgh; the late Dr. Horace Bushnell, author of Nature and the Supernatural; Mr. Cæsar Malan, son of the celebrated Dr. Malan, Geneva, Switzerland; William Loing, author, Edinburg, Scotland; the Rev. Donald McRae, whose trial and condemnation for heresy created such a stir in religious circles two years since, now pastor of an Independent church, Dundee, Scotland; Prof. Hermann Schultz, Gottingen, Germany; Rev. J. Donniston, M. A., Jamaica: Mr. Skrufend, missionary to the Santhals, the greatest linguist in Asia, speaking nearly twenty languages; the Rev. W. A. Hobbs, of Calcutta, who writes that it is astonishing how these views commend themselves to the instant appreciation of the natives; in Africa they are held by Rev. Mr. Impey, Superintendent of the Wesleyan body, who was two years since expelled from his high office, after forty years of labor, because he could no longer preach eternal torment to the poor Zulus; in China these views are held by several of the ablest missionaries; in Ceylon by the Rev. Mr. Clark, A. M., of the Church Tamil Mission; in Sidney by Mr. Redding a leading journalist of Australia and an eminent scholar, whose fame was long since recognized in England; in London by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Parker, the famous pastor of the City Temple, by the Rev. J. B. Heard, A. M., and a host of pastors of all denominations; in Birmingham by Dr. R. W. Dale; in Liverpool by Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown; in Cambridge by Professor Stokes, F. R. S., who occupies the chair of Sir Isaac Newton, in Edinburgh by members of the leading clergy, and by Professor Tait, the finest mathematical reasoner of Scotland; by the Rev. Thomas Davis, A. M., Vicar of Rondsley, by the Rev. W. Hobson, A. M., of Douglass, two most able men, and by hundreds of others of the most learned and earnest men of the present century."

Your correspondent incorporated this large list of eminent men, as it brings the matter before those interested in the same in a more clear and appreciative light. The present state of the trouble here is that there seems to be no special inclination on the part of the Rev. Mr. Wilcox to make a fight for the pulpit of the First Christian church. He has not decided yet whether he will do so or not. If he were receiving $5,000 per year, and were already famous like a few other noted heretics of this city, a great religious row would be the legitimate outcome. As it is, however, it is attracting a great deal of attention in this part of the country.

Communications.

THOUGHTS ON CHRISTMAS.

"Peace on earth and good will to men" is the glad song that reverberated among the hills of Judea about two thousand years ago, sung by the angels who came to rejoice at the birth of the Redeemer.

It is the birth day of this illustrious personage that we celebrate. Whose moral heroism gives him the highest character known to mortals. His mission on earth was glorious, and his object a definite one. He came to seek and to save that which was lost. "He took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."

Christ claimed to have a definite relation to the past history of the people among whom he came, and in his teachings places himself at the close of the Jewish dispensation, saying, I came to fulfill the law of the prophets.

The words of the angels fell upon ears prepared to hear the message. All governments were united under the Roman. Quiet, but not satisfied, seemingly waiting for some new development. Various systems of religion were recognized but none were satisfactory. The sincere lover of truth longed for a more definite revelation to satisfy his yearning mind.

Christ laid the foundation of redemption, became the new head of the human race, acting at all times as a free moral agent, otherwise he loses all the glory of his life and death, and is not an example unto us. In teaching the character of Christ we are apt to overlook his humanity, and thus rob him of the glory of overcoming the world.

He said the foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. When one came to him and called him good master, he disclaimed that modest title, saying, why call ye me good, there is none good but one, which is God. At this time his character had not been fully tested, and to his pure mind it was not right to call him good.

When we look upon Christ as being in sympathy with human suffering, having felt the same, he is nearer to us, than when presented at a divine being, and we forget that he was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief, that our chastisement was upon him, and by his stripes we are healed.

F. T. D.

Brownsburg, Ind., Dec. 16, 1882.

How to Manage It.

Dear brethren and sisters of little precious faith, I have seen a good many sad faces in my rounds, trying to get subscribers for our good papers, THE RESTITUTION and Youths' Examiner. With many there was no money to be had to secure them. My heart has ached, over and over again, and as I cannot take for all, I have tried to study out some plan, so that each might, if possible, take these precious papers for themselves.

Now the new year is soon to begin; take a good strong envelope, or better little muslin bags, one marked THE RESTITUTION, another Youths' Examiner, drop four pennies in one, and one in the other, every week, and at the end of the year you will be ready to pay for them.

Try this plan, big folks and little folks, and see if it will not work.

S. H. WIXEY,

Poetry.

COMING.

FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL.

Thou art coming, oh my Savior,
Thou art coming, oh my King!
Every tongue thy name confessing,
Well may we rejoice and sing.

Thou art coming! Rays of glory
Through the veil thy death has rent
Gladden now our pilgrim pathway,
Glory from thy presence sent.

Thou art coming—not a shadow,
Not a fear, and not a tear;
Not a sin and not a sorrow
On that sunrise grand and clear.

Thou art coming! Jesus, Savior,
Nothing else we see worth a thought,
Oh, how empty looks the glory
And the beauty this poor earth has wrought!

Thou art coming! We are waiting
With a hope that cannot fail,
Asking not the day an hour,
Anchored safe within the veil.

Thou art coming! Thou art coming!
Jesus our beloved Lord;
Oh, the joy to see thee reigning,
Worshiped, glorified, adored!

Thou art coming! Yes, art coming!
We shall meet thee on thy way.
Thou art coming, we remain see thee,
And be like thee on that day.

Letter Drawer.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 15, 1882.

Editor Restitution:

Gen. Wallace, our American Minister to Constantinople, is here with his wife. This is considered by all to be a very important event, as he is a personal friend of the Sultan, and the telegram which preceded him was sent by the Sultan himself. Not even a prince has received so much honor. Dispatches have always been sent officially.

Our United States citizens received him outside the Jaffa gate with flags and cordial greetings. The Jews carried the large flag. Rabbi Berman greeted him with a short speech as follows:

"The Israelites of the Holy City, citizens of the United States of America, come to welcome our worthy Ambassador from Constantinople, General Wallace. Three cheers."

He then came down from his horse and shook hands with all the Jews. He said, "I am glad to find so many patriotic citizens in the Holy City. We hope that the blessing of the Holy Land will be with you to assist you to maintain the honor of our glorious Union."

Yesterday he gave a reception at the Consulate, and we all received a cordial welcome. He expressed himself as favorable to the restoration of Palestine, and we believe that God in his providence has sent him here at this time for a special purpose. An American colony may obtain favors now that hitherto was impossible.

The Jews are greatly impressed with this event, and we trust that much good may come of it.

I am now in the midst of moving, my goods being quite upside down, and I find myself unable to write more now.

The Russian refugees are being apprenticed to trades and money is needed to assist them for three months, after that they will be able to earn their own living. Let us help what we can.

I received a letter from Jared Benjamin yesterday asking the prices of flowers and sketches. I will say here that I shall leave the price to those purchasing the articles, as the money all goes for the poor; any sum will be gratefully received, and I shall be happy to give something in return. I hope the lace embroidery that I sent was received.

May God keep you dear brother.

A. E. DAVIS.

Editor Restitution:

I shall not be able to fill my appointment at Eureka, Wis., Dec. 31, 1882, but will be there if my health will permit, Jan. 26, 1883, to commence meetings in the Bradley school house, continuing over until Sunday evening. Sunday evening I will speak in the Hall at Eureka, and Monday and Tuesday evenings, if desired. Will be at the Berlin depot Wednesday on the noon train, no prevention Providence.

MRS. A. C. SELDWICK.

HESPERIA, Mich.

Editor Restitution:

As I want to renew my subscription to THE RESTITUTION I thought it would be a good time to say a few words of consolation to suffering ones. I once thought it probable that I would live to see the Deliverer come, but I have learned a few things from God's precious word since 1843, and I have for some time past been trying to wait patiently for him. I have felt for a long time as if my days were numbered, and they have not been few, for in a few days more I shall be seventy-two, and I can say with one of old,—Hitherto has he kept me, and I feel to trust his care for the remainder.

Brethren and sisters, be faithful, be patient, and be forbearing one toward another. How much we want more of the love that Jesus manifested, not only to his own but to a suffering world. When I see the lack of interest in many that seem kind-hearted sort of people, oh how I wish it were possible for us to do something more to bring the light of God's word to have its desired effect upon them. We can at least heed the request of our President and endeavor to keep THE RESTITUTION at work.

May the Lord grant us wisdom and grace to enable us to overcome, that we may finally obtain some humble position in the kingdom of his dear Son, is the prayer of your suffering Sister in Christ.

MARY BEAN.

Editor Restitution:

I wish to say to the brethren of Iowa and elsewhere, where two or three agree to pay traveling expenses and feed a speaking brother upon unfermented food, for the sounding out of the good news of the kingdom of God and his eternal purpose, they will receive a hearty response by addressing me at 1012 12th street, Des Moines, Iowa.

J. W. BISHOP.

Communications.

THOUGHTS FOR THE CLOSING YEAR.

"We spend our years as a tale that is told." Psa. xc. 9.

As each succeeding day brings us nearer to the beginning of another year, the thoughtful mind will naturally revert back to that which is about to close, and in its record as far as our individual lives are concerned, know what we have done or left undone. How many resolutions fraught with joy and hopefulness, with solemn earnestness, were twined around those opening hours of the last New Year, to be alas! how easily broken, how soon forgotten! Promises of amended lives, how kept! Promises to be more true, more forbearing, more charitable, how fulfilled? Loving thoughts for others' happiness, which rose so brightly, so warmly then; what record has the Book of Time to render back to us now? Ah me! what do we look back upon but the same sad story, so old and yet so new, of failure and forgetfulness, of weariness and weakness, of the few kind words uttered, but the many harsh ones, deeds of love and self-sacrifice so few, of selfishness and thanklessness so many. O God, our Father, in the light of thy promises, so true and tender, where are we to-day?

The uncertainty of all that this present life can give, is a theme upon which it is not necessary long to dwell. Riches are but fleeting; honors transitory; friendship changing; infidelity is rife all over the land; and yet amid all this doubt and darkness God's dear people are strong and struggling on, vainly striving to live up to the standard of their ideal life; but alas, how short the reality falls, our highest aims how low they are! our noblest efforts how poor they are! when tested by the life of the one great Light of the world.

In view of all these things it is but natural that all those who truly love the Lord Jesus should ask, "How long shall this continue?" Is it not time for us to look for and desire deliverance. Surely it is time for the Lord to have mercy upon Zion, to build up her walls, to renew with everlasting beauty her borders, and once more make her the joy of the whole earth; when her people gathered from among all nations, shall dwell there in safety. When Ephraim shall no more envy Judah, nor Judah vex Ephraim; but they shall all be one nation on the mountains of Israel; and the Lord shall make an everlasting covenant of peace with his people, and place his sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore.

It is but natural then that we who are of the commonwealth of Israel, and heirs of the promises, should look towards the culmination of these things with expectancy and joy. The new year which so soon will open upon us, is but waiting to bring about new developments of events under the guidance of him who has been at the helm of the universe all down the ages of time. If we are his sheep, his elect chosen and precious, we know that no one can pluck us out of his Father's hand. "In the world," said Jesus to his disciples, "ye shall have tribulation. But be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

Think on the eternal home
The Savior left for you;
Think how the Lord must toil
To dwell with hearts unless.
So shall you tread untired life's weary ways,
And in the darkest moments sing his praise.

HELENA M. HUNT.

At Home Once More.

